and required a tenth part thereof, towards the Kings charges in the preſent Wars, as the Spirituality had granted a fourth part; this the Londoners thought very hard, and thereupon were excuſed for taking Oath, and were allowed to bring in their Bills upon their honeſties; but when all was done, after much labouring by the Cardinal, the Clergy granted one half of all their yearly Spiritual Revenues, for five years, and the Temporalty two ſhillings in the pound, from twenty pounds upwards, and from forty ſhillings to twenty pounds, of every twenty ſhillings twelve pence; and under forty ſhillings, of every head of ſixteen years, and upwards, four pence, to be paid in every two years. In his ſixteenth year, the Cardinal of his own head attempted by Commiſſion, to draw the people to pay the ſixth part of every mans ſubſtance in Plate or Money; but this was generally oppoſed, and the people in many Countreys riſe upon it, ſo as coming to the Kings knowledge, he utterly diſavowed it, and blamed the Cardinal exceedingly for attempting it. In his four and twentieth year, in a Parliament then holden, a fifteenth was granted to the King, towards his charges of making fortifications againſt Scotland. In his one and thirtieth year, a Subſidy of two ſhillings in the pound of Lands, and twelve of Goods, with four fifteens were granted to the King, towards his charges of making Bulwarks. In his five and thirtieth year a Subſidy was granted to be paid in three years, every Engliſh man being worth in goods twenty ſhillings and upwards to five pounds, to pay four pence of every pound, and from five pounds to ten pounds, eight pence, and from ten pounds to twenty pounds, ſix pence; from twenty pounds and upwards, of every pound two ſhillings: Strangers as well Denizens as others, being Inhabitants, to pay double; and for Lands, every Engliſh man paid eight pence of the pound, from twenty ſhillings to five pounds, and from five pounds to ten pounds ſixteen pence, and from ten pounds to twenty pounds two ſhillings, and from twenty pounds and upwards, of every pound three ſhillings, ſtrangers double; the Clergy ſix ſhillings in the pound of Benefices, and every Prieſt having no Benefice, but an Annual ſtipend, ſix ſhillings eight pence yearly, during three years.

Of Laws and Ordinances in his time.

IN a Parliament holden his ſixth year, divers Laws were made, but two moſt ſpoken of; one for Apparel, another for Labourers. In his twelfth year, he cauſed the Statutes againſt Incloſures to be revived, and commanded that decayed houſes ſhould be built up again, and that Incloſed grounds ſhould be laid open; which though it did ſome good, yet not ſo much as it might have done, if the Cardinal for his own benefit had not procured liberty for great men, to keep up their Incloſures, to the oppreſſion of poor men. In his ſeventeenth year, the King lying at Eltham, divers Ordinances were made by the Cardinal touching the Governance of the Kings Houſe, and were long after called the Statutes of Eltham. In his eigteenth year, in the month of May, Proclamation was made againſt all unlawful Games, ſo that in all places, Tables, Dice, Cards, and Bowls were taken and burnt; but this order continued not long, for young men being reſtrained from theſe Games, fell ſome to drinking, ſome to ſtealing of Conies and Deer, and ſuch other miſdemeanours: Alſo in this year, was an inhancing of Coin, for the preventing the carrying it over to places where it went at a higher rate; ſo that the angel that went before but for ſeven ſhillings, ſhould now go for ſeven and ſix pence, and every ounce of Gold ſhould be five and forty ſhillings, which was before but forty, and other Coins accordingly. In his twentieth year, Sir James Spencer being Mayor of London, the Watch uſed on Midſummer night was laid down. In his three and thirtieth year, in a Parliament then holden, an Act was made, that whoſoever ſhould poyſon any perſon ſhould be boiled to death, by which Statute, one Richard Rooſe, who had poyſoned divers perſons in the Biſhop of Rocheſters place, was boiled to death in Smithfield, to the terrible example of all other. In his two and twentieth year, three Acts were made, one for probate of Teſtaments, another for Mortuaries, the third againſt plurality of Benefices, Non-reſidence, buying and taking of Farms by ſpiritual perſons. In his thirtieth year it was ordained by Cromwel the Kings Vicar General, that in all Churches a Regiſter ſhould be kept of every Wedding, Chriſtning, and Burial within the ſame Pariſh for ever. In his one and thirtieth year, the King firſt inſtituted and appointed fifty Gentlemen called Penſioners, to wait upon his perſon, aſſigning to each of them fifty pounds a year, for the maintenance of themſelves and two Horſes. In his ſix and thirtieth year, Proclamation was made for the inhancing of Gold to eight and forty ſhillings, and Silver to four ſhillings the ounce; alſo he cauſed to be coined baſe money, mingling it with Braſs, which was ſince that time called down the fifth year of Edward the ſixth, and called in the ſecond year of Queen Elizabeth. In his ſeven and thirtieth year, the Brothel-houſes called the Stews on the Bank-ſide in Southwark, were put down by the Kings Commandement, and it was done by Proclamation and ſound of Trumpet. In his three and twentieth year, it was enacted, that Butchers ſhould ſell their meat by weight, Beef for a half-penny the pound, and Mutton for three farthings: alſo at this time foreign Butchers were permitted to ſell their fleſh in Leaden-hall Market, which before was not allowed; In his time alſo the Government of the Preſident in the North was firſt inſtituted, and the firſt Preſident there, was Tunſtal Biſhop of Durham.

Affairs of the Church in his time.

IN the year 1517. the eighth year of this Kings Reign, Martin Luther of Wittenberg in Germany, a Frier of the Order of the Hermites, taking occaſion from the abuſe of Indulgences, began to Preach againſt the Authority of the Pope, and to bring in a Reformation of Religion; for repreſſing of whom, the Council of of Trent was called by Pope Paul the third, in the year 1542. which continued above forty years, but was never received in the Kingdom of France; which Council, by decreeing many things to be points of faith, which were not ſo accounted before, hath made no ſmall diſtraction amongſt Papiſts themſelves: againſt this Luther, King Henry wrote a Book with great bitterneſs, and with as great bitterneſs was anſwered. At the ſame time with Luther, there aroſe alſo in the ſame Countrey other Reformers of Religion, as Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Melanthon, who differing from Luther in ſome few points, made the difference which is at this day of Lutherans and Proteſtants, ſo called at firſt at Auſpurg, for making a Proteſtation in defence of their Doctrine, which ſoon after ſpread all Chriſtendom over. King Henry in the ſix and twentieth year of his Reign, had excluded the Popes Authority out of his Realm; but thinking the work not ſufficiently done, as long as Abbeys and Priories kept their ſtation, which were, as it were, his Fortreſſes and Pillars; there was not long after means found to have them ſuppreſſed; for aſperſions being laid upon them (and perhaps no more than truth) of Adulteries and Murthers, they by Act of Parliament in his eight and twentieth year, at leaſt near four hundred of them were ſuppreſſed, and all their Lands and Goods conferred upon the King. In his one and thirtieth year, all the reſt; and laſtly, in his five and thirtieth year, all Colledges, Chantries, and Hoſpitals, ſo as the Hives being now all removed, there have never ſince any Bees or Drones been ſeen in the Countrey. In this Kings time the City of Rome was taken and ſacked by the Imperial Army, forcing the Pope to flie to his Caſtle Saint Angelo, and there kept a Priſoner, till he agreed to ſuch conditions as his Adverſaries propounded. In the two and twentieth year of this Kings Reign, a Proclamation was ſet forth, that no perſon ſhould purchaſe any thing from the Court of Rome; and this was the firſt blow given to the Pope in England. In his three and twentieth year, the Clergy ſubmitting themſelves to the King, for being found guilty of a Præmunire, were the firſt that called him Supreme Head of the Church. In his four and twentieth year a Parliament was holden, wherein one Act was made, that Biſhops ſhould pay no more Annates or money for their Bulls to the Pope, and another that no perſon ſhould appeal for any cauſe out of this Realm to the Court of Rome, but from the Commiſſary to the Biſhop, and from the Biſhop to the Archbiſhop, and from the Archbiſhop to the King, and all cauſes of the King to be tried in the upper Houſe of the Convocation. In his ſix and twentieth year, in July, John Frith was burnt in Smithfield, and with him at the ſame ſtake one Andrew Howet a Tailor, both for denying the Real preſence in the Sacrament; and in a Parliament holden this year, an Act was made which Authoriſed the Kings Highneſs, to be Supreme Head of the Church of England, and the Authority of the Pope to be aboliſhed, and then alſo was given to the King the firſt Fruits and Tenths of all Spiritual Livings:

The difference between Lutherans and Proteſtants.

and this year were many put to death, Papiſts for denying the Kings Supremacy, Proteſtants for denying the Real Preſence in the Sacrament; and it is incredible what number for theſe two cauſes were put to death in the laſt ten years of the Kings Reign, of whom if we ſhould make particular mention, it would reach a great way in the Book of Martyrs. In his eight and twentieth year, the Lord Cromwel was made Vicar General under the King, over the Spirituality, and ſate divers times in the Convocation Houſe amongſt the Biſhops as head over them; and in September this year, he ſet forth Injunctions, commanding all Parſons and Curates to teach their Pariſhioners the Pater-noſter, the Ave, and Creed, with the ten Commandements and the Articles of the Chriſtian Faith in the Engliſh tongue. In his one and thirtieth year, was ſet forth by the Biſhops the Book of the ſix Articles, condemning all for Hereticks, and to be burnt, that ſhould hold,

The ſix Articles ſet forth by the Biſhops.

1. That the Body of Chriſt was not Really preſent in the Sacrament after Conſecration.
2. That the Sacrament might not truly be adminiſtred under one kind.
3. That Prieſts entred into Holy Orders might marry.
4. That vows of Chaſtity entred into upon mature deliberation, were not to be kept.
5. That private Maſſes were not to be uſed.
6. That Auricular Confeſſion was not neceſſary in the Church.

The Order of Saint Johns diſſolved.

This year alſo the Religion of Saint Johns in England, commonly called the Order of Knights of the Rhodes, was diſſolved; and on Aſcenſion-day, Sir William Weſton Knight, Prior of Saint Johns departed this life, for thought (as was reported) after he heard of the diſſolution of his Order; for the King took all the Lands that belonged to that Order into his own hands: In his ſix and thirtieth year, the Letany or Proceſſion was ſet forth in Engliſh, with commandement by the King, to be generally uſed in Pariſh Churches.

Works of Piety done by him or others in his time.

UPon the ſuppreſſion of Abbeys, King Henry inſtituted ſix new Biſhopricks and ſix Cathedral Churches, endowing them with convenient maintenance; he alſo gave competent Penſions during their lives, to ſuch Religious perſons as were turned out of their Cloyſters; he alſo inſtituted in both the Univerſities Profeſſors of the Hebrew and Greek Tongues, of Divinity, Civil-Law, and Phyſick, allowing to each of them forty pound a year: he alſo founded a Colledge at Cambridge; he gave at his death a thouſand Marks to the poor; and to twelve poor Knights of Windſor, each of them twelve pence a day for ever, and every year a long Gown of white Cloth: but his greateſt work of Piety was his putting down the Stews in Southwark: Margaret Counteſs of Richmond, the Kings Grandmother, founded two Colledges at Cambridge, Chriſts-Church and Saint Johns. In the fifth year of this Kings Reign George Monox Mayor of of London, re-edified the decayed Steeple of the Church of Waltham-ſtow in Eſſex, adding thereunto a ſide Iſle with a Chappel where he lieth buried; on the North ſide of the Church-yard there he founded a fair Almshouſe, for a Prieſt and thirteen poor men and women, giving them a weekly maintenance; he alſo for the commodity of Travellers made a Cawſey of Timber over the Marſhes, from Waltham-ſtow to Lock-bridge towards London. In this Kings eighth year Richard Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter founded Corpus Chriſti Colledge in Oxford, minding to have made it an houſe for Monks; but Hugh Oldham Biſhop of Exeter, perſwaded him to make it rather a Colledge for Scholars, and joyning with him in it, contributed great ſums of Money towards it, contenting himſelf only with the name of a Benefactor. In his ſeventh year King Henry builded the Tower of Greenwich. In this Kings time Cardinal Woolſey founded two Colledges, one at Oxford, another at Ipſwich; to his Colledge at Oxford he had given four thouſand pounds Land a year, but his Lands being all confiſcate to the King, the King took the Lands, but yet gave to the Colledge a competent maintenance for a Dean, eight Prebends, and a hundred Fellows; which Colledge is now called Chriſt-Church, and accounts King Henry for their Founder. His Colledge at Ipſwich was demoliſhed. This Cardinal alſo built Hampton Court, the chiefeſt at this day of all the Kings Houſes; and built or inlarged White-hall called then York-Place. King Henry in his four and twentieth year, built alſo his Manſion Houſe of Saint James, where alſo he made a fair Park. This place before had been an Hoſpital of Siſters, with whom the King compounded, giving them Penſions during their lives. In his thirtieth year, Nicholas Gibſon Grocer, then Sheriff of London, builded a Free-School at Ratcliffe near London, with maintenance for a Maſter and an Uſher; he alſo builded an Alms-houſe there for fourteen poor and aged people. In his one and thirtieth year, Thomas Huntlow, the then Sheriff of London, gave certain Tenements to Haberdaſhers, for finding of ten Almſmen of the ſame Company. In his ſix and thirtieth year, Sir John Allen who had been twice Maior of London, and of the Kings Council, gave at his death to the City of London, a rich Coller of Gold, to be worn by the Maior: which Coller was firſt worn by Sir William Laxton on Saint Edwards day, at the election of the new Maior, who gave to every Ward in London twenty pounds, to be diſtributed amongſt poor Houſholders; beſides to ſixſcore perſons, whereof threeſcore men, to every one a Gown of broad-cloth, and a black Cap; and threeſcore women, to every one a Gown of the like Cloth, and a white Kerchief. In the eight and thirtieth year, King Henry gave to the City of London, for relief of poor people in St. Bartholomews Spittle, the Church of the Gray-fryers, and two Pariſh Churches, the one at St. Nicholas in the Shambles, the other St. Ewins in Newgate-market, all to be made one Pariſh Church of the Gray-friers; and in Lands he gave for the maintenance of the ſame five hundred Marks a year for ever: and this Church to be named Chriſt-Church, founded by King Henry the eighth. The Lady Elizabeth Hollys (the Widow of Sir William Hollys Knight, late Lord Maior of the City of London) by her Laſt Will and Teſtament, dated the 17 of February 1543. and in the thirty fifth year of the Reign of King Henry the eighth, and proved at London in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury the 28 of March 1544. did will her Executors, her Couſin Mr. Andrew Jud Alderman (afterwards Knight and Lord Maior of London) and her Brother Thomas Scopham, that they ſhould provide a place or plot of ground, whereon ſhould be erected ſix Almshouſes for ſix aged folks, men or women, or elſe both, to inhabit and dwell in, for the maintenance of which, ſhe willed that her ſaid Executors ſhould purchaſe as much Land or Tenements within the City of London, or Liberties of the ſame, as would amount de claro above all charges to the yearly value of ten pound ſterling, to be diſtributed in this manner: that is to ſay, to every of the ſaid ſix Alms-people ſeven pence by the Week, to be paid on every Saturday or Sabbath-day weekly, and the remainder of the ſaid yearly ten pound to be diſtributed in Coals yearly, in the Winter ſeaſon, to and amongſt the ſaid ſix Alms-people, and this to continue for ever whiles the World ſhall endure, as by the ſaid Will may appear, which was afterwards accordingly effected by her ſaid Executors; which ſaid Lady Elizabeth Hollys and Sir William Hollys, were great Grandfather and great Grandmother unto John Hollys Knight, Earl of Clare, &c. deceaſed.

Caſualties in his time.

IN his ninth year happened a Sweating-ſickneſs, whereof infinite multitudes in many parts of England died, eſpecially in London; and was ſo violent, that in three, and ſometimes two hours, it took away mens lives, and ſpared neither rich nor poor; for in the Kings Court the Lord Clinton, the Lord Gray of Wilton, and many Knights, Gentlemen, and Officers died of it. It began in July, and continued to the midſt of December. In his thirteenth year was a great Mortality in London, and other places of the Realm, and many men of Honour and Worſhip died; amongſt others; Doctor Fitz-James Biſhop of London, in whoſe place Doctor Tunſtall ſucceeded. In his fifteenth year, after great rains and winds there followed ſo ſore a Froſt, that many died for cold; and ſome loſt Fingers, ſome Toes, and many their Nails. In his nineteenth year, by extremity of rain in ſeed-time, there followed a great dearth of Corn, which would have cauſed great calamity, but that it was relieved in London by Merchants of the Steel-yard out of Germany, and a thouſand quarters ſupplied out of the Kings own proviſion. In his twentieth year, in the end of May, began in London another Sweating-ſickneſs, which afterwards infected all places of the Realm; by reaſon whereof the Term was adjourned, and the Circuit of the Aſſiſes alſo; many died in the Court, as Sir Francis Poynes, Sir William Compton Knights, and

A ſweating ſickneſs of which many great men died.

Another ſweating ſickneſs.

William Carew Esquire of the Kings Privy Chamber; the King himself for a space, removed almost every day, till he came to Tittinghanger, a place of the Abbot of St. Albanes, where he with the Queen and a small number remained, till the sickness was past. In his thirtieth year, the manner of casting Pipes of Lead for conveyance of water under ground, without using of Soder, was first invented by Robert Brooke Clerk, one of the Kings Chaplains: a profitable Invention; for by this, two men and a boy will do more in one day, than could have been done before by many men in many days: Robert Cooper Goldsmith, was the first that made the Instruments, and put this Invention in practice. In a Rebellion in the North, in this Kings time, when the Duke of Norfolk was sent with an Army against the the Rebels, and that day of Battel between them was appointed, it happened, that the night before a small Brook called Dun, running between the two Armies, upon the fall of a small rain, swelled to such a height, that it was not passable by either foot or horse; a thing which had never happened before upon a great rain, and was then accounted (as indeed it was) no less than a Miracle. In his three and thirtieth year, was a great Mortality in the Realm, by reason of hot Agues and Fluxes; and withal so great a drought, that small Rivers were clean dried, much Cattel died for lack of water, and the Thames was grown so shallow, that the Salt-water flowed above London-Bridge, till the rain had encreased the fresh-waters. In his five and thirtieth year, the first cast Pieces of Iron that ever were made in England, were made at Buckstead in Sussex by Ralph Hage and Peter Bawde. In his six and thirtieth year, was a great Plague in London, so as Michaelmas Term was adjourned to Saint Albanes, and there kept. In his seven and thirtieth year, on Tuesday in Easter-week, William Foxley Pot-maker for the Mint of the Tower of London, fell asleep, and could not be waked with pinching, or burning, till the first day of the next Term, which was full fourteen daies; and when he awaked, was found in all points, as if he had slept but one night, and lived forty years after. About his fifteenth year, it happened that divers things were newly brought into England, whereupon this Rhyme was made:

Casting Pipes of Lead, without soder, when, and by whom first invented.

A miraculous sudden rising of the River Dun.

The first cast Pieces of Iron made.

One that slept fourteen days together without waking.

Divers things newly brought into England.

Turkeys, Carps, Hoppes, Piccarel, and Beer, Came into ENGLAND all in one year.

Of his Wives and Children.

KIng Henry had six Wives; his first was Katherine, Daughter of Ferdinand King of Spain, the Relict of his Brother Arthur, she lived his Wife above twenty years, and then was divorced from him; after which she lived three years by the name of Katherine Dowager, she deceased at Kimbolton in the County of Huntington, the eighth of January in the year 1535. and lieth interred in the Cathedral Church of Peterborough, under a Hearse of black Say, having a white Cross in the midst. His second Wife was Anne second Daughter of Sir Thomas Bullen Earl of Wiltshire and Ormond; she was married to him the five and twentieth day of January, in the year 1533. lived his Wife three years, three months, and five and twenty days, and then was beheaded, and her body buried in the Choir of the Chappel in the Tower. His third Wife was Jane, Daughter of Sir John Seymour, and Sister to the Lord Edward Seymour Earl of Hartford, and Duke of Somerset, she was married to him the next day after the beheading of Queen Anne, lived his Wife one year, five months, and four and twenty days, and then died in Child-bed; and was buried in the midst of the Choir of the Church within the Castle of Windsor. His fourth Wife was Anne, Sister to the Duke of Cleve, she lived his Wife six months, and then was divorced; she remained in England long after the Kings death, and accompanied the Lady Elizabeth through London, at the solemnizing of Queen Maries Coronation. His fifth Wife was Katherine, Daughter of Edmund, and Neece of Thomas Howard his Brother Duke of Norfolk; she was married to him in the two and thirtieth year of his Reign; lived his Wife one year, six months, and four days, and then was beheaded in the Tower of London, and buried in the Chancel of the Chappel by Queen Anne Bullen. His sixth Wife was Katherine, Daughter of Sir Thomas Parre of Kendall, and Sister to the Lord William Parre, Marques of Northampton; she was first married to John Nevil Lord Latimer, and after his decease to the King at Hampton-Court, in the five and thirtieth year of his Reign: she was his Wife three years, six months, and five days; and then surviving him, was again married to Thomas Seymour Lord Admiral of England, unto whom she bore a daughter, but died in her Child-bed, in the year 1548. He had Children by his first Wife Queen Katherine, Henry born at Richmond, who lived not full two months, and was buried at Westminster; also another Son, whose name is not mentioned, lived but a short time neither: then a Daughter named Mary, born at Greenwich, in the eighth year of his Reign, and came afterward to be Queen of England. By his second Wife, Queen Anne Bullen, he had a Daughter named Elizabeth, born at Greenwich, in the five and twentieth year of his Reign; who succeeded her Sister Mary in the Crown: he had also by her a Son, but born dead. By his third Wife, Queen Jane, he had a Son named Edward, born at Hampton-Court in the nine and twentieth year of his Reign, who succeeded him in the Kingdom. Besides these, he had a base Son, named Henry Fitz-Roy, begotten of the Lady Talboyse, called Elizabeth Blunt, born at Blackamore in Essex, in the tenth year of his Reign; who was made Duke of Richmond and Somerset; married Mary Daughter of Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk; with whom he lived not long, but died at St. James by Westminster, and was buried at Framingham in Suffolk.

Of his Personage and Conditions.

HE was exceeding tall of stature, and very strong; fair of complexion, in his latter days corpulent and burly: concerning his conditions, ditions, he was a Prince of ſo many good parts, that one would wonder he could have any ill; and indeed he had not many ill, till flattery and ill counſel in his latter time got the upper hand of him. His cruelty to his Wives may not only be excuſed, but defended; for if they were incontinent, he did but Juſtice; if they were not ſo, yet it was ſufficient to ſatisfie his conſcience, that he thought he had cauſe to think them ſo; and if the marriage Bed be honourable in all, in Princes it is ſacred. In ſuppreſſing of Abbeys he ſhewed not little Piety, but great Providence; for though they were excellent things being rightly uſed, yet moſt peſtilent, being abuſed; and then may the uſe be juſtly ſuppreſſed, when the abuſe ſcarce poſſibly can be reſtrained. To think he ſuppreſſed Abbeys out of covetouſneſs and deſire of gain, is to make him extremely deceived in his reckoning; for if we compare the profit with the charge that followed, we ſhall find him certainly a great loſer by the bargain. He was ſo far from pride, that he was rather too humble, at leaſt he converſed with his Subjects in a more familiar manner than was uſual with Princes. So valiant, that his whole life almoſt, was nothing but exerciſes of valour; and though performed amongſt his friends in jeſt, yet they prepared him againſt his Enemies in earneſt, and they that durſt be his Enemies found it. It may be ſaid, the complexion of his Government for the firſt twenty years was ſanguine and jovial; for the reſt, cholerick and bloody: and it may be doubted. whether in the former, he were more prodigal of his own treaſure, or in the latter of his Subjects blood: for as he ſpent more in Fictions, than any other King did in Realities; ſo in any diſtemper of his people, he had no other Phyſick, but to open a vein: but we ſhall do him extreme wrong, to think that all the blood ſhed in his time, was of his ſhedding; they were the Biſhops that were the Draco to make the bloody Laws; the Biſhops that were the Phalaris, to put them in execution: the King oftentimes ſcarce knowing what was done. Certain it is, when a great Lord put a Gentlewoman the ſecond time on the Rack, the King hearing of it, exceedingly condemned him for ſuch extreme cruelty. As for Religion, though he brought it not to a full Reformation, yet he gave it ſo great a beginning, that we may truly ſay of that he did, Dimidium plus toto. They who charge him with the vice of luſt, let them ſhew ſuch another example of continence as was ſeen in him, to lie ſix months by a young Lady, and not to touch her; for ſo did he with the Lady Anne of Cleve: but this is to make Noſegayes; I like better to leave every flower growing upon its ſtalk, that it be gathered freſh; which will be done by reading the ſtory of his Life.

Of his Death and Burial.

IT is recorded of him, that in his latter time he grew ſo fat and ſlothful, that engines were made to lift and remove him up and down; but howſoever in the ſix and fiftieth year of his age, whether by a Dropſie, or by reaſon of an Ulcer in his Leg, he fell into a languiſhing Fever, which brought him into ſuch extremity, that his Phyſicians utterly deſpaired of his life, whereof yet none durſt ſpeak a word to him, till Maſter Denny one of his Privy Chamber took the boldneſs to go to him, telling him of the danger he was in, and withal putting him in mind to think of his ſouls health; to which he anſwered, that he confeſſed his ſins to be exceeding great, yet had ſuch confidence in the mercy of God through Chriſt, that he doubted not of forgiveneſs though they had been much greater; and being then asked by Maſter Denny, if he would have any Divine brought to him with whom to confer, he anſwered he would willingly have the Archbiſhop Cranmer, but not yet a while, till he had taken a little reſt: whereupon the Archbiſhop being then at Croydon; was preſently ſent for; but before he could come, the King was grown ſpeechleſs, only ſeeming to retain a little memory, ſo as putting out his hand, and the Archbiſhop deſiring him to ſhew ſome ſign of his faith in Chriſt, he then wrung the Archbiſhop hard by the hand, and immediately gave up the ghoſt, the eight and twentieth of January, in the year 1547. the ſix and fiftieth of his age, and of his reign the eight and thirtieth: his Body with great ſolemnity was buried at Windſor under a moſt coſtly and ſtately Tomb, begun in copper and gilt, but never finiſhed.

King Henry's Religious carriage at his death.

Men of Note in his time.

MEN famous for the Sword were many in his time, and in a manner all, that it is hard making choice without being partial, unleſs we ſhall prefer Dukes of equal valour before others of meaner calling; and then will the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk hold worthily the place firſt, and next to them the young Earl of Surrey, who had been more fortunate if he had been leſs valiant. Of men of Letters in his time, there were whole Armies in forein parts; the moſt famous were Budæus, Ludovicus Vives, John Reuchlin, Eraſmus Roterodamus, Urſinus, Cornarius, Sadolet, Martin Bucer: In England were John Collet Dean of Pauls, and Founder of the Shool there. William Lilly born at Odiham in Hampſhire, firſt School-Maſter of Pauls School, Thomas Linaker a learned Phyſician, John Skelton a pleaſant Poet, William Herman Vice-Provoſt of Eaton, who wrote divers works, Sir Thomas More, William Tindal, John Raſtal a Citizen and Stationer of London, Chriſtopher Saint-Germane an excellent Lawyer, Sir Thomas Elyot, John Leland a diligent ſearcher of Antiquities, Sir John Bourchier Knight, Lord Berners, who tranſlated the Chronicles of Froyſard out of French into Engliſh, Henry Standiſh Biſhop of Saint Aſaph, who wrote a Book againſt Eraſmus tranſlation of the New Teſtament: Arnold of London, who wrote certain Collections touching Hiſtorical matters, Thomas Lupſet a Londoner, who wrote ſundry vertuous Treatiſes, Henry Bradſhaw a black Monk, who wrote the life of Saint Werborough, and alſo a certain Chronicle; John Palſgrave a Londoner, who wrote inſtructions for the perfect underſtanding of the French tongue, John Skuiſh a Corniſh man, who wrote certain abbreviations

THE

The REIGN of KING EDWARD THE SIXTH.

Anno. Dom. 1547.

IT was now in the year 1547. when on the eight and twentieth of January King Henry dying, Prince Edward his Son, by his third Wife, the Lady Jane Seymour, and the only Son he left behind him, as well by right of Inheritance, as by his laſt Will, ſucceeded him in the Kingdom; to whom as being but nine years old, and therefore unripe for Government, he had aſſigned eight and twenty Counſellours; a fit number, if agreeing amongſt themſelves; too many if at variance: and at variance they would ſoon fall, if there were not a Moderator to keep them in concord; the firſt work therefore neceſſary to be done in this new world, was to make choice of ſuch a man as might be to the Counſellours a Moderator, a Protector to the King, and in his minority, to the Kingdom. To this place by common conſent of the King and Council: Edward Seymour Earl of Hartford, the Kings Uncle was choſen to hold the place, until the King ſhould accompliſh the age of eigteen years. In which Office the firſt thing he did, was to make the young King Knight, who preſently thereupon, made Henry Hobblethorn Mayor of London Knight; and then King Henry's Obſequies being ſolemnly performed, on the ſeventeenth of February, were raiſed in honour the Earl of Hartford Protector, to be Duke of Somerſet, William Par Earl of Eſſex, to be Marqueſs of Northampton, Dudley Vicount Liſle, to be Earl of Warwick, Wriothſley Lord Chancellour, to be Earl of Southampton, Sir Thomas Seymour the Protectors Brother was made Lord Sudeley, and Admiral of England, Sir Richard Rich was made Lord Rich, Sir William Willoughby was made Lord Willoughby, and Sir Edmund Sheffield was made Lord Sheffield of Butterwick: On the nineteenth of February the King in great ſtate rode from the Tower to the Palace of Weſtminſter, where the day following, he was Crowned by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with all rites accuſtomed, in great ſolemnity. At which time a general Pardon was proclaimed for all offenders, ſix only excepted, namely the Duke of Norfolk, Cardinal Pool, Edward Courtney, eldeſt Son to the Marqueſs of Exeter, Maſter Forteſcue, Maſter Throgmorton, and Doctor Pates Biſhop of Worceſter, who was fled to Rome, to avoid taking the Oath of Supremacy, all which ſix continued unpardoned, till the firſt year of Queen Mary, and then were reſtored. A few dayes after the Earl of Southhampton Lord Chancellour, for being contumacious to the reſt of the Lords in matters of counſel, was removed both from his Office of being Chancellour, and from his place in Council, and the great Seal was delivered Sir William Pawlet, Lord Saint-John, and Lord great Maſter of the Kings Houſhold.

Ths Earl of Hartford choſen Protector.

Advancement of divers in honour.

King Edward is Crowned.

Within two months after the death of King Henry, died Francis King of France alſo, for whom ſolemn Obſequies were kept in Pauls Church, as he likewiſe had kept before at Paris for King Henry: theſe two Kings were of ſo conſenting natures, that they had certainly been great friends while they lived, if they had not been Kings, and that jealouſie of ſtate had not made them oftentimes not to be themſelves.

Francis King of France dieth.

King Henry before his death had left in charge with the Lords of his Council, by all means poſſible, to procure a proceeding in the marriage with the young Queen of Scots; and now in diſcharge thereof the Lord Protector himſelf, with an Army of twelve thouſand Foot, and ſix thouſand Horſe, beſides Labourers and Pioneers thirteen hundred, entred Scotland the third of September: at which time alſo Edward Lord Clinton with a Fleet of threeſcore Sail aſſiſted by Sea; but before he would do any hoſtile Act, he cauſed Proclamation to be made, that his coming was only to have performance of the Articles heretofore agreed on for the marriage, tending to the good of both Kingdoms; which if they would yield unto, he would then return in peaceable manner. and the more to draw them on, where before it was demanded to have the Queen brought into England, and there to be brought up, the Protector was content, ſhe ſhould remain in Scotland till years of conſent: this demand, the more moderate ſort of the Scots accounted very reaſonable, but thoſe of the French and Papal Faction, who were the greateſt perſons, and the greateſt number, ſtrongly oppoſed; whereupon the Lord Protector preſently put his Army into Array; the Lord Gray and Sir Francis Brian, with eight hundred Light-Horſe, were ſent before to provide Lodging for the Army, and to give advertiſement of the enemies approaches; then followed the Avant-guard, in number between three and four thouſand Foot, one hundred men at Arms, and ſix hundred Light-horſe, led by the Earl of Warwick; then followed the main Battel, conſiſting of above ſix thouſand Foot, ſix hundred dred men at Arms, and one thouſand Light-horſe led by the Protector himſelf; laſtly followed the Arrear, wherein were between three and four thouſand Foot, one hundred men at Arms, and ſix hundred Light-horſe, under the conduct of the Lord Dacres; upon one Wing the Artillery was drawn, being ſixteen Pieces of great Ordnance; the other Wing was made by men at Arms and Demilances; for the Avant-guard and half the battel, riding about two flight ſhoot from their ſide, the other half of the battel, and the whole flank of the Arrear was cloſed by the Carriages, being nine hundred Carts beſides Waggons; the reſt of the men at Arms, and the Demilances marched behind. In this order they marched two daies, taking in three Caſtles as they went, with little reſiſtance: where it is memorable, what a ſudden device the Defendants of one of them uſed to ſave themſelves; for finding they were no longer able to defend themſelves, and that their obſtinacy had excluded all hope of pardon; they made ſuit, that they might not preſently be ſlain, but have ſome time to commend their ſouls to God, and afterwards be hanged: which reſpite being obtained, their Pardon afterward did more eaſily enſue. So much doth the winning of time oftentimes prevail, more than any other policy. The Governour of Scotland, hearing of the Protectors approach, and having no ſufficient Army ready to reſiſt him, ſent his Heralds abroad, into all parts of the Realm, and commanded the Fire-croſs to be carried (an ancient cuſtom in caſes of importance) which was two firebrands ſet in faſhion of a Croſs, and pitched upon the point of a Spear, and therewith Proclamation to be made, that all above ſixteen years of age, and under ſixty, ſhould reſort forthwith to Muſſelborough, and bring convenient proviſion of victuals with them. By this means, having gotten a ſufficient Army, he ſet forward towards the Engliſh, who were now come to the River called Linne: and here the Earl of Warwick, being too venturous, was like to have been entrapped, but by his valour came off bravely; and now the Scottiſh Horſemen began to hover about the Engliſh Army, and to come pricking towards them, ſometimes within length of their ſtaves, uſing provoking words, to draw the Engliſh from their ſtrength; but the Protector, not moved with their provocations, maintained a cloſe march till he came to Salt-Preſton by the Frith, where he incamped within two miles of the Scottiſh Army: and here the Scots having gotten the advantage of a Hill came upon the Engliſh with the number of twelve hundred Horſe, beſides five hundred foot that lay in ambuſh behind the Hill; at which time the Lord Gray and Francis Brian, impatient of ſuch braveries, obtained leave of the General to encounter them, and ſo as they came ſcattered upon the ſpur, within a ſtones caſt of the Engliſh, and were beginning to wheel about, the Lord Gray with ſome Troops of Light-horſe-men, charged them home, and was forthwith ſeconded by certain numbers of Demilances, and both of them backed with a thouſand men at Arms; yet the Scots reſolutely maintained the fight three hours and more, but in the end, overlaid with numbet, they were put to flight, and chaſed almoſt to the edge of their Camp. In this fight the chieſeſt force of the Scottiſh Horſe-men was defeated, the Lord Hume by a fall from his Horſe loſt his life, his Son and Heir, with two Prieſts, and ſix Gentlemen were taken priſoners, and about fifteen hundred ſlain: the next day, the Protector and the Earl of Warwick rode towards the place where the Scottiſh Army lay, to view the manner of incamping. As they returned, an Herald and a Trumpeter from the Scots overtook them, who having obtained Audience, the Trumpeter ſaid, that the Lord Huntley his Maſter, to ſpare effuſion of Chriſtian bloud, would fight upon the whole quarrel, either with twenty againſt twenty, or with ten againſt ten, or elſe try it between the Lord General and himſelf: the Protector anſwered, that for number of Combatants, it was not in his power to conclude any bargain; and as for himſelf, that being in Publick charge, it was not fit he ſhould hazard himſelf againſt a man of Private Conditions, which otherwiſe he would moſt willingly accept: here the Earl of Warwick intreated the Lord General that he might accept the Challenge; and, Trumpeter (ſaith he) bring me word, that thy Maſter will perform the Combate with me, and thou ſhalt have an hundred Crowns for thy pains; nay, rather (ſaith the Lord General) bring me word, that thy Maſter will abide and give us battel, and thou ſhalt have a thouſand Crowns for thy pains: and thereupon, when no other agreement could be made, a general battel was reſolved on; in the Army of the Scots were five or ſix and thirty thouſand men; in the Avant-guard, commanded by the Earl of Angus, about fifteen thouſand; in the Battel, over whom was the Lord Governour, about ten thouſand; and the Arrear as many, led by the valiant Gourdon, Earl of Huntley. Hackbutters they had none, nor men at Arms, but about two thouſand Horſemen (Prickers as they term them) the reſt were all on foor, well furniſhed with Jacks and Scull, Pikes, Daggers, Bucklers made of boord, and ſlicing ſwords broad and thin; every man had a long Kerchiffe, folded twice or thrice about his neck, and many of them had chains of Latten, drawn three or four times along their hoſes or doublet ſleeves: they had alſo, to affright the Enemies Horſes, great rattles covered with Parchment or Paper, and ſmall ſtones within put upon ſtaves three ells long. And now both Armies joyned in Battel, where after a long fight, and much variety of fortune on both ſides, at length the victory fell to the Engliſh: in this fight, divers of the Nobility of Scotland were ſlain,; of the inferiour ſort about ten, or, as ſome ſay, fourteen thouſand; of the Engliſh were ſlain one and fifty Horſemen, and one Footman, but many hurt; the Lord Gray was dangerouſly thruſt with a Pike in the mouth, which ſtruck two inches into his neck: the Scottiſh Priſoners, accounted by the Marſhals Book, were about fifteen hundred, the chief whereof were, the Earl of Huntley, the Lord Yeſter, Holley, and Hamilton, the Maſter of Sanc-Poole and the Lord of Wimmes; The Earl of Huntley being asked, whilſt he was a Priſoner, how how he ſtood affected to the Marriage? Made this anſwer, That he liked the Marriage well enough, but he liked not this kind of woing. This Victory of Muſkelborough againſt the Scots, was on the tenth of December, the very ſame day on which thirty years before a Victory had been had againſt them at Flodden field; ſo as it ſeems this day was fatal to the Scots, and confirms the opinion of Aſtrologers, that there are days to ſome men fortunate, and unfortunate to others, if they could be known. This victory ſtruck ſuch a terror into many of the Scots, that the Earl of Bothwel & divers chief Gentlemen of Tividale and Meers ſubmitted themſelves to the King of England, and were received by the Protector into his protection: After this, the Engliſh Army took many Towns and Caſtles, and then for want of Proviſion, returned into England, having not ſtayed above five and twenty days in Scotland, and not loſt above threeſcore men. After the taking of Muſkelborough, the Duke of Somerſet made many Knights, but three eſpecially; namely, Sir Ralph Sadler Treaſurer, Sir Francis Brian Captain of the Light Horſe, and Sir Ralph Vane Lieutenant of all the Horſemen: he made Bannerets, which is a dignity above a Knight, and next to a Baron; and theſe were the laſt that from that time to this, did ever receive this dignity. But notwithſtanding this great overthrow at Muſkelborough, the Governour of Scotland would not yet be quiet; but aſſembling the people, made unto them an Oration, exhorting them to defend the liberty of their Country, and not to be daunted with any event of war.

Days to ſome men fortunate, and unfortunate to others.

In this time many diſtractions and troubles happened in England; partly, in matters of Religion, and partly about Incloſures: and firſt for Incloſures, the Lord Protector cauſed Proclamation to be ſet forth, commanding that they who had incloſed any Lands accuſtomed to lie open, ſhould upon a certain pain, before a day aſſigned, lay them open again: And then in matter of Religion, certain Injunctions were ſet forth, for removing of Images out of Churches; and divers Preachers were ſent with Inſtructions to diſſwade the people from praying to Saints, or for the dead; from uſe of Beads, Aſhes and Proceſſions; from Maſſes, Dirges, praying in any unknown Tongue; and for defect of Preachers, Homilies were appointed publickly to be read in Churches: and many for offering to maintain theſe Ceremonies, were either puniſhed, or forced to recant. Edmund Bonner, Biſhop of London, was committed to the Fleet, for refuſing to receive theſe Injunctions; Stephen Gardiner, Biſhop of Winchester, was likewiſe committed firſt to the Fleet, and after to the Tower, for that he had preached, It were well theſe changes in Religion ſhould be ſtayed untill the King were of years to govern by himſelf: for the like cauſes Tunſtall, Biſhop of Durham, Heath, Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Day, Biſhop of Chicheſter, were in like manner committed to priſon, and all of them diſpoſſeſſed of their Biſhopricks; and that which was worſe, the Biſhopricks themſelves were diſpoſſeſſed of their Revenues, in ſuch ſort, that a very ſmall part remained to the Biſhops that came after.

Incloſures commanded to be laid open.

Injunctions ſet forth in matters of Religion.

Divers Biſhops committed to Priſon.

And now a Parliament was held, in the firſt year of the King, and by Prorogation in the ſecond; wherein divers Chantries, Colledges, free Chappels, Fraternities and Guildes, with all their lands and goods, were given to the King; which being ſold at a low rate, enriched many, and ennobled ſome, and thereby made them firm in maintaining the change: alſo it was then ordered, that no man ſhould ſpeak againſt receiving the Euchariſt in both kinds, and that Biſhops ſhould be placed by Collation of the King under his Letters Patents, without any election preceding, or confirmation enſuing; and that all Proceſſes Eccleſiaſtical ſhould be made in the Kings name, as in Writs at the Common Law; and that all perſons exerciſing Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, ſhould have the Kings Arms in the Seals of their Office: and further, the Statute of the ſix Articles and other Statutes concerning puniſhment of Lollards were repealed, and the Kings Supremacy over the Church of England was confirmed.

A Parliament, in which many things ordered concerning Eccleſiaſtical affairs.

All this while the Wars in Scotland continued, and were managed by the Lord Gray of Wilton with variable ſucceſs; and now about this time was ſent to him in aid, the Earl of Shrewsbury with fifteen thouſand men; againſt him, in aid of the Scots, was ſent the Rhinegrave with ten thouſand French; who entring into conſultation, how to remove the young Queen out of the reach of the Engliſh, provided a Fleet, and ſailing round about Scotland, notwithſtanding the Engliſh Fleet lay in wait to impeach their paſſage, yet conveyed her ſafely into France, being then but ſix years old, accompanied in the journey with James her baſe Brother, John Erskin, and William Leviſton; and in April following was married to Francis the Dauphin of France.

You heard before the alterations in Religion: now hear the troubles; for when the Injunctions were ſent abroad into the Country, and Commiſſioners appointed to ſee them executed: one Maſter Bodye a Commiſſioner, as he was pulling down Images in Cornwall, was ſuddenly by a Prieſt ſtabbed into the body with a Knife. Hereupon the people flocked together in divers parts of the Shire, taking Arms, and beginning to commit outragss; and although the chief Offender was hanged and quartered in Smithfield, and many of his Complices executed in divers parts of the Realm, and withal a Pardon proclaimed to all that would lay down Arms; yet neither could that ſeverity, nor this lenity reſtrain them from their inſolencies; but in divers Countries, as Suſſex, Hampſhire, Kent, Gloſterſhire, Warwickshire, Woſterſhire, but ſpecially in Somerſetſhire and Devonſhire, great Aſſemblies of people gathered to a head; whoſe chief Leaders were Humfrey Arundel, and about ſix others of inferiour note, but many Prieſts. Some of theſe (we may ſay) were Common-wealth mutineers; and ſome mutined for Religion: they who were for the Common-wealth could agree upon nothing; ſome would have no Juſtices, ſome no Gentlemen, ſome no Lawyers, nor ordinary Courts of Juſtice; but above all, Incloſures muſt down; but whether all, or which, or how to be imployed, none could tell. The religious Mutineers were not altogether ſo various in their voices, as having ſome ſome few amongſt them by whom they were guided: theſe in the name of the people hammered up theſe Articles following; upon granting of which, they profeſſed that both their bodies and goods ſhould be at the Kings devotion.

1. That Curates ſhould adminiſter Baptiſm at all times of neceſſity, as well on week-days as on holy-days.
2. That their children might be confirmed by the Biſhop.
3. That the Maſs might be celebrated, no man communicating with the Prieſt.
4. That they might have reſervation of the Lords body in their Churches.
5. That they might have holy Bread and holy Water in remembrance of Chriſts precious Body and Blood.
6. That Prieſts might live unmarried.
7. That the ſix Articles, ſet forth by King Henry the Eighth, might be continued, at leaſt till the King ſhould come to full age.

1549. Upon theſe demands, the King, although he knew that Reaſons would little prevail with unreaſonable men: yet to diſcharge the place he held, he ſent them in writing Anſwers to them all, and withal a general Pardon, if they would deſiſt and lay down Arms. But the ſeditious growing the more outragious, the fairer they were intreated; and finding themſelves unable to ſubſiſt with their own eſtates, began to think upon the ſpoil of Cities; and firſt they came to Exeter, and demanded entrance, which the Citizens refuſing, they fell to ſet fire on the Gates; but the Citizens prevented this, by caſting in wood and maintaining the fire, till they had caſt up a half Moon within; upon which when the Seditious attempted to enter, they were preſently hewn and cut in pieces. And after this they mined the walls, laid Powder, and rammed the mouth; but the Citizens prevented this alſo, by making a countermine, whereinto they poured ſuch plenty of water, that the wet powder could not be fired. All this while, the Lord Ruſſel, Lord Privy Seal, who had been ſent down to ſuppreſs the Commotion, lay at Huntington, expecting more Forces, whilſt the Citizens of Exeter for twelve daies together endured ſo great famine, that they were fain to eat Horſes, and make bread of courſe Bran moulded in cloaths, for that otherwiſe it would not cleave together. At laſt the Lord Gray came to the Lord Ruſſel with ſupply of Forces; who after many conflicts with the Rebels, forced them to raiſe their ſiege at Exeter; and thereby freed the City from many miſeries: to whom the King afterward gave the Mannor of Evyland, in reward for their loyalty. After this, the Rebels rallying their Forces, were again ſet upon by the Kings Army, and the greateſt part of them ſlain, the reſt fled; many were taken and executed by Marſhal Law; the chief Leaders were ſent to London, and there executed. The ſedition being thus ſuppreſſed, it is memorable what ſport Sir William Kingſton the Provoſt Marſhal made, by vertue of his Office, upon men in miſery. One Boyer, Maior of Bodwin in Cornwall, had been amongſt the Rebels, not willingly, but enforced; to him the Provoſt ſent word he would come and dine with him; for whom the Maior made great proviſion; a little before Dinner, the Provoſt took the Maior aſide, and whiſpered him in the ear, that an execution muſt that day be done in the Town, and therefore required to have a pair of Gallows ſet up againſt dinner ſhould be done; the Maior failed not of his charge; preſently after dinner the Provoſt taking the Maior by the hand, intreated him to lead him to the place where the Gallows was, which when he beheld, he asked the Maior if he thought them to be ſtrong enough; yes (ſaid the Maior) doubtleſs they are; Well then, ſaid the Provoſt, get you up ſpeedily, for they are provided for you. I hope (anſwered the Maior) you mean not as you ſpeak: In faith (ſaid the Provoſt) there is no remedy, for you have been a buſie Rebel; and ſo without reſpit or defence he was hanged to death; a moſt uncourteous part, for a gueſt to offer his hoſt. Near the ſaid place dwelt a Miller, who had been a buſie actor in that Rebellion; who, fearing the approach of the Marſhal, told a ſturdy fellow his ſervant, that he had occaſion to go from home, and therefore bid him, that if any man came to enquire after the Miller, he ſhould not ſpeak of him, but ſay that himſelf was the Miller, and had been ſo for three years before. So the Provoſt came and called for the Miller, when out comes the ſervant, and ſaith, he was the man. The Provoſt demanded how long he had kept the Mill? Theſe three years, anſwered the Servant. Then the Provoſt commanded his men to lay hold on him, and hang him on the next Tree. At this the Fellow cried out, that he was not the Miller, but the Millers man: Nay Sir (ſaid the Provoſt) I will take you at your word: and if thou beeſt the Miller, thou art a buſie knave; if thou beeſt not, thou art a falſe lying knave: and howſoever, thou canſt never do thy Maſter better ſervice than to hang for him: and ſo without more ado he was diſpatched.

Exeter endured a ſiege of the Rebels to extreme famine.

For which loyalty the King gave them the Mannor of Evyland.

Sir William Kingſtons merry cruelty.

When this Sedition in Devonſhire was appeaſed, there aroſe another in Norfolk, and that ſpecially upon a grievance for Incloſures; The Rebels had got one Robert Ket, a Tanner of Wimondham, to be their Leader, and were grown to a Body of twenty thouſand, ſeating themſelves at Monſhold near Mount-Surrey, where they carried a face as it were of Juſtice and Religion; for they had one Conyers an idle fellow to be their Chaplain, who morning and evening read ſolemn Prayers, alſo Sermons they had often; and as for Juſtice, they had a Bench under a Tree, where Ket uſually ſate, and with him two of every Hundred whence their Companies had been raiſed, to hear complaints, & to give Judgment (and from hence were Warrants ſent in the Kings name, to bring in Powder, ſhot, Victuals, and all things neceſſary: Which Tree hath ever ſince been called the Tree of Reformation. And now being grown to a height, they preſented certain Complaints to the King, requiring, he would ſend a Herald to them, to give them ſatisfaction. The King, though he took it for a great indignity to have ſuch baſe Fellows to capitulate with him, yet framing himſelf to the time, he returned this anſwer; That in October following he would call a Parliament, wherein their Complaints ſhould be heard, and all their Grievances ſhould be redreſſed, requiring them in the mean time, to lay down Arms, and return to their houſes, and thereupon granting them a general Pardon. But this was so far from satisfying the Seditious, that hereupon first they assaulted the Town of Norwich, took it, and made the Mayor attend them as their Servant, and then returned again to their station at Monshold. Not long after, William Parre, Marques of Northampton, with the Lord Sheffield, the Lord Wentworth, divers Knights and fifteen hundred horse, with a small Band of Italians, was sent against them; whom the Seditious so stoutly opposed, that much mischief was done on both sides; the Lord Sheffield, falling with his Horse in a Ditch, was taken prisoner, and as he pulled off his Helmet to shew who he was, he was by a Butcher strucken down with a Club and slain: So as the Marques with his Forces not prevailing, there was afterward sent the Earl of Warwick with Six thousand Foot, and Fifteen hundred Horse, with whom were the Lords Willoughby, Powis, & Bray, his two Sons Ambrose and Robert, and many Knights and Gentlemen of name. When the Earl was come near to the Camp of the Seditious, he sent a Herald to them, offering them the Kings Pardon, if they would desist; but they were so far from accepting it, that a lewd Boy turned up his naked breech towards the Herald, and bid him kiss it. Upon this, many Skirmishes passed between the Earl and them, with loss sometimes to one side, and sometimes to another; at last they came to a Battel, where the Rebels placed in the Front all the Gentlemen they had taken prisoners, meaning they should be the first slain, of whom yet very few were hurt, but of the Rebels were slain above two thousand: and now once again the Earl offered them pardon, if they would desist; but for all their losses, they continued obstinate still. At last, the Earl sent to know if they would entertain their Pardon, in case he should come in Person and assure them of it: This moved them much; and then they answered, They knew him to be so honourable, that from himself they would imbrace it. Whereupon the Earl riding to them, and causing their Pardon to be read, they threw away their Weapons, wishing all joy and prosperity to the King: Nine of the principal Rebels were hanged upon the Tree of Reformation; Ket himself flying away was taken and hanged in Chains upon Norwich Castle. The day of this defeat of the Seditious was a long time after observed for a Festival day by the Inhabitants of Norwich. And thus ended the Sedition in Norfolk; When at the same time another arose in York shire, whereof the chief movers were William Ombler a Gentleman, Thomas Dale a Parish Clerk, and Stephenson a Post, to whom were assembled four or five thousand, who took their encouragement from a certain Prophesie, which did foretel, That the time should come, when there should be no King; when the Nobility and Gentry should be destroyed; when the Realm should be ruled by four Governours elected by the Commons, holding a Parliament in commotion, which should begin at the South and North Seas of England: and that time they understood to be the present, and that the Rebels of Devonshire, Norfolk, and Yorkshire, should draw together to accomplish this Prophesie. But as soon as they heard that the Tumults of Devonshire and Norfolk were quieted, they found that they were deceived in the understanding of the Prophesie; and thereupon presently, upon the Kings Pardon, they fell off and dispersed, their chief Leaders, Ombler, Dale, and four others were executed at York; and with this, the Spirit of Sedition was quite laid in all places of the Kingdom.

They assault the Town of Norwich.

They encounter the Kings Forces.

They refuse Pardon offered them.

At last they imbrace Pardon, if the Earl of Warwick will bring it to them himself.

Ket is taken and hanged.

Another Insurrection at the same time in York shire, upon the conceit of a Prophesie.

But these also upon the Kings Pardon lay down their Arms.

But the King of France taking advantage of these Seditions, though he had been in Treaty before of Peace with England, yet now he brake off the Treaty, proclaimed War, and denounced it by his Embassadour to the King: hereupon all Frenchmen in England, not Denizens, were taken prisoners, and all their Goods seized for the King; which the French King understanding, he sent a Fleet of Ships to surprize Gernsey and Jersey, but was repelled with the loss of a thousand men. After this, he levied an Army by land, and went himself in Person against Bulloign, defended by the valiant Sir Nicholas Arnold; but being weary of the Work, he left his Lieutenant Chatillon to pursue the Siege, who having made many fierce Batteries, and at last assaults, and not prevailing, he then attempted to hinder the Town from supply of Victuals; and to this end, charged a Galley with gravel & stones, meaning to sink it in the Haven, but the English took the Galley before it was sunk, and made use of the stones for their own defence; after this they made faggots of light matter, mixed with Pitch, Tar, Tallow, Rosin, Powder, and Wild-fire, with intention to fire the Ships in the Haven, but that enterprise was defeated by the Bulloigners, and the faggots taken from the French; and more than this there was little done in those parts at this time.

The French King taking advantage of these Seditions in England, goes with an Army against Bulloigne which the valiant Sir Nicholas Arnold defended.

But in England, in the mean time, an unfortunate accident hapned, which beginning upon a very light occasion, produced afterward very heavy effects; wherof, though there were many concurrent circumstances, yet the original cause was the pride of a Woman, upon a point indeed wherein the natures of Women are commonly most tender, Precedency of place: the Protector had married Anne Stanhope, a Woman of a haughty stomack, and the Lord Admiral, his Brother, the Queen Dowager, a Lady of great mildness: the neerness of the Husbands, gave occasions of the Ladies often meeting, where the Dutchess would inwardly murmur, why she being the Wife of the elder Brother, & the better man, should give place to her, who was the wife of the younger Brother, and the meaner man; this envy of hers towards the Queen, bred a malice in her towards the Admiral, as thinking the mischief she did to the Husband, to be a part of revenge upon the Wife; and though the Queen shortly after died in Child-bed, yet the malice of the Dutchess towards the Admiral lived still (so hard a thing it is for malice, once settled in a Womans heart, to be removed;) out of this malice, she puts divers surmises into her Husband the Protectors head, against his Brother the Admiral, as though he went about to procure his death, to the end, he might aspire to the place he held; but certainly, as misliking his Government being a Protestant, who was himself a Papist: In this case causes of jealousie against the Admiral were obvious enough, for it was known known that in King Henries time, he had aimed at the marriage of the Lady Elizabeth King Henries ſecond Daughter; and now his Wife the Queen Dowager being dead (and not without ſuſpicion of poyſon) he fell upon that marriage afreſh, which could not be thought to tend but to ſome very high aſpiring end: The Protector a plain man, and one that had not the deepeſt inſight into practices, whether too importunately provoked by his Wife, or whether out of an honeſt mind, not willing to patronize faults, though in a Brother, gave way to Accuſations brought againſt him, ſo as in a Parliament then holden, he was accuſed for attempting to get into his cuſtody the Perſon of the King, and Government of the Realm, for endeavouring to marry the Lady Elizabeth the Kings Siſter, for perſwading the King in his tender years to take upon him the rule and ordering of himſelf; upon which points (though perhaps proved, yet not ſufficiently, againſt him, who was never called to his anſwer) he was by Act of Parliament condemned; and within few days after condemnation, a Warrant was ſent, under the hand of his Brother the Protector, to cut off his Head; wherein (as after it proved) he did as much, as if he had laid his own Head down upon the Block; for whileſt theſe Brothers lived and held together, they were as a ſtrong Fortreſs one to the other; the Admirals courage ſupporting the Protectors Authority, and the Protectors Authority maintaining the Admirals ſtoutneſs; but the Admiral once gone, the Protectors Authority, as wanting ſupport, began to totter, and fell at laſt to utter ruine. Beſides, there was at this time, amongſt the Nobility, a kind of faction; Proteſtants who favoured the Protector for his own ſake, and other of the Papal inclination, who favoured him for his Brothers ſake; but his Brother being gone, both ſides forſook him, even his own ſide, as thinking they could expect little aſſiſtance from him, who gave no more aſſiſtance to his own Brother; and perhaps more than all this, the Earl of Warwick, at this time, was the moſt powerful man both in Courage and counſel amongſt all the Nobility, and none ſo near to watch him as the Admiral, while he lived; but he being gone, there was none left that either was able and durſt, or durſt and was able to ſtand againſt him: however it was, not long after the Admirals death, the Protector was invaded with ſundry Accuſations, wherin the Earl of Warwick made not always the greateſt ſhow, but yet had always the greateſt hand; one thing the Protector had done, which though a private act, yet gave a publick diſtaſte.

The Admiral in Parliament is accuſed of divers Crimes.

He is beheaded.

After his death the Protector is accuſed.

Somerſet-houſe builded by the Protector with Sacriledge.

To make him a Manſion houſe in the Strand (the ſame which is now called Somerſet-houſe) he pulled down a Church, and two Biſhops Houſes by the Strand Bridge; in digging the foundation wherof, the bones of many who had been there buried, were caſt out and carried into the fields; and becauſe the Stones of thoſe Houſes and the Church ſufficed not for his work, the Steeple, and moſt part of the Church of St. Johns of Jeruſalem near Smithfield, was mined & overthrown with Powder, and the ſtones applied to this ſpatious Building; and more than this, the Cloyſter of Pauls on the North ſide of the Church, in a place called Pardon Church-yard, and the dance of Death very curiouſly wrought about the Cloyſter, and a Chappel that ſtood in the midſt of the Church-yard; alſo the Charnel Houſe, that ſtood on the South ſide of Pauls (now a Carpenters Yard) with the Chappel, Timber, and Monuments therein, were beaten down, the bones of the dead carried into Finſbury fields, and the Stones converted into this Building. This Act of the Protectors did ſomething alienate the peoples minds from him; which the Earl of Warwick perceiving, thought it now a fit time to be falling upon him; and thereupon drew eighteen of the Privy Council to joyn with him, who withdrawing themſelves from the Court, held ſecret conſultations together, and walked in the City with many Servants weaponed, and in new Liveries; whereof when the Protector heard, he ſent Secretary Peter to them, to know the cauſes of their Aſſembly, requiring them to reſort to him peaceably, that they might commune together as Friends; but in the mean time, he armed five hundred men, and removed the King by night from Hampton-Court to Windſor: On the other ſide, the Lords at London, having firſt taken poſſeſſion of the Tower, ſent for the Mayor and Aldermen of the City, to the Earl of Warwicks Lodging at Ely-houſe in Holborn; to whom the Lord Rich, then Lord Chancellor, made a long Oration, wherin he ſhewed the ill Government of the Lord Protector, and the many miſchiefs that by it were come upon the Kingdom, and thereupon requiring them to joyn with the Lords there aſſembled to remove him; and preſently that day, a Proclamation was made in divers parts of the City to that purpoſe, to which the Lords and Counſellors that ſubſcribed their names were theſe: The Lord Rich Chancellor, the Lord Saint-John Lord great Maſter, the Marqueſs of Northampton, the Earl of Warwick Lord great Chamberlain, the Earl of Arundell Lord Chamberlain, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Southampton, Sir Thomas Cheyney Treaſurer of the Houſhold, Sir John Gage Conſtable of the Tower, Sir William Peter Secretary, Sir Edward North Knight, Sir Edward Montague chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, Sir John Baker Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Ralph Sadler, Sir Edward Wootton, Sir Richard Southwell Knights: and Doctor Wootton Dean of Canterbury. In the afternoon of the ſame day, the Lord Mayor aſſembled a Common Council in the Guild-hall, where two Letters arrived almoſt in one inſtant, from the King and the Lord Protector, for a thouſand men to be armed for defence of the Kings Perſon; another from the Lords at London, for two thouſand men to aide them in defence of the Kings Perſon alſo; both pretending alike, and therefore hard how to pleaſe them both. The Recorder ſet forth the complaint of the Lords againſt the Protector, in ſuch ſort, that he made many inclinable to favour that ſide, but one named George Stadlow better adviſed, ſtept up, and in a long Speech ſhewed what miſchiefs had come to the City by oppoſing the King; and therefore gave his opinion, to ſuſpend giving aide to the Lords, at leaſt for a time. His advice was hearkened unto, and thereupon the Court reſolved only to arm an hundred Horſemen, and four hundred Foot, in defence of the City; and to the Letters returned ſubmiſſive, but dilatory Anſwers. After ſome other paſſages between the Protector and the Lords, Sir Ed. Winkfield, Captain of the Guard, was ſent from the Lords to Windſor; who ſo well perſwaded the King of the Lords loyal affection towards him, and of their moderate intention towards the Protector, that the King was contented to have him preſently removed from him, and ſuffered him within two days after to be carried to the Tower: In whoſe abſence, ſeven Lords of the Council, and four Knights, were appointed by turns to attend the Kings Perſon; and for Affairs of State, the Government of them was referred to the whole Body of the Council: ſoon after were ſent to the Protector in the Tower, certain Lords of the Council, with Articles againſt him, requiring his preſent Anſwer, whether he would acknowledge them to be true, or elſe ſtand upon his juſtification. The chief Article was this, that he took upon him the Office of Protector, with expreſs condition, that he ſhould do nothing in the Kings Affairs, but by aſſent of the late Kings Executors, or the greateſt part of them; and that contrary to this condition, he had hindered Juſtice, and ſubverted Laws, of his own Authority, as well by Letters, as by other Command; and many other Articles, but all much to this purpoſe.

The Protector is ſent to the Tower.

The Protector, whether thinking to ſpeed better by ſubmiſſion than by conteſting; or perhaps finding himſelf not altogether innocent (for indeed in ſo great a place, who can bear himſelf with ſuch ſincerity but he will commit errors with which he may be taxed?) ſubſcribed an acknowledgment with his own hand; humbly ſubmitting himſelf to the Kings mercy, and deſiring their Lordſhips favour towards him. Upon this ſubmiſſion, three months after he had been impriſoned, he was releaſed, entertained, and feaſted by the King, and ſworn again to be a Privy Counſellor, but no more Protector: At which time, between him and the Lords, a ſhew at leaſt of perfect amity was made; and to make it the more firm, the Dukes Daughter was afterward married to the Lord Liſle, Son and Heir to the Earl of Warwick; at which marriage the King was preſent; and perhaps to honour their reconcilement and this Marriage, The Earl of Warwick was made Lord Admiral of England, Sir John Ruſſel Lord Privy Seal was created Earl of Bedford, the Lord Saint-John was created Earl of Wiltſhire, and ſoon after made Lord Treaſurer, Sir William Paget, Controllour of the Kings Houſe, was made Lord Paget, Sir Anthony Winkfield, Captain of the Guard, was made Controllour, and Sir Thomas Darcye was made Captain of the Guard. But of the other ſide the Earl of Arundell, the Earl of Southampton, were put off from the Council; of whom the Earl of Southampton died ſhortly after at Lincoln Place in Holborn, and was buried in St. Andrews Church there.

Upon his ſubmiſſion he is releaſed, but no more Protector.

Divers Lords made.

About this time a Parliament was held at Weſtminſter, wherein one Act was made againſt ſpreading of Propheſies; another againſt unlawful Aſſemblies: but for fear of new tumults, the Parliament was untimely diſſolved, and Gentlemen were commanded to retire to their Country Habitations; and for the ſame cauſe alſo, Trinity Term did not hold.

About this time alſo, Pope Paul the third died; after whoſe death the Cardinals being divided about the Election of a new Pope; the Imperial part, which was the greateſt gave their Voices for Cardinal Poole; which being told him, he diſabled himſelf, and wiſhed them to chooſe one that might be moſt for the glory of God, and good of the Church: upon this ſtop, ſome that were no friends to Poole, and perhaps looked for the place themſelves, if he were put off, laid many things to his charge; amongſt other, that he was not without ſuſpicion of Lutheraniſm, as having been very converſant with Immanuel Tremellius, and Anthonius Flaminius, great Lutherans; and not altogether without blemiſh of incontinency, there being a young Nun that was thought to be his Daughter. But of theſe Criminations Poole ſo cleared himſelf, that he was afterward more importuned to take the place than he was before: and thereupon one night the Cardinals came unto him, being in bed, and ſent him word they came to adore him (which is one ſpecial kind of electing the Pope;) but he being awaked out of his ſleep, and acquainted with it, made anſwer, That this was not a work of darkneſs, and therefore required them to forbear till the next day, and then to do as God ſhould put into their minds. But the Italian Cardinals, attributing this putting off to a kind of ſtupidity and ſloth in Poole, looked no more after him, but the next day choſe Cardinal Montanus Pope, who was afterward named Julius the Third.

Cardinal Poole is choſen Pope, but making excuſes, is rejected.

And now the King of France, upon many juſt Conſiderations, was grown deſirous to have a Peace with England; and thereupon ſent one Guidolti a Florentine into England, to make ſome overure of his deſire to the Lords of the Council; who addreſſing himſelf to the Earl of Warwick, whom he knew to be moſt prevalent, ſo prevailed, that it was concluded four Embaſſadours ſhould be ſent from the King of England into France, and four from the French King, to Treat with them. The Commiſſioners for the Engliſh were John Earl of Bedford, William Lord Paget; Sir William Peter, and Sir John Maſon, Secretaries of State. For the French, were Monſieur Rochpot, Monſieur Chatillon, Guyllart de Martier, and Rochetelle de Daſſie. Much time was ſpent to agree about a place of Meeting; till at laſt the Engliſh, to ſatisfie the French, were contented it ſhould be before Bulloigne, where were many Meetings, and many differences about Conditions: but in concluſion, a Peace was concluded upon certain Articles, the chief whereof was, that Bulloigne and the places adjacent ſhould be delivered up to the French within ſix Weeks after the Peace Proclaimed; and that the French ſhould pay for the ſame two hundred thouſand Crowns, within three days after delivery of the Town; and other two hundred thouſand Crowns upon the fifth day of Auguſt following: Hoſtages were on both ſides given for performance, and to thoſe Articles the French King was ſworn at Amyens, and the King of England in London: The Lord Clinton, who had been Deputy of Bulloigne, was made Lord Admiral of England.

Preſently after this Agreement, the Duke of Brunſwick ſent to the King of England, to offer his Service in the Kings Wars, with Ten thouſand men, and to intreat a Marriage with the Lady Mary, the Kings eldeſt Siſter. To his offer of Aide, anſwer was made, That the Kings Wars were ended: And touching the Marriage with the Lady Mary, That the King was in ſpeech for her Marriage with the Infanta of Portugal; which if it ſucceeded not, he ſhould then be favourably heard. Upon this, the Emperours Embaſſadour demanded of the King, That the Lady Mary might have free exerciſe of the Maſs; which the King not only conſtantly denied, but thereupon Sermons were exerciſed at the Court, and order taken, That no man ſhould have any Benefice from the King, but firſt he ſhould Preach before him: And ſhortly after, under pretence of preparing for Sea-matters, five thouſand pounds were ſent to relieve Proteſtants beyond the Seas. At this time alſo an Embaſſadour came from Guſtavus King of Sweden, to enter League with the King for entercourſe of Merchants; and charge was then alſo given, that the Laws of England ſhould be adminiſtred in Ireland.

About this time the Queen Dowager of Scotland, going from France to her Country, paſſed through England, having firſt obtained a ſafe Conduct, ſhe arrived at Portſmouth, and was there met by divers of the Engliſh Nobility; conducted to London, ſhe was lodged in the Biſhops-Palace: After four days ſtaying, having been Feaſted by the King at White-Hall, ſhe departed, being waited on by the Sheriffs of Counties to the Borders of Scotland. And now was one Steward a Scot apprehended in England, and impriſoned in the Tower, for intending to poyſon the young Queen of Scots, whom the King delivered to the French King upon the frontiers of Callice, to be by him Juſticed at his pleaſure.

The Emperour ſeeks to get the Lady Mary by ſtealth out of England.

At this time certain Ships were appointed by the Emperour, to Tranſport the Lady Mary either by violence or by ſtealth out of England to Antwerp; whereupon Sir John Gates was ſent with Forces into Eſſex, where the Lady lay: and beſides, the Duke of Somerſet was ſent with two hundred men, the Lord Privie Seal with other two hundred, and Maſter Sentleger with four hundred more, to ſeveral Coaſts upon the Sea; and the Lord Chancellour and Secretary Peter were ſent to the Lady Mary, who, after ſome Conference, brought her to the Lord Chancellour's Houſe at Lyee in Eſſex, and from thence to the King at Weſtminſter. Here the Council declared unto her, how long the King had permitted her the uſe of the Maſs, and conſidering her obſtinacy, was reſolved now no longer to permit, unleſs ſhe would put him in hope of ſome conformity in ſhort time. To which ſhe anſwered, That her Soul was Gods: and touching her Faith, as ſhe could not change, ſo ſhe would not diſſemble it. Reply was made, That the King intended not to conſtrain her Faith, but to reſtrain the outward profeſſion of it, in regard of the danger the Example might draw. After ſome like enterchange of ſpeeches, the Lady was appointed to remain with the King, when there arrived an Embaſſadour from the Emperour, with a threatning Meſſage of War, in caſe his Couſin the Lady Mary ſhould be denied the free exerciſe of the Maſs: Hereupon the King preſently adviſed with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and with the Biſhop of London and Rocheſter, who gave their Opinion, That to give Licence to ſin, was ſin; but to connive at ſin, might be allowed, ſo it were not too long, nor without hope of Reformation: Then Anſwer was given to the Embaſſadour, That the King would ſend to the Emperour within a month or two, and give him ſuch ſatisfaction as ſhould be fit.

To connive is leſs than to give Licence.

The Lady Elizabeth cannot be induced to marry.

And now the King being uncertain of the faith, both of his Subjects and of his Confederates, intended by alliance to ſtrengthen himſelf; and thereupon ſent one Bartwick, to the King of Denmark with private Inſtructions, to Treat of a Marriage between the Lady Elizabeth, the King's youngeſt Siſter, and the King of Denmark's eldeſt Son: but when it came to the point, this Lady could not be induced to entertain Marriage with any.

Embaſſadors are ſent into France.

After this the Marqueſs of Northampton was ſent Embaſſadour to the French King, as well to preſent him with the Order of the Garter, as to Treat with him of other ſecret Affairs: With him were joyned in Commiſſion the Biſhop of Ely, Sir Philip Hobbie, Sir William Pickering, Sir John Maſon, and Maſter Smith Secretary of State; alſo the Earl of Worceſter, Rutland, and Ormond were appointed to accompany them; as likewiſe the Lords Liſles, Fitzwater, Bray, Abergavenny, and Evers, with other Knights and Gentlemen of Note, to the number of Six and twenty: And for avoiding of an immoderate Train, Order was given, That every Earl ſhould have but four Attendants, every Baron but three, every Knight and Gentleman but two, only the Commiſſioners were not limited to any number. Being come to the Court of France, they were forthwith brought to the King, being then in his Bed-Chamber: To whom the Marqueſs preſented the Order of the Garter, wherewith he was preſently inveſted. Then the Biſhop of Ely in a ſhort Speech, declared how the King of England, out of his love and deſire of Amity, had ſent this Order to his Majeſty; deſiring withal, That ſome perſons might be authorized to Treat with them about ſome other matters of Importance; whereupon a Commiſſion went forth to the Cardinal of Lorrain, Chaſtillion the Conſtable, the Duke of Guyſne, and others. At firſt, the Engliſh demanded, That the young Queen of Scots might be ſent into England for perfecting of Marriage between King Edward and her. But to this the French anſwered, That concluſion had been made long before for her Marriage with the Dauphin of France. Then the Engliſh propoſed a Marriage between King Edward and the Lady Elizabeth the French King's eldeſt Daughter. To this the French did cheerfully incline; but when they came to talk talk of Portion, the Engliſh demanded at firſt Fifteen hundred thouſand Crowns, then fell to fourteen, and at laſt to eight hundred thouſand: The French offered at firſt, one hundred thouſand Crowns, then roſe to two hundred thouſand, and higher they would not be drawn; ſaying, It was more than ever had been given with a Daughter of France. Shortly after, Monſieur the Marſhal and other Commiſſioners were ſent by the French King to deliver to the King of England the Order of St. Michael; and then was further Treaty about the Marriage: and becauſe the French could be ſcrued no higher than two hundred thouſand Crowns, it was at laſt accepted, and the Agreement was reduced into Writing, and delivered under Seal on both ſides.

And now King Edward ſuppoſing his ſtate to be moſt ſafe, when indeed it was moſt unſure; in teſtimony both of his Joy and Love, advanced many to new Titles of Honour; The Lord Marqueſs Dorſet, who had married the eldeſt Daughter of Charles Brandon, was created Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Warwick Duke of Northumberland, the Earl of Wiltſhire was created Marqueſs of Wincheſter, Sir William Herbert Lord of Cardiffe, and Maſter of the Horſe, was created Earl of Pembrook: Alſo William Cecill the Kings Secretary, John Cheek one of his Schoolmaſters, Henry Dudley, and Henry Nevil were made Knights; and (that which perhaps it had been happy if it had never been) Sir Robert Dudley, one of the Duke of Northumberlands Sons, (the ſame who was afterward the great Earl of Leiceſter) was ſworn one of the Six ordinary Gentlemen of the King's Chamber; for after his coming into a place ſo near about him, the King enjoyed his health but a while.

Dukes and Earls made.

The Lord Robert Dudley is made one of the Kings Bed-Chamber.

The aſpiring thoughts of the Duke of Northumberland were now grown to be put in execution: He was advanced in title of Honour equal with the higheſt; in authority and power above the higheſt: he had placed his Politick Son near about the Kings Perſon. The next thing was to remove the Duke of Somerſet out of the Way: And for this alſo, he had prepared Inſtruments; Sir Thomas Palmer, Crane, Hammon, Cecill, and others, who brought ſeveral Accuſations againſt the Duke; ſome trenching upon the King and Kingdom, but one ſpecially againſt the Duke of Northumberland's Perſon; whoſe practices when the Duke of Somerſet found, and had cauſe to fear, he went one day into the Duke of Northumberland's Chamber, with a purpoſe to kill him; but finding him in his Bed, and being received with much kind Complement by him, his heart relented, and thereupon came away without any thing done. At his coming out, one of his Company asked him if he had done the deed? Who anſwered, No. Then, ſaid he, You are your ſelf undone. And indeed it ſo fell out; for when all other Accuſations were refelled, this only ſtuck by him, and could not be denied; And ſo on the firſt of December he was Arraigned at Weſtminſter; where the Lord William Paulet Marqueſs of Wincheſter, and Lord Treaſurer, ſate as High Steward of England, and with him Peers to the number of ſeven and twenty: The Dukes of Suffolk and Northumberland, the Marqueſs of Northampton, the Earls of Derby, Bedford, Huntington, Rutland, Bathe, Suſſex, Worceſter, Pembrook, and Hereford: The Barons, Abergavenny, Audley, Wharton, Evers, Latimer, Borough, Zouch, Stafford, Wentworth, Darcye, Sturton, Winſon, Cromwell, Cobham, and Bray. The Lords being ſet, the Indictments were read, in number five, containing a Charge, for raiſing Men in the North parts of the Realm: And at his Houſe, for aſſembling men to kill the Duke of Northumberland: For reſiſting his Attachment, for raiſing London, for aſſaulting the Lords, and deviſing of their deaths. To all which he pleaded, Not guilty, and made a ſatisfactory Anſwer to every Point, though the Kings Learned Council preſſed them hard againſt him. This done, the Lords went together, where Exception was taken by ſome, as a thing unfit, That the Duke of Northumberland, the Marqueſs of Northampton, and the Earl of Pembrook ſhould be of the Jury; ſeeing the Priſoner was chiefly charged with practices againſt them: But to this the Lawyers made anſwer, That a Peer of the Realm might not be challenged. So after much variation of Opinions, the Priſoner was acquit of Treaſon, but by moſt Voices found guilty of Felony; and that by a Statute lately by his own procurement made, That if any ſhould attempt to kill a Privie Counſellour, although the Fact were not done, yet it ſhould be Felony, and be puniſhed with death. But upon his being acquit of Treaſon, the Axe of the Tower was preſently laid down, which made people conceive he had been acquitted of all; who thereupon for Joy gave ſo great a Shout, that it was heard as far as Charing-Croſs: But the Duke was little the better for being acquitted of Treaſon, ſeeing he was found guilty of Felony; and had Judgment to die. It is thought by ſome, he might have ſaved his life, if he had demanded his Clergy: but it is rather thought, that in that Statute Clergy was denied. Two months after his Condemnation, (much againſt the Kings will) he was brought to the Tower-Hill to execution; where being aſcended the Scaffold, he entred into a Speech, wherein though he juſtified himſelf, for any matter tending to the hurt of the King or Kingdom; yet he confeſſed, he was juſtly by the Law brought to his death; and thanked God, that had given him ſo large a time of repentance, eſpecially that he had opened his eyes, to ſee clearly the light of the Goſpel: And going on in his Speech, a ſudden noiſe aroſe, of ſome crying, Away, away; which made ſome think a Pardon had been come, but was indeed the voice of ſome that had been warned to be at the Execution, and were come ſomewhat late: But the Tumult being appeaſed, the Duke went on with his Speech, and at laſt commending his Soul to God, with a countenance not ſhewing any ſign of fear, or perturbation, only his cheeks a little redder than they uſed to be, he peaceably laid down his head upon the Block, and in a moment, with one ſtroke of the Axe, had it ſtricken off.

The Duke of Northumberland ſeeks Accuſations againſt the Duke of Somerſet.

Who being arraigned, is acquitted of Treaſon, but found guilty of Felony.

A Peer of the Realm not to be challenged in a Jury.

1552. The Duke of Somerſet is beheaded, and his patient ſuffering it.

The

The Death of this Duke made the Duke of Northumberland more odious to the people than he was before; and there were ſome that dipped Handkercheifs in his bloud, and kept them to upbraid the Duke of Northumberland withall, when he came himſelf afterward to the like end. After execution of the Duke, Sir Ralph Vane, and Sir Miles Patridge were hanged at the Tower-Hill, Sir Michael Stanhope, and Sir Thomas Arundell were there beheaded.

George Ferrers Lord of Miſrule at Chriſtmaſs.

After the Dukes condemnation, it was thought fit to have ſomething done for averting the Kings mind from taking thought; and to that end, one George Ferrers, a Gentleman of Lincolns-Inne, was appointed, in the Chriſtmas time, to be Lord of Miſ-rule; who ſo carried himſelf, that he gave great delight to many, and ſome to the King, but not in proportion to his heavineſs.

A call of Serjeants.

About this time was a call of ſeven Serjeants at Law, who kept their Feaſt at Grays-Inn; of whom, Maſter Robert Brook, Recorder of London, was the firſt; and the next Maſter Dyer, who was choſen Speaker the next Parliament.

The Lord Paget hath the Garter taken from him, and why.

About this time alſo, the Lord Paget was committed to the Tower, for what cauſe is not certain; and being a Knight of the Order, his Garter was taken from him by Garter King at Arms, upon this pretence, that he was ſaid to be no Gentleman, either by Father or Mother; and the Garter was then beſtowed on the Earl of Warwick, the Duke of Northumberlands Eldeſt Son; and the Lord Rich, Lord Chancellour, was put off from his place, and the Seal then delivered to Doctor Thomas Goodrick Biſhop of Ely.

Sebaſtian Gabato ſent to diſcover a Paſſage to the Eaſt-Indies.

About this time alſo three great Ships were ſet forth at the Kings charge, for diſcovery of a Paſſage to the Eaſt-Indies by the North Seas; the chief Pilot and Director in this Voyage was one Sebaſtian Gabato an Engliſhman, born at Briſtol, but the Son of a Genoway: theſe Ships at the laſt arrived in the Country of Moſcovia, but not without loſs of their Captain Sir Hugh Willoughby, who being toſſed and driven by tempeſt, was afterward found in his Ship frozen to death, and all his people.

Sir Hugh Willoughby frozen to death.

At this time alſo the Duke of Suffolk's three Daughters, which he had by Frances, Daughter of Charles Brandon, and Mary Queen of France, were married at Durham Houſe: The eldeſt, Jane, to the Lord Guilford Dudley, fourth Son to the Duke of Northumberland: The ſecond, Katherine, to Henry, Son and Heir to the Earl of Pembrook: The youngeſt, Mary, being ſomewhat deformed, to Martyn Keyes, the Kings Gentleman Porter. And then alſo Katherine, the Duke of Northumberlands youngeſt Daughter, to the Lord Haſtings, eldeſt Son of the Earl of Huntington. And now had the Duke of Northumberland gone a great way in his deſign; it remained to perſwade King Edward to exclude his two Siſters from Succeſſion in the Crown; for that done, his Daughter-in-law, the Lady Jane, would come to have a right: For as for pretenders out of Scotland, or any other, he made no great matter. And now to work the King to this perſwaſion, (being in a languiſhing ſickneſs, not far from death) he inculcates to him, how much it concerned him to have a care of Religion, that it might be preſerved in purity, not only in his own life, but as well after his death; which would not be, if his Siſter the Lady Mary ſhould ſucceed, and ſhe could not be put by, unleſs her other Siſter, the Lady Elizabeth, were put by alſo, ſeeing their rights depended one upon another; but if he pleaſed to appoint the Lady Jane, the Duke of Suffolk's eldeſt Daughter, and his own next Kinſwoman to his Siſters, to be his Succeſſor, he might then be ſure that the true Religion ſhould be maintained, to Gods great glory, and be a worthy Act of his own religious Providence. This was to ſtrike upon the right ſtring of the young Kings affection, with whom nothing was ſo dear as preſervation of Religion; and thereupon his laſt Will was appointed to be drawn (contrived chiefly by the Lord Chief Juſtice Mountague, and Secretary Cecill:) by which Will, as far as in him lay, he excluded his two Siſters from the Succeſſion, and all other, but the Duke of Suffolk's Daughters; and then cauſing it to be read before his Council, he required them all to aſſent unto it, and to ſubſcribe their hands; which they all, both Nobility, and Biſhops, and Judges did; Only the Archbiſhop Cranmer refuſed at firſt, Sir James Hales a Judge of the Common-Pleas to the laſt, and with them alſo Sir John Baker Chancellour of the Exchequer. And now remained nothing for the Duke of Northumberlands purpoſe, but that the King ſhould die: which ſoon after he did at Greenwich, the ſixth of July, in the year 1553. One point of the Duke's policy muſt not be forgotten, that fearing what troubles the Lady Mary might raiſe after the Kings deceaſe, if ſhe ſhould be at liberty; he therefore, ſeeing the King drawing on, uſed all means poſſible to get her within his power; to which end Letters are directed to her in the Kings name from the Council, willing her forthwith to repair to the King, as well to be a comfort to him in his ſickneſs, as to ſee all matters well ordered about his Perſon: Whereupon, the Lady ſuſpecting nothing, addreſſed her ſelf with all ſpeed to the Journey; till being upon the Way, ſhe was advertiſed of the Dukes deſign; and then ſhe returned to her Houſe at Hoveſden, and ſo eſcaped the ſnare: by whoſe eſcape, the whole Deſign of the Duke of Northumberland was diſappointed; as ſoon after will be ſeen.

His Will drawn to that purpoſe.

King Edward dies. 1553.

The Duke of Northumberland perſwades King Edward to exclude his two Siſters ſucceſſion in the Crown: and by what reaſons.

Of his Taxations.

IN no Kings Reign was ever more Parliaments for the time, nor fewer Subſidies; the greateſt was in his laſt year, when yet there was but one Subſidy, with two Fifteens and Tenths, granted by the Temporalty, and a Subſidy by the Clergy. And indeed to ſhew how loath this King was to lay Impoſitions upon his people, this may be a ſufficient argument; That though he were much in debt, yet he choſe rather to deal with the Foulket in the Low-Countries for money upon loan, at the intereſt of fourteen pounds for a hundred, for a year. But his ways for raiſing of money, were by selling of Chauntry Lands and Houſes, given him by Parliament; and by inquiring after all Church Goods, either remaining in Cathedral and Pariſh-Churches, or embezelled away, as Jewe's, Gold and Silver Chalices, ready money, Copes, and other Veſtments; reſerving to every Church one Chalice, and one covering for the Communion Table, the reſt to be applied to his benefit. He alſo raiſed money by enquiring after offences of Officers in great places; in which enquiry one Beaumont Maſter of the Rolls, being convinced of many Crimes, ſurrendred all his Offices, Lands, and Goods into the Kings hands: Alſo one Whalley, Receiver of Yorkſhire, being found a Delinquent, ſurrendred his Office, and paid a great Fine beſides: Alſo the Lord Paget, Chancellour of the Dutchie, convinced that he had ſold the Kings Lands and Timber-Woods without Commiſſion, and had applied the Kings Fines to his own uſe, for theſe and other offences, ſurrendred his Office, and was fined at four thouſand pounds, which he paid in hand. One thing more was done in his time for raiſing of money; twenty thouſand pounds weight of Bullion was appointed to be made ſo much baſer, that the King might gain thereby a hundred and forty thouſand pounds.

Delinquent Officers fined.

Bullion made baſer to raiſe money.

Of his Laws and Ordinances.

IN his third year a Parliament was holden; wherein one Act was made againſt ſpreading of Propheſies; another againſt unlawful Aſſemblies. In his fourth year a Parliament was holden, wherein Prieſts Children were made legitimate: and Uſury for loan of money was forbidden. In his fifth year it was ordained, That the Laws of England ſhould be admitted in Ireland; and a King at Arms named Ulſter, was newly inſtituted for Ireland; whoſe Province was all Ireland; and he was the firſt fourth King of Arms, and firſt Herald appointed for Ireland. Alſo in his fifth year, baſe moneys formerly coined, were cried down; ſo as the ſhilling went but for nine pence, and ſhortly after but for ſix pence, the groat but for three pence, and ſhortly after but for two pence.

Affairs of the Church in his Time.

IN the firſt year of this Kings Reign, Injunctions were ſet forth, for pulling down and removing all Images out of Churches; alſo certain Homilies were appointed to be made by Learned men, to be read in Churches, for the peoples inſtruction: And at Eaſter this year, it was ordered, That the Sacrament of the Lords Supper ſhould be miniſtred to the Lay-people in both kinds. Alſo Marriage was allowed to Clergy men; Auricular Confeſſion and Prayer for the dead were forbidden: And it is obſervable, That the very ſame day that Images were pulled down at London, the great overthrow was given to the Scots at Muſkleborough. Alſo at this time, by the Archbiſhop Cranmers means, divers learned Proteſtants came over into England, and had here entertainment, as Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, and Paulus Fagius; of whom Peter Martyr was ſent to read a divinity Lecture in Oxford; Bucer and Fagius in Cambridge. In this Kings fourth year, all Altars in Churches were commanded to be taken down, and Tables placed in their rooms. In his fifth year, the Book of Common Prayer was eſtabliſhed.

The Book of Common-Prayer eſtabliſhed.

Caſualties happening in his time.

IN his Second year, St. Annes Church within Alderſgate was burnt. In his fifth year, a Sweating ſickneſs infeſted firſt Shrewsbury, and then the North parts, and afterwards grew moſt extream in London, ſo as the firſt Week there died eight hundred perſons, and was ſo violent, that it took men away in four and twenty hours, ſometimes in twelve, and ſometimes in leſs: Amongſt other of Account that died of this Sickneſs, were the two Sons of Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, who died within an hour after one another, in ſuch order that both of them died Dukes. This diſeaſe was proper to the Engliſh Nation, for it followed the Engliſh whereſoever they were in Forain Parts, but ſeized upon none of any other Country. In this year one Mr Arden of Kent, by procurement of his Wife, was murthered in his own houſe; being dead, his body was carried out and laid upon the ground, in a Cloſe hard by: where this is Memorable, That for two years after, the ground where his body lay, bore no graſs, but repreſented ſtill as it were a picture of his body, only in the ſpace between his legs and arms there grew graſs; but where any part of his body touched, none at all. Yet this Miraculous Accident was not ſo much for the Murther, as for the Curſes of a Widow Woman, out of whoſe hands the ſaid Maſter Arden had uncharitably bought the ſaid Cloſe, to her undoing. And thus the Divine Juſtice, even in this World oftentimes, works Miracles upon Offenders, for a merciful warning to men, if they would be ſo wiſe to take it. In his ſixth year, the third of Auguſt at Middleton-ſtony, eleven miles from Oxford a woman brought forth a child which had two perfect bodies from the navel upward, the legs for both the bodies grew out at the midſt where the bodies joyned, and had but one iſſue for the Excrements of them both: they lived eighteen daies, and were Women Children. This Year alſo were taken at Quinborow three Dolphins, and at Black-Wall ſix more, the leaſt of which was bigger than any Horſe.

Works of Piety done by him, or others in his Time.

THis King gave three Houſes to the Relief of the Poor: Firſt, for the Fatherleſs and Beggars Children, he gave the late Gray-Fryers in London, which is now called Chriſts Hoſpital. Then for lame and diſeaſed perſons, he gave the Hoſpital of St. Thomas in Southwark, and St. Bartholomews in Weſt-Smithfield. Thirdly, for riotous and idle perſons, he gave his Houſe of Bridewell; and for their Maintenance, he took ſix hundred pounds a year land from the Houſe of the Savoy, (which had been long abuſed) and beſtowed it upon theſe Houſes; to which which he added four thouſand Marks a year more. By his Example, Sir William Cheſter Alderman of London, and John Calthroppe Draper, at their own Coſts made the Brick-walls and way on the backſide that leadeth to the Hoſpital of St. Bartholomews, and alſo covered and vaulted the Town-Ditch, which before was very noyſome. In the ſecond year of this King, Sir John Greſham, then Mayor of London, founded a Free-School at Holt in Norfolk: Alſo at his deceaſe he gave to every Ward in London ten pounds, to be diſtributed amongſt the Poor, and to Maids Marriages two hundred pounds. In his third year, Sir Rowland Hill, the then Lord Mayor of London, cauſed to be made a Cawſey commonly called Overlane Pavement, in the High-way from Stone to Nantwich, in length four miles, for the eaſe of Horſe and Man: He cauſed alſo a Cawſey to be made from Dunchurch to Branſen in Warwick-ſhire, more than two miles in length; and gave twenty pounds towards the making of Roitton Bridge three miles from Coventry. He made likewiſe the high-way to Kilburne near to London. Alſo four Bridges, two of them of Stone, containing eighteen Arches in them both; the one over the River of Severn, called Acham Bridge, the other Terne Bridge; and two other of Timber at Stoke, where he built alſo a good part of the Church. A Free School likewiſe he built at Drayton in Shropſhire, with Maſter and Uſher, and gave ſufficient ſtipends to them both. Alſo he purchaſed a free Fair to the ſaid Town, with a free Market weekly; and every fourteen daies a free Market for Cattel. Beſides all this, he gave to the Hoſpital of Chriſt-Church in London in his life-time five hundred pounds, and at his death a hundred. In this Kings fourth year, Sir Andrew Jud, Mayor of London, founded a notable Free School at Tunbridge in Kent; and gave threeſcore pounds land a year to the Skinners of London, for which they be bound to pay twenty pounds to the School-Maſter, and eight pounds to the Uſher of his Free School at Tunbridge yearly for ever. In his ſixth year, Sir George Barnes, who was Mayor of London, gave a Wind-Mill in Finsbury-Field to the Haberdaſhers of London, the profits thereof to be diſtributed to the poor of that Company: alſo to St. Bartholomews the Little certain Tenements to the like uſe.

Of his Perſonage and Conditions.

CONcerning his Perſonage, it is ſaid, he was in Body beautiful, of a ſweet aſpect, and ſpecially in his eyes, which ſeemed to have a ſtarry liveline ſs and luſtre in them. Concerning his Conditions, in matter of Fact, there is not much to be ſaid; but in matter of Diſpoſition and Inclination very much, even to admiration. For though his Tree was not yet come to the maturity of bearing Fruit, yet it was come to the forwardneſs to bear plenty of Buds and Bloſſoms: For proof of his Merciful Diſpoſition, this one example may be ſufficient; When one Joan Butcher was to be burned for Blaſphemy and Hereſie, all the Council could not get him to ſign the Warrant, till the Archbiſhop Cranmer, with much importunity, perſwaded him, and then he did it, but not without weeping. For his pregnancy of Wit, and knowledge in all kinds of Learning, we ſhall need but to hear what Cardan (who coming into England, had often Conference with him) reporteth of him, That he was extraordinarily skilful in Languages, and in the Politicks; well ſeen in Philoſophy, and in Divinity, and generally indeed a very Miracle of Art & Nature. He would anſwer Embaſſadours ſometimes upon the ſudden, either in French or Latine: He knew the ſtate of Foreign Princes perfectly, and his own more: He could call all Gentlemen of account through his Kingdom by their names. And all this when he had ſcarce yet attained to the age of fifteen years, and died before ſixteen; that from hence we may gather, It is a ſign of no long life, when the Faculties of the Mind are ripe ſo early.

King Edward's pitiful Diſpoſition.

His pregnancy of Wit, and Learning.

Of his Death and Burial.

IN the Sixth Year of his Reign, which was the year before he died, he fell ſick of the Meaſels, and being well recovered of them, he fell ſoon after into the ſmall Pox, and of them alſo was ſo well recovered, that the Summer following he rode a Progreſs, with a greater Magnificence than ever he had done before; having in his Train no fewer than four thouſand Horſe. In January following (whether procured by ſiniſter practice, or growing upon him by natural infirmity) he fell into an indiſpoſition of body, which ſoon after grew to a Cough of the Lungs. Whereupon a rumour was ſpread abroad by ſome, That a Noſegay had been given him at New-Years-tide, which brought him into this ſlow, but deadly Conſumption: By others, That it was done by a Clyſter. However it was, he was brought at laſt to ſo great extremity, that his Phyſicians deſpaired of his life; and when Phyſicians could do him no good, a Gentlewoman (thought to be prepared for the purpoſe) took him in hand, and did him hurt: for with her applications his Legs ſwelled, his Pulſe failed, his Skin changed colour, and many other ſymptomes of approaching death appeared. The hour before his death, he was over-heard to pray thus by himſelf, O Lord God, deliver me out of this miſerable and wretched life; O Lord, thou knoweſt how happy it were for me to be with thee; yet for thy Choſens ſake, if it be thy will, ſend me life and health, that I may truly ſerve thee: O Lord God, ſave thy choſen people of England, and defend this Realm from Papiſtry, and maintain thy true Religion, that I and my People may praiſe thy holy Name, for thy Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake. So turning his face, and ſeeing ſome by him, he ſaid, I thought you had not been ſo nigh: Yes, ſaid Doctor Owen, we heard you ſpeak to your ſelf. Then ſaid the King, I was praying to God: O I am faint, Lord have mercy upon me, and receive my ſpirit, and in ſo ſaying, gave up the Ghoſt, the ſixth day of July, in the year 1553. and the Sixteenth year of his age, when he had Reigned ſix years, five months, and nine daies. It is noted by ſome, that he died the ſame month, and the ſame day of the month, that his Father King Henry the Eighth had put Sir

Suſpected to be poyſoned.

Thomas More to death. His Body was buried upon the ninth of Auguſt, in the Chappel of St. Peters Church in Weſtminſter, and laid near to the Body of King Henry the Seventh his Grandfather. At his Funeral, which was on the tenth of Auguſt following, his Siſter Queen Mary ſhewed this reſpect to him, that though Doctor Day, a Popiſh Biſhop, Preached, yet all the Service with a Communion was in Engliſh.

Men of Note in his Time.

THis Kings Reign being ſhort, and having but ſmall Wars, had not many Sword-men famous for any Acts they did; Gown-men there were ſome, as Edward Hall a Counſellour in the Law, who wrote a notable Chronicle of the Union of the Two Houſes of York and Lancaſter; William Hugh, a York-ſhire man, who wrote a notable Treatiſe, called, The Troubled Man's Medicine; Thomas Sternhold, born in Southampton, who turned into Engliſh Meeter ſeven and thirty of David's Pſalms.

The Interregnum between the Death of King Edward, and the Proclaiming at London of Queen Mary.

1553. The Duke of Northumberland bears all the ſway.

KIng Edward being dead, the Duke of Northumberland took upon him to ſit at the Stern, and ordered all things at his pleaſure: ſo two days after, he, with others of the Council, ſent to the Lord Mayor, that he, with ſix Aldermen, and twelve principal Commons, ſhould repair preſently to the Court; to whom when they came, it was ſignified that King Edward was dead; and that by his laſt Will, to which all the Nobility and Judges had given aſſent, he had appointed the Lady Jane, Daughter to the Duke of Suffolk, to ſucceed him; his Letters Patents whereof were ſhewed them, and thereupon they were required to take their Oaths of Allegiance to the Lady Jane, and to ſecure the City in her behalf; which whether diſſemblingly, or ſincerely, whether for love, or fear, yet they did, and departed. The next day, the Lady Jane in great State was brought to the Tower of London, and there declared Queen; and by Edict with the ſound of Trumpet proclaimed ſo through London: at which time, for ſome words ſeeming to be ſpoken againſt it, one Gilbert Pot, a Vintners ſervant, was ſet in the Pillory, and loſt both his Ears. Before this time, the Lady Mary having heard of her Brothers death, and of the Duke of Northumberlands deſigns, removed from Hoveſdon to her Mannour of Keninghall in Norfolk, and under pretence of fearing infection, (having lately loſt one of her Houſhold-Servants of the Plague) in one day ſhe rode forty miles, and from thence afterward to her Caſtle of Framingham in Suffolk, where taking upon her the name of Queen, there reſorted to her the moſt part of all the Gentlemen both of Norfolk and Suffolk, offering their Aſſiſtance; but upon condition, ſhe would make no alteration in Religion, to which ſhe condeſcended; and thereupon, ſoon after came to her the Earls of Oxford, Bath, and Suſſex, the Lord Wentworth, Thomas Wharton, and John Mordant, Barons eldeſt Sons; and of Knights, Cornwallis, Drury, Walgrave, Shelton, Beningfield, Jerningham, Suliard, Freſton, and many others. The Lady Mary being thus aſſiſted, wrote her Letter, ſigned the 9th of July, to the Lords of the Council; wherein ſhe claimed the Crown, as of right belonging to her; and required them to proclaim her Queen of England in the City of London, as they tendred her diſpleaſure:

Who is proclaimed Queen.

The Lady Mary rides Poſt into Norfolk.

Takes upon her the name of Queen, and is aſſiſted by the Norfolk men, upon her promiſe not alter Religion.

She writes to the Lords, and claimeth the Crown.

To this Letter of hers the Lords anſwered, That for what they did they had good Warrant, not only by King Edwards laſt Will, but by the Laws of the Land, conſidering her Mothers divorce, and her own illegitimation; and therefore required her to ſubmit her ſelf to Queen Jane, being now her Sovereign. This Letter was written from the Tower of London, under the hands of theſe that follow, Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Thomas Ely Chancellour, William Marqueſs of Wincheſter, John Earl of Bedford, Henry Duke of Suffolk, Francis Earl of Shrewsbury, John Duke of Northumberland, William Earl of Pembroke, Thomas Lord Darcey Lord Chamberlain, Cobham, Rich, Huntington, Cheyney, John Gates, William Peter, William Cecill, John Clerk, Maſon, Edward North, and Robert Bowes. The quarrel on both ſides being thus begun by Letters, is proſecuted by Arms; and the Lords for their General made choice of the Duke of Suffolk, as a man moſt likely to be firm and ſure in the employment; but the Queen his Daughter cannot miſs his preſence, and beſides, is not willing to hazard his perſon; and thereupon, ſhe by intreaties, and the Lords by perſwaſions, prevail with the Duke of Northumberland to undertake the charge; who before his going, having conference with the Lords, let them know how ſenſible he was of the double danger he underwent in this enterprize, both in reſpect of the Lady againſt whom he went, and in reſpect of them whom he left behind him; for if they in his abſence ſhould by any accident be drawn to waver in their reſolution, they might work their own ſafety with his deſtruction, and make themſelves ſeem innocent in his guiltineſs. To which one of the Lords replied and ſaid, Your Grace makes a doubt of that which cannot be, for which of us all can waſh his hands clean of this buſineſs? And therefore it behoves us to be as reſolute as your ſelf, and the Earl of Arundel,

The Lords Anſwer.

Againſt whom the Duke of Northumberland is ſent with an Army.

Arundel, to teſtifie his reſolution in the matter, ſaid, He was ſorry it was not his chance to go with him, at whoſe feet he could find in his heart to ſpend his bloud. So the Duke, with the Marqueſs of Northampton, the Lord Gray, and divers other of account, on the fourteenth of July, ſet forward on the Journey with eight thouſand Foot, and two thouſand horſe; and paſſing through Shoreditch, the Duke ſaid to the Lord Gray, See how the people preſs to ſee us, but not one of them ſaith, God ſpeed you. The Duke had every days march how far he ſhould go, appointed him by Commiſſion: which being very ſlow, whether it were done of purpoſe by ſome that favoured the Lady Maries ſide, was certainly a great help to her proceedings; for by this means ſhe had the longer time to make her preparations, and indeed in this time two accidents happened of great benefit to her; one, that Edward Haſtings, the Earl of Huntingtons Brother, having an Army of four thouſand Foot committed to him by the Earl of Northumberland, he now left his Party, and went to the Lady Mary: The other, that ſix great Ships which lay before Yarmouth, to intercept the Lady Mary, if ſhe ſhould attempt to fly, now at the perſwaſion of Maſter Jerningham, came to her aid: Which two revolts ſo terrified the Londoners, that though Doctor Ridley, Biſhop of London, on the ſixteenth of July, at Pauls Croſs, preached a Sermon, wherin he invited the people to ſtand firm to Queen Jane, whoſe cauſe he affirmed to be moſt juſt, yet few or none were perſwaded by him; ſo as the Lords themſelves fell off from the ſide, who aſſembling at Baynards Caſtle, firſt the Earl of Arundel, then the Earl of Pembroke fell to Invectives againſt the Earl of Northumberland; and then all the Lords joyning in Opinion with them, they called for the Mayor, and in London Proclaimed the Lady Mary Queen; as likewiſe the Lord Windſor, Sir Edmund Peckham, Sir Robert Drurie, and Sir Edward Haſtings did in Buckinghamſhire, ; Sir John Williams of Tame, and Sir Leonard Chamberlain in Oxfordſhire, and Sir Thomas Treſham in the County of Northampton. All this came ſoon to the knowledge of the Duke of Northumberland, being then at Bury; who thereby ſeeing how the World went, thought it his beſt courſe to turn with the ſtream, and thereupon returning to Cambridge, he took the Mayor of the Town with him into the Market-place, and there himſelf, for want of a Herald, Proclaimed the Lady Mary Queen, and in ſign of joy threw up his Cap; which yet ſerved not his turn: for the next morning, Henry Fitz-Allen, Earl of Arundel, came into Cambridge from Queen Mary, who entring his Chamber, the Duke at his feet fell on his knees; deſiring him for Gods love to conſider his caſe, that had done nothing but by the Warrant of him and the Council: My Lord (ſaith the Earl) I am ſent hither by the Queen to arreſt you: And I (ſaid the Duke) obey your Arreſt; yet I beſeech your Lordſhip to uſe mercy towards him whoſe acts have been no other than were enjoyned by Commiſſion. You ſhould have thought of that ſooner (ſaid the Earl:) and thereupon committed him to a Guard, and left him to the Queens mercy. Thus ended all this great Dukes deſigns in his own deſtruction, and brought him to fall on his knees to them, who had often before bowed their knees to him; and the Earl, who at the Dukes going out could have been contented to ſpend his bloud at his feet, was now contented to be made an inſtrument of his fall: So ſudden are the turns of mens affections, and ſo unſtable is the building upon their aſſeverations; at leaſt no man muſt look to have his caſe be of any weight againſt him, who hath his own caſe put in the Balance. Together with the Duke his three Sons, John, Ambroſe, and Henry, the Earl of Huntington, Sir Andrew Dudley, the two Gates, John and Henry, Sir Thomas Palmer, and Doctor Sands were conveyed towards London, and brought to the Tower; and the next day the Marqueſs of Northampton, the Lord Robert Dudley, and Sir Robert Corbet. Before which time, the Duke of Suffolk, entring his Daughters the Lady Janes Chamber, told her, She muſt now put off her Royal Robes, and be contented with a private life. To which ſhe anſwered, She would much more willingly put them off, than ſhe had put them on; and would never have done it, but in obedience to him and her Mother. And this was the end of the Lady Janes Ten days Reign.

But ſoon after the Lords that ſent him, fell off from the ſide: and proclaim Queen Mary.

Which the Duke of Northumberland hearing, he alſo at Cambridge proclaimed Queen Mary.

Yet is arreſted by the Earl of Arundel.

And with him divers more.

The Lady Jane hearing hereof, was nothing troubled with it. And thus ended her ten days Reign.

The REIGN of QUEEN MARY,

1553. The Lady Mary having been Proclaimed Queen, comes to London, and ſo to the Tower.

THE Lady Mary having been Proclaimed Queen in London, and other parts of the Realm; removed from her Caſtle of Framingham towards London; and being come to Wanſtead in Eſſex, on the thirtieth of July, the Lady Elizabeth her Siſter, with a Train of a Thouſand Horſe, rode from her Place in the Strand to meet her: On the third of Auguſt the Queen rode through London to the Tower, where at her Entrance were preſented to her Thomas Duke of Norfolk, Edward Lord Courtney, Stephen Gardiner, late Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the Dutcheſs of Somerſet; who all kneeling down, ſhe kiſſed them, and ſaid, Theſe be my Priſoners, and then cauſed them preſently to be ſet at liberty: The next day ſhe reſtored the Lord Courtney to the Marquiſate of Exeter; and the ſame day alſo ſhe not only reſtored Stephen Gardiner to his Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, but a few daies after made him Chancellour of England: Yet this was the Man that had ſubſcribed to her Mothers Divorce, and had written Books againſt the lawfulneſs of her Marriage. The fifth of Auguſt, Edmund Bonner, late Biſhop of London, Priſoner in the Marſhalſey, and Cuthbert Tunſtal, the old Biſhop of Durham, Priſoner in the Kings-Bench, had their Pardons, and were reſtored to their Sees. Shortly, after, all the Biſhops, which had been deprived in the time of King Edward the Sixth, were reſtored to their Biſhopricks, and the new removed, as Ridley was removed from London, and Bonner placed; Skory from Chicheſter, and Day placed; Miles Coverdale from Exeter, and Weſt placed; John Hooper from Worceſter, and Heath placed. Alſo all Beneficed men that were married, or would not renounce their Religion, were put out of their Livings, and other of a contrary opinion put in their rooms.

Where ſhe ſets divers Lords at Liberty.

And reſtores the Biſhops who had been deprived.

On the thirteenth of Auguſt, one Maſter Bourne a Canon of Pauls, Preaching at Pauls Croſs, not only prayed for the dead, but alſo declared, that Doctor Bonner Biſhop of London, (late reſtored, and there in preſence) for a Sermon by him made four years before, in the ſame place, and upon the ſame Text, had unjuſtly been caſt into the vile Priſon of the Marſhalſey; which Speech ſo offended ſome of the Auditory, that they cried, Pull him down, Pull him down; and had certainly done him violence, (for a Dagger was thrown at him) if Maſter Bradford, a Proteſtant Preacher, had not ſtept into his place and appeaſed the Tumult, and Maſter Rogers another Proteſtant Miniſter (who were both afterward burnt for Religion) had not ſhifted away Bourne into Paul's School.

Hitherto Queen Maries Reign had been without bloud, but now the Cataracts of ſeverity will be opened, that will make it rain bloud: for now on the eighteenth of Auguſt, John Dudley Duke of Northumberland, William Parre Marqueſs of Northampton, and John Earl of Warwick, Son and Heir to the Duke, were arraigned at Weſtminſter-Hall before Thomas Duke of Norfolk as High-Steward of England; where the Duke of Northumberland, after his Indictment read, required the Opinion of the Court in two Points; Firſt, Whether a man doing any Act by authority of the Princes Council, and by warrant of the Great Seal of England, might for any ſuch Act be charged with Treaſon? Secondly, Whether any ſuch perſons as were equally culpable, and by whoſe Commandments he was directed, might be his Judges, and paſs upon his Trial? Whereunto was anſwered, That concerning the firſt, the Great Seal, which he alledged for his Warrant, was not the Seal of the lawful Queen of the Realm, but of an Uſurper, and therefore could be no warrant for him. And as to the ſecond, It was reſolved, That if any were as deeply to be touched in the Caſe as himſelf, yet ſo long as no attainder were of record againſt them, they were perſons able in Law to paſs upon his Trial, and not to be challenged but at the Prince's pleaſure. After which Anſwers, the Duke uſed few words, but confeſſed the Indictment, and accordingly had Judgment to die. By whoſe example, the other Priſoners arraigned with him, confeſſed the Indictments, and thereupon had Judgment. The nineteenth of Auguſt, Sir Andrew Dudley, Sir John, and Sir Henry Gates, Brethren, and Sir Thomas Palmer, Knights, were Arraigned at Weſtminſter, who confeſſing their Indictments, had Judgment, which was pronounced by the Marqueſs of Wincheſter, Lord High Treaſurer, ſitting that day as Chief Juſtice. After theſe Condemnations followed the Executions; for on the two and twentieth of Auguſt, John Duke of Northumberland was brought to the Tower-Hill, and there beheaded: being upon the Scaffold in a Gown of green coloured damask, he put it off, and then made a long Speech, wherein he asked the Queen forgiveneſs, neſs, whom he acknowledged to have grievouſly offended; and then making profeſſion of his Faith, that he died a true Catholick (meaning a Papiſt) he ſaid the Pſalms of Miſerere & De Profundis, the Pater Noſter, and ſix of the firſt verſ. of the Pſalm In te Domine ſperavi, ending with this ver. Into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my Spirit: And this ſaid, he looked about him, as looking for a Pardon; but none coming, he laid his head down upon the Block, and at one blow had it ſtricken off: his body with the head was buried in the Tower, by the body of Edward late Duke of Somerſet, (mortal enemies while they lived, but now lying together as good friends) ſo as there lieth before the high Altar in St. Peters Church, two Dukes between two Queens, namely, the Duke of Somerſet, and the Duke of Northumberland, between Queen Anne, and Queen Katharine, all four beheaded. Of what Religion this Duke was, may well be doubted, ſeeing at his death he profeſſed himſelf a Papiſt, when lately before he had importuned King Edward to make the Lady Jane his Succeſſour, leſt the Papal Religion ſhould be reſtored: It ſeems he was not greatly of either but for other ends; a Proteſtant then, when it was to make his Daughter-in Law Queen; now a Papiſt, when it was to ſave his life (for it was thought he had a Pardon promiſed, if he would recant.) At the ſame time and place were beheaded Sir John Gates and Sir Thomas Palmer, who were no ſuch Temporizers, but perſiſted and died in the Proteſtant Religion, which they had always profeſſed.

The Duke of Northumberland is arraigned.

After this, a ſprinkling of Mercy came from the Queen; for on the third of September, the Lord Ferrers of Chartley, the two Chief Juſtices, Sir Roger Cholmley, and Mountague, Sir John Cheek, and others were delivered out of the Tower, whither they had been committed: but a ſhower of ſeverity followed ſoon after, for on the fifteenth of September, Maſter Latimer, and Doctor Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury were ſent to the Tower; and on the third of November following, the ſaid Archbiſhop Cranmer, the Lady Jane (late Queen) and the Lord Guilford her Husband, with the Lords Ambroſe and Henry, Sons to the late Duke of Northumberland, were all arraigned at the Guild-hall, found guilty, & had Judgment to die.

Latimer and Cranmer ſent to the Tower.

Cranmer and the late Queen Jane, with the Sons of the Duke of Northumberland, arraigned and condemned.

All this while Queen Mary had contented herſelf to be Queen by Proclamation; but now that things were ſomething ſettled, ſhe proceeds to her Coronation: for on the laſt of September ſhe rode in her Chariot through London towards Weſtminſter in this order: Firſt rode a number of Gentlemen and Knights, then Doctors, then Judges, then Biſhops, then Lords, then the Council, after whom followed the Knights of the Bath, thirteen in number in their Robes, then the Biſhop of Wincheſter Lord Chancellour, and the Marqueſs of Wincheſter Lord High Treaſurer: Next came the Duke of Norfolk, and after him the Earl of Oxford, who bore the Sword, then the Mayor of London in a Gown of Crimſon Velvet, who bore the Scepter of Gold: After came the Queens Chariot, and then followed another Chariot, wherein ſate the Lady Elizabeth her Siſter, and the Lady Anne of Cleve, and then came Ladies and Gentlewomen riding on Horſes, trapped with red Velvet, &c. In this order they came through London to Weſtminſter, where in many places by the way were Pageants and ſtately Shews, and many rich Preſents given to the Queen. The next day ſhe went by Water to the old Palace, and remained there till eleven of the clock, and then went on foot upon blew cloth, being railed on either ſide to St. Peters Church, where ſhe was Crowned and Anointed by the Biſh. of Wincheſter, the two Archbiſhops being then in the Tower, with all Rites and Ceremonies of old accuſtomed.

Queen Mary is Crowned, and in what order.

After her Coronation, a general Pardon was publiſhed in her name, but interlaced with ſo many exceptions of matters and perſons, that very few took benefit by it; for after the Pardon publiſhed, there were Commiſſioners aſſigned, to compound with ſuch perſons as were excepted; from ſome of whom they took away their Fees and Offices, ſome they fined, and ſome they deprived of their Eſtates & Livings.

A Pardon granted, but full of Exceptions.

About this time, Sir James Hales, one of the Juſtices of the Common Pleas, who in the time of King Edward had refuſed to ſign a Writing for diſinheriting the Lady Mary, and the Lady Elizabeth (a fact worthy at leaſt of a kind of remembrance from the Lady Mary now Queen) yet now, for that at a Quarter Seſſions in Kent, he gave charge upon the Statutes of King Henry the Eighth, and King Edward the Sixth, in derogation of the Primacy of the Church of Rome; he was firſt committed to the Kings-Bench, then to the Counter, and laſtly, to the Fleet; where he grew ſo troubled in mind, that he attempted with a Pen-knife to kill himſelf; and being afterward recovered of that hurt, and brought to the Queens preſence, who gave him very comfortable words, yet could never come to be quiet in his mind; but in the end, drowned himſelf in a River not half a mile from his houſe, the River being ſo ſhallow, that he was fain to lie groveling before he could diſpatch himſelf of life.

Sir James Hales, Juſtice of the Common Pleas, drowns himſelf, and why.

And now another ſprinkling of Mercy came from the Queen; for the Marqueſs of Northampton, and Sir Henry Gates, lately before condemned to die, were now pardoned and ſet at liberty. The Lady Jane alſo was allowed the liberty of the Tower, not without hope of life and liberty altogether, if her Father the Duke of Suffolk had not the ſecond time been cauſe of her deſtruction.

The Lady Jane, though condemned, is allowed the liberty of the Tower.

About this time alſo a Synod was aſſembled, for conſulting about matters of Religion; and the point ſpecially of the Real preſence in the Sacrament. The Prolocutor was Doctor Weſton; and of the Proteſtant ſide, were John Ailmer and Richard Cheney, both Biſhops afterward in Queen Elizabeths time, alſo John Philpot, afterward burnt, James Haddon and others. After long Diſputation, where reaſons were not ſo much weighed, as voices numbred; the Papal ſide, as having moſt voices, carried it: and thereupon was that Religion again reſtored, and the Maſs commanded in all Churches to be celebrated, after the ancient manner.

Upon a Conference about Religion, the Maſs is again reſtored.

It was now the year 1553. when Queen Mary was come to the age of ſeven and thirty years, and therefore high time now to think of marriage, marriage, at leaſt if ſhe meant to have Iſſue of her body; but a hard matter it was to find a Husband in all points fitting for her: Yet three at this time (in common fame at leaſt) were taken into conſideration: One was the Lord Courtney, Marqueſs of Exeter, a goodly Gentleman, and of Royal blood; but there was an exception againſt him, becauſe inclining (as was thought) to Lutheraniſm: Another was Cardinal Poole, of a dignity not much inferiour to Kings, and by his Mother deſcended from Kings; but there was exception againſt him alſo, becauſe four and fifty years old, (as old a Batchelour as Queen Mary was a Maid) and ſo the leſs hope of Iſſue between them: But the third (if he might be had) was without exception, and this was Philip Prince of Spain, the Emperour Charles his eldeſt Son, with whom being a Spaniard, ſhe was the fitter matched, as being by the Mother a Spaniard her ſelf. And now very opportunely came in the beginning of January Embaſſadours into England about it; amongſt others, the Count of Egmond, Admiral of the Low-Countries, and John of Memorancy Lord of Curryers; whoſe Meſſage was ſo kindly entertained, that the Marriage in ſhort time was abſolutely concluded, though it ſeemed ſomething ſtrange to many, that ſhe ſhould now be the Wife to the Son, who thirty years before ſhould have been Wife to the Father. But ſo it is, Queens are never old ſo long as they are within years of bearing Children. And indeed the Match was concluded with Conditions of far more advantage to Queen Mary, than they were to King Philip, as on the fourteenth of January, Stephen Gardiner, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Lord Chancellour of England, openly in the Preſence Chamber at Weſtminſter, declared to all the Lords and Gentlemen there preſent: For it was agreed, That after the marriage, King Philip ſhould have the Title of all the Queens Dominions, and be aſſumed into fellowſhip of the Government; but yet with reſervation to the Queen, of all Priviledges and Cuſtoms of the Kingdom, and free diſpoſition of all Offices and Honours: As likewiſe the Queen would be aſſumed into the fellowſhip of all the King's Dominions, and ſurviving him, ſhould have a Joynture of two hundred thouſand pounds a year. Then for the Iſſue between them, if ſhe had a Son, that he ſhould inherit the Low-Countries and Burgundy; and King Philip's Son Charles, which he had by a former Wife, ſhould inherit all his Dominions in Italy and Spain; but if his Son Charles ſhould fail without Iſſue, then the Son he ſhould have by Queen Mary ſhould inherit his Kingdom of Italy and Spain alſo. And the like good proviſion was alſo made for Daughters. But notwithſtanding theſe great advantages of the Match, yet ſuch was the precipitant raſhneſs of ſome, that thinking themſelves wiſer than the Queen and the Council, they ſought by all means to oppoſe the Match; giving out, That it tended to bring England under the yoke of Spain, and to make the Country a ſlave to ſtrangers. This was the generall murmuring of people; but the firſt that ſhewed himſelf in Arms, was Sir Thomas Wyat of Kent, who having communicated the matter with the Duke of Suffolk the Lady Janes Father, with Peter Caroe a Knight of Devonſhire, and divers others, intended only to make ſecret proviſion, but not to ſtir till Prince Philip ſhould be come, that ſo their cauſe of taking Arms might have the better colour. On the fifteenth of January, Robert Dudley, Son to the Duke of Northumberland, was arraigned at the Guild-Hall of high Treaſon, who confeſſed the Indictment, and had Judgment given by the Earl of Suſſex, to be drawn, hanged, bowelled and quartered.

But now in Counſels communicated to many, it is a hard matter to have counſel kept, and Sir Peter Caroe finding that their Plot was diſcovered, fled privily into France, where lurking for a time, he was afterward taken at Bruxells, and brought Captive into England; as likewiſe at the ſame time and place Sir John Cheek King Edward's School-Maſter was taken, who being drawn by terrours to embrace the Papal Religion, with very grief afterward of his errour pined away and died; Sir Peter Caroe lived many years after, and died in Ireland; though it be falſely recorded, they were both burnt for Religion, in June this year Wyat hearing of Sir Peter Caroe's flight, and that all their purpoſe was diſcovered, was driven before his time to enter into Arms, giving out for the Cauſe, that it was not to attempt any thing againſt the Queen, but only to remove ill Counſellours, and chiefly to repell Prince Philip, leſt by his Marriage the Kingdom ſhould come in ſubjection to the Spaniard. With Wyat were joyned Sir Henry Iſley, Sir George Harper, Anthony and William Knevet, and divers other Gentlemen of the County: Againſt him were the Lord Abergaveney, Sir Thomas Cheney Lord Warden of the Ports, Sir Robert Southwell Sheriff of Kent, Sir Warram Sentleger, Sir Thomas Kemp, Sir Thomas Moyle, Sir Thomas Finch, with divers other; yet all theſe great men had ſuch doubt of the people, that they durſt not proceed but very warily. The five and twentieth of January, news came to London of Wyats riſing; againſt whom was preſently ſent the Duke of Norfolk with Sir Henry Jerningham Captain of the Guard, Sir Edward Bray, Sir John Fogge, John Covert, Roger Appleton Eſquires, and five hundred Souldiers out of London appointed to go after him, under the leading of Captain Bret. And now ſee in times of Sedition, how uncertain a thing it is to truſt to the people; for before Bret could overtake the Duke, Sir George Harper was ſecretly got to him, who ſo perſwaded him, that he and his five hundred Souldiers left the Duke, and went all to Wyat; which made the Duke and thoſe with him preſently to flie, and put ſuch boldneſs into Wyat, that now he marched with great confidence towards London, with ſo great terrour to all ſorts of people, that at Weſtminſter-Hall the Serjeants and other Lawyers pleaded in harneſs.

In the mean time, the Duke of Suffolk was perceived in Warwick-ſhire, to be raiſing of Forces in aſſiſtance of Wyat; againſt whom was preſently ſent the Earl of Huntington, and the Duke finding himſelf unable to make reſiſtance, Matches propounded for Queen Mary.

The Match is concluded with Philip Prince of Spain.

With greater Conditions of advantage to her than to him.

Yet is oppoſed by divers, eſpecially Sir Thomas Wyat of Kent.

The Lord Robert Dudley is arraigned and condemned.

Wyat with his Army marcheth towards London.

The Duke of Suffolk raiſeth Forces to aſſiſt Wyat.

ſtance, having with all his induſtry gotten together but only fifty men; he betook himſelf to a Tenant of his, one Underwood, with whom he hoped, and had promiſe, to remain undiſcovered, till he might have opportunity to eſcape, as ſome ſay; as others, to a Keeper of his Park, called Nicholas Lawrence, who kept him in a hollow Oak in the ſaid Park for two or three days: but whether Underwood or Lawrence, either out of fear, or out of hope of reward, he betrayed him to the Earl, by whom he was taken, and under a ſtrong Guard carried to the Tower. Upon this, Queen Mary her ſelf came into London, where calling the Mayor and chief of the City together, ſhe made an Oration, wherein ſhe ſhewed the inſolency of Wyat; who though he pretended but only the croſſing of the Marriage, yet was now grown to ſuch preſumption, that he required to have the Cuſtody of her Perſon; and to have Counſellors retained or removed at his pleaſure. And as for her Marriage, ſhe there affirmed ſhe had done nothing in it but by the advice of her Council; and for her ſelf, that that ſhe was not ſo longing for a Husband, but that if it were not more for the good of the Kingdom, than for her own Satisfaction, ſhe would never once think of entertaining it. Having by her Speech confirmed the Minds of the Citizens; Forces were preſently raiſed, and placed about the Bridge, and other fit places of the City. The third of February, Wyat with an Army of Three or four thouſand came to London, hoping of preſent entrance, but finding the Bridge broken, and Souldiers placed to reſiſt him, after two days ſtay in Southwark, he removed to Kingſtone, where he found likewiſe the Bridge broken, yet with great induſtry ſuddenly repairing it, he paſſed over his Men, and meant with all ſpeed to get to the Court, before the Queen ſhould have notice of his coming; and had done ſo indeed, if a miſchance, and an errour upon that miſchance had not hindred him. For being come within ſix miles of London, the Carriage of one of his great Ordnance brake, in mending whereof ſo much time was ſpent (and Wyat by no perſwaſions would go forward without it) that the time was paſt, in which his Friends at London expected his coming: which diſappointment made many in thoſe parts to fall off, and being perceived by thoſe about him, many of them alſo; ſo as one half of his Army was ſuddenly gone and left him; amongſt other, Sir George Harper, the moſt intimate of all his Council, went to the Queen and diſcovered all his purpoſes: whereupon the Earl of Pembroke, with a Company levied upon the ſudden, was ſent againſt him, which made Wyat ſlack his pace, ſo as it was Noon before he came to the Suburbs of the City, and then placing his Ordnance upon a Hill, and leaving there the greateſt part of his Army, he only with five Enſigns marched towards Ludgate, and being encountred at Charing-Croſs by the Lord Chamberlain and Sir John Gage, after a ſmall fight put them to flight in ſuch ſort, that word was carried to the Queen, how near Wyat approached, and how wonderfully he prevailed all the way he came: with which nothing diſmayed, Well then (ſaid ſhe) I will go in perſon againſt him my ſelf; and was preparing to do ſo indeed (ſo much was her Father's Valour running in her veins) but it needed not; for by this time Sir Henry Jerningham Captain of the Guard, Sir Edward Bray Maſter of the Ordnance, and Sir Philip Paris had given him Battel, and ſlain many of his men: and that which was more, coming to Ludgate, he was denied entrance; and then thinking to retire, he heard the Earl of Pembroke with his Forces was behind at Charing Croſs; ſo as neither able to go forward, nor yet backward, he was at a ſtand and in amazement, and then leaning a while upon a Stall by the Bell-Savage, after a little muſing, he returned towards Temple-Gate: where Clarentius the Herald meeting him, fell to perſwade him, not to be a cauſe of more effuſion of bloud, nor by perſiſting in obſtinacy to exclude all hopes of the Queens mercy. The Soldiers of Wyat were earneſt with him to have ſtood it out; but Wyat as ſillily ending, as he had unadviſedly begun, yielded himſelf to Sir Maurice Berkley, and getting up upon his horſe behind him, in that manner rode to the Court, where he had not the entertainment he expected, for without more ado he was preſently ſent away to the Tower. The Captain taken, the reſt made no reſiſtance, few fled, and of the other many were taken and laid in Priſon; and this was done the ſixth of February. And now conſultation was held what Delinquents ſhould be puniſhed; where the firſt that was thought on was the Lady Jane, in whom was verified, The Fathers have eaten ſower Grapes, and the Childrens teeth are ſet on edge: The innocent Lady muſt ſuffer for her Fathers fault; for if her Father the Duke of Suffolk had not this ſecond time made ſhipwrack of his Loyalty, his Daughter perhaps had never taſted the ſalt-waters of the Queens diſpleaſure: but now as a Rock of offence, ſhe is the firſt that muſt be removed; and thereupon is Doctor Fecknam ſent to acquaint her, That ſhe muſt prepare her ſelf to die the next day: Which Meſſage was ſo little unpleaſing to her, that ſhe ſeemed rather to rejoyce at it, as whereby ſhe ſhould at laſt be ſet at liberty: And the Doctor being earneſt with her to leave her new Religion, and to embrace the old; ſhe anſwered, She had now no time to think of any thing but of preparing her ſelf to God by Prayer. Fecknam thinking ſhe had ſpoken this, to the end ſhe might have ſome longer time of life, obtained of the Queen three days longer, and then came and told ſo much to the Lady Jane: Whereat ſhe ſmiling ſaid, You are much deceived, if you think I had any deſire of longer life; for I aſſure you, ſince the time you went from me, my life hath been ſo tedious to me, that I long for nothing ſo much as death; and ſince it is the Queens pleaſure, I am moſt willing to undergo it. Before ſhe was brought to Execution, her Huſband, the Lord Guilford, had made ſuit, and obtained to ſee her, and have ſome conference with her; but ſhe refuſed it, ſaying, Theſe were rather augmenters of grief, than comforts of death; ſhe made no doubt, but they ſhould ſhortly meet in a better place, and in a better condition of ſociety: So on the twelfth of February

But is taken, and carried to the Tower.

Queen Mary proteſts her Marriage to be for the good of the Kingdom.

Wyat being denied Entrance at Ludgate, retires, and at laſt yields himſelf to Sir Maurice Berkley, and is ſent to the Tower.

The Lady Jane hath word ſent her to prepare her ſelf to die. Whereat ſhe ſeemed to rejoyce.

She is beheaded.

February her Husband the Lord Guilford first, and then ſhe, an hour or two after, was beheaded within the Tower; where ſhe acknowleged her ſelf to have deſerved death, not for ſeeking the Crown, but for not refuſing it, being offered: and after Prayers to God, unclothing her ſelf, and putting a Handkerchief before her eyes, ſhe laid her head down upon the Block, and patiently ſuffered death, more grievous to the beholders than to her ſelf. This end had the Lady Jane Gray, a Lady of incomparable Piety, and (for her years) of incomparable Learning; for being not paſt ſeventeen years of age, ſhe underſtood perfectly the Greek and Latine Tongues, and was ſo ready in Points of Divinity, as if ſhe knew them by inſpiration rather than by inſtruction; no leſs a Miracle in this kind than King Edward; and therefore no marvel if he appointed her to ſucceed him in the Kingdom, who in the endowments of Mind was ſo like unto him, that whileſt ſhe reigned, it might be thought he continued to reign himſelf, at leaſt no more differing but only the Sex. It may not be forgotten, that Judge Morgan, who at her Arraignment gave the ſentence againſt her, ſhortly after fell mad, and in his raving, cried continually to have the Lady Jane taken away from him, and ſo ended his life.

Her Piety and Learning.

Judge Morgan, who had given Sentence upon her, falls mad.

Two days after the Execution of the Lady Jane, namely, the fourteenth and fifteenth of February, twenty pair of Gallows were ſet up in divers places of the City, whereon were hanged fifty of Wyat's Faction; on the eighteenth of February Bret was hanged at Rocheſter in Chains, Sir Henry Iſle, who had been taken in an old freez Coat and an old pair of Hoſe, with his Brother Thomas Iſle, and Walter Mantell were hanged at Maidſtone, Anthony Knevet, and his Brother William, with another of the Mantells, were executed at Sevenock: but then on the twentieth of February, a ſprinkling of mercy came, for four hundred of Wyat's followers, being brought before the Queen with halters about their necks, were all pardoned and ſet at liberty. But then ſeverity ſoon after began again, for on the three and twentieth of February, the Lord Henry Gray, Duke of Suffolk, and Father to the Lady Jane, who the week before had been arraigned and condemned, was on the Tower-Hill beheaded; and on the eleventh of April in the ſame place was beheaded (the Author of all this miſchief) Wyat himſelf, whoſe quarters were ſet up in divers places of the City, his head upon the Gallows at Hay-hill, beſides Hide-Park. This man, in hope of life, having before accuſed the Lord Courtney, and the Lady Elizabeth, the Queens Siſter, to be privy to his Conſpiracy, yet at his death he cleared them, and proteſted openly, that they were altogether innocent, and never had been acquainted with his proceedings. Yet was this matter ſo urged againſt them by Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter and Lord Chancellour, that both of them in March before had been committed to the Tower, though in May following they were both again releaſed; but yet confined, the Lady Elizabeth to Woodſtock, under the cuſtody of Sir Henry Bedingfield of Oxenborough in the County of Norfolk; the Lord Courtney to Foderingham, under the cuſtody of Sir Thomas Treſham, who after ſome time was ſet at liberty, and going into Italy there died. It is memorable, what malice this Biſhop Gardiner bore to the Lady Elizabeth, by whoſe only procurement, not only ſhe was kept in moſt hard durance, but a Warrant was at laſt framed under certain Counſellours hands, to put her to death; and had been done, but that Mr. Bridges Lieutenant of the Tower, pitying her caſe, went to the Queen to know her pleaſure, who utterly denied that ſhe knew any thing of it; by which means her life was preſerved. Indeed the Biſhop would ſometimes ſay, how they cut off boughs and branches, but as long as they let the root remain, all was nothing: and it is not unworthy the remembring what trains were laid to enſnare her. The common Net at that time for catching of Proteſtants, was the Real Preſence, and this Net was uſed to catch her; for being asked one time, What ſhe thought of the words of Chriſt, This is my Body; whether ſhe thought it the true Body of Chriſt that was in the Sacrament? It is ſaid, that after ſome pauſing, ſhe thus anſwered:

The Duke of Suffolk is beheaded.

Wyat is beheaded.

Stephen Gardiner practiſes againſt the Lady Elizabeth.

He procures a Warrant to put her to death.

And how ſhe was preſerved.

Chriſt was the Word that ſpake it:
He took the Bread, and brake it:
And what the Word did make it,
That I believe, and take it.—

Which though it may ſeem but a ſlight expreſſion, yet hath it more ſolidneſs than at firſt ſight appears; at leaſt it ſerved her turn at that time to eſcape the net, which by direct anſwer ſhe could not have done.

On the ſeventeenth of February, Thomas Lord Gray the Duke of Suffolks Brother was beheaded, the laſt, and indeed the leaſt in Delinquency, that ſuffered for having any hand in Wyat's Conſpiracy. There remained yet a fagge end, and was indeed but a fagge end, as nothing worth; for on the ſame day Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, being accuſed to have been a party in Wyat's Conſpiracy, was at the Guild-Hall arraigned before Sir Thomas White Lord Mayor, the Earls of Shrewsbury and Derby, Sir Thomas Bromley Lord Chief Juſtice of England, Sir Nicholas Hare Maſter of the Rolls, Sir Francis Englefield Maſter of the Wards, Sir Richard Southwell and Sir Edward Walgrave Privy Counſellours, Sir Roger Chomely, Sir William Portman one of the Juſtices of the Kings Bench, Sir Edward Sanders, one of the Juſtices of the Common Pleas, Mr. Stamford and Mr. Dyer Serjeants at Law, Mr. Edward Gryffin Atturney General, Mr. Sendall and Peter Tichborne Clerks of the Crown, where the ſaid Sir Nicholas Throgmorton ſo fully and diſcreetly anſwered all Objections brought againſt him, that he was found by the Jury, Not guilty; and was clearly acquitted: But the Jury notwithſtanding was afterward troubled for acquitting him, and ſent Priſoners, ſome of them to the Tower, and ſome to the Fleet, and afterward fined to pay a thouſand Marks apiece at leaſt, and ſome two thouſand pounds; though theſe Sums were afterward ſomething mitigated.

Thomas Lord Gray, the Duke of Suffolks brother beheaded.

Sir Nicholas Throgmorton arraigned, and by the Jury acquitted.

More

Divers of Wyats Complices pardoned.

More of Wyat's Complices had been taken, arraigned, and adjudged to die, but in Judgment the Queen remembred Mercy, and gave them their Pardons, of which Number were Maſter Rudſton of Kent, Sir James a Crofts, the Lord John Gray Brother to the Duke of Suffolk, and ſome others.

Divers Lords created.

About this time, a little before and after, were advancements in honour, the Lord William Howard, Lord Admiral of England, was created Baron Howard of Effingham, Sir John Williams was created Baron of Tame, Sir Edward North was created Baron of Chartleigh, Sir John Bridges was created Baron Chandowes of Sudely. Gerard Fitz Garret Earl of Kildare and Baron of Ophelley, and not long after Sir Anthony Brown Maſter of the Horſe, was created Viſcount Mountague.

The Impoſture of Elizabeth Croft, called the Spirit in the Wall.

It is ſcarce worth remembring, That in the end of this firſt year of the Queens Reign, one Elizabeth Croft, a Wench of eighteen years old, was by practice put into a Wall, and thereupon called, The Spirit in the Wall, who with a Whiſtle made for the purpoſe, whiſtled out many ſeditious words againſt the Queen, the Prince of Spain, the Maſs, Confeſſion, and ſuch other Points; for which ſhe did Penance, ſtanding upon a Scaffold at Paul's Croſs all the Sermon time, where ſhe made open confeſſion of her fault.

Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer adjudged Hereticks, and condemned to die.

There had been good ſtore of Lay-mens bloud ſhed already, and now the time is coming to have Clergy-mens ſhed; and for a preparative to it, on the tenth of April, Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Nicholas Ridley late Biſhop of London, and Hugh Latimer late Biſhop of Worceſter, are conveyed from the Tower to Oxford, there to diſpute with Oxford and Cambridge men in Points of Religion, but eſpecially of the Euchariſt; the Oxford men were Cole, Chadſey, Pye, Harpfield, Smith, and Doctor Weſton Prolocutor: the Cambridge men, Young, Seaton, Watſon, Atkinſon, Fecknam, and Sedgewick: The Diſputation ended, which (we may well think as the matter was carried) went againſt the Priſoners, on the twentieth of April they were brought again on the Stage; and then demanded, Whether they would perſiſt in their Opinion, or elſe recant? And affirming they would perſiſt, they were all three adjudged Hereticks, and condemned to the Fire; but their Execution we muſt not look for till a year or two hence; but in the mean time we have John Rogers the firſt Martyr of theſe Times, burnt at London the fourth of February; after whom the ninth of February, John Hooper, late Biſhop of Worceſter, burnt at Glouceſter; after him, Robert Ferrar Biſhop of Man, burnt at Carmarden; after him John Bradford, with many others; & then the two famous men Ridley and Latimer, no leſs famous for their conſtant deaths than their Religious lives, both burnt at Oxford the ſixteenth of October.

The firſt that ſuffered for Religion in Queen Maries time.

This Riſing of Wyat had been a Remora to the Queens Marriage, and now to avoid all ſuch obſtacles hereafter, the Queen in April called a Parliament; wherein were propounded two things; one for Confirmation of the Marriage; the other for reſtoration of the Popes Primacy: This latter was not aſſented to but with great difficulty; for the ſix years Reign of King Edward had ſpread a plantation of the Proteſtant Religion in the hearts of many: but the Propoſition for the Marriage was aſſented to readily, but yet with the adding of ſome conditions, which had not been thought of in the former Articles: 1. That King Philip ſhould admit of no Stranger in any Office, but only Natives. 2. That he ſhould innovate nothing in the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Kingdom. 3. That he ſhould not carry the Queen out of the Realm, without her conſent, nor any of her Children without conſent of the Council. 4. That ſurviving the Queen, he ſhould challenge no right in the Kingdom, but ſuffer it to deſcend to the next Heir. 5. That he ſhould carry none of the Jewels of the Realm out of the Kingdom, nor ſuffer any Ships or Ordnance to be removed out of the Realm: And laſtly, That neither directly nor indirectly, he ſhould cauſe the Realm of England to be intangled with the War between Spain and France.

All things being thus agreed on, the Earl of Bedford Lord Privy Seal, the Lord Fitz-waters, and divers other Lords and Gentlemen, are ſent into Spain to fetch over Prince Philip, who arrived at Southampton the twentieth of July, in the year 1554. and the three and twentieth came to Wincheſter, where the Queen met him, and the five and twentieth, the Marriage between them there was openly ſolemnized: (the diſparity of years, as in Princes, not much regarded, though he were then but ſeven and twenty years of age, ſhe eight and thirty) at which time the Emperours Embaſſadours being preſent, openly declared, That in conſideration of that Marriage, the Emperour had given to Prince Philip his Son, the Kingdoms of Naples and Hieruſalem; and thereupon (the ſolemnity of Marriage being ended) Garter King of Heralds openly in the Church, in the preſence of the King, the Queen, and the Lords both of England and Spain, ſolemnly proclaimed the Title and Style of theſe two Princes, as followeth; Philip and Mary by the Grace of God King and Queen of England, France, Naples, Hieruſalem, and Ireland, Defenders of the Faith; Princes of Spain, and Sicily, Arch-Dukes of Auſtria; Dukes of Millain, Burgundy, and Brabant, Counts of Habſpurge, Flanders, and Tyroll. After this, the King and Queen by eaſie Journeys came to Windſor Caſtle, where the King was inſtalled Knight of the Garter, and the Earl of Suſſex with him: The eleventh of Auguſt they removed to Richmond, the ſeven and twentieth to Suffolk-Place in Southwark, and the next day to London (where the ſtately Shews that were made, may well enough be conceived without relating) from hence after four days they removed again to Richmond, where all the Lords had leave to depart into their Countries; and indeed ſo many departed, that there remained not an Engliſh Lord at the Court but the Biſhop of Wincheſter: From Richmond they removed to Hampton-Court, where the Hall door within the Court was continually kept ſhut, ſo as no man might enter unleſs his errand were firſt known, which might perhaps be the faſhion of Spain, but to Engliſhmen ſeemed very ſtrange.

The Earl of Bedford is ſent into Spain, to fetch over Prince Philip.

The Marriage between him and the Queen is ſolemnized.

Their Style

A bare and cloſe Court.

About this time Cardinal Poole, ſent for by Cardinal Pool is sent for by the King and Queen to come into England.

the King and Queen, came over into England; and had come ſooner, but that the Emperour, fearing he might prove a Corrival with his Son Philip, had uſed means to ſtop his paſſage; but now that his Son's Marriage was paſt, he was content to let him paſs; who though he came from Rome with the great authority of a Legate a Latere, yet he would not but come privately into London, becauſe his Attaindour was yet upon Record; an Act therefore was preſently paſſed to take it off, and to reſtore him in bloud; for paſſing of which Act, the King and Queen in Perſon came to the Parliament Houſe; whither a few days after, the Cardinal came himſelf, which was then kept in the great Chamber of White-Hall, becauſe the Queen, by reaſon of ſickneſs, was not well able to go abroad: and here the King and Queen ſitting under the Cloth of Eſtate, and the Cardinal on their right hand, all the Lords, Knights and Burgeſſes being preſent, the Biſhop of Wincheſter Lord Chancellour, made a ſhort Speech unto them, ſignifying the preſence of the Lord Cardinal, and that he was ſent from the Pope as his Legate a Latere, to do a Work tending to the glory of God, and the benefit of them all; which (ſaith he) you may the better hear from his own mouth. Then the Cardinal roſe up, and made a long ſolemn Oration, wherein he firſt thanked them for his reſtoring, by which he was enabled to be a Member of their Society: Then exhorting them to return into the boſome of the Church, for which end he was come; not to condemn, but to reconcile; not to compell, but to call and require: and for their firſt work of Reconcilement, requiring them to repeal and abrogate all ſuch Laws as had formerly been made in derogation of the Catholick Religion. After which Speech, the Parliament, going together, drew up a Supplication, which within two days after they preſented to the King aud Queen; wherein they ſhewed themſelves to be very penitent for their former Errors, and humbly deſired their Majeſties to intercede for them to the Lord Cardinal and the See Apoſtolick, that they might be Pardoned of all they had done amiſs, and be received into the boſome of the Church, being themſelves moſt ready to abrogate all Laws prejudicial to the See of Rome. This Supplication being delivered to the Cardinal, he then gave them Abſolution in theſe words; [We, by the Apoſtolick Authority given unto Us, by the moſt Holy Lord Pope Julius the Third (Chriſts Vicegerent on Earth) do abſolve and deliver you, and every of you, with the whole Realm and Dominions thereof, from all Hereſie and Schiſm, and from all Judgments, Cenſures, and pains for that cauſe incurred; And alſo We do reſtore you again to the Unity of our Mother the holy Church.] The report hereof coming to Rome, was cauſe that a ſolemn Proceſſion was made for joy of the Converſion of England to the Church of Rome. And now the Queen had a great deſire to have King Philip Crowned, but to this the Parliament would by no means aſſent.

Being come, he makes a ſolemn ſpeech to the Parliament, exhorting them to return to the boſome of the Church.

The Parliament deſires Pardon of their former Errors.

And thereupon the Cardinal gives the whole Realm Abſolution.

The Parliament will not yield that King Philip ſhould be crowned.

1555. In October this ſecond year of her Reign a rumour was ſpread of the Queens being with child, and ſo forward, that ſhe was quick; and thereupon were Letters ſent from the Lords of the Council to Bonner Biſhop of London, that Prayers of Thankſgiving ſhould be made in all Churches; and the Parliament it ſelf was ſo credulous of it, that they entred into conſideration of the Education of the Child; and made an Act, deſiring the King (out of the confidence they had in him) that if the Queen ſhould fail, he would be pleaſed to take upon him the Rule and Government of the Child: But after all this, in June following, it came to be known, that it was but a Tympany, or at leaſt the Queen ſo miſcarried, that there was no Child, nor the Queen likely ever after to have any. But howſoever, in hope of the joy that was expected, in January this year, divers of the Council, as the Lord Chancellour, the Biſhop of Ely, the Lord Treaſurer, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Controllor of the Queens Houſe, Secretary Bourne, and Sir Richard Southwell Maſter of the Ordnance, were ſent to the Tower, to diſcharge and ſet at liberty a great part of the Priſoners in the Tower; as namely, the late Duke of Northumberland's Sons, Ambroſe, Robert, and Henry, alſo Sir Andrew Dudley, Sir James Crofts, Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, Sir John Rogers, Sir Nicholas Arnold, Sir George Harper, Sir Edward Warner, Sir William Sentlow, Sir Gowen Carow, William Gybbs Eſquire, Cutbert Vanghan, and ſome others.

The Queen is preached in Churches to be with child: and prayers made for her ſafe delivery; but proved no ſuch thing.

Divers that were in the Tower condemned are ſet at liberty.

About this time one William Fetherſtone, a Millers Son, of the age of eighteen years, named and bruited himſelf to be King Edward the Sixth; for which being apprehended and examined, he anſwered as one Lunatick, and thereupon was whipped at the Carts tayl, and baniſhed into the North: but the year after, ſpreading abroad again, that King Edward was alive, and that he had talked with him, he was arraigned and condemned of Treaſon, and at Tyburn hanged and quartered.

One Fetherſtone a Millers Son takes upon him to be King Edward the Sixth.

Is taken and hanged at Tyburne.

In the month of March, the Queen was taken with a fit of Devotion, and thereupon called unto her four of her Privy Council, namely, William Marquel of Wincheſter Lord Treaſurer, Sir Robert Rocheſter Controllor, Sir William Peter Secretary, and Sir Francis Engleſield Maſter of the Wards, and ſignified unto them, That it went againſt her Conſcience to hold the Lands and Poſſeſſions as well of Monaſteries and Abbeys, as of other Churches, and therefore did freely relinquiſh them, and leave them to be diſpoſed, as the Pope and the Lord Cardinal ſhould think fit; and thereupon charged them to acquaint the Cardinal with her purpoſe. And ſhortly after in performance hereof, John Feckuam, late Dean of Pauls, was made Abbot of Weſtminſter, and had poſſeſſion delivered him, and with him fourteen Monks received the Habit at the ſame time: and on the twentieth of November, Sir Thomas was inſtituted Lord of St. Johns of Hieruſalem, and was put in poſſeſſion of the Lands belonging unto it. And when it was told her, That this would be a great diminution of the Revenues of her Crown; ſhe anſwered, She more valued the ſalvation of her ſoul than a thouſand Crowns. A moſt religious ſpeech, and enough, if there were but this, to ſhew her to be a moſt Pious Prince.

The Queen delivers up all the Lands of Monaſteries that were in her hands.

The

King Philip goes into Flanders, where he ſtayes eighteen months

The fourth of September this year, Ring Philip waited on with the Earl of Arundel Lord Steward, the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Huntington, and others, went over to Callice, and from thence to Bruſſells in Brabant, to viſit the Emperour his Father; who delivering him poſſeſſion of the Low-Countries, in March following he returned into England; but on the ſixth of July following, by reaſon of Wars with France, he paſſed again over to Callice, and ſo into Flanders, from whence he returned not till eighteen months after; which made great muttering amongſt the Common people, as though he took any little occaſion to be abſent, for the little love he bore to the Queen.

In the third year of the Queen died Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, at his houſe in Southwark; of whoſe death it is memorable, That the ſame day in which Biſhop Ridley and Mr. Latimer ſuffered at Oxford, he would not go to dinner till four a clock in the afternoon, though the old Duke of Norfolk was come to dine with him: the reaſon was, becauſe he would firſt hear of their being burnt; and as ſoon as word of that was brought him, he preſently ſaid, Now let us go to Dinner; where ſitting down, and eating merrily, upon a ſudden he fell into ſuch extremity, that he was fain to be taken from the Table, and carried to his bed, where he continued fifteen days, without voiding any thing either by Urine or otherwiſe, which cauſed his tongue to ſwell in his mouth, and ſo he died; after whoſe death, Nicholas Heath Archbiſhop of York was made Lord Chancellour.

Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter dies a ſtrange death.

Biſhop Cranmer upon hope of life recants.

And now comes the time of Archbiſhop Cranmers Execution, who the year before had been condemned and degraded by Commiſſion from the Pope; after which, being by the ſubtilty of ſome, put in hope of life, out of frailty he ſubſcribed to a Recantation, which yet did him no good; for whether it were that Cardinal Poole would no longer be kept from being Archbiſhop, (which he would not be as long as he lived) or that the Queen could not be gotten to forget his being the chief inſtrument of her Mothers Divorce; his Execution was reſolved to be the fourteenth of February, in the ſame place at Oxford where Ridley and Latimer five months before had been: Before the Execution, Doctor Cole preached, who to make uſe of Cranmers Recantation, told the people, they ſhould do well to hearken to this Learned mans Confeſſion, who now at his death, and with his death would teſtifie which was the true Religion; never thinking that Cranmer would have denied his former Recantation: But Cranmer being brought to the Stake, (contrary to expectation) acknowledged, That through frailty he had ſubſcribed it, praying God heartily to forgive it; and now for a puniſhment, that hand which had done it ſhould firſt ſuffer, and therewithall thruſting his right hand into the fire, he there held it, till it firſt, and then his whole body was conſumed; only (which was no ſmall miracle) his heart remained whole and not once touched with the fire. The ſame year alſo, no fewer than eighty four of both Sexes were burnt for Religion: and it was a cruelty very far extended, that the bones of Bucer and Phagius, ſome time before dead and buried, were taken up and publickly burnt in Cambridge. No ſooner was Cranmer dead, but the very ſame day was Cardinal Poole made Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Yet is brought to the ſtake and burnt: where he burns his hand firſt.

When his whole body was burnt, his heart remained untoucht of the fire.

The Lord Sturton for a murther is hanged in a ſilken halter

In the fourth year of the Queen, exemplary Juſtice was done upon a great Perſon; for the Lord Sturton a man much in the Queens favour, as being an earneſt Papiſt, was for a Murther committed by him, arraigned and condemned, and he, with four of his Servants carried to Saliſbury, was there in the Market-place hanged, having this favour to be hanged in a ſilken halter, his Servants in places near adjoyning to the place where the Murther was committed.

Thomas Stafford for raiſing Sedition arraigned and beheaded.

The four and twentieth of April, Thomas Stafford, ſecond Son to the Lord Stafford, with other, to the number of two and thirty perſons (ſet on by the French King) attempted to raiſe Sedition againſt the Queen, for marrying with King Philip, and coming out of France, arrived at Scarborough in York-ſhire, where they took the Caſtle, but within two days were driven out by the Earl of Weſtmerland, and then taken and arraigned: The eight and twentieth of May, Stafford was beheaded on the Tower-Hill, and the next day three of his Aſſociates, Strelly, Bradford, and Procter were drawn from the Tower to Tyburn, and there executed. The firſt of May, Thomas Percy was firſt made Knight, after Lord, and the next day was created Earl of Northumberland, to whom the Queen gave all the Lands that had been his Anceſtors, Thomas Percy made Earl of Northumberland.

Queen Mary ſends aid to King Philip, with which he beſiegeth and takes St. Quintyns.

At this time the Queen intangled her ſelf (contrary to her promiſe) in her Husbands Quarrel, ſent a defiance to the French King, by Clarentius King at Arms; and after on the Munday in the Whitſun-week, by ſound of Trumpet, proclaimed open War againſt him in Cheapſide, and other places of the City; and ſhortly after, cauſed an Army of a thouſand Horſe, and four thouſand Foot, to be tranſported over, to the aid of her Husband King Philip, under the leading of the Earl of Pembroke Captain General, Sir Anthony Brown Viſcount Mountague Lieutenant General, the Lord Gray of Wilton Lord Marſhal, the Earl of Rutland General of the Horſe, the Earl of Lincoln Colonel of the Foot, the Lord Robert Dudley Maſter of the Ordnance, the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord De la Ware, the Lord Bray, the Lord Chandows, the Lord Ambroſe Dudley, the Lord Henry Dudley, with divers Knights and Gentlemen; who joyning with King Philips Forces, they all ſet down before St. Quintyns, a Town of the French Kings of great importance. To the reſcue whereof, the French King ſent an Army, under the leading of the Conſtable of France, which conſiſted of nine hundred men at Arms, with as many light Horſe, eight hundred Reyſters, two and twenty Enſigns of Lancequenets, and ſixteen Enſigns of French Footmen: Their purpoſe was not to give battel, but to put more Succours into the Town; which the Philippians perceiving, encountred them, and in the fight ſlew John of Burbon Duke of Anghein, the Viſcount of Torrain, the Lord of Chadenier, with many Gentlemen of account: They took priſoners the Duke of Memorancy Conſtable of France, the Duke of Montpenſyer, Duke Longueville, the Marſhal of St. Andrews, the Lord Lewis Brother to the Duke of Mantova, the Baron of Curton, the Rhinegrave Colonel of the Almaynes, Monſieur d' Obigny, Monſieur de Biron, and many others; and then purſuing the victory, under the government of the Earl of Pembroke, on the ſeven and twentieth of Auguſt they took the Town of St. Quintyns; in the aſſault wherof, the Lord Henry Dudley, youngeſt Son to the Duke of Northumberland, was with a piece of great Ordnance ſlain, & ſome other of account. The ſaccage of the Town K. Philip gave to the Engliſh, as by whoſe valour chiefly it was won.

The joy was not ſo great for this winning of St. Quintyns, but there will be greater ſorrow preſently for other loſſes. Many of the Garriſon of Callice had been drawn from thence for ſervice of St. Quintyns, and no new ſupply ſent; which being perceived by the French King, a Plot is laid how to ſurpriſe it, which yet was not ſo ſecretly carried, but that the Officers of Callice had intelligence thereof; who there upon ſignified it to the Council of England, requiring ſpeedy Succours, without which, againſt ſo great an Army as was raiſed againſt them, they ſhould not be able to hold out. But whether they gave no credit to their relations, or whether they apprehended not the danger ſo imminent as indeed it was, they neglected to ſend Supplies till it was too late. For the Duke of Guyſe, with no leſs ſpeed than Policy, took ſuch a courſe, that at one and the ſame time, he ſet both upon Newnham bridge, and alſo upon Ricebank, (the two main Skonces for defence of the Town) and took them both, and then fell preſently to batter the Walls of the Caſtle it ſelf, and that with ſuch violence of great Ordnance, that the noiſe was heard to Antwerp, being a hundred miles off. But having made the Walls aſſaultable, the Engliſh uſed this Stratagem, they laid trains of Powder to blow them up, when they ſhould offer to enter; but this Stratagem ſucceeded not; for the French in paſſing the Ditch, had ſo wet their cloths, that dropping upon the Train, the Powder would take no fire, (ſo all things ſeemed to concur againſt the Engliſh) and thereupon the Caſtle was taken alſo, and with it the Town alſo had been taken, but that Sir Anthony Ager, with the loſs of his own life, and his eldeſt Sons, valiantly defended it, and for that time repelled the French, but their Numbers increaſed ſo faſt upon the Town, that the Lord Wentworth the Deputy, ſeeing no other way of ſafety, demanded Parlee, where a Compoſition was made, That the Town ſhould preſently be yielded to the French King, the lives of the Inhabitants only ſaved, and ſafe conduct to paſs away, ſaving the Lord Deputy with fifty other, ſuch as the Duke ſhould name. And here to be quit with the Engliſh for their hard uſage at St. Quintyns, the Duke cauſed Proclamation to be made, That all and every perſon of the Town ſhould bring their money, jewels, and plate, to the value of a groat, and lay it down upon the high Altar of the Church; by which means, an ineſtimable ſum of Treaſure was there offered, enough to enrich an Army, which had before enriched a Town. And now to make it appear how unable the Town was to hold out againſt ſo great an Army, it is ſaid, there were in it but only five hundred Souldiers of ordinary, and ſcarce two hundred more of able fighting men; but of other people, men, women, and children, four thouſand and two hundred; all which were ſuffered to depart, ſaving the Lord Wentworth the Deputy, Sir Ralph Chamberlain Captain of the Caſtle, John Hurlſtone Captain of Ricebanke, Nicholas Alexander Captain of Newnham bridge, Edward Grimſton the Controllour, John Rogers the Surveyor, with others to the number of fifty, who were all carried priſoners into France. And thus Callice, which had been in poſſeſſion of the Engliſh above two hundred years, was won from the Engliſh in eight days, which King Edward the Third had not won from the French in leſs than a year. The Lord Wentworth was ſuſpected, and in Queen Elizabeths time arraigned for betraying it, but was acquitted by his Peers. Callice thus won, the Duke with his Army marched to Guyſnes, five miles diſtant, whereof was Captain the Lord Gray of Wilton, who held out the ſiege and batteries five or ſix days with ſo great valour and reſolution, that he appeared in nothing inferiour to the Enemy but in multitude; yet at laſt overlaid with their numbers, and importuned by his Souldiers, much againſt his own will, he made compoſition, that the Town and Caſtle ſhould be wholly rendred, himſelf and all Officers remain priſoners, all other to depart with their Armour and Baggage. The Lord Gray afterward ranſomed for four and twenty thouſand Crowns. And now the Duke of Guiſe conſidering that Guyſnes would be too coſtly a Caſtle to be kept, and too dangerous a neighbour to Callice, if it ſhould be recovered, razed it with the Bulwarks and Fortifications to the ground. Guyſnes thus won, there remained nothing within the Engliſh Pale, but the little Caſtle of Hammes, whereof was Captain the Lord Edward Dudley, who conſidering that though it were naturally ſtrongly ſituate, as being invironed with Fens and Marſhes, yet it had but little helps by Art of Fortifications, and being aſſured that the Duke of Guiſe would ſpeedily come upon him, he ſecretly in the night with all his Garriſon, departed into Flanders, ſo as the Caſtle was not won, but taken by the Duke of Guiſe, and with the loſs of this Caſtle, the Engliſh loſt all their footing in Terra Firma, and the Kings of England all the reality of their Title in France, having nothing left but nudum nomen.

Preſently after this, the French King cauſed the Marriage between his eldeſt Son Francis the Daulphin, and Mary Steward, ſole Heir of James the fifth, King of Scotland, to be ſolemnized: whereupon great Wars enſued ſoon after between England and Scotland.

Queen Mary being infinitely troubled in mind for the loſs of Callice, ſent preſently forth her Admiral the Lord Clinton, with a Fleet of more than a hundred ſail, to recover at leaſt reparation in honour, by doing ſome exploit upon France, who not finding opportunity to ſet upon Breſt, as he was appointed, fell upon the Town of Conqueſt, which he took and burnt, and alſo divers Villages thereabouts, and then returned. In which mean time, many great Conflicts having

And ſo the Engliſh loſt all their footing in France.

An Agreement of Peace between King Philip and the King of France; but only want of reſtitution of Callice.

having been between King Philip and the King of France; at laſt, by mediation of the Dutcheſs of Lorrain, a Treaty of Peace is agreed on, where all things ſeemed to be well accorded, but only that King Philip by all means required reſtitution of Callice, to which by no means the French would aſſent: But whilſt they ſtood upon theſe terms, it hapned that firſt the Emperour Charles King Philips Father died, and ſhortly after Queen Mary, and the day after Cardinal Poole, and ſhortly after Sir John Baker of Siſſingherſt in Kent, who had been a Privy Counſellour to Henry the eighth, Edward the ſixth, and Queen Mary. And ſo our Story hath no further relation to either War or Peace, between the two Kings of France and Spain.

Queen Mary dies.

Of her Taxations.

SHe began with a rare Example; for in the firſt year of her Reign, was pardoned by Proclamation, the Subſidy of four ſhillings the pound of Land, and two ſhillings the pound of goods, granted in the laſt Parliament of King Edward the ſixth. In her ſecond year, in a Parliament then holden, was granted to the King and Queen a Subſidy of the Laity, from five pounds to ten pounds, of eight pence in the pound; from ten pounds to twenty pounds, of twelve pence in the pound; and from twenty pounds upwards, ſixteen pence in the pound; all Strangers double, and the Clergy ſix ſhillings in the pound. If this were all, then upon the matter, in all her time, there came no new charge upon her people; for one Subſidy remitted, and one received, made but even. In her laſt year ſhe borrowed twenty thouſand pounds of the City of London; and paid twelve pounds a year Intereſt for every hundred pound.

Laws and Ordinances in her Time.

New Coyns of Gold and Silver.

IN her firſt year, on the fourth of September, were proclaimed certain new Coins of Gold and Silver, a Sovereign of Gold of thirty ſhillings; the half Sovereign fifteen ſhillings; an Angel of ten ſhillings; the half Angel five ſhillings. Of Silver the groat, the halt groat, and peny; all theſe Coyns to be currant as before. In her ſecond year, Proclamation was made, forbidding the ſhooting in Hand-guns, and bearing of weapons. The year in which ſhe was married to King Philip, a ſtraight charge was to all Victuallers, Taverners, and Alehouſe-keepers, that they ſhould ſell no meat nor drink, nor any kind of victuals, to any Serving-man whatſoever, unleſs he brought a teſtimonial to ſhew whoſe ſervant he was. Alſo in a Parliament holden this year, amongſt other Acts, the Statute Ex Officio and other Laws made for the puniſhment of Hereſies, were revived; but chiefly the Popes Bull of Diſpenſation of Abbey Land was there confirmed. In her ſecond year, on Michaelmas Even, the Priſoners that lay in the Counter in Breadſtreet, were removed to a new Counter made in Woodſtreet, of the City purchaſe and building; the which removing was confirmed by the Common Council of the City.

Meat and drink forbidden to be ſold to any ſerving-man, without a teſtimonial whom he ſerved.

The Counter in Woodſtreet firſt made a Priſon.

Affairs of the Church in her Time.

IN the firſt year of this Queens Reign, all Biſhops which had been deprived in the time of King Edward the Sixth, were reſtored to their Biſhopricks, and the new removed; alſo all beneficed men that were married, or would not forſake their Opinion, were put out of their Livings; and other of a contrary opinion put in their rooms. Alſo this year, on the ſeven and twentieth of Auguſt, the Service begun to be ſung in Latine in Paul's Church. Alſo this year the Popes Authority was by Act of Parliament reſtored in England, and the Maſs commanded in all Churches to be uſed. In her ſecond year, the Realm is Abſolved, and reconciled to the Church of Rome by Cardinal Poole: and firſt Fruits and Tenths are reſtored to the Clergy; but this was ſoon revoked, the Council finding the neceſſity of it for the Queens ſupport. In her fourth year, Monaſteries were begun to be re-edified; of which number were that of Weſtminſter, that of Sheen and Sion, that of the Black-Fryers, and the Fryers of Greenwich. Of the number of thoſe that died for Religion in her time, there are recorded five Biſhops, one and twenty Divines, and of all ſorts of Men and Women, two hundred threeſcore and ſeventeen.

The number of thoſe that died for Religion in Queen Maries days.

Works of Piety done by her, or others, in her Time.

THis Queen reſtored a great part of Abbey-lands that were in her poſſeſſion, and if ſhe had lived longer, very likely ſhe would have reſtored more. In her firſt year, Sir Thomas White then Mayor, erected a Colledge in Oxford, now called St. Johns Colledge, before, Bernard Colledge: he alſo erected Schools at Briſtow and Reading, and gave two thouſand pounds to the City of Briſtow to purchaſe Lands, the profits whereof to be imployed for the benefit of young Clothiers for ten years, and after that to be imployed in like manner, to the benefit of two and twenty other Shires and Cities. In her third year died Sir John Greſham, late Mayor of London, who founded a a Free School at Holt in Norfolk, and gave to every Ward in London ten pounds to be diſtributed to the Poor; alſo to Maids Marriages two hundred pounds. Cutbert Tunſtal Biſhop of Durham erected a goodly Library in Cambridge, ſtoring it with many excellent both Printed and Written Books: he alſo beſtowed much upon building at Durham, at Alnewick and at Tunbridge.

St. Johns Colledge in Oxford founded.

Caſualties happening in her Time.

IN her firſt year, on the ſeven and twentieth of Auguſt, the goodlieſt Ship in England, called, The Great Harry, being of the burthen of a thouſand Tun, was burnt at Woolwich by negligence of the Mariners. In her ſecond year, on the fifteenth of Februry, appeared in the Skie a Rainbow reverſed, the bow turned downward, and the two ends ſtanding upward: Alſo two Suns ſhined at one time a good diſtance aſunder, aſunder, which were taken for ill ſigns. This year alſo in the month of Auguſt, at a place in Suffolk by the Sea ſide, all of hard ſtone and pebble, lying between the Towns of Oxford and Alborough, where never graſs grew, nor any earth was ever ſeen, there chanced ſuddenly to ſpring up without any tillage or ſowing, ſo great abundance of Peaſon, that the Poor gathered above a hundred quarters, yet there remained ſome ripe, and ſome bloſſoming, as many as were before. In her fourth year, hot burning Agues, and other ſtrange Diſeaſes took away much people: ſo as between the twentieth of October and the laſt of December, there died ſeven Aldermen, namely, Henry Heardſon, Sir Richard Dobbs late Mayor, Sir William Laxton late Mayor, Sir Henry Hobbleſtern late Mayor, Sir John Champneys late Mayor, Sir John Aleph late Mayor, and Sir John Greſham late Mayor. In her fourth year, before Harveſt, Wheat was ſold for four Marks the quarter, Malt at four and forty ſhillings the quarter, and Peaſe at ſix and forty ſhillings eight pence; where after Harveſt, Wheat was ſold for five ſhillings the quarter, Malt at ſix ſhillings eight pence, Rye at three ſhillings four pence the quarter. In the Country, Wheat was ſold for four ſhillings the quarter, Malt at four ſhillings eight pence, and in ſome places a buſhel of Rye for a pound of Candles, which was four pence. In her fifth year, within a mile of Nottingham, ſo marvellous a Tempeſt of Thunder happened, that it beat down all the Houſes and Churches in two Towns thereabouts, caſt the Bells to the outſide of the Church-yard, and ſome webs of Lead four hundred foot into the field, writhen as if it had been leather; the River of Trent running between the two Towns, the Water with the mud in the bottom was carried a quarter of a mile, and caſt againſt Trees; with the violence whereof the Trees were pulled up by the Roots, and caſt twelve ſcore off; alſo a Child was taken forth of a mans hand, and carried two Spears length high, and then let fall two hundred foot off, of which Fall it died; five or ſix men thereabouts were ſlain, and neither fleſh nor skin periſhed; alſo there fell ſome Hail-ſtones that were fifteen inches about. This year alſo in Harveſt time was a great Mortality, and eſpecially of Prieſts, ſo as many Churches were unſerved, and much corn was loſt in the field for want of Workmen; whereupon enſued a great ſcarcity, ſo that Corn was ſold for fourteen ſhillings a quarter, and Wood ſold in London for thirteen ſhillings a thouſand of Billets, and Coals ten pence a ſack. Alſo this year, on the laſt of Septem. fell ſo great ſtore of rain, that Weſtminſter Hall was full of water, and Boats were rowed over Weſtminſter Bridge into Kings Street.

Peaſe growing plentifully where never ſowed

A marvellous Tempeſt.

Of her Perſonage and Conditions.

OF her Perſonage we can make no paticular deſcription; only we may ſay, ſhe was none of the moſt amiable, but yet without deformity; but of her Conditions we may ſay, ſhe was not without deformity, and yet was very amiable. If we account her Religion a deformity, yet her conſtancy and devotion in it we muſt needs count a beauty: If it were a deformity to promiſe the Suffolk men, Not to alter the Religion which King Edward had eſtabliſhed, yet it was certainly a pious diſſembling, Cretizare cum Cretenſibus; and equivocation (will ſome ſay) was there a vertue, where ſhe deceived them into truth, and did them good againſt their wills. And as for her Siſter Elizabeth, if ſhe did not love her, it was but a quality hereditary in her; for their Mothers did not love one another before: and indeed not without ſome cauſe in both; for as thoſe upbraided each others Marriage, ſo theſe each others Birth. We ſhall not do her right, if we deny her to be of a merciful diſpoſition, ſeeing oftentimes ſhe pitied the perſon, where ſhe ſhed the bloud: She could have found in her heart to have ſpared the Lady Janes life, if Ragion di ſtato had not been againſt it; and ſhe did ſpare her Father the Duke of Suffolks life, till his ſecond offence gave her juſt provocation. The goodneſs of her nature might be ſeen in the badneſs of her fortune; who took nothing ſo much to heart, as unkindneſs of friends; the revolt of Callice, and the abſence of King Philip, being the two chief Cauſes that brought her to her end.

Of her Death and Burial.

THE Conceit of her being with child, had kept Phyſicians from looking into the ſtate of her body; ſo as her firſt diſtemper at firſt neglected, brought her by degrees into a Dropſie, to which was added a burning Fever, brought upon her by a double grief, one for the long abſence of King Philip (who had now been away a year and a half;) the other, and perhaps the greater, for the loſs of Callice; as ſhe forbore not to ſay to ſome about her, That if they looked into her Heart, being dead, they ſhould find Callice there. She began to fall ſick in September, and died at her Mannour of Saint James, the ſeventeenth of November, in the year 1558. when ſhe had Reigned five years, four months, and eleven days; Lived three and forty years. Her Body was interred in a Chappel in the Minſter of St. Peters Church at Weſtminſter, without any Monument or other Remembrance.

Men of Note in her Time.

OF Men of Valour in her time, there were many, as may be ſeen in the Story of her Reign; but to name ſome for example, there was William Herbert Earl of Pembroke, the chief aſſiſtant of King Philip in the winning of St. Quintyns; there was William Lord Gray of Wilton, Captain of Guyſnes, who though he yielded the Town, yet more out of tenderneſs to his Souldiers than out of fear of his Enemies, which he never elſe would have yielded up: and to ſpeak of one of a meaner rank, there was Sir Anthony Ager, who in defence of the Town of Callice loſt his life, but not till he made the Enemy turn their backs and flie. Of Learned men alſo there were very many, as John Rogers, born in Lancaſhire, who Tranſlated the Bible into Engliſh with Notes. Richard Moryſon Knight, born in Oxfordſhire, who wrote divers divers Treatiſes. Robert Record, a Doctor of Phyſick, who wrote a Book of Arithmetick.

Cuthbert Tunſtall Biſhop of Durham, whoſe Anceſtour was Barbour to the Conquerour.

Cuthbert Tunſtall, of a Worſhipful Family in Lancaſhire, though baſe born, whoſe Anceſtour came into England with the Conquerour as his Barbour, and therefore hath three Combs his Arms, Biſhop firſt of London, and after of Durham, who wrote divers learned Works. Richard Sampſon, Biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield, who wrote certain Treatiſes. Lucas Shepheard, born at Colcheſter in Eſſex, an Engliſh Poet. Jane Dudley, Daughter to Henry Gray Duke of Suffolk, wrote divers excellent Treatiſes. William Thomas a Welſhman, who wrote the Hiſtory of Italy, and other things. James Brooks, and John Standiſh, both of them Writers in defence of the Pope's Doctrine. William Peryn a black Fryer, who wrote in defence of the Maſs, and alſo divers Sermons. Henry Lord Stafford, Son to Edward Duke of Buckingham, who, amongſt other things which he wrote, Tranſlated a book out of Latine into Engliſh, entituled, Utrinſque Poteſtatis Differentia; which Book (as ſome think) was firſt compiled by Edward Fox Biſhop of Hereford. John Hopkins, who Tranſlated divers of Davids Pſalms into Engliſh Meeter, which are to be found amongſt thoſe appointed to be ſung in the Church.

John Hopkins Tranſlated divers of Davids Pſalms into Engliſh Meeter.

Mayors and Sheriffs of London in her Reign.

In her firſt Year,
Sir Thomas White was Mayor.
Thomas Offley, William Hewet, Sheriffs.

In her ſecond year,
Sir John Lyon was Mayor.
David Woodroffe, William Cheſter, Sheriffs.

In her third year,
Sir William Garret, or Gerrard was Mayor.
Thomas Lee, or Leigh, John Machel, Sheriffs.

In her fourth year,
Sir Thomas Offley was Mayor.
William Harper, John White, Sheriffs.

In her fifth year,
Sir Thomas Curteis was Mayor,
Richard Mallory, James Altham, Sheriffs.

In her ſixth year,

THE REIGN OF QUEEN ELIZABETH.

1558. QUEEN Mary dying on Thurſday the ſeventeenth of November, in the Year 1558. her Siſter, the Lady Elizabeth, of the age of five and twenty years, the onely ſurviving Child of King Henry the Eighth, by undoubted Right, ſucceeded her in the Crown; which happening in a time of Parliament, Nicholas Heath Archbiſhop of York, and Lord Chancellour, ſent to the Knights and Burgeſſes in the Lower Houſe, to repair immediately to the Lords of the Upper Houſe; to whom he ſignified, That Queen Mary was that Morning dead, and therefore required their Aſſents to joyn with the Lords in proclaiming Queen Elizabeth; which accordingly was done, by the ſound of Trumpet, firſt at Weſtminſter, and after in the City of London. The Queen was then at Hatfield; from whence on Wedneſday the three and twentieth of November, ſhe removed to the Lord Norths Houſe in the Charter-Houſe, where ſhe ſtayed till Munday the eight and twentieth of November, and then rode in her Chariot thorow London to the Tower; where ſhe continued till the fifth of December, and then removed to Somerſet Houſe in the Strand; from whence ſhe went to her Palace at Weſtminſter; and from thence, on the twelfth of January, to the Tower; and on the fourteenth of January, to Weſtminſter to her Coronation; where as we went, ſhe ſaid this Prayer: O Lord, Almighty and everlaſting God, I give thee moſt hearty thanks, that thou haſt ſpared me to this joyful day; and I acknowledge, that thou haſt dealt as wonderfully and as mercifully with me, as thou didſt with thy faithful Servant Daniel whom thou delivereſt out of the Denne, from the cruelty of the raging Lyons; even ſo was I overwhelmed, and onely by thee delivered: To thee therefore onely be thanks, honour and praiſe for ever. And it is incredible, what Pageants and Shews were made in the City, as ſhe paſſed.

Queen Elizabeth is Proclaimed.

On Sunday the five and twentieth of January, ſhe was Crowned in the Abbey Church at Weſtminſter, by Doctor Oglethorp Biſhop of Carlile, with all Solemnities and Ceremonies in ſuch caſe accuſtomed. At this time, to honour her Coronation, ſhe conferred more Honour, than in all her time after: William Parre degraded by Queen Mary, ſhe made Marqueſſe of Northampton; Edward Seymour, whoſe Father had been Attainted, ſhe made Earl of Hertford; Thomas Howard, ſecond Son to the Duke of Norfolk, ſhe made Viſcount Bindon; Sir Henry Carie, her Couſin German, ſhe made Baron of Hunſdon; and Sir Oliver Saint-John, ſhe made Baron of Bletſho.

She is Crowned.

Divers Lords created.

And now the Queen, though ſhe were her ſelf very wiſe, yet would not truſt (and it was a great point of Wiſdome that ſhe would not truſt) to her own wiſdome; and therefore ſhe choſe Counſellours to aſſiſt her: In which number ſhe took Nicholas Heath Archbiſhop of York; William Pawlet Marqueſs of Wincheſter Lord high Treaſurer; Henry Fitz Allen Earl of Arundell; Francis Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury; Edward Stanley Earl of Derby; William Herbert Earl of Pembrook; Edward Lord Clinton Lord Admiral; and William Lord Howard of Effingham; Sir Thomas Cheyney, Sir William Peter, Sir Richard Sackvyle, and Nicholas Wigton Dean of Canterbury; All which had been Counſellours to Queen Mary, and were of her Religion: but then to make a counterpoyſe of Counſellours of her own Religion, ſhe joyned with them William Parre Marqueſs of Northampton; Francis Ruſſel Earl of Bedford; Sir Thomas Parrey, Sir Edward Rogers, Sir Ambroſe Cave, Sir Francis Knolles, and Sir William Cecil, late Secretary to King Edward the Sixth: and a little after Sir Nicholas Bacon, whom ſhe made Keeper of the Great Seal. And having thus provided for her State at home, she seeks correspondence with Princes abroad: To the Emperour Ferdinand, she sent in Embassage Sir Thomas Chaloner: To the King of Spain in the Low-Countries, the Lord Cobham: To the Princes of Germany, Sir Henry Killigrew; Sir Armygill Waad to the Duke of Holst; and another Ambassadour to the King of Denmark. There were also Ambassadours sent to the Pope, to the State of Venice, and to the French King; with whom at this time there was a Treaty of Peace holden at Cambray, between the Kingdoms of France, England and Spain; where for England, was imployed the Earl of Arundell, Thursby, Bishop of Ely, and Doctor Wooton, Dean of Canterbury; with whom William Lord Howard of Effingham was joyned by a new Commission.

She sends Ambassadours to all Princes abroad.

As soon as King Philip heard of the death of his Wife Queen Mary, partly out of considerations of State, and partly out of affection of love, he solicited Queen Elizabeth by his Ambassadour, the Earl of Feria, to joyn in Marriage with himself; which was no more for two Sisters to have successively one Husband, than was done before, for two Brothers to have successively one wife; and for this he promised to procure a Dispensation from the Pope. To which Motion, the Queen, though she well knew, that to allow a Dispensation in this case to be sufficient, were to make her own Birth illegitimate; yet to so great a Prince, and who in her Sisters time had done her many favours, she would not return so blunt an Answer; but putting the Ambassador off for the present in modest terms: She conceived there would be no better way to take him off clean from further suit, than by bringing in an alteration of Religion; which yet she would not do all at once, and upon the sudden (as knowing the great danger of sudden changes), but by little and little, and by degrees: as at first she permitted onely Epistles and Gospels, the Ten Commandements, the Lords Prayer, and the Creed, to be read to the People in the English Tongue; in all other matters they were to follow the Roman Rite and Custome, untill order could be taken for establishing of Religion by Authority of Parliament; and a severe Proclamation was set forth, prohibiting all Points of Controversie to be medled with: By which means, she both put the Protestants in hope, and put not the Papists out of hope. Yet privately she committed the correcting of the Book of Common Prayer, set forth in the English Tongue, under King Edward the Sixth, to the care and diligence of Doctor Parker, Bill, May, Cox, Grindall, Whitehead and Pilkington, Divines of great Learning; with whom she joyned Sir Thomas Smith, a learned Knight: but the matter carried so closely, that it was not communicated to any, but to the Marquesse of Northampton, the the Earl of Bedford, and Sir William Cecill. The two and twentieth of March, the use of the Lords Supper in both kinds was by Parliament allowed: The four and twentieth of June, the Sacrifice of the Masse was abolished, and the Liturgy in the English Tongue established, though as some say, but with the difference of six Voices. In July the Oath of Supremacy was propounded to the Bishops and others: And in August, Images were removed out of Churches, and broken or burnt. By these degrees Religion was changed; and yet the Change, to the wonder of the World, bred no disturbance; which if it had been done at once, and on the sudden, would hardly, at least not without dangerous opposition, have been admitted.

King Philip solicites Queen Elizabeth for Marriage.

Whom she puts off, by bringing in an alteration of Religion. Which yet she doth by degrees.

The alteration of Religion by Parliament, by the difference only of six voices.

During this time, a Parliament had been Summoned to begin at Westminster, upon the fifteenth of January; and now the Queen, for satisfaction of the People, appointed a Conference to be held between the Prelates of the Realm, and Protestant Divines now newly returned, who had fled the Realm in the time of Queen Mary: For the Prelates, were chosen John White, Bishop of Winchester; Ralph Bayne, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield; Thomas Watson, Bishop of Lincoln; Doctor Cole, Dean of Pauls; Doctor Langdell, Arch-deacon of Lewis; Doctor Harpsefield, Arch-deacon of Canterbury; and Doctor Chadsey Arch-deacon of Middlesex. For the Protestant side were appointed Doctor Scory, Doctor Cox, Doctor Sands, Doctor Whitehead, Doctor Grindall, Master Horne, Master Guest, Master Elmer, and Master Jewell. The place was prepared in Westminster Church; where, besides the Disputants, were present the Lords of the Queens Councel, with other of the Nobility; as also many of the Lower House of Parliament. The Articles propounded against the Prelates, and their adherents, were these: First, That it is against the Word of God, and the Custome of the Ancient Church to use a Tongue unknown to the People in Common Prayer and in the Administration of the Sacrament. Secondly, That every Church hath authority to appoint and Change Ceremonies, and Ecclesiastical Rites, so they be to edification. Thirdly, That it cannot be proved by the Word of God, that there is in the Masse a Sacrifice Propitiatory for the living and the dead. For the manner of their Conference, it was agreed it should be performed in Writing; and that the Bishops should deliver their Reasons in writing first. The last of March was the first day of their meeting; where, contrary to the Order, the Bishops brought nothing in Writing; but said, they would deliver their minds onely by Speech: This breaking of Order much displeased the Lords, yet they had it granted. Then rose up Doctor Cole, and made a large Declaration concerning the first Point: when he had ended, the Lords demanded if any of them had more to say? Who answered, No. Then the Protestant Party exhibited a written Book; which was distinctly read by Master Horn. This done, some of the Bishops began to affirm, they had much more to say in the first Article: this again much displeased the Lords: yet this also was granted them, to do at their next meeting on Munday next; but when Munday came, so many other differences arose between them, that the Conference broke off, and nothing was determined. But in the Parliament there was better agreement; for there it was Enacted, That Queen Elizabeth was the lawful and undoubted Queen of England; notwithstanding a Law made by her Father King Henry the Eighth, that excluded both her and her Sister Mary from the Crown, seeing, though the Law be not repealed, yet it is a principle in Law, That the Crown once gained taketh away all defects. Also in this Parliament, First Fruits and Tenths were restored to the Crown; and the Title of Supreme Head of the Church of England was confirmed to the Queen, with so universal consent, that in the Upper House none opposed these Laws, but onely the Earl of Shrewsbury, and Sir Anthony Brown, Viscount Mountague:

home that pleaſed themſelves with hope of her Marriage: Firſt, Sir William Pickering, a Gentleman of a good Houſe, and a good Eſtate; but that moſt commended him, was his ſtudiouſneſs of Letters, and ſweet demeanor. Then Henry Earl of Arundel, exceeding rich, but now in his declining age. Then Robert Dudley, youngeſt Son of the Duke of Northumberland, of an excellent feature of face, and now in the flower of his age; but theſe might pleaſe themſelves with their own conceit, but were not conſiderable in her apprehenſion: they might receive from her good Teſtimonies of her Princely favour, but never pledges of Nuptial love.

Great offers made by the Pope to the Queen, if ſhe would become a Papiſt.

About this time the Earl of Feria (who had married the Daughter of Sir William Dormer) being denied leave of the Queen for ſome of his Wives friends to live out of England, grew ſo incenſed, that he made means to Pius the fourth, then Pope, to have her excommunicate as an Heretick and Uſurper: but the Pope inclining rather to ſave than to deſtroy; & knowing that gentle courſes prevail more with generous minds, than roughneſs and violence; in moſt loving manner wrote unto her, exhorting her to return to the Unity of the Catholick Church,; and as it is ſaid, made her great offers, if ſhe would hearken to his Counſel; particularly, That he would recall the Sentence pronounced againſt her Mothers Marriage, confirm the Book of Common-Prayer in Engliſh and permit to her People the uſe of the Sacrament in both Kinds. But Queen Elizabeth neither terrified with the Earl of Feria's practices, nor allured with the Popes great offers, according to her Motto, Semper eadem, perſiſted conſtant in her Reſolution, to mantain that Religion which in her Conſcience ſhe was perſwaded to be moſt agreeable to the Word of God, and moſt conſonant to the Primitive Church.

But ſhe perſiſted conſtant in her Religion.

John Oneal Earl of Tyrone, began to rebel.

Whileſt theſe grounds of troubles are ſowing in England, France and Scotland, it is not likely that Ireland will lye fallow; though indeed it be a Countrey that will bring forth troubles of it ſelf, without ſowing: but howſoever, to make the more plentiful Harveſt of troubles at this time, John Oneal (whoſe Father King Henry the Eighth made Earl of Tyrone) to prevent the puniſhment of a private Outrage upon a Brother, broke into open Rebellion againſt the Prince: and though his attempts were maturely made fruſtrate by timely oppoſition; yet this was he that in the beginning of the Queens Reign, ſowed the Seeds of that trouble in Ireland, which afterward, took ſo deep root, that till the ending of her Raign, it could never throughly be rooted out: though this man a year or two after came into England, and caſting himſelf at the Queens feet, acknowledged his fault, and obtained pardon.

Queen Elizabeth requires the Treaty of Edenburgh to be confirmed by the Queen Dowager. And her Anſwer.

The Treaty of Edenburgh ſhould by promiſe have been confirmed by Francis the French King while he lived; but he not having done it, Queen Elizabeth requires his Dowager, the Queen of Scots to confirm it: but ſhe ſolicited often to it by Throgmorton the Queens Leiger in France, made always anſwer, She could not do it without the Counſel of her Nobility in Scotland. Whereupon Queen Elizabeth ſuſpecting that this Anſwer was but to hold her in amazement, while ſome miſchief was practiſing againſt her, ſent Sir Thomas Randoll into Scotland, to perſwade the Lords there to enter into a League of mutual Amity with her, and other Proteſtant Princes; and further, by no means to permit their Queen, now a Widow, to marry again to any Forraign Prince; for which ſhe alledged many great Reaſons. In the mean while, the Queen of Scots, purpoſing to return into Scotland, ſent before-hand Dr. Oyſotte a French Lord, to intreat Queen Elizabeth, that with her leave, ſhe her ſelf might paſſe by Sea into Scotland, & Dr. Oyſotte might paſs by Land. But Queen Elizabeth openly denied both the one and the other, unleſſe ſhe would confirm the Treaty of Edenburgh; ſaying, It was no reaſon ſhe ſhould do the Queen of Scots courteſie, if the Queen of Scots would not do her right.

The Queen of Scots paſſeth ſafely into Scotland though laid wait for to be intercepted. She offered all obſervance to Queen Elizabeth, ſo ſhe might be declared her Succeſſor. Queen Elizabeth's Anſwer.

The Queen of Scots much troubled with this anſwer, expoſtulates the matter with her Leiger Throgmorton, and much complains of the unthankfulneſs: but in the mean time providing ſhipping ſhe looſed from Callice; and under covert of a miſt, notwithſtanding that Ships were laid to intercept her, ſhe arrived ſafe in Scotland; where ſhe intreated her Subjects in ſo loving a manner, that ſhe gave great contentment to the whole Kingdome; as well to the Proteſtant party, as the other: and then ſent Letters to Queen Elizabeth, proffering all obſervance and readineſs to enter League with her; ſo ſhe might by Authority of Parliament, be declared her Succeſſor; which was but her Right. To this Queen Elizabeth anſwered, That though ſhe would no way derogate from her Right: yet ſhe ſhould be loath to endanger her own ſecurity, and as it were to cover her own eyes with a Grave-Cloth, while ſhe was alive; but fell again to her old Admonition, requiring her to confirm the Treaty of Edenburgh: And now to ſhew the reſpect ſhe bore her, when her Unckes the Dukes D' Aumale, D' Albeuſe, and other Lords of France that had brought her home, returned through England, ſhe gave them moſt bountiful and loving entertainment.

Theſe two Queens indeed were both of great Spirits, and both very wiſe; but there grew ſuch Jealouſies of State between them; (the Queen of Scots doubting leſt Queen Elizabeth meant to fruſtrate her Succeſſion; Queen Elizabeth doubting leſt the Queen of Scots meant to prevent her Succeſſion) that it kept them more aſunder in love, then they were near in blood, and was cauſe of many unkind paſſages between them: in all which, though the Queen of Scots were a very near match to the Queen of England, in the abilities of her mind; yet in the favours of Fortune ſhe was much her inferior.

The Pope invites Queen Elizabeth to ſend her Orators to the Councel of Trent.

But now for all the courteſie which Queen Elizabeth ſhewed to the Queen of Scots Unckles, at their returning through England, yet new practices were again ſet on foot againſt her at Rome; the Duke of Guiſe eſpecially laboring to have her be Excommunicated; but Pope Pius ſtill averſe from ſuch roughneſs, meant now to try the Queen another way; and thereupon ſent the Abbot Martinengi, and when he might not be admitted to enter England, then cauſed the Biſhop of Viterbo his Nuntio in France to deal earneſtly with the Queens Leiger Throgmorton, that ſhe (as other Princes had done) would ſend her Orators to the Councel of Trent, which he before had called. But the Queen nothing tendering this point, made peremptory anſwer, That a Po-piſh Aſſembly ſhe did not acknowledge to be a General Councel; nor did think the Pope to have any more Right or Power to call it, then any other Biſhop. This anſwer not only exaſperated the Pope, but ſo alienated the King of Spain's mind from her, that he was never after ſo kind a friend to her as he had been; & none of her Embaſſadors ever after had any great liking to be imployed to him. And now at this time, as the Abbot Martinengi was the laſt Nuntio that ever was ſent from the Pope into England, ſo Sir Edward Carne, now dying at Rome, was the laſt Leiger that was ever ſent to the Pope from the Kings of England.

The Queens Anſwer.

And now Queen Elizabeth knowing well that ſhe had drawn many ill-willers againſt her State, ſhe endeavoured to ſtrengthen it by all the means ſhe could deviſe: She cauſed many great Ordinance of Braſſe and Iron to be caſt; She repaired Fortifications in the Borders of Scotland; She encreaſed the number of Ships, ſo as England never had ſuch a Navy before; She provided great ſtore of Armour and Weapons out of Germany; ſhe cauſed Muſters to be held, and youth to be trained in exerciſes of Artillery; and to pleaſe the people (whoſe love is the greateſt ſtrength of all) ſhe gave leave to have Corn & Grain tranſported, and called in all baſe Coins and Braſs Money.

All baſe moneys called in.

It was now the fifth yeer of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when divers great perſons were called in queſtion: Margaret Counteſs of Lenox, Neece to King Henry the Eighth, by his eldeſt Siſter, and her Husband the Earl of Lenox, for having had ſecret conference by Letters with the Queen of Scots, were delivered priſoners to Sir Richard Sackvile, Maſter of the Rolls, and with him kept a while in cuſtody. Alſo Arthur Poole and his Brother, whoſe great Grand-father, was George Duke of Clarence, Brother to King Edward the Fourth: Antony Forteſcue, who had married their Siſter, and others were arraigned, for conſpiring to withdraw themſeves to the Duke of Guiſe in France, and from thence to return with an Army into Wales, to declare the Queen of Scots, Queen of England; and Arthur Pool Duke of Clarence; which particulars they confeſſed at the Bar, and were thereupon condemned to die; but had their lives ſpared, in regard they were of the Blood-Royal. Alſo the Lady Katharine Gray, Daughter to Hen. Gray Duke of Suffolk by the eldeſt Daughter of Charles Brandon, having formerly been married to the Earl of Pembrooks eldeſt Son; and from him ſoon after lawfully divorced, was ſome yeers after found to be with Childe by Edward Seymour Earl of Hertford: who being at that time in France, was preſently ſent for; and being examined before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and affirming they were lawfully married, but not being able within a limited time to produce witneſſes of their marriage, they were both committed to the Tower; where ſhe was brought to bed: and after by the connivance or corruption of their Keepers, being ſuffered ſometimes to come together, ſhe was with childe by him again: which made the Queen more angry then before; ſo as Sir Edw. Warner Lieutenant of the Tower was put out of his place, and the Earl was fined in the Star-Chamber five thouſand pounds, and kept in Priſon nine years after. Though in pleading of his Caſe, one John Hales argued, They were lawful Man and Wife, by vertue of their own bare conſent, without any Eccleſiaſtical Ceremony. The Lady a few years after, falling through grief into a mortall ſickneſs, humbly deſired the Queens Pardon, for having married without her knowledge, and commending her Children to her clemency, died in the Tower.

Divers great perſons queſtioned and condemned, but had their lives ſpared.

At this time (the King being under Age) diſſentions amongſt the Peers grew hot in France, of which there were two Factions; both pretending the cauſe of Religion: Of the One, the Duke of Guiſe, a Papiſt, was Head; of the other the Prince of Conde, a Proteſtant: But while Delirant Reges, plectuntur Achivi: while theſe Princes are at variance, the people ſuffer for it; and chiefly, as being under the weaker protection, the Proteſtant party: whereupon Queen Elizabeth, having well learned the Leſſon: Tuum tua res agitur, paries cum proximus ardet; and fearing leſt the flame of their diſſention, might kindle a fire within her own Kingdome; ſent over Sir Henry Sidney, Lord Preſident of Wales, into France; to endeavour by all poſſible means their reconcilement; which when he could not effect, (and perhaps it was never meant he ſhould effect it, but only to ſee what Invitations would be made to the Queen for her aſſiſtance) ſhe thereupon, at the moan of the afflicted Proteſtants, ſent over an Army of ſix thouſand Souldiers, under the Conduct of the Earl of Warwick, in aſſiſtance of the Prince of Conde, and other Proteſtant Lords, who delivered to him the Town of Newhaven, to hold in the King of France his name untill ſuch time as Callice were reſtored: But the Prince of Conde marching to joyn with the Engliſh Forces, was by the Duke of Guiſe intercepted and taken Priſoner; which had been a great diſappointment to the Engliſh, but that the Duke of Colen joyned with him, beſieged Caen in Normandy, & took it, together with Bayeux, Faleiſe, and Saint Lo. The French Hoſtages that were pledges for the payment of five hundred thouſand Crowns, if Callice were not reſtored, were remaining ſtill in England; who perceiving there was like to be War with France, prepared ſecretly to get away; but being ready to take ſhipping, were diſcovered and brought back again.

Queen Elizabeth ſends over an Army to aſſiſt the Proteſtants in France.

In the mean while, the Prince of Conde drawn on with a hope, to marry the Queen of Scots, and to have the chief Government in France, during the Kings Minority, concluded a Peace with the King, and with the Guiſes; ſo as now, all French, as well Proteſtants as Papiſts, required to have Newhaven delivered up: But the Earl of Warwick perceiving the fickleneſs of the French Proteſtants, firſt to make ſuit to draw him into France, and now upon ſo ſlight occaſion to require him to be gone, he ſhutteth all French both Proteſtants and Papiſts, out of the Town, & lays hold of their Ships; the French on the other ſide make ready to ſet upon the Town, ſaying, They fought not now for Religion, but for their Country; wherefore it was meet that both Proteſtants and Papiſts ſhould joyn their Forces, ſeeing they had already concluded a Peace betwixt themſelves. And hereupon the Duke of Memorancy ſent a Trumpeter to the Earl of Warwick, commanding him to yield the Town: who making anſwer by Sir Hugh Pawlet, That he would never yield it without the Queens leave; he thereupon beſieged the Town, and with a great violence of Battery, ſought to get it by force: Which Montague: and in the Lower-House, only some few of Papal inclination, murmured, saying, That the Parliament was packt; and that the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Arundell, and Sir William Cecill, for their own ends, had cunningly begged Voyces, to make up their Party.

The Oath of Supremacy readily taken by all, but only some few, and who they were.

The Supremacy thus confirmed to the Queen, the Oath was soon after tendred to the Bishops and others; of whom, as many as refused to take it, were presently deprived of their Livings. And that we may see, how inclining the Kingdom at this time was to receive the Protestant Religion; it is said, that in the whole Realm (wherein are reckoned above Nine thousand Spiritual Promotions) there were no more that refused to take the Oath, but onely fourscore Parsons, fifty Prebendaries, fifteen Masters of Colledges, twelve Archdeacons, twelve Deans, six Abbots, and fourteen Bishops, (indeed all that were at that time, except Antony Bishop of Landaff) as Nicholas Heath Archbishop of York, Edmond Bonner Bishop of London, Cutbert Tunstall Bishop of Durham, Thomas Thursby Bishop of Ely, Guilbert Bourn Bishop of Bath and Wells, John Christopherson Bishop of Chichester, John White Bishop of Winchester, Thomas Watson Bishop of Lincoln, Ralph Bayne Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, Owen Ogletborp Bishop of Carlile, James Turburvile Bishop of Exeter, and David Pool Bishop of Peterborough: and with these, Dr. Fecknam Abbot of Westminster: All which were at first committed to prison, but soon after delivered to the custody of private Friends, excepting those two sawcy Prelates, Lincoln and Winchester, who threatned to excommunicate the Queen. Three onely, namely, Cutbert Scot Bishop of Chester, Richard Pate Bishop of Worcester, and Thomas Goldwell Bishop of Saint Asaph, changed their Religion of their own accord; as also did certain Noble Personages, namely, Henry Lord Morley, Sir Francis Englefield, and Sir Robert Peckham, (who had been Privy-Counsellors to Queen Mary) Sir Thomas Shelley, and Sir John Gage.

Papal Bishops removed, and Protestants placed in their rooms.

In the Sees of the Prelates removed, were placed Protestant Bishops, as Matthew Parker was made Archbishop of Canterbury, (who was consecrated by the Imposition of the hands of three that formerly had been Bishops; namely, William Barlow of Bath and Wells, John Scory of Chichester, and Miles Coverdale of Exeter) and being consecrated himself, he afterward consecrated Edmund Grindall Bishop of London, Richard Cox Bishop of Ely, Edwyn Sands Bishop of Worcester, Rowland Merick Bishop of Bangor, Thomas Young Bishop of Saint Davyes, Nicholas Bullingham Bishop of Lincoln, John Jewell Bishop of Salisbury, Richard Davis Bishop of Saint Asaph, Edward Guest Bishop of Rochester, Gilbert Barkely Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Bentham Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, William Alley Bishop of Exceter, John Parkhurst Bishop of Norwich, Robert Horn Bishop of Winchester, Richard Cheyney Bishop of Gloucester, Edmund Scambler Bishop of Peterborough, William Barlow Bishop of Chichester, John Scory Bishop of Hereford, Young Archbishop of York, James Pilkington Bishop of Durham, John Best Bishop of Carlile, and William Downham Bishop of Chester.

Whilest these things were done in England, the Treaty of Peace at Cambray continued still; wherein King Philip stood for the restitution of Callice to the English, as firmly as if it had been his own Interest; and without it, would agree to no Peace with France: But when by Messages he understood that his Suit for marriage with Queen Elizabeth was rejected; and that the Protestant Religion was established in the Kingdom, he then left Queen Elizabeth, seeing she would not be his, to himself; and though he became not presently a Foe, yet he became presently less then a Friend, and forbore to do any more good Offices in that business. Queen Elizabeth thus left to her self, agreed with the French King, to conclude her own peace apart; and thereupon, Delegates on both sides were appointed to meet at Cambray: For the Queen of England were Thursby Bishop of Ely, the Lord Williams, the Lord Howard of Effingham, Chamberlain to the Queen, and Doctor Wooton, Dean of Canterbury and York: For the King of France were, Charles Cardinal of Lorrain, the first Peer of France, Annas Duke of Memorancy, James Alton Lord of Saint Andrews, John Morvilliers Bishop of Orleance, and Claude Anbespine Secretary to the Privy Councel. The Commissioners meeting, the chief point in difference, was the restitution of Callice; for which the English Commissioners, by the Queens appointment, offered to remit two Millions of Crowns, that by just accompt were due from France to England; but the Queen was not more desirous to recover Callice, than the French King was to hold it: And thereupon at last, it was concluded, that Callice should remain in possession of the French for the term of eight years; and those expired, it should be delivered to the English, upon Forfeiture of five hundred thousand Crowns, for which, Hostages were given: But all this notwithstanding, though the Conditions were sealed and sworn to, and though Hostages were assigned to remain in England, till one or other were performed; yet all was frustrate, and came to nothing.

King Philip stood for restitution of Callice, till he understood of the alteration of Religion in England. Queen Elizabeth left to her self, sends Embassadors about Peace with France.

Where it was concluded, that Callice should be restored after eight years, but yet came to nothing.

Henry King of France unfortunately slain running at Tilt.

About this time, Henry King of France married his Daughter Isabel to Philip King of Spain, and his Sister Margaret to Emanuel Phylibert, Duke of Savoy; at the Solemnity of which Marriages, he would needs be a Tilter himself; and thereupon commanded the Earl of Montgomery to run against him, who unfortunately breaking his Lance upon the Kings Cuyrasse, a splinter thereof (his Beaver being somewhat open) struck him so deep in the Eye, that within few dayes he ended his life: After whose death, Francis his Son, at the age of sixteen years, succeeded him in the Crown, having by the Marriage of Queen Mary, the Title of Scotland, and upon ground thereof, laying claim to the Crown of England also, & giving the Arms of England, as properly belonging to him.

And now begins the game of Faction to be plaid, wherein the whole Estate of Queen Elizabeth lies at stake, a Game that will hold playing the most part of her Reign, aud if not plaid well, will put her in jeopardy of losing all, seeing all about her was against her; Philip of Spain hath a quarrel to her, for being rejected in his suit; the King of France hath a quarrel to her in right of his Wife, which is now his right; the Queen of Scots hath a quarrel to her for detaining her Inheritance; the Pope hath a quarrel to her, for excluding his Authority; the King of Sweden hath a quarrel to her, for ſlighting his Son in the way of Marriage: And all theſe being againſt her, whom hath ſhe on her ſide, but onely her own Subjects, Papiſts yeſterday, and to day Proteſtants, who being ſcarce ſetled in their Religion, how ſhall they be ſetled in their Loyalty? And not being Loyal, where can ſhe find to caſt Anchor for her ſafety? But it is a true ſaying, Nullum numen abeſt, ſi ſit prudentia; Wiſdome is a ſupply for all defects: And indeed, the Queen being very wiſe in her ſelf, and having a wiſe Council about her, ſhe paſſed all theſe difficulties, though not without danger, yet with little or no hazard.

Knox in Scotland preaches againſt the Princes Authority. The Lords of Scotland

It happened (if at leaſt it happened, and were not rather plotted of purpoſe) that a Reformation of Religion was pretended in Scotland; but was indeed an incroachment upon the Princes Authority; for at the preaching of John Knox, and other headſtrong Miniſters, not onely Images and Altars were caſt down and burnt, the Monaſteries of Saint Andrews, of Stone, of Stryveling, and of Lynlithew were overthrown; but it was further put into the heads of the Nobility, that it pertained to them, of their own Authority, to take away Idolatry, and by force reduce the Prince to the preſcript of Laws: whereupon there was preſently a bandying of the Lords of Scotland, againſt the Queen Dowager, Regent of the Country; and in this Caſe each of them ſought for aid; The Queen Dowager had aid out of France, the Lords of Scotland ſent for aid to the Queen of England: But this was matter for conſultation. It ſeemed a bad Example, for a Prince to give aid to the rebellious Subjects of another Prince; On the other ſide; It ſeemed no leſs then impiety, not to give aid to the Proteſtants of the ſame Religion; but moſt of all it ſeemed plain madneſſe, to ſuffer adverſaries to be ſo near Neighbours, and let the French neſtle in Scotland, who pretend Title to England: upon ſuch conſiderations, it was reſolved to ſend them aid: and thereupon, an Army of ſix thouſand Foot, and twelve hundred Horſe, was ſent under the Command of the Duke of Norfolk, the Lord Gray of Wilton his Lieutenant General; Sir James Crofts Aſſiſtant to him; the Lord Scroop, Lord Marſhal; Sir George Howard, General of the men at Arms; Sir Henry Piercy, General of the Light-Horſe; Thomas Huggens Provoſt Marſhall; Thomas Gower, Maſter of the Ordnance; Maſter William Pelham, Captain of the Pyoneers; and Maſter Edward Randoll, Serjeant Major, and divers others. Theſe coming into Scotland, joyned with the Scottiſh Lords, and ſet down before Leith, where paſſed many ſmall Skirmiſhes, many Batteries, and ſometimes Aſſaults: to whom, after ſome time, a new ſupply came of above two thouſand Foot; whereof were Captains, Sir Andrew Corbet, Sir Rowland Stanley, Sir Thomas Hesbith, Sir Arthur Manwaring, Sir Lawrence Smith, and others: yet with this new ſupply there was little more done then before; many light Skirmiſhes, many Batteries, and ſometimes Aſſaults, ſo long, till at laſt the young French King, finding theſe broyls of Scotland to be too furious for him to appeaſe, he ſent to the Queen of England, deſiring that Commiſſioners might be ſent to reconcile theſe differences: whereupon were diſpatched into Scotland, Sir William Cecil, her principal Secretary, with Doctor Wotton Dean of Canterbury; who concluded a Peace between England and France, upon theſe Conditions, That neither the King of France, nor the Queen of Scotland, ſhould thenceforth uſe the Arms or Titles of England or Ireland; And that both the Engliſh and the French ſhould depart out of Scotland; And a general Pardon ſhould be enacted by Parliament, for all ſuch as had been actors in thoſe ſtirs. This Peace was ſcarce concluded, when Francis the young King of France died, leaving the Crown to his younger Brother Charles, who was guided altogether by the Queen-Mother, and moleſted with the Civil diſſenſions between the Princes of Guiſe and Conde; for whoſe reconcilement, the Queen ſent Sir Henry Sidney Lord Preſident of Wales; and ſhortly after an Army, under the leading of the Lord Ambroſe Dudley, Earl of Warwick; who arriving at Newhaven, was received into the Town; which having kept eleven moneths, he was then conſtrained, by reaſon of a Peſtilence, to ſurrender again upon Compoſition, and ſo returned.

Francis King of France dieth and leaveth Mary Queen of Scots a Widow.

Newhaven taken by the Engliſh, but ſoon ſurrendred.

About this time, when the Parliament was upon diſſolving, it was agreed upon by the Houſe of Commons, to move the Queen to marry, that ſhe might have Iſſue to ſucceed her; to which purpoſe Thomas Gargrave, Speaker of the Houſe, with ſome few other choſen men, had acceſs to the Queen, who humbly made the motion to her, as a thing which the Kingdom infinitely deſired; ſeeing they could never hope to have a better Prince, than out of her Loyns: Whereunto the Queen anſwered in effect thus; That ſhe was already married; namely, To the Kingdom of England: and behold (ſaith ſhe) the Pledge of the Covenant with my Husband; and therewith ſhe held out her finger, and ſhewed the Ring, wherewith, at the time of her Coronation, ſhe gave her ſelf in Wedlock to the Kingdom: and if (ſaith ſhe) I keep my ſelf to this Husband, and take no other; yet I doubt not but God will ſend you as good Kings as if they were born of me; for as much as we ſee by daily experience, That the Iſſue of the beſt Princes do often degenerate; And for my ſelf, it ſhall be ſufficient that a Marble Stone declare, That a Queen having reigned ſuch a time, lived and died a Virgin. Indeed, before this time, many Matches had been offered her: Firſt, King Philip: and when he was out of hope of matching with her himſelf, he then dealt with the Emperour Ferdinand his Uncle, to commend his younger Son Charles, Duke of Auſtria, to her for a Husband. And when this ſucceeded not, then John Duke of Finland, ſecond Son to Guſtavus King of Sweden, was ſent by his Father, to ſolicite for his eldeſt Brother Ericus; who was honourably received, but the Match rejected. Then Adolphus Duke of Holſt, Uncle to Frederick King of Denmark came into England, upon a great hope of ſpeeding; but the Queen beſtowed upon him the Honour of the Garter, and a yearly Penſion, but not her ſelf. Then James Earl of Arran, was commended to her by the Proteſtants of Scotland; but neither the man nor the motion was accepted. Of meaner Fortunes, there were ſome at home

The Lords of Scotland ſent for aid to Queen Elizabeth.

The Queen ſends an Army to aſſiſt the Lords of Scotland.

A Peace is concluded between the King of France, and the Queen, and upon what terms.

Which Queen Elizabeth hearing, ſhe ſent a Commiſſion to the Earl of Warwick to yield it up, if upon honourable Conditions; which ſoon after was accordingly done, after the Engliſh had held it eleven moneths; and then the Earl, without any diſhonour for yielding up a Town, which the Peſtilence made him no leſs unwilling than unable to hold, returned into England: but that which was more doleful than the loſſe of Newhaven, he brought the Peſtilence with him into England. The recovery of this Town, not only made the French to triumph, but hereupon the Chancellour of France pronounced openly, That by this War, the Engliſh had loſt all their Right to Callice, and were not to require it any more, ſeeing it was one of the Conditions, that neither of the Nations ſhould make War upon the other; which was the Point ſtood upon by the King of France and his Mother, when Queen Elizabeth ſent Sir Thomas Smith to demand Callice to be reſtored.

At this time there were ſuch croſs deſigns amongſt the Princes of Chriſtendome, that a very good Polititian could hardly underſtand their aims. The Duke of Guiſe being ſlain in the Civil War, the Queen of Scots Dowry was not paid her in France, and the Scots were put off from being the Kings Guard: This exceedingly diſpleaſed the Queen of Scots: But then to pleaſe her again, and for fear leaſt hereupon ſhe ſhould apply her ſelf to the friendſhip of the Engliſh, her Uncle the Cardinal of Lorrain ſolicites her afreſh, to marry Charles Duke of Auſtria; offering her for her Dowry the County of Tyrol.

The Queen of Scots requires Queen Elizabeths adviſe about her Marriage.

The Queen of Scots, to make uſe of her Uncles fear, and perhaps to bring Queen Elizabeth into an opinion of depending upon her, acquaints her with this motion, and therein requires her advice. Queen Elizabeth not willing ſhe ſhould marry with any forrain Prince, perſwades her to take a Husband out of England, and particularly commended to her the Lord Robert Dudley, (whoſe Wife a little before had with a fall broke her neck:) promiſing withall, that if ſhe would marry him, ſhe ſhould then by Authority of Parliament be declared her Succeſſor, in Caſe ſhe died without Iſſue. But when her Uncles and the Queen-mother were informed of this motion, they ſo much diſdained the Marriage with Dudley, that ſo ſhe would refuſe that Match, and perſevere in the Friendſhip of the French, they offered to pay her the Dowry-money that was behind, and to reſtore the Scots to all their former liberties in France. And as for the King of Spain, he had indeed a Leiger Embaſſador here in England; but rather by way of Complement, and to watch advantages, than for any ſincere love; which he began to withdraw from the Engliſh, as ſuſpecting them to intend a Trade to the Weſt-Indies.

Who perſwades her to marry the Lord Robert Dudley. But this motion was ſcorned by her French Friends.

At the marriage of the Prince of Navarre was the great Maſſacre of the Proteſtants in France.

And now the French Proteſtants may ſee what they brought upon themſelves, by leaving the Engliſh at Newhaven, and by truſting to their Country-men the French Papiſts, for their peace was but a ſnare, and the Marriage of Henry of Bourbon Prince of Navarre, with Margaret of Valois, the French Kings Siſter was but a bait to entrap them; for upon the confidence of this Marriage, being drawn together into Paris, they were the readier for the ſlaughter; and a few dayes after the Marriage, which were all ſpent in Feaſts and Masks, to make them the more ſecure, upon a Watch-word given, the bloody Faction fell upon the Proteſtants, and neither ſpared age, nor ſex, nor condition, but without mercy, and ſenſe of humanity, ſlaughtered as many as they could meet with, to the number of many thouſands.

It was now the ſixth year year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, a year fatall for the death of many great Perſonages: Firſt died William Lord Gray of Wilton, Governour of Berwick, a man famous for his great Services in War: then William Lord Paget, a man of as great Services in Peace; who by his great deſervings had wrought his advancement to ſundry Dignities, and honourable places; and though zealous in the Roman Religion, yet held by Queen Elizabeth in great eſtimation to his dying day: Then Henry Mannors Earl of Rutland, deſcended by his Mother from King Edward the fourth: And laſtly, Francis the Dutcheſs of Suffolk, Daughter to Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, and Mother to Queen Jane.

Many great Perſonages die.

And now Queen Elizabeth finding how fickle the French Proteſtants had carried themſelves towards her, intended to make a Peace; and to that end ſent Sir Thomas Smith into France, joyning Throgmorton in Commiſſion with him; and in concluſion, a Peace was agreed on; whereof, amongſt other Articles, this was one, That the Hoſtages in England ſhould be freed, upon the payment of ſix hundred thouſand Crowns: and this Peace was ratified by the Oath both of the Queen of England, and the King of France.

A Peace made with the King of France, and upon what Conditions.

About this time the Engliſh Merchants were hardly uſed both in Spain, and in the Netherlands, upon pretence of Civil differences, but indeed out of hatred to the Proteſtant Religion: whereupon the Engliſh removed the Seat of their Trading to Embden in Freezland: but Guſman the Spaniſh Legier newly come into England, finding the great damages that the Netherlands ſuſtained by theſe differences, endeavoured by all means to compoſe them; and thereupon Viſcount Montague, Nicholas Wooton, and Walter Haddon Maſter of the Requeſts, were ſent to Bruges in Flanders; who after many eruptions, brought the matter at laſt to ſome indifferent agreement.

It was now the ſeventh year of Queen Elizabeth, when making a Progreſs, ſhe went to ſee Cambridge; where after ſhe had viewed the Colledges, and been entertained with Comedies and Scholaſtical Diſputations, ſhe made her ſelf a Latine Oration, to the great Encouragement of the Scholars, and then returned. Preſently after her return, ſhe made the Lord Robert Dudley Maſter of her Horſe, firſt Baron of Denbigh (giving him Denbigh and all the Lands belonging to it) and then Earl of Leiceſter to him, and the Heirs males of his Body lawfully begotten: which Honour was conferred upon him with the greateſt State and Solemnity that ever was known. And now Leiceſter, to endear himſelf to the Queen of Scots, accuſed Sir Nicholas Bacon Lord-Keeper, for being privy to the Libell of Hales, who affirmed the right of the Crown to belong to the Family of Suffolk, in caſe the Queen ſhould die without Iſſue; and thereupon was Bacon caſt into Priſon; ſon; till afterward, upon his purgation, and the mediation of Sir William Cecill, he was ſet at liberty, and reſtored to his place.

And now for a while we muſt caſt our eyes upon Scotland, for that was now the Stage where all great buſineſſes of State were acted: Matthew Steward Earl of Lenox, who had married Margaret Douglas, Kings Henry the Eighths Neece by his eldeſt Siſter, had been kept as an Exile in England now twenty years; him the Queen of Scots invites to come into Scotland, under pretence of reſtoring to him his ancient Patrimony; but indeed to confer with him about a Marriage with his Son the Lord Darley, for being reputed Heir to the Crown of England, next after her ſelf, ſhe thought by matching with his Son, to ſtrengthen her own Title, and to prevent the hope of any other. Queen Elizabeth, upon ſuit made by his Wife, gave the Earl leave to go; but ſoon after, ſuſpecting what the Queen of Scots intent was in ſending for him, ſhe, to hinder the proceeding, ſent Sir Thomas Randoll to her, to let her know, That if ſhe proceeded in this Match, ſhe would exceedingly wrong her ſelf; for that it was a Match ſo much diſliked by all the Engliſh, that ſhe was fain to prorogue the Parliament, leſt upon diſlike thereof, there ſhould ſomething be enacted againſt her Right of Succeſſion: But if ſhe would marry the Earl of Leiceſter, ſhe ſhould then by Parliament be declared her next Heir. Hereupon in the Moneth of November, the Earl of Bedford and Sir Thomas Randoll for Queen Elizabeth; the Earl of Murray and Lidington for the Queen of Scots at Barwick, entred into a Treaty concerning the Marriage with the Earl of Leiceſter. The Engliſh Commiſſioners urged the great benefits that by this Match would accrew both to the Queen of Scots her ſelf, and to the whole Kingdom of Scotland: The Scottiſh on the other ſide, urged the great diſparagement it would be to the Queen of Scots, if refuſing the offers made her of divers great Princes, ſhe ſhould match her ſelf with ſo mean a Perſon as the Earl of Leiceſter. This matter held long debate, partly for that the Engliſh Commiſſioners were ſo appointed by Queen Elizabeth; and partly for that the Scottiſh Commiſſioners had a good minde to hinder her from marrying at all; and perhaps not the leaſt, for that the Earl of Leiceſter, being verily perſwaded he ſhould at laſt obtain Queen Elizabeth her ſelf, by ſecret Letters warned the Earl of Bedford not to urge the Marriage with the Queen of Scots too far; and was thought for this cauſe to favour Darley under hand. The matter being in this manner protracted for two whole years together; the Queen of Scots impatient of longer delay, and being reſolved in her mind what ſhe would do, uſed means, that the Lord Darley got leave of Queen Elizabeth to go into Scotland for three moneths only, under colour to be put in poſſeſſion of his Fathers Lands, (though it be ſtrange, the Queen upon any terms would let him go, if ſhe really intended to hinder the marriage: but ſuch was the deſtiny, if there were not a plot in it:) and ſo in February he came to Edenburgh; who being a young man, of not above nineteen years of a age, of a comely countenance, and moſt Princely preſence, the Queen of Scots as ſoon as ſhe ſaw him, fell in love with him, yet modeſty diſſembling it for the preſent; ſhe thought to get a Diſpenſation from Rome, becauſe of their nearneſs in Conſanguinity. And now, her inclination being grown ſo apparent, that there was no concealing it, ſhe ſent Lydington to Queen Elizabeth, deſiring her conſent. But ſhe, through the ſuggeſtions of the Earl of Murray, being induced to believe that the Queen of Scots intention was, by this Marriage to get the Crown of England, and to bring in Popery, entred into conſultation with her Privy-Councel, what was fit to be done to hinder the Marriage; who all concluded, that theſe were the beſt wayes: Firſt, To have a Company of Souldiers levyed for terrour ſake about the Borders towards Scotland; then to commit to Priſon the Counteſs of Lenox, the Lord Darlies Mother; and to recall from Scotland the Earl of Lenox, and his Son Darley, upon pain of the loſſe of all their goods in England: then that the Scots who were known to be averſe from the Marriage, ſhould be relieved and aſſiſted: And laſtly, That Katherine Gray, with the Earl of Hertford, ſhould be received into ſome grace; about whom onely (it was thought) the Queen of Scots was moſt ſolicitous, as being her Rival to the Engliſh Crown. Hereupon Sir Nicholas Throgmorton was ſent to the Queen of Scots, to counſel her in the Queens name, not to proceed in this Marriage; and to ſhew her the many inconveniencies that would accrew unto her by it. But ſhe returned anſwer, That the matter was too far paſſed to be recalled; and that Queen Elizabeth had no cauſe to be diſpleaſed with it; ſeeing herein ſhe followed her advice, Not to match with a ſtranger, but with an Engliſhman born.

Queen Elizabeth being informed of her Anſwer, calleth home the Earl of Lenox and the Lord Darley his Son, commanding them upon their Allegiance to return: The Father modeſtly by Letters excuſeth himſelf; the Son humbly intreateth her not to be a hindrance to his preferment; which he vowes to imploy in her Majeſties Service, to the uttermoſt of his power.

And now, to make him the fitter match for her, the Queen of Scots honoured him firſt with Knighthood; then with the Dignities of the Lord Armanack, Earl of Roſſe, and Duke of Rothſay; which Dukedome by Birth pertaineth to the eldeſt Sons of the Kings of Scotland. After this, when he had not been above five moneths in Scotland, ſhe married him; and with the conſent of moſt of the Peers, declared him King. At this the Earl of Murray, and other whom he drew to his party, extreamly fretted, and fell to moving of turbulent queſtions, Whether it were lawful to admit a Papiſt King? Whether the Queen of Scots might chuſe a Husband at her own pleaſure? and whether the Peers of the Kingdom might not out of their own Authority impoſe one upon her? But however, they raiſed Arms, and had diſturbed the Nuptials, but that the Queen levyed an Army to encounter them; with which ſhe purſued them ſo cloſely, that they were fain to flie into England for protection; where Queen Elizabeth made no ſcruple to receive them, ſeeing the Queen of Scots had received Yareley, Standon and Walſh, that were fled out of England; but the Earl of Murray eſpecially, who had alwayes been found addicted to the Hereupon Commiſſioners are ſent to treat of this Marriage.

But the Commiſſioners cannot agree.

the Engliſh. Queen Elizabeth perhaps was not much troubled at the Marriage; partly as knowing the milde diſpoſition of the Lord Darley, and how little acceſs of ſtrength it brought to the Queen of Scots; but moſt of all, as plainly ſeeing there would troubles ariſe in Scotland upon it; and the troubles of Scotland would be the quietneſs of England; which as a good Mother of her Country, was the mark ſhe aimed at: yet ſhe made a ſhew of being offended with it; but rather to conceal her aim, than that ſhe was offended with it indeed.

Queen Elizabeth is moved again to marry Charles the Emperours Brother.

At this time the Emperour Maximilian ſent to Queen Elizabeth his Ambaſſador, Adam Smiricote, renewing the former Suit for his Brother Charles of Auſtria; for which Marriage the Earl of Suſſex was very earneſt; the Earl of Leiceſter as much againſt it: ſo as it grew to a quarrel between them, and the Court was divided into factions about it: but the Queen, who never liked the diſſenſions of her Peers (though it be a Rule with ſome, Divide and Raign) made them friends, at leaſt in countenance.

Cecill Siſter of the King of Sweden, comes into England of purpoſe to ſee the Queen.

We may now leave Scotland a while, and ſee the Honour done at this time to Queen Elizabeth, not much inferior to the Honour done to Solomon by the Queen of Sheba; for now Cecill, the Siſter of Erick King of Sweden, and Wife of Chriſtopher Marqueſſe of Baden, being great with Childe, came from the fartheſt part of the North (a long Journey) thorow Germany, of purpoſe to ſee her, for the great fame ſhe had heard of her Wiſdome: At her being here, ſhe was delivered of a Childe, to whom, in requital of her kindneſs, Queen Elizabeth was God-mother, and named him Edwardus Fortunatus; giving to her and her Husband, beſides Royal Entertainment, a yearly Penſion. At this time alſo, for the great Fame of her Wiſdom, Donald mac Carti More, a great Potentate of Ireland, came and delivered up into her hands all his moſt ample Territories; and then receiving them again from her, to hold them to him and his Heirs-males lawfully begotten; and for want of ſuch Iſſue, to remain to the Crown of England. The Queen in requital inveſted him with the honour of Earl of Glenkare, and Baron of Valence; and beſides many Preſents given him, paid the charges of his Journey.

Also Mac Carty a great Potentate of Ireland.

Anno Reg. 8. 1566.

It was now the eighth Year of Elizabeths Reign, when Sir Nicholas Arnold, a Knight of Glouceſter-ſhire, governing Ireland under the Title of a Juſtice, was called home, and Sir Henry Sidney placed in his room. And here by the way it is to be noted, That the Governours of Ireland, after it came under the Engliſh, were at firſt called Juſtices of Ireland; afterwards, Lieutenants, and their Vice-gerents were called Deputies. Afterwards at the Princes pleaſure, ſometimes Deputies, ſometimes Juſtices, and ſometimes Lieutenants; which laſt Title, though it be of greateſt honour, yet in power is in a manner but the ſame. Sir Henry Sidney at his coming into Ireland, found the Province of Munſter in much diſorder, by reaſon of ſtrife between Gyrald Earl of Deſmond, and Thomas Earl of Ormond: whereupon the Queen ſending for the Earl of Deſmond into England, ordained a new Government in that Province, appointed a Preſident to adminiſter Juſtice, together with an Aſſiſtant on the Bench; two Lawyers and a Notary: and the firſt Preſident ſhe made in this place, was Sir William Sent-leger.

Queen Elizabeth makes a Progreſs to Oxford.

And now Queen Elizabeth in a Progreſs went to Oxford; where ſhe took pleaſure in viewing the Colledges, in hearing Orations, in ſeeing of Comedies, till the Comedy of Palemon and Arcett turned into a Tragedy; for by the fall of a wall, through the multitude of people that preſſed in to ſee it, three men were ſlain. At her coming away, ſhe made an Oration in Latine to the Scholars, a ſufficient recompence for all the Orations they had made to her. And this year was a call of ſeven new Serjeants at Law, who kept their Feaſt at Grayes-Inn in Holborn.

A call of ſeven Serjeants at Law.

In a Parliament at this time, the Queen is moved again to marry.

Upon the Queens return from Oxford, the Parliament began, where they preſently fell upon the matter of ſucceſſion, and moving the Queen to marry; in which points ſome went ſo far, that they ſpared not to accuſe the Queen, as one careleſs of Poſterity; to defame Cecill with Libels and reproaches, as if he were her Counſellour in this matter; but above all, to curſe Doctor Huic, her Phyſitian, who was thought to diſſwade her from Marriage, by reaſon of I know not what womaniſh inſufficiency. At laſt in the Upper-Houſe it was agreed, That Sir Nicholas Bacon Lord Keeper, their Orator, ſhould in all their names beſeech the Queen to marry; and withall, to declare a Succeſſour in the Crown, if ſhe ſhould happen to die without Iſſue; for which he gave many Reaſons, declaring what miſchiefs were likely to befall the Kingdom, if ſhe ſhould die before a Succeſſour were deſigned. But in the Lower-Houſe there were ſome, amongſt whom were Bell and Mounſon, (two Lawyers of great account) Dutton, Sir Paul Wentworth, and others, who grew to far higher terms, diſparaging the Queens Authority, and ſaying, That Princes were bound to deſign a Succeſſour; and that in not doing it, the Queen ſhould ſhew her ſelf no better than a parricide of her Country. The Queen was contented to bear with words ſpoken in Parliament; which ſpoken out of Parliament, ſhe would never have endured: but not willing to expoſtulate the matter with the whole number, She commanded that thirty of the Higher Houſe, and as many of the Lower, ſhould appear before her, to whom She delivered her mind to this effect; That She knew what danger hangeth over a Princes Head, when a Succeſſour is once declared; She knew that even Children themſelves, out of a haſty deſire of bearing Rule, had taken up Arms againſt their own Fathers, and how could better Conditions be expected from Kindred? She had by reading obſerved, That Succeſſors in a collateral Line have ſeldome been declared; and that Lewis of Orleance, and Francis of Angouleſme, were never declared Succeſſors, and yet obtained the Crown without any noiſe.

And to declare a Succeſſor.

The Queens anſwer to their motion.

Laſtly, She ſaid, Though I have been content to let you debate the matter of Succeſſion, yet I adviſe you to beware, that you be not injurious to your Princes patience. With theſe and the like Reaſons, ſhe gave ſo great ſatisfaction, that they never after troubled her with making any more ſuch motion. And though She conſented not in plain terms to declare a Succeſſor, yet ſoon after after She gave ſome intimation of it; for one Thornton, a Reader of the Civil Law in London, who in his Lectures called the Queen of Scots Right in queſtion, was clapped up in Priſon for his labour.

In the beginning of her ninth year, Charles the 9th. King of France, ſent his Ambaſſador Ramboulet into England to the Queen, with the Robes and Ornamemts of the Order of Saint Michael, to beſtow upon which two of her Nobility ſhe pleaſed; and ſhe making choice of the Duke of Norfolk, and the Earl of Lieceſter, they were by Ramboulet inveſted with them; an Honour that had never been conferred upon any Engliſh, but onely King Henry the 8th, King Edward the 6th, and Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, though afterward proſtituted almoſt to any, without difference.

The Duke Norfolk, and the Earl of Leiceſter made Knights of the Order of Saint Michael.

And now to return to the affairs of Scotland: The nineteenth of June laſt paſt, the Queen of Scots, in a happy hour, was at Edenburgh Caſtle delivered of a Son, that was afterward James the ſixth of Scotland; and the firſt Monarch of Great Brittain; whereof She preſently ſent word to Queen Elizabeth, by James Melvyne; who thereupon ſent Sir Henry Killigrew to congratulate her ſafe deliverance, and her young Son, with all demonſtration of love and amity. But now the love of the Queen of Scots to her Husband the Lord Darley, was not ſo hot at firſt, but it was now grown to be as cold; and ſhe had not heaped honours on him ſo faſt before, but now as faſt ſhe taketh them off: for where before in publick Acts, ſhe had uſed to place her Husbands name firſt, now ſhe cauſed it to be placed laſt, and in the coyning of Money began to leave it quite out.

The Queen of Scots is delivered of a Son.

She grows cold in her love to the King.

This unkindneſs between them, was fomented by one David Rizie an Italian, whom the Queen had taken into her Service, firſt, as a Muſician, and then taking a liking to him, made him her Secretary for the French Tongue; by means whereof, he had oftentimes ſecret conference with her, when the King her Husband might not be admitted. This indignity the King himſelf being given to his pleaſures of Hunting and Hawking, reſented not ſo much, as ſome Lords that were his friends; who told him plainly, that it ſtood not with his Honour to ſuffer this fellow to live. By whoſe inſtigation, the King drawn to plot his death; one day taking with him the Earl of Reuven, and others, he ruſhed into the Queens Chamber at her Supper time, where finding David Rizie at a Cupboord, taſting ſome meat that had been taken from the Table, he ſeized upon him, dragged him forth into an outer Chamber, and there murthered him, the Queen at that time being great with Child, and like by that affright to have miſcarried: But the Fact being done, the King came in to her again, aſſuring her there was no hurt at all intended to her Perſon. The man that had animated the King to do this Fact, was eſpecially the Earl of Murray, of whom it is neceſſary to ſay ſomething, becauſe his part will be the greateſt of all the Scottiſh Actions of this time. He was the baſe Son of King James the Fifth, and ſo the baſe Brother of the Queen; made at firſt Prior of Saint Andrews: But not liking that Religious Title, he affected rather ſome Temporal Honour; which when the Queen, being then in France, denyed him, then in an angry mood he returned into Scotland, where by the advice of Knox, whom he held for a great Patriarch, he brought the matter ſo to paſs, that in an Aſſembly of the States, the Religion was altered, and the French were baniſhed out of Scotland; Yet afterward, as ſoon as the Queen was a Widow, he poſted into France, and ſo inſinuated with her, that ſhe created him Earl of Murray, and promoted him to an Honourable Marriage. Being thus exalted, he returned into Scotland; where, for the growth of his ambitious deſigns, he ſowed ſeeds of Sedition, affirming often, what a miſery it was to be under the Command of a Woman; and that Royalty was not to be tyed to any Stock or Kindred, but to Vertue onely, whether the Parties were legitimate or no: By this courſe, making way to the Kingdom for himſelf. To this end, he uſed all the means he could to keep the Queen from marrying again; which when he could not effect, he then ſought wayes how to make diſcord between her and her Husband; for which cauſe he had cauſed the King to murther Rizie. Of the foulneſs of which Fact, when the King after a while grew ſenſible, he meant to be revenged of Murray, who had counſelled him to do it: Which Murray underſtanding, prevented it with cauſing the like to be done to him, as will preſently be ſeen. For the Queen having been delivered of a Son, and the day appointed for the Chriſtning being come; where the Godfathers were Charles King of France, and Philibert Duke of Savoy; Queen Elizabeth being requeſted to be God-mother, ſent thither the Earl of Bedford as her Deputy, and a Font of Maſſie Gold for a Preſent, in value 1043 l. but gave him expreſs Command, That he ſhould not honour Darley with the Title of King. But before a moneth or two, after the Chriſtning, were paſſed, the King in a ſtormy and tempeſtuous night was ſtrangled in his Bed, and then caſt forth into the Garden, and the houſe immediately blown up with Gun-powder.

David Rizie an Italian, growes a great Favourite of the Queen of Scots.

The King ſet on by his Lords, murthers him.

The King intends to be revenged of him.

But the Earl prevents him, and the King is ſtrangled in his bed.

The rumour of this Murther being ſpread abroad, the common Fame laid it upon Murray and Morton, and their Confederates; Murray and Morton upon the Queen: But we muſt not here give ear to that which Buchanan writes, who to curry favour with the Earl of Murray, lays moſt impudent ſcandals upon the Queen; whereof, before his death, he repented himſelf extreamly. The King thus murthered, and the Queen left alone to her ſelf, ſhe is counſelled to marry with ſome that might be able to aſſiſt her againſt all her oppoſites: James Hepburn Earl of Bothwell being then greatly in her favour, and of great eminency for his valour; and though he were the man that had acted the murther, yet is he by Murray and his Confederates commended to the Queen: To which motion, as being deſtitute of friends, and not knowing whom to truſt, ſhe at laſt conſents; but upon theſe Conditions, That above all things, reſpect might be had to her young Son; and that Bothwell might be legally quitted, both from the bond of his former marriage, and alſo of the Kings murther. Hereupon a courſe is plotted, by which Bothwell is called to the Bar; and Morton being his Advocate, by the Sentence of the Judges he is clearly acquitted. Upon this he is created Duke of Orkeney, and by conſent of many of the Nobility, he is married to the Queen; which bred a ſuſpition in many, many, that the Queen was conſcious of the murther; which was the thing that by marriage they intended: And the ſuſpition once raiſed, they ſeek by all means to increaſe, that they may have the better colour againſt her; and ſo, the very ſame man who had abſolved Bothwell, and conſented to the marriage, now take Arms againſt her, as a Delinquent in both; force him to flie, and then ſeize upon the Queen, whom, clad in a very homely Garment, they thruſt into priſon in Lochlevyn, under the Cuſtody of Murray's Mother, who had been the Harlot of King James the Fifth; but boaſting her ſelf to have been his lawful Wife, and her Son his lawful Iſſue. Queen Elizabeth having at length notice hereof, ſent Sir Nicholas Throgmorton into Scotland to expoſtulate with the Confederates, touching this inſolent uſage of the Queen; and to conſult by what means ſhe might be reſtored to her Liberty. But Throgmorton coming into Scotland, found the Confederates in more inſolent terms than had been reported; being divided in Opinion, what to do with the Queen, ſome would have her baniſhed perpetually into England or France; ſome would have her queſtioned before the Judges, committed to perpetual cuſtody, and her Son proclaimed King: Others, more inhumane, who would have her at once deprived of Princely Authority, of life and all; and this Knox and ſome other Miniſters thundred out of the Pulpits. Throgmorton on the other ſide, alledged many paſſages out of the holy Scriptures, touching Obedience to the higher Powers; maintaining, That the Queen was ſubject to no Tribunal, but that in Heaven; That no Judge upon Earth might call her in queſtion; That there was no Office, nor Juriſdiction in Scotland, which was not derived from her Authority, and revokeable at her pleaſure. They again oppoſed the peculiar Right of the Kingdom of Scotland; and that in extraordinary caſes, they were to proceed beſides order: taking up Buchanans Arguments, who in thoſe days, by inſtigation of Murray, wrote that damned Dialogue, de jure Regni apud Scotos, wherein, againſt the verity of the Scottiſh Hiſtory, he endeavours to prove, That the people have power, both to create, and to depoſe their King. After all their debating, all that Throgmorton could get of them, was a Writing without any ſubſcription, wherein they proteſted, They had ſhut up the Queen for no other intent, but to keep her apart from Bothwell, whom ſhe loved ſo deſperately, that to enjoy him, ſhe regarded not all their ruines; willing himſelf to reſt ſatisfied with this Anſwer, till ſuch time as the reſt of the Peers met together. And notwithſtanding all he could ſay, they ſhut up the Queen daily in more ſtraight cuſtody, though with tears ſhe beſought them to deal more mildly with her, and to let her but once have a ſight of her Son: which would not be granted her. At laſt, when fair perſwaſions would not ſerve to make her freely give over the Kingdome, they threatned to queſtion her openly for incontinent living, for the Kings Murder, and for Tyranny, ſo as through fear of death, they compelled her, unheard, to ſet her hand to three Inſtruments: In the firſt whereof, ſhe gave over her Kingdom to her young Son, at that time ſcarce thirteen Moneths old. In the ſecond, ſhe conſtituted Murray Vice-Roy during the minority of her Son. In the third, in caſe he refuſed the Charge, theſe Governours were nominated; James Duke of Chaſteau Herald, Giles Spike Earl of Argyle, Matthew Earl of Lenox, John Earl of Atholl, James Earl of Morton, Alexander Earl of Glencarn, and John Earl of Mar. And preſently ſhe ſignified to Queen Elizabeth by Throgmorton, That ſhe had made theſe Grants by compulſion through the Counſel of Throgmorton, telling her, That a Grant extorted from one in Priſon (which is a juſt fear) is actually void, and of no effect.

The death of the King is by common fame laid upon Murray and Morton, by them upon the Queen.

Five days after the Queen had made this Reſignation, James the ſixth, the Queens Son, was Anointed and Crown'd King, John Knox preaching at the ſame time; but a Proteſtation was then put in by the Hamiltons, That all this ought to be no prejudice to the Duke of Chaſteau Herald, in his right of Succeſſion againſt the Family of Lenox; but Queen Elizabeth had forbidden Throgmorton to be at the Action, that ſhe might not ſeem by the preſence of her Embaſſadour, to approve their proceeding in diſplacing of the Queen.

Fifteen dayes after this tranſaction, Murray himſelf returned out of France into Scotland, and within three dayes went to the Queen with ſome other of the Confederates, who charged her with many Crimes, and wiſhed her if ſhe tendred her Life and Honour, to obſerve theſe Preſcriptions: Not to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdome, nor deſire to be at Liberty; Nor to ſtir up the Queen of England, or the King of France to moleſt Scotland with any War; nor to think any more of Bothwells love, or meditate Revenge upon Bothwells Adverſaries.

Murray being now proclaimed Regent of Scotland, he bindeth himſelf under his Hand and Seal to do nothing which ſhall concern War or Peace, the Kings Perſon or his Marriage, or the Liberty of the Queen, without the conſent of the Confederates; and then gives Throgmorton warning by Lydinton, not to make any further interceſſion for the Queens Liberty, for that he and the reſt had rather run any hazard than to ſuffer it. Soon after he puts to death John Hepburn, Daglaſh, and others that were Bothwells Servants, for having a hand in the Murther of the King: But they (which he little expected) when they were at the Gallows, ready to die, proteſted before God and his holy Angels, that Bothwell had told them, that Morton and Murray were the firſt Authors of the Murther. They freed the Queen from all ſuſpicion, like as Bothwell himſelf being Priſoner in Denmark, both living and dying, often proteſted with deep aſſeverations, That the Queen was innocent. And fourteen years after, Morton going to Execution, confeſſed that Bothwell dealt with him to conſent to the murther of the King; which, when he refuſed utterly, unleſs the Queen under her hand Writing would allow of it; Bothwell made anſwer, That could not be, but the fact muſt be done without her knowledge.

A little before this time, upon one and the ſame day died two of the Privy-Councel, Sir John Maſon Treaſurer of the Queens Chamber, a Grave and Learned man, but a great Uſurper and Encroacher upon Eccleſiaſtical Livings; and Sir Richard Sackvile Vice-Treaſurer of the Exchequer,

In his room succeeded Walter Mildmay, a man of Wisdom and Integrity: In Masons Office came Sir Francis Knolles, who married Katharine Carie, the Daughter of Mary Bolen, the Queens Mothers Sister.

The Marriage of Q. Elizabeth with the Emperours Brother, is again treated of; but after seven years breaks utterly off.

It was now the year 1567, and the tenth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when the Earl of Stolberg came into England from the Emperour Maximilian, to Treat of the Marriage of the Queen with the Arch-Duke Charles, upon which very occasion the Queen a little before had sent the Earl of Sussex to the Emperour, with the Order of the Garter: But in the Treaty of Marriage there fell out so many difficulties about Religion, maintenance of the Duke, about the Royal Title, and concerning Succession, that after it had been treated of seven whole years together, it came at last to nothing, and the Duke not long after married Mary Daughter to Albert the Fifth Duke of Bavaria; yet both he and the Emperour continued ever after a good correspondence with the Queen.

About this time there came from John Basil Emperour of Russia and Muscovia, Stephen Twerdico, and Theodore Pogorella, with a Present of rich Furs of Otter, Miniver, and the like, tendring all service and obsequiousness to the Queen and the English. The Merchants by vertue of a Grant from Queen Mary, had combined themselves into a Society, which they called the Muscovia Company; and having large Priviledges granted them from the Emperour, went thither with a Navy yearly, making a very gainful Voyage: but then it proved most gainful, when for the Queens sake they obtained at the Emperour's hands, in the year 1569. That none but the English of that Company should Traffique in the North-parts of Russia. With these Russian Embassadours there returned into England, Anthony Jenkinson, who in his Travels had made curious Observations of Russia, set forth a Geographical Description of it, and was the first of the English that sailed through the Caspian Sea. And this year the eighth of June, Sir Thomas Sackvile was created Baron of Buckhurst, at Whitehall.

The Muscovia Company have their Priviledges enlarged by the Emperor of Muscovia.

Sir Thomas Sackvile is created Baron of Buckhurst.

We have seen before the first Act of the Queen of Scots Tragedy: Now comes in the second, having been eleven moneths kept a Prisoner; at last, by the help of George Douglas, to whose Brother she was committed, she made escape from Loch-leyn to Hamiltons Castle; where upon the testimonies of Robert Melvyn, and others, in a meeting of a great part of the Nobility, there was drawn a sentence declaratory, That the Grant extorted from the Queen in prison, (which is Justus metus) was actually void from the beginning. Upon which Declaration, great multitudes flocked to her, so as within a day or two she had gotten an Army of at least six thousand; but when they joyned Battel with Murray, being but raw and unexpert Souldiers, they were soon defeated. In this Case the Queen sought to save her self by flight, journeying in one day threescore miles, and coming at night to the House of Maxwell Lord Heris, from thence she sent John Beton to Queen Elizabeth, with a Diamond Ring, which she had formerly received from her, as a Pledge of mutual amity; intimating, that she would come into England, and implore her aid, if her Subjects offered to prosecute her any further. Queen Elizabeth returned answer, that she should expect from her in abundant manner, all loving and friendly Offices.

The Queen of Scots after eleven moneths Imprisonment escapes, and raiseth an Army, but is defeated by Murray.

Whereupon she flies into England, and requires access to Queen Elizabeths presence.

But before the Messenger was returned, she, contrary to the advise of her friends, entred into a small Bark, and with the Lords, Heris and Flemming, and a few others landed at Wickinton in Cumberland, near the mouth of the River of Derwent, the seventeenth day of May; and the same day wrote Letters to the Queen in French with her own hand, the effect whereof was, That having made an escape from the hands of her insolent and rebellious Subjects, she was now come into England, upon certain hope of her approved clemency; and therefore humbly desiring, she might forthwith be conducted to her presence. Queen Elizabeth sending Letters by Sir Francis Knolles, comforted her, and promised her aid and defence, according to the equity of her cause; but denyed her access, for that she was held guilty of many Crimes, giving command to have her brought to Carlile, as a place of better safety. The Queen of Scots receiving this answer, and finding access to the Queen, denyed her, making request again by Letter, that she might have leave both to unfold the injuries she had received, and to answer the crimes objected, in her own presence; humbly intreating her, that either she might be admitted to have conference and assistance, or else have free leave to depart out of England, to gain supply elsewhere, and not to be held a prisoner in the Castle at Carlile; for as much as she came voluntarily into England, relying upon her love so often professed. Upon these Letters, Queen Elizabeth exceedingly commiserated her case, and could have found in her heart to admit her to her presence, but that her Counsellors conceived it to be matter for consultation, what to do in this Case. To detain her in England, had many mischiefs attending on it; to send her into France, as many; to send her back into Scotland many more; so as in conclusion, the most were of Opinion, to have her detained, as one taken by right of War, and not to be dismissed, till she had made satisfaction for assuming the Title of England, and for the death of Darly her Husband, who was born one of the Queens Subjects. In this diversity of Opinions, Queen Elizabeth out of her own Judgment, sent word by Middemore, to the Regent of Scotland, that he should come himself in person, or else depute some fit persons to answer the Complaints of the Queen of Scots against him and his Confederates, and render sufficient Reasons wherefore they had deprived her, otherwise she would forthwith dismiss her, and with all the forces she could, settle her in her Kingdome. To this Summons, Murray obeys, and comes to York, the place appointed for this Treaty, accompanied with seven more of his intimate friends, who stood Delegates for the Infant King, namely, James Earl of Morton, Adam Bishop of Orkenays, Robert of Dunferm, Patrick Lord of Lyndsey, James Mack-gilly, and Henry Badinary; and with these Lydington the Secretary, and George Buchanan. And the very same day came thither Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Ratcliff Earl of Sussex, and Sir Ralph Sacler a Privy Counsellour, appointed Com-

Queen Elizabeth promiseth her aid, but denieth access: yet commands her to be brought to Carlile.

Reasons for detaining the Queen of Scots.

Queen Elizabeth appoints Commissioners to hear the cause of the Queen of Scots.

Commiſſioners for Queen Elizabeth. For the Queen of Scots, (who took it hainouſly, that Queen Elizabeth would not hear the cauſe her ſelf, but refer her to Subjects, being an abſolute Prince, and not tyed to their proceedings) there appeared John Leſley Biſhop of Roſs, William Lord Levyngſton, Robert Lord Boyde, Comen of Kilwinnin, John Gourdon, and James Cockburn. Being met, Lydington turning himſelf to the Scots in a wondrous liberty of Speech, gave them this advice, Maturely to conſider, what prejudice they ſhould draw upon themſelves, by accuſing the Queen of Scots, and calling her Reputation in queſtion publickly before the Engliſh, profeſſed enemies of the Scottiſh Nation. Likewiſe, what account they ſhall be able to give hereof to the King, when he ſhall grow to riper years, and ſhall ſee what an injury this was to the Kingdome, his Mother, and his own Perſon. Wherefore (ſaid he) it ſeemeth requiſite to forbear this buſineſs altogether, unleſs the Queen of England will enter into a mutual league of Offence and Defence, againſt all thoſe, which under this pretence, ſhall go about to moleſt us. Upon this Speech of his, the Delegates of the Queen of Scots made Proteſtation, That although it pleaſed the Queen of Scots to have the cauſe between her and her diſloyal Subjects, debated before the Engliſh, yet ſhe being a free Prince, and obnoxious to no earthly Prince whatſoever, did not thereby yield her ſelf ſubject to the Juriſdiction and command of any perſon. On the contrary, the Engliſh proteſted, That they did in no wiſe admit that Proteſtation, in prejudice to the right which the Kings of England have anciently challenged as ſuperiour Lords of the Kingdome of Scotland. The day after, the Queen of Scots Delegates ſet forth at large the injurious dealing of Morton, Murray, Marre, Glencarn, Humes, and others againſt the Queen; and how they had compelled her, for fear of death, to reſign her Crown; which therefore (they ſaid) was of no force. Murray and his Confederates make anſwer, That they had done nothing, but by conſent of the Peers in Parliament: and that in proſecuting of Bothwell, the Author of the Kings murther, whom the Queen protected; and as for her reſignation, that it was voluntarily and freely done. All this the Queen of Scots Delegates anſwered and confuted, affirming in particular, That where there are one hundred Earls, Biſhops and Barons, (more or leſs) that have voyces in the Parliament of Scotland, there were not in that tumultuous aſſembly they ſpeak of, above four Earls, one Biſhop, an Abbot or two, and ſix Barons; wherefore their earneſt Requeſt was, that the Queen of England would be ſenſible of theſe indignities offered her; and take ſome courſe for a ſpeedy redreſs.

The Queen of Scots requires to have the French and Spaniſh Embaſſadors be added to the Commiſſioners.

After this, ſome new Commiſſioners from Queen Elizabeth were added to the former, to ſome of whom the Queen of Scots took exception; unleſs the French and Spaniſh Embaſſadors might be taken in, and her ſelf admitted into the preſence of the Queen and them, publickly to defend her own innocency; and that Murray might be detained and cited, whom ſhe affirmed, ſhe was able to prove to have been the chief Plotter of the murther of her Husband Darley. This was held to be a juſt demand by the Duke of Norfolk, the Earls of Arundel, Suſſex, Leiceſter, and the Lord Clinton. But Queen Elizabeth waxing ſomewhat angry, openly ſaid, that the Queen of Scots ſhould never want an Advocate as long as Norfolk lived: It was ſeen here, which is ſaid, that the heart of the King is inſcrutable; for how Queen Elizabeth ſtood affected in this caſe of the Queen of Scots, no man could well diſcern; ſhe deteſted the inſolency of her Subjects in depoſing her, and yet gave no aſſiſtance to reſtore her.

Murray propounds the marriage of the Queen of Scots to the Duke of Norfolk.

After long agitation of this buſineſs, and nothing concluded, Murray a little before his return into Scotland, ſlily propounded the marriage of the Queen of Scots to the Duke of Norfolk; which he with a modeſt anſwer rejected as a thing full of danger. But withall, Murray the more to alienate Queen Elizabeths mind from the Queen of Scots, gave out, that ſhe had paſſed away to the Duke of Andyn her Right to the Crown of England, and that the tranſaction was confirmed at Rome; he ſhewed Letters alſo which the Queen of Scots had written to ſome Friends whom ſhe truſted; wherein ſhe accuſed the Queen for not dealing with her according to promiſe, and boaſting of ſuccours ſhe expected from ſome others. This laſt clauſe ſomething troubled Queen Elizabeth, neither could ſhe conjecture from whence any ſuch ſuccour ſhould come; ſeeing both France with the Civil Wars, and the King of Spain in the Low-Countries had enough to do at home. But at laſt it brake out, that one Robert Ridolph a Florentine, under the habit of a Merchant in London, was ſuborned by Pope Pius the fifth, to make a ſecret commotion of the Papiſts in England againſt the Queen, which he performed indeed with a deal of ſecrecy, and much cunning; whereupon the Queen of Scots was removed from Bolton (a Caſtle of the Lord Scroops) where all the neighbouring people were Papiſts; to Tutbury more toward the heart of the Country, under the Cuſtody of George Earl of Shrewsbury.

Ridolph a Florentine, incites the Papiſts in behalf of the Queen of Scots.

The Proteſtants perſecuted in France by the Guiſes, fly into England.

About this time the Guiſes in France, and the Duke D' Alva in the Low-Countries began to endeavour the utter extirpation of the Proteſtant Religion. In France, the Miniſters of the Goſpel are commanded within a limited time to depart the Kingdom; when Queen Elizabeth forgetting the fickleneſs of the Proteſtants at Newhaven, once again takes upon her their protection, ſupplies them with two hundred thouſand Crowns in money, beſides Munition in abundance, and withall humanity receives the French that fled into England; the rather, for that they made ſolemn proteſtation, they took not up Arms againſt their Prince, but onely ſtood upon their own defence. In the Low-Countries likewiſe, the Duke D' Alva breathing nothing but ſlaughter and blood, made the Dutch come flocking into England, as into a Sanctuary, where with all courteſie they were received.

How the War in the Low-Countries firſt began.

And here it will be fit to ſhew how the War in the Low-Countries began firſt, which was thus: At which time the King of Spain brought in the Spaniſh Inquiſition; a ſmall number of the meaner ſort of people, in tumultuous manner, caſt the Images out of Churches, and brake them in pieces: and although that tumult was ſoon quieted, yet the King of Spain taking advantage at the raſh-raſhneſs of a few, to charge the whole Nation with Rebellion, ſent amongſt them Ferdinando Alvarez, Duke of D' Alva, a bloody and fierce man, who (contrary to the Ordinances and Cuſtomes of the Countrey) took away all authority from the ordinary Courts of Juſtice; erected new Conſiſtories; condemned and put to death the Peers, without tryal by their lawful Judges; placed Garriſons of Spaniards throughout all their Cities and Villages, and by force exacted the twentieth part of the Fruits of the Earth, and the tenth of the moveables upon every Alienation. At that time a mighty maſſe of money borrowed from the Genoways, and other Italian Merchants was ſent out of Spain into the Low-Countries, there to be imployed to intereſt, which being brought by Shipping, was purſued by the French; and forced to fly for ſuccour into the Havens of England, whom the Queen commanded to be ſuccour'd; as conceiving the money to be the King of Spains, as it was given out: But at the ſame time, Cardinal Odette coming out of France into England, and giving notice to the Queen, that the money was not the King of Spains, but belonged to certain Merchants of Genova, from whence the Duke D' Alva had taken it againſt their will, with a purpoſe to imploy it to the ruine of the Proteſtants; and information alſo being given her by one that had a property in the money that it was ſo; ſhe determined to put in ſecurity, and to borrow the money of the Merchants her ſelf, which is an uſual thing with Princes, when Goods are taken in their Ports; and the King of Spain himſelf had lately done the like. The Duke D' Alva being informed of this dealing of the Queens, by Gerard de Speſe, the King of Spains Embaſſador in England, ſeizeth preſently upon all the Goods of the Engliſh in the Low-Countries, and kept the men priſoners; The Queen did the like with the Dutch Merchants in England; Letters of Mart were granted on both ſides, and this grew to ſuch a quarrel between the Nations, that being nouriſhed with other differences afterward, it brought forth in Eighty Eight that Spaniſh Invaſion, which is, and will be memorable in all future Ages.

Upon occaſion of this Money detained, certain Peers of England, amongſt whom were the Duke of Norfolk, the Marqueſſe of Wincheſter, the Earls of Arundel, Northumberland, Pembroke, Leiceſter, and others, accuſed Sir William Cecill, for ſending away money into France, making this their colour, but done indeed out of envying his great favour with the Queen, and ſuſpecting him to incline to the Houſe of Suffolk in the matter of ſucceſſion. Hereupon they conſult ſecretly how to get him impriſon'd; and Throgmorton (who envyed him as much as they) ſuggeſting that if he were once clapp'd up, they might ſoon find out a way to cruſh him; But the Queen (by what means it is uncertain) coming to have notice hereof, gave a check to their purpoſe, and protected Cecill againſt their combined practiſes.

Sir William Cecill accuſed by the Duke of Norfolk and others, is protected by the Queen.

The Earl Murray being returned into Scotland, makes the Lords believe that he deſires a meeting at Edenburgh, to conſult about reſtoring the Queen to her Liberty; but as Hamilton Duke of Chaſteau Herald (appointed Vicegerent of the Kingdom by the Queen) and the Lord Heris were coming thither, he circumvented them, and before any of the reſt came, caſt them into priſon; and forthwith in an open War oppreſſeth all her Favourers. It may be thought, the Earl Murray could have been content the Queen ſhould have been ſet at liberty; but that he knew, her liberty could not be without his ſervitude; and Queen Elizabeth perhaps would willingly have had her reſtored to her Kingdom, but that ſhe doubted, ſuch reſtoring would indanger her own ſecurity: And thus, while they regarded their own ends in the firſt place, and hers but in the ſecond, ſhe had the fortune to be pitied, but not the happineſs to be relieved; and all ſhe could do her ſelf, was but to tie the knot of her bonds the faſter; if ſhe could have ſate ſtill, they would perhaps have looſened of themſelves; but now, the more ſhe ſtirred, the more ſhe was intangled.

And now the Deſtiny of the Duke of Norfolk began to work: It was in every ones mouth, that the Duke ſhould marry the Queen of Scots; and it is true, there had been motions made; but the matter not ſo forward, as the Voice of the People, which commonly preſageth what will follow. It had been motioned to the Duke at York, by the Biſhop of Roſſe; and afterward (in pretence at leaſt) by Murray himſelf at Hampton-Court; but the Duke, before he would reſolve in the matter, deliberated with the Earls of Arundell, Northumberland, Weſtmerland, Suſſex, Pembroke, Southampton, and Leiceſter himſelf, who all judged it fit, he ſhould acquaint the Queen with it firſt, and then leave the matter to her liking. Within a few dayes, Sir Nicholas Throgmorton meeting the Duke in the Palace at Weſtminſter, adviſed him, to move the Earl of Leiceſter himſelf to embrace the Match, ſeeing he had formerly ſued for it: but if he refuſed it, then at leaſt to to take him along with him, for that himſelf alone would hardly be able to procure the Queens conſent. A day or two after, the Earl of Leiceſter propounded the matter to the Duke, and then communicateth it to the Earls of Arundell and Pembroke, who thereupon, together with Throgmorton, wrote Letters to the Queen of Scots, commending the Duke of Norfolk to her for a Husband; the Duke himſelf likewiſe writeth to her, tendring his ſingular love and reſpect unto her. Upon this, Articles are drawn, written with Leiceſters own hand, and ſent to the Queen of Scots; to which if ſhe conſented, they then promiſed to procure, that Queen Elizabeth ſhould give her aſſent, and that forthwith ſhe ſhould be re-inveſted in her Kingdom, and the Succeſſion of England ſhould be confirmed upon her. We may eaſily believe, the Queen of Scots was not hardly drawn to give conſent to her own deſire; but in the mean time, the Duke had imparted to the Lord Lumley the whole proceeding, and had much ado to get the Earl of Leiceſters conſent that he might adviſe of it with ſome other of his Friends; yet a little after, he opened the matter to Cecill alſo.

The Duke of Norfolks firſt proceeding about the marriage with the Queen of Scots.

Articles between them are drawn by Leiceſter.

The rumour of this Marriage was ſoon come to the Queens Ears; which the Duke underſtanding, he dealt earneſtly with the Earl of Leiceſter, to have the matters propounded to the Queen out of hand. Leiceſter makes delayes, and pretends cauſes to put it off; which Cecill ſeeing, he adviſeth the Duke to go and acquaint the the Queen with it himſelf. This Counſel Leiceſter oppoſed, promiſing to open it to the Queen as ſhe went in Progreſs. At length, at Farnham, the Duke ſtanding by as the Queen ſate at Table, ſhe gave him a tart Admonition, That he were beſt take heed upon what Pillow he reſted his Head. After this, at Titchfield, Leiceſter fell ſick, or at leaſt counterfeited; to whom the Queen coming, and bidding him be of good chear; he with ſighs and tears craved pardon for his fault, and unfolded to her the whole ſtory from the very beginning. Whereupon, the Queen called the Duke into the Gallery, reproving him ſharply, for going about the Marriage, without acquainting her; and commanding him, upon his Allegiance, to deſiſt. The Duke made her a free and hearty promiſe of obedience, and ſpared not to ſay (as if he little regarded the Queen of Scots) that his Revenues in England were not much leſſe then hers in Scotland; and that when he was at his Houſe in Norwich, he thought himſelf in a ſort not inferiour to ſome Kings; but notwithſtanding, finding the Queens anger by her countenance, and perceiving Leiceſter to be in a manner quite alienated, and moſt of the Nobility alſo, as ſcarcely ſaluting him when they met him; he grew extremely dejected, and prepared preſently to leave the Court, meaning to ſtay at Norwich, till by his friends interceſſion, and his own ſubmiſſive Letters, the Queens heart might be mollified towards him: Mean while, the Court was ſuſpiciouſly fearful, leaſt he ſhould raiſe Rebellion, and (they ſay) it was concluded, that if he did ſo, the Queen of Scots ſhould preſently be made away. And now the Duke, who held ſecret commerce by Letters with the Biſhop of Roſſe, Throgmorton and Leiceſter (for they were ſent to and fro in bottles) being examined touching the marriage of the Queen of Scots, and certain ſecret conferences with the Biſhop of Roſſe, confeſſed moſt of the Objections, and was thereupon commited to the Tower, under the cuſtody of Sir Henry Nevill; within two dayes after the Biſhop of Roſſe likewiſe is examined, and together with the Florentine Robert Ridolph is delivered to the cuſtody of Sir Francis Walſingham, the Earl of Pembroke is confined to his houſe, and examined privately; but his confeſſion was not committed to writing: It being his Requeſt, becauſe he could not write himſelf. At this time, the rumour of Inſurrection in the North begun in Autumn before, grew very ſtrong, by reaſon of ſome frequent meetings of the Earls of Northumberland, Weſtmerland, and others, who thereupon being upon their Allegiance, ſent for to repair preſently to the Queen, make delayes (for they ſtayed waiting for ſupplies, both from the Scots, and from the Duke D' Alva) when the Earl of Northumberland doubted what to do, was frighted of purpoſe by his ſervants, telling them, that men in Arms were near at hand to apprehend him; Who thereupon in a tempeſtuous night, riſeth out of his Bed, and in great fear gets into his Park at Topcliffe, and the night following to Branſpith, to the Earl of Weſtmerlands Houſe, where a great many were met that were acquainted with the Enterpriſe: Here they brake forth in an open Rebellion, being preſſed forward by one Nicholas Morton a Romiſh Prieſt, ſent by the Pope to pronounce Queen Elizabeth an Heretick; and therefore to have utterly loſt all Right of Soveraignty: By and by they ſend forth a Writing, wherein they declare that they had taken Arms for no other end, but that the Religion of their fore-Fathers might be reſtored, wicked Counſellors removed from the Queen, the Duke of Norfolk, and others of the loyal Nobility relieved, who were now in diſgrace; but towards the Queen, profeſſing themſelves moſt dutiful Subjects; withall they ſend Letters to the Papiſts all the Kingdom over, requiring them to come to their aſſiſtance; but they were ſo far from joyning with them, that many ſent both the Letters and the Bearers of them to the Queen, and afforded their aids and purſes againſt them, no leſs then the beſt Proteſtants; even the Duke of Norfolk himſelf was not backward in it.

But coming at laſt to her knowledge, ſhe commands the Duke upon his Allegiance, to deſiſt, which he promiſeth.

He is committed to the Tower.

The Earls of Northumberland and Weſtmerland raiſe Arms in the North, and why.

Theſe Rebels go firſt to Durham, where they tear in pieces all the Bibles and Books of Common-Prayer they could find in Churches of the Engliſh Tongue: when they had been twelve days in Rebellion, they numbred their Army, and could not reckon above ſix hundred Horſe, and four thouſand Foot: whereupon being certainly informed, that the Earl of Suſſex with ſeven thouſand, and the Earl of Warwick with twelve, were ſetting out againſt them, they betook themſelves to Rabie, the chief Houſe of the Earl of Weſtmerland; going from thence, they beſieged Bernards Caſtle, which for lack of Proviſion, was yielded to them. At which time being proclaimed Traytors, and hearing a freſh of the great Forces that were coming againſt them, the two Earls with a ſmall Company get preſently into Scotland, hard by where the Earl of Northumberland hid himſelf at Harclow in a poor Cottage, amongſt the Grayhams (famous Robbers) who afterwards betrayed him to the Earl of Murray: Weſtmerland made a ſhift to get into the Low-Countries, where he had a ſlender Penſion from the King of Spain, and there lived even to old age. Of the reſt, for terror and examples ſake, there were hanged at Durham threeſcore and ſix of the chief; amongſt whom, Plomtree a noted Prieſt. At York were executed, Simon Digby, John Fulthorp, Thomas Biſhop, Robert Penyman; and at London a few monehts after, Chriſtopher and Thomas; and ſome other in other places. After this, the heads of the Rebels being convict of High-Treaſon, were proſcribed; namely, Charles Earl of Weſtmerland, Thomas Earl of Northumberland, Anne Counteſs of Northumberland, Edward Dacres of Morton, John Nevill of Leverſege, John Swinborn, Thomas Markenfield, Egremond Ratcliff, Brother to the Earl of Suſſex, Chriſtopher Nevill, Richard Norton, Chriſtopher Marmaduke, Robert and Michael Tempeſt, George Stafford, and forty others of good account. Out of the aſhes of this Rebellion, a new fire was kindled at Naworth in Cumberland by Leonard Dacres, ſecond Son to the Lord Dacres of Gylliſland; He was a Party with the Earls in their Rebellion; but they breaking forth ſooner then he expected, and he at that time being at the Court, and there admitted to kiſs the Queens hand, tendered his ſervice to go againſt them; and to that purpoſe, was ſent home; but in his Journey (branding himſelf with a double diſloyalty) he conſulted with the Rebels, and encouraged encouraged them to go on; and by vertue of Letters of Credence from the Queen, he ſurpriſed the Caſtle of Greyſtock, and other Houſes of the Dacres, and gathered together an Army of three thouſand men: But being encountred by the Baron of Hunſdon, after a great fight, wherein, though he were crook-backt, he behaved himſelf valiantly, he was put to flight, and fled into Scotland, from whence ſoon after he paſſed over the Low-Countries, and in great miſery and poverty died at Louvayn.

Queen Elizabeth aſſiſteth the Proteſtants in France.

But though the Queen were thus intangled with Rebellions at home, yet ſhe was not careleſs of the afflicted Proteſtants in France: for ſhe ſtirred up the Proteſtant Princes to defend the common Cauſe; ſupplyed them with money, taking in pawn the Queen of Navar's Jewels; and gave leave to Henry Champernon to lead into France a Troop of a hundred Horſe, Gentlemen all, and Voluntaries; amongſt whom were Philip Butſhed, Francis Barkley, and Walter Rawleigh, a very young man, who now began to look into the World. But as the Queen of England aſſiſted the French, ſo in revenge thereof, the King of France meant to aſſiſt the Scots, but that he was taken away by death.

There was at that time a Rebellion in Ireland alſo, raiſed by Edmund and Peter, Brothers to Boteler Earl of Ormond; but after many outrages by them committed, the Earl of Ormond firſt by perſwaſions, obtained of them to ſubmit themſelves; and when notwithſtanding they were committed to priſon, he then obtained of the Queen they ſhould not be called to the Bar, being exceedingly grieved that any of his Blood ſhould be attainted of Rebellion. The reſt of Rebels were purſued by Sir Humphrey Gilbert, and ſoon diſperſed.

The Earl of Murray Regent of Scotland, is murthered riding in the ſtreet.

And now the Earl of Murray, Regent of Scotland, when he had brought all things to his hearts deſire, and thought himſelf ſecure, at Lithquo, riding along the Streets, was ſhot into the belly with a Bullet, beneath the Navil, and there fell down dead. The Actor was a Hamilton, who did it upon a private revenge, for that Murray had forced him to part with a piece of Land which he had by his Wife; who thereupon falling Lunatick, he in a great rage committed this ſlaughter.

After Murray's death, the Countrey being without a Regent, was cauſe of many diſorders, Thomas Carre and Walter Scot, two principal men amongſt the Scottiſh Borders, and devoted to the Queen of Scots, made Inrodes into England, waſting all places with Fire and Sword, till by Forces ſent out of England, under the Command of the Earl of Suſſex, and the Lord Hunſdon, they were defeated: In whoſe purſuit, three hundred Villages were fired, and above fifty Holds were overturned. For which ſervice the Earl made many Knights, as Sir William Drury, Sir Thomas Mannors, Sir George Carie, Sir Robert Conſtable, and others, and then returned. And now to prevent further diſorders, the Lords of Scotland being ready to aſſemble about the election of a new Regent, they asked Counſel of Queen Elizabeth in the matter; but ſhe making anſwer ſhe would not meddle in it, becauſe ſhe would not be thought to work any thing prejudicial to the Queen of Scots, whoſe caſe was not yet tryed, they created Matthew Earl of Lenox Regent; which Queen Elizabeth did the better like, as conceiving he could not chooſe out of natural affection, but have a ſpecial care of the young King, being his Grand-child.

Matthew Earl of Lenox is made Regent in his place.

Many Princes intreat Queen Elizabeth to ſet the Queen of Scots at liberty, and her Anſwer.

But while Queen Elizabeth favoured the Kings Party in Scotland, the Earl of Huntley, the Duke of Caſtle-Herald, and the Earl of Argyle, (the Queen of Scots Lieutenants) imploy the Lord Seton to the Duke D' Alva, requiring him for many great Reaſons, to vindicate the Queen of Scots liberty, alledging how acceptable a Work it would be to all Chriſtian Princes, and to the whole Catholick Church: Whereunto the Duke made Anſwer, They ſhould find him ready to the uttermoſt of his power to ſatisfie their requeſt. At which time alſo the French King dealt earneſtly with Queen Elizabeth to the ſame purpoſe; and the Spaniſh Embaſſadour in his Maſters name urged it no leſſe extreamly: but Queen Elizabeth aſſaulted with all theſe Importunities, made anſwer, That as ſhe would omit nothing that might ſerve for the Reconciling of the Queen of Scots and her Subjects, ſo ſhe muſt have leave to provide for her own and her Subjects ſafety; a thing which Nature, Reaſon, and her own Honour required at her hands. And now when theſe Princes prevailed not with Queen Elizabeth to ſet the Queen of Scots at liberty, out comes Pope Pius Quintus with his Bull Declaratory, which he cauſed to be faſtned in the night-time upon the Gate of the Biſhop of London's Palace, wherein all her Subjects are abſolved from their Oath of Allegiance, or any other duty; and all that obey her, accurſed with Anathema. He that faſtned up the Bull was one John Felton, who never fled for the matter, but as affecting Martyrdom, ſuffered himſelf to be apprehended, confeſſed and juſtified the Fact, and thereupon arraigned, was condemned and hanged near the place where he had faſtned the Writing.

Felton that brought the Bull, hanged.

The ſame day that Felton was arraigned, the Duke of Norfolk ſeeming now extream penitent for his Fault, and utterly to abhor the Marriage, was delivered out of the Tower, and ſuffered to go to his own Houſe, but yet to be in the cuſtody of Sir Henry Nevill ſtill. Indeed Cecill being a good Friend to the Duke, had told the Queen, That the Law of 25 of Edward the Third could not take hold upon him: and now being in a kind of liberty, Cecill deals earneſtly with him to marry ſpeedily ſome other, thereby to take away all ſuſpition in that behalf; yet ſome again thought that this liberty of the Dukes was granted him on purpoſe to bring him into greater danger.

The Duke of Norfolk upon his penitence is delivered out out of the Tower, and Cecill's counſel to him.

At this time died William Herbert Earl of Pembroke, the Grand-child of an Earl of Pembroke, yet the Son but of an Eſquire, and Grandfather to Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery now living, who lieth buried in Pauls, under a fair Monument of Marble, with an Inſcription, teſtifying his great deſervings while he lived.

Many Conſpiracies to ſet the Q. of Scots at liberty.

Many Conſpiracies were at this time to ſet the Queen of Scots at liberty; amongſt others, there Conſpired Thomas and Edward Stanley, younger Sons of the Earl of Derby, with others; but the matter diſcovered, they were ſoon ſuppreſſed, and ſome of them executed. And now the Lords Lords of the Queen of Scots Party continuing to protect the Engliſh Rebels, the Earl of Suſſex once again, accompanied with the Lord Scroop, entreth Scotland, burneth the Villages all along the Valley of Anandale, and compelleth the Duke of Caſtle-Herald, and the Earls of Huntley and Argyle, under a Writing ſigned with their own Hands and Seals, to forſake the Engliſh Rebels. Whereupon the Earl of Suſſex returning home, made theſe Knights, Edward Haſtings, Francis Ruſſel, Valentine Brown, William Hilton, Robert Stapleton, Henry Carwen, and Simon Muſgrave.

Queen Elizabeths mind being now in great ſuſpenſion, by reaſon of that Bull from Rome, and the late conſpiracy in Norfolk, ſent Sir William Cecill and Sir Walter Mildmay to the Queen of Scots, who was then at Chatteſworth in Derbyſhire, to conſult with her by what means the breach in Scotland might beſt be made up, ſhe re-inveſted in her former dignity, and her Son and Queen Elizabeth might be ſecured. The Queen of Scots did little deplore her own afflicted condition, putting her ſelf wholly upon the Queens clemency: when the Commiſſioners made unto her certain Propoſitions of Agreement: Firſt, That the Treaty of Edenborough ſhould be confirmed: Then, that ſhe ſhould renounce her Right and Title to England, during Queen Elizabeths life, or any Children of her Body lawfully begotten: Then, that ſhe ſhould ſend her Son for a Hoſtage into England, with other ſix Hoſtages; ſuch as the Queen ſhould nominate: Then, that the Caſtles of Humes and Eaſt-caſtle, ſhould be held by the Engliſh for three years; with ſome other. To which Propoſitions the Queen of Scots for the preſent gave a provident anſwer; but referred the fuller Anſwer to the Biſhop of Roſs, her Ambaſſadour in England, and ſome other Delegates; who afterwards allowing ſome of the Propoſitions, and not allowing others; the Treaty came to nothing, but the matter reſted in the ſtate it was before.

Propoſitions made to the Queen of Scots, for ſetting her at liberty.

But came to nothing.

At this time Philip King of Spain had contracted a Marriage with Anne of Auſtria, Daughter to the Emperour Maximilian, his own Neece by his Siſter; who was now ſetting Sail from Zealand, towards Spain; when Queen Elizabeth, to teſtifie her love and reſpect to the Houſe of Auſtria, ſent Sir Charles Howard with the Navy-Royal, to conduct her through the Britiſh Sea.

And now was the twelfth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign finiſhed; which certain Wizards had made Papiſts believe ſhould be her laſt: but contrary, as if it were but her firſt, a new Cuſtom began, of celebrating the ſeventeenth day of November (the Anniverſary day of her Reign) with ringing of Bells, Tiltings and Bonfires: which Cuſtom, as it now began, ſo it was never given over as long as ſhe lived, and is not yet forborn ſo long after her death.

The ſeventeenth day of November began to be celebrated in honour of Queen Elizabeths coming to the Crown.

At this time in Ireland, Connagher O Brien, Earl of Thowmond, not brooking the ſevere Government of Edward Fitton, Preſident of Connaght, entred into conſultation with ſome few, to raiſe a new Rebellion; which, being at the point ready to break forth, was ſtrangely diſcovered: for the day before they meant to take up Arms, Fitton knowing not at all of the matter, ſent the Earl word in friendly manner, that the next day he and a few friends with him would be his Gueſts. The Earl convinced by his own Conſcience, imagined that his Intendments were revealed; that Fitton would come as an Enemy, rather than a Gueſt. Out of which fear, he preſently ſet ſail into France; where repenting him ſeriouſly of his fault, he confeſſed the whole buſineſs to Norris the Queens Embaſſador in France; and by his interceſſion, was afterward pardoned and reſtored.

The Earl of Thowmond intending a Rebellion, is ſtrangely diſcovered. A guilty Conſcience betrays it ſelf.

In January, the thirteenth year of her Reign, Queen Elizabeth in Royal pomp entring the City of London, went to ſee the Burſe which Sir Thomas Greſham had lately built for the uſe of the Merchants; and with ſound of Trumpets, and the voyce of a Herald, ſolemnly named it the Royal Exchange. A few dayes after, for his many great Services, ſhe made Sir William Cecill Baron Burghley.

Sir William Cecill is made Baron of Burghley.

There were now about the Scottiſh affairs, in the name of the King of Scots, the Earl of Morton, Pernare Abbot of Dumfermelin, and James Mac-Gray; whom when Queen Elizabeth required to ſhew more clearly, for what cauſes they had depoſed the Queen; they exhibited a long and tedious Commentary; wherein, with a certain inſolent liberty, they endeavoured to prove, by the ancient Right of the Kingdom of Scotland, that the people of Scotland were above the King: and urged Calvins Authority alſo, That Populat Magiſtrates are conſtituted for the moderation of the licentiouſneſs of Princes: and that it is lawful for them, both to impriſon Kings; and upon juſt cauſes, to depoſe them. This Writing the Queen could not read without indignation; but to the Delegates, ſhe gave this Anſwer; She ſaw no juſt cauſe yet, why they ſhould handle the Queen in ſuch manner; and therefore willed them to think upon ſome courſe out of hand, how to allay the diſſenſions in Scotland. Hereupon in Sir Nicholas Bacons houſe, Keeper of the Great-Seal, a Propoſition was made to the Biſhop of Roſſe, the Biſhop of Galloway, and Baron Levingſton, Delegates for the Queen of Scots, that for the ſecurity of the Kingdom, and the Queen of England; it were requiſite, that before the Queen of Scots ſhould be ſet at liberty, the Duke of Caſtle-Herald, the Earl of Huntley and Argyle, the Lords Humes, Heris, and another of the Barons ſhould be delivered for Hoſtages, and the Caſtles of Dumbriton and Humes, yelded up into the hands of the Engliſh for three years. But they made anſwer, that to yield up great Perſonages, and ſuch Fortifications as were demanded, were nothing elſe, but to leave the miſerable Queen utterly deſtitute of faithful friends, and naked of all places, fit for guard and defence: yet they offered, to give two Earls and two Barons for Hoſtages, till two years were expired: which not being accepted, they ſtraightway gathered, and ſpoke it openly; That now they plainly perceived the Engliſh meant to keep the Queen of Scots perpetually priſoner, and likewiſe to break off the Treaty; ſeeing they rigorouſly demanded ſuch ſecurity as Scotland was not able to make good. And now Queen Elizabeth ſeeing that nothing could be done for her own, the King and Queen of Scots ſafety, unleſs both Factions in Scotland conſented; ſhe held it fit that the Lords of Scotland ſhould themſelves appoint ſome choſen perſons to compound the matter.

Queen Elizabeth requireth the Scottiſh Lords, to ſhew for what cauſe they had depoſed their Queen, and what was done in it.

While matters in England proceeded in this ſort, the Queens Party in Scotland was hardly uſed: Dumbriton Fryth, the ſtrongeſt Caſtle in Scotland was taken: and J. Hamilton Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews, the Duke of Caſtle-Heralds Brother, as an acceſſary to the murther of Darley, was hanged without being arraigned according to Law. In England, the Queen of Scots had all her Servants taken from her, except ten only, and a Prieſt to ſay Maſſe: with which indignities the Queen of Scots provoked, cauſeth a large Commentary of her Counſels, with certain love Letters to the Duke of Norfolk, to be carried to the Pope, and the King of Spain, by Ridolphus; which being brought firſt to the Duke, Higford (one that waited on the Duke in his Bed-chamber) had copyed out: but being commanded to burn them, he hid them under a Mat in the Dukes Bed-chamber; and that (it ſhould ſeem) purpoſely. Ridolphus to draw on the Duke to be Head of the diſcontented Party in England, aggravated to him the wrongs he had ſuffered: how againſt all Law he had been kept a long time in priſon, and now, to his great diſgrace, was not ſummoned to the Parliament: he exhibited to him a Catalogue of ſuch of the Nobility, who had vowed to aſſiſt him: he ſhewed how the Pope (ſo the Catholick Religion might be promoted) would himſelf undergo all the charge of the War, and had already laid down an hundred thouſand Crowns; whereof himſelf had diſtributed twelve thouſand amongſt the Engliſh that were fled: he promiſed, that the King of Spain would ſend four thouſand Horſe, and ſix thouſand Foot to his Aſſiſtance; to theſe Reaſons the Biſhop of Roſſe added, that it was an eaſie matter for him to ſurpriſe the Queen; whom, when he had in his hands, he might ſet the Queen of Scots at liberty, and might eaſily obtain of Queen Elizabeth, a toleration of Religion. The former Reaſons took ſome-what with the Duke, but this point of ſurpriſing the Queen, he abhorred, as an impious Fact, and therefore rejected as pernicious and dangerous.

Ridolphus inciteth the Duke of Norfolk to take Arms againſt Queen Elizabeth, and by what Reaſons.

In France, a little before this, was the Marriage ſolemnized between Charles the Ninth King of France, and Elizabeth of Auſtria, Daughter to the Emperour Maximilian; in gratulation whereof, Queen Elizabeth ſent into France, Thomas Lord Buckhurſt, who with great magnificence was received, and perhaps the more, in regard of a motion now intended to be made: for the Lord Buckhurſt having in his retinue, one Guydo Cavalcantius, a Noble man of Florence, the Queen-mother of France, as being a Florentine her ſelf, had often conference with him, when ſhe would many times ſay, What a happineſs it would be to both the Kingdoms, if a Match were made between the Queen of England, and her Son Henry Duke of Anjou; and at laſt deſired him to commend the motion to the Queen of England, both from her, and from her Son the King of France, as a thing they both exceedingly deſired. The Lord Buckhurſt returned, having for a preſent from the King of France a Chain weighing a thouſand French Crowns; and Cavalcantius at his return made the motion to the Queen, who ſeemed not unwilling to hearken to it; for by this Match, there ſhould be added to the Kingdom of England the wealthy Dukedoms of Anjou, Burbon, Averne, and in poſſibility, the Kingdom of France it ſelf. Hereupon a Treaty was held, in which the French propounded three Articles, one concerning the Coronation of the Duke; another, concerning the Joynt Adminiſtration of the Kingdome; a third, concerning a Toleration of his Religion: to which it was anſwered, That the two firſt Articles might in ſome ſort be compoſed; but the third, ſcarce poſſibly; for though a contrary Religion might be tolerated between Subjects of the ſame Kingdome; yet between a wife and her Husband it ſeemed very incongruous and inconvenient: Yet the matter at laſt came to this concluſion, That if the Duke would afford his preſence with the Queen at Divine Service, and not refuſe to hear and learn the Doctrine of the Church of England; he ſhould not be compelled to uſe the Engliſh Rites, but at his pleaſure uſe the Roman; not being expreſly againſt the Word of God. But upon theſe Punctilios they could not accord: and ſo the Treaty, after it had continued almoſt a year, brake utterly off. It was indeed generally thought, that the Match was never really intended on either ſide, but that they both pretended it, onely for their own ends: for the Earl of Leiceſter (who knew more of the Queens mind than any man) wrote at this time to Sir Francis Walſingham, the Queens Embaſſador in France, that he found the Queens inclination ſo cold in the matter, that though the point of Religion were fully accorded; yet ſhe would find one point or other to break it off.

The Articles of the Match.

But could not be agreed; and ſo the Treaty brake utterly off.

A motion of a Match is made between Queen Elizabeth and the Duke of Anjou.

At this time the continuance of the Duke of Norfolks affection towards the Queen of Scots, came to be diſcovered by a Packet of Letters, ſent by Ridolphus to the Biſhop of Roſſe and by Bayliffs confeſsion (who brought the Letters) being ſet upon the Rack: ſo as the Biſhop of Roſſe was confined to the Iſle of Ely; Thomas Stanley, Sir Thomas Gerrard, and Rolſton, were caſt into the Tower; and Henry Howard, who had an aſpiring mind to be Archbiſhop, was committed to the Archbiſhop of Canterburies keeping. At the ſame time the Queen of Scots ſent money to her Confederates in Scotland; which being by Higford delivered to one Brown to carry, and told it was Silver, when he found by the weight that it was Gold, he began to ſuſpect ſomething; and thereupon went and delivered both the money and Letters to the Lords of the Counſel. Upon this, Higford being examined, confeſſed the whole matter; and withall gave notice of that Commentary alſo of the Queen of Scots, which is mentioned before; two dayes after, the Duke himſelf being examined, and knowing nothing what his Servants had confeſſed, denyed every particular; and thereupon was brought again to the Tower, by Ralph Sadler, Thomas Smith, Henry Nevill, and Doctor Wilſon: And after him Banneſter, who was the Dukes Counſel at Law: The Earls of Arundell and Southampton; the Lord Lumley, the Lord Cobham, Henry Percy, Lowder, Powell, Goodyer, and others, are committed to Priſon; who, upon hope of Pardon, confeſſed all they knew concerning the matter. When theſe things, and eſpecially the Commentary, which the Duke thought had been burnt, were ſhewed

The Duke of Norfolks affection to the Queen of Scots, is diſcovered to continue; and by what means.

He is committed again to the Tower.

ſhewed him, he then cryed out, I am betrayed by my own Servants; not having learned to be diſtruſtful, which is the very ſinew of Wiſdom. And then with all ſubmiſſion, he beſought the Lords to mediate for him to the Queen; towards whom, he proteſted he never had the leaſt thought of doing any hurt.

And now ſeeing it appeared, that the Biſhop of Roſſe had been the whole contriver of the buſineſs, it was deliberated what to do to him, becauſe he was an Ambaſſadour. Hereupon divers Civilians are called; as David Lewis, Valentine Dale, William Drury, William Aubrey, and Henry Jones; of whom theſe queſtions were asked:

The Civilians deliver their Opinions what may be done with an Embaſſadour, if he prove a Practicer againſt the State.

First, Whether an Ambaſſadour who raiſeth Rebellion againſt that Prince to whom he is an Ambaſſadour, may enjoy the Priviledges of an Ambaſſadour, and is not liable to Puniſhment?

They anſwered, That ſuch an Ambaſſadour hath forfeited the Priviledges of an Ambaſſadour, and is lyable to puniſhment.

Secondly, Whether the Miniſter or Proctor of a Prince, who is depoſed by publick Authority, and in whoſe room another is Inaugurated, may enjoy the Priviledges of an Ambaſſadour?

They anſwered, That if ſuch a Prince be lawfully depoſed, his Proctor cannot challenge the Priviledges of an Ambaſſadour, foraſmuch as none but abſolute Princes, and ſuch as have Right of Majeſty, can appoint Ambaſſadours.

Thirdly, Whether a Prince who is come into another Princes Countrey, and held in Cuſtody, may have his Proctor; and if he ſhall be held an Ambaſſadour?

They anſwered, If ſuch a Prince have not loſt his Soveraignty, he may have his Proctor; but whether that Proctor ſhall be reputed as an Ambaſſadour or no, this dependeth upon the Authority of his Delegation.

Fourthly, Whether if a Prince gave warning to ſuch a Proctor, and to his Prince who is under cuſtody that this Proctor ſhall not from henceforth be accounted for an Ambaſſadour; whether that Proctor may by Law challenge the Priviledge of an Ambaſſadour?

They anſwered, A Prince may forbid an Ambaſſadour to enter into his Kingdome, and may command him to depart the Kingdome, if he contain not himſelf within his due limits; yet in the mean while he is to enjoy the Priviledges of an Ambaſſadour.

What the Biſhop of Roſſe pleadeth for himſelf.

Upon theſe Anſwers, the Biſhop of Roſſe is warned by the Lords of the Councel, That he ſhall no longer be eſteemed an Ambaſſadour, but be puniſhed as his fault ſhall deſerve. The Biſhop alledged for himſelf, That he had not violated the Right of an Ambaſſadour Via Juris, but Via Facti (to uſe his own words) and therefore adviſeth them, not to uſe harder meaſure to him than was uſed to the Engliſh Ambaſſadours, Throgmorton in France, Randall and Tamworth in Scotland; who had raiſed rebellions there, and were open Abettors of the ſame; and yet had no greater puniſhment, than to be gone at a time limited. When they began to urge him what the Engliſh had teſtified againſt him, he lovingly requeſted them to give no credit to it; foraſmuch as by a received cuſtom, which hath the force of a Law, the Teſtimony of an Engliſh man againſt a Scot, or of a Scot againſt an Engliſh man, is not to be admitted: But after ſome alterations, the Biſhop is led away to the Tower, and kept cloſe Priſoner.

At this very ſeaſon, Matthew Earl of Lenex, Regent of Scotland, the Kings Grand-father, was by the adverſe party ſet upon at unawares; who having yielded himſelf to David Spenſe of Worceſter, (that was then careful to defend him) together with him, was ſlain by Bell and Caulder; when with great induſtry he had governed the Kingdome for his Grand-child about fourteen moneths. In whoſe room, John Ereskin Earl of Marre, by common conſent of the Kings Faction, was choſen Regent of Scotland; who being a man of a quiet diſpoſition, through extream grief of the many troubles he ſuſtained in the place, departed this life, when he had governed thirteen moneths.

Matthew Earl of Lenox Regent of Scotland is murthered.

In his place is ſet the Earl of Marre, who dyed within thirteen moneths.

And now a Parliament was held at Weſtminſter; wherein, beſides a Law for preventing of the treacherous endeavours of ſeditious Subjects, another Law was made, That if any one during the Queens life, by Books written or printed, ſhall expreſly affirm, That any is, or ought to be the Heir or Succeſſor of the Queen, (beſides the natural Off-ſpring of her Body) or ſhall to that purpoſe publiſh, print, or diſperſe any Book or Schedules; he, and his favourers, ſhall for the firſt offence ſuffer a years Impriſonment, and the loſs of one half of his Goods: and if they offend again, they ſhall be in a Præmunire. A Law alſo was made, by which to be reconciled to the See of Rome, was made Treaſon; and it was pronounced againſt the Queen of Scots, That if ſhe offended again againſt the Laws of England, it might be lawful to queſtion her, as the Wife of a Peer of the Kingdom of England. But here the Queen interpoſed her Authority, and would not ſuffer it to be enacted. About this time, in May, a ſolemn Tilting was performed at Weſtminſter; where the Challengers were Edward Earl of Oxford, Charles Howard, Sir Henry Lee, and Chriſtopher Hatton Eſquire; who all did very valiantly, but the Earl of Oxford beſt.

To be reconciled to the See of Rome made Treaſon.

John Story Doctor of the Laws executed for Treaſon, and why.

Aſſoon as the Parliament was diſſolved, a Conſultation was held, Whether John Story, Doctor of the Laws, the Duke D' Alva's Searcher (who ſometime before, was by a Wile brought into England) being an Engliſh man born; and having in Braband conſulted with a forain Prince about the invading of England, were to be held guilty of High-Treaſon? It was Reſolved affirmatively: whereupon he is called to the Bar, and indicted of Treaſon: That he had conſulted with one Preſhall a Conjurer, to make away the Queen: That he curſed her daily, when he ſaid Grace at Table: That he ſhewed a way to the Secretary of Duke D' Alva, how to invade England, &c. Where he affirming, that the Judges had no power to meddle with him, for that he belonged not to the Queen England, but was the King of Spains ſworn Subject; is nevertheleſs condemned by the Form of Nihil dicit (foraſmuch as no man can renounce the Countrey wherein he was born, nor abjure his Prince at his own pleaſure) and finally executed after the manner of Traytors.

Ireland at this time was indifferent quiet; for John Perrot Preſident of Munſter, had brought James Fitz Morris to ſubmit himſelf, and crave pardon. Sidney the Lord Duputy returned into England, and Sir William Fitz Williams, who had married his Siſter, ſucceeded in his room.

The Duke of Norfolk is brought to his Tryal, and condemned.

It was now the fifteenth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign; when Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk, on the ſixteenth day of January, was brought to his Tryal at Weſtminſter-Hall; where ſate as Commiſſioners, George Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury (made high Steward of England for that day) Renold Gray Earl of Kent; Thomas Ratcliff Earl of Suſſex; Henry Haſtings Earl of Huntington; Francis Ruſſel Earl of Bedford; Henry Herbert Earl of Pembroke; Edward Seymor Earl of Hertford; Ambroſe Dudley Earl of Warwick; Robert Dudley Earl of Leiceſter; Walter Devereux Viſcount of Hereford; Edward Lord Clinton, Admirall; William Lord Howard of Effingham, Chamberlain; William Cecill Lord Burley, Secretary; Arthur, Lord Gray of Wilton; James Blunt Lord Mountjoy, William Lord Sands, Thomas Lord Wentworth, William Lord Borough, Lewis Lord Mordant, John Pawlet Lord St. John of Baſing, Robert Lord Rich, Roger Lord North, Edmond Bruges Lord Chandois, Oliver Lord St. John of Bletſho, Thomas Sackvyle Lord Buckhurſt, and William Weſt Lord de la Ware. After ſilence bidden, Sir Owen Hopton, Lieutenant of the Tower, was commanded to bring the Duke to the Bar; and then the Clerk of the Crown ſaid, Thomas Duke of Norfolk, late of Keningale, in the County of Norfolk, Hold up thy hand; which done, the Clerk with a loud Voyce readeth the Crimes laid to his Charge: That in the eleventh year of the Queens Reign, he had trayterouſly conſulted to make her away, and to bring in forraign Forces for invading the Kingdom: Alſo, That he dealt with the Queen of Scots, concerning Marriage, contrary to his promiſe made to the Queen under his hand-writing: Alſo, That he relieved with money the Earls of Northumberland and Weſtmerland, that had ſtirred up Rebellion againſt the Queen: Alſo, That in the 13th. year of the Queens Reign, he implored Auxiliary Forces of Pope Pius the Fifth, the Queens profeſſed Enemy, of the King of Spain, and the Duke D' Alva, for the freeing of the Queen of Scots, and reſtoring of the Popiſh Religion: And laſtly, That he ſent ſupply to the Lord Herys, and other the Queens Enemies in Scotland.

No Councel to be allowed in caſe of Treaſon.

Theſe Indictments being read, the Clerk demanded of the Duke, if he were guilty of theſe Crimes, or not? Here the Duke requeſted he might be allowed to have Counſell. But Catiline chief Juſtice, made anſwer, That it was not lawful. Yet (ſaith the Duke) I have heard that Humphrey Stafford, in the Reign of King Henry the Seventh, in a Caſe of Treaſon, had one aſſigned to plead for him. To which Dyer chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, made anſwer, That Stafford had Councel aſſigned him concerning the Right of Sanctuary, from whence he was taken by force; but in the Indictment of Treaſon, he pleaded his own cauſe. After this, the Duke yielding to be tryed by the Peers; firſt Barham, Serjeant at Law, then Gerrard the Queens Attorney; and laſtly, Bromley, the Queens Solicitor, enforced the Crimes objected againſt him: to all which, the Duke made colourable anſwers; but moſt of them being proved by ſufficient teſtimony, he asked upon occaſion, Whether the Subjects of another Prince, who is confederate, and in league with the Queen, are to be accounted Enemies? to which Catiline anſwered, They were; and that the Queen of England might wage War with any Duke of France, and yet hold firm peace with the French King. When it grew towards night, the Lord High Steward demanded of the Duke, if he had any more to ſay for himſelf: who anſwered, I rely upon the equity of the Laws. After this, the Lords withdrawing a while, and then returning, the Lord Steward beginning at the lowermoſt, asked them, My Lord de la Ware, Is Thomas Duke of Norfolk guilty of theſe Crimes of High Treaſon, for which he is called in queſtion? He riſing up, and laying his hand upon his breſt, anſwered, Guilty: in like manner they anſwered all. After this, the Lord Steward with tears in his eyes, pronounced ſentence in form as is uſed. A few dayes after were Barnes and Mather executed, who conſpired with one Herle, to make away certain of the Counſellors, and to free the Duke; but Herle revealed the buſineſs preſently, to whom Barnes (when he ſaw his Accuſer brought forth) ſmilingly ſaid, Herle, thou wert but one hour before me, elſe I had been in thy place for the Accuſer, and thou in my room to be hanged: At the ſame time with them was hanged alſo Henry Rulf, for counterfeiting the Queens hand. But though the Duke were now condemned, yet the Queen was ſo tender of his caſe, that it was four moneths after before he was executed; at laſt, on the ſecond of June, at eight of the Clock in the morning, he was brought to the Scaffold upon Tower-Hill, and there beheaded.

The Duke is beheaded.

At this time, and upon this occaſion, a Parliament was Aſſembled, wherein amongſt other Laws, it was Enacted, That if any man ſhould go about to free any perſon impriſoned by the Queens Commandment, for Treaſon or ſuſpicion of Treaſon, and not yet Arraigned, he ſhall loſe all his Goods for his life-time; and be impriſoned during the Queens pleaſure; if the ſaid perſon having been arraigned, the Reſcuer ſhall forfeit his life; if condemned, he ſhall be guilty of Rebellion.

Walter Devereux is created Earl of Eſſex, and by what right.

In the time of this Parliament, the Queen created Walter Devereux Earl of Eſſex, being before but Viſcount Hereford; becauſe he was deſcended by his Great-grand-mother, from the Bourchiers, and made the Lord Clinton (who had large Revenues in Lincoln-ſhire) Earl of Lincoln; Alſo ſhe called forth John Pawlet of Baſing, the Marqueſſe of Wincheſters Son, Henry Compton, Henry Cheyney, and Henry Norris, for Barons by Summons.

The Lord Clinton is made Earl of Lincoln. Henry Compton, Henry Cheyney, and Henry Norris are made Barons by Summons.

Within ten dayes after the Dukes death, William Lord De la Ware, Sir Ralph Sadler, Thomas Wilſon, Doctor of the Laws, and Thomas Bromley

Queen Elizabeth ſends the Lord de la Ware, and others, to the Queen, to charge her with many Crimes, and what ſhe anſwered.

ley the Queens Solicitor, were ſent to the Queen of Scots, to expoſtulate with her, That ſhe had uſurped the Title and Arms of the Kingdom of England, and had not renounced the ſame, according to the agreement of the Treaty at Edenburgh; That ſhe had endeavoured the marriage of the Duke of Norfolk, without acquainting the Queen, and had uſed all forcible means to free him out of priſon: had raiſed the Rebellion in the North, had relieved the Rebels both in Scotland, and in the Low-Countries; had implored Aids from the Pope, the King of Spain, and others; had conſpired with certain of the Engliſh, to free her out of Priſon, and declare her Queen of England; Laſtly, That ſhe had procured the Popes Bull againſt the Queen, and ſuffered her ſelf to be publickly named the Queen of England in Forraign Countries: All which Accuſations ſhe either abſolutely denyed, or elſe fairly extenuated: and though (as ſhe ſaid) ſhe were a free Queen, and not ſubject to any Creature; yet ſhe was content, and requeſted, that ſhe might make her perſonal anſwer at the next Parliament.

How the Dutch got poſſeſſion of their Sea-Towns.

About this time, the King of Spain by his Embaſſadour here, complained to the Queen, that the Rebels of the Netherlands were harboured and entertained in England, contrary to the Articles of the League; whereupon the Queen ſet forth a ſevere Proclamation, That all the Dutch, who could any wayes be ſuſpected of Rebellion, ſhould preſently depart the Realm, which yet turned little to D' Alva's, or the King of Spain's benefit: For hereupon, Count-Vander-Mark, and other Dutch going out England, ſurpriſed the Brill firſt, then Fluſhing, and afterwards drew other Towns to revolt, and in a ſhort time excluded the Duke D' Alva in a manner from the Sea. And this errour, to ſuffer the Proteſtant Party to get poſſeſſion of the Sea-Towns, hath been the cauſe they have been able to hold out, even all this long time, againſt the King of Spain. And now many Military men having little to do at home, got them into the Netherlands, ſome to Duke D' Alva; but the far greater number to the Prince of Orange: The firſt of whom was Thomas Morgan, who carried three hundred Engliſh to Fluſhing; then followed by his procurement nine Companies more under the conduct of Humphrey Gilbert; and afterward it became the Nurſery of all our Engliſh Souldiers.

A League concluded between Queen Elizabeth and the King of France.

At this time Charles the French King ſetting his mind wholly (at leaſt ſeeming ſo) upon the Low-Country War, concluded a Peace, entred into a League with Queen Elizabeth; which was to remain firm, not onely during their two lives, but between their Succeſſors alſo, if the Succeſſor ſignifie to the Survivor within a year, that he accepteth it, otherwiſe to be at liberty. It was likewiſe agreed, what aid by Sea or Land, they ſhould each of them afford to other upon occaſion. And for ratification of this League, Edward Clinton Earl of Lincoln and Admiral of England, was ſent into France, with whom went the Lords Dacres, Rich, Talbot, Sands, and others. The French King likewiſe ſent the Duke of Memorancy and Paul Foix into England, with a great Train; that the Queen in the preſence of them, and the Embaſſador in Ordinary, might ſwear to the League, which ſhe did at Weſtminſter the ſeventeenth of May, in the year 1572. The day after ſhe made Memorancy Knight of the Garter.

Great preparation for the marriage of Henry King of Navarre with the French Kings Siſter. At which marriage was the cruel maſſacre of Proteſtants at Paris, and throughout all the Cities of France.

Memorancy whileſt he tarryed in England, made interceſſion in his Kings name, that what favour could be without danger, might be ſhewed to the Queen of Scots; and then made much ado again about the marriage with the Duke of Anjou; but being hopeleſs to make concluſion thereof, by reaſon of the diverſity of Religion, he returned into France; for now was great proviſion making ready for the marriage, between Henry King of Navarre, and the Lady Margaret the French Kings Siſter; to which Solemnity, with notable diſſimulation, the Queen of Navarre, and the chief of all the Proteſtants were allured, being born in hand, that there ſhould be a renovation of love, and a perpetual Peace eſtabliſhed. The Earl of Leiceſter likewiſe and the Lord Burleigh were invited out of England, and out of Germany, the Sons of the Prince Elector Palatine, under colour of honour, but indeed, that they might be intrapped, and they, and together with them the Proteſtant Religion, at one blow, if not clean cut off, yet receive a deadly wound. For the marriage being celebrated, there preſently followed that cruel Maſſacre at Paris, and the terrible ſlaughter of the Proteſtants throughout all the Cities of France; but to ſet a ſhew of equity upon the Fact, Edicts and Proclamations were preſently ſet forth, that the Proteſtants had plotted a wicked conſpiracy againſt the King, the Queen-Mother, the Brethren, the King of Navarre, and the Princeſs of the Blood-Royal; and to keep the thing in memory, Coyn was preſently ſtamped, upon the one ſide whereof was the Kings Picture with this Inſcription, Virtus in Rebelles, on the other ſide, Pietas excitavit juſtitiam; But the King of France, notwithſtanding all the ſhew he made of Piety, eſcaped not the Divine revenge; for before the year came about, he fell ſick of a Bloody-Flux, and afterwards with long and grievous torments ended his life.

The King of France, for this ſhedding of blood, falls himſelf into a Bloody-Flux, and in grievous torments ends his life.

A little before this, Mota Fenell, Embaſſador to the King of France, being in England, by vertue of an Order from the Queen-Mother of France, propoundeth to Queen Elizabeth at Kenel-worth (two dayes before the Maſſacre in that Kingdom) the marriage of her youngeſt Son Francis Duke of Alanſon (for the Queen-Mother had been told by ſome cunning men, that all her Sons ſhould be Kings, and ſhe knew no way for it but this.) But Queen Elizabeth, by reaſon of the diſparity of age, modeſtly excuſed her ſelf, (for he was ſcarce ſeventeen years old, and ſhe was now paſt eight and thirty) yet ſhe promiſed to conſider of it, and Alanſon did not leave to proſecute the Suit.

A motion is now made to Queen Elizabeth to marry Francis Duke of Alanſon, and her Anſwer.

At this time, Thomas Percy Earl of Northumberland, who firſt rebelled, and afterwards fled into Scotland, was for a ſum of money delivered by the Earl of Morton to the Lord Hunſdon Governour of Berwick, and a while after was beheaded at York. And now as theſe two great Perſonages, the Duke of Norfolk and the Earl of Northumberland were taken away by violent death; ſo three other great Perſonages were at this time taken away by a natural death: Firſt, William Paulet, who from a private man came by degrees degrees to be Marqueſſe of Wincheſter: lived to the age of within three years of a hundred, and could reckon a hundred and three of his Children, and his Childrens Iſſue, after he had held the place of Lord Treaſurer of England above twenty years; in whoſe room ſucceeded Sir William Cecill Lord Burleigh: Then died Edmund Earl of Darby, famous as well for his Hoſpitality and good Houſe-keeping, as for his skill in Chirurgery and Bone-ſetting; Then died Sir William Peter, who being aſcended from an honeſt ſtock at Exceſter in Devonſhire, was Privy-Counſellour and Secretary to King Henry the Eighth, King Edward the Sixth, Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth; who planted himſelf in Eſſex, where he purchaſed great poſſeſſions; whoſe Son John was by King James made Baron of Writtle in that Gountrey.

Some good acts of Queen Elizabeth.

And now Queen Elizabeth having formerly borrowed money of her Subjects, ſhe thankfully repaid it, which won her no leſs love, than if ſhe had given it; and more love ſhe gained alſo at this time by two Proclamations; by one of which, ſhe commanded Noble men to obſerve the Law of keeping retainers; by the other, ſhe reſtrained Informers, who under colour of ſpying out Crown-Land, concealed by private perſons, ſacrilegiouſly ſeized upon the Lands of Pariſh-Churches and Alms-houſes, piouſly endowed by the Queens Anceſtors. And more Love and Honour alſo ſhe gained at this time by two Acts of Juſtice; the one, that ſhe ſatisfied the Engliſh Merchants out of the goods which were detained belonging to the Dutch, and reſtored the reſt to Duke D' Alva, and made a full tranſaction with the Merchants of Genova, for the money intercepted; the other, that ſhe freed England at this time, of the debts which her Father and her Brother had run into in forraign parts, and were increaſed by yearly intereſt, and cauſed the obligations of the City of London, which had ſo often been renewed, to be given in, to the great rejoycing of the Citizens.

The Spaniſh affairs growing now very turbulent in the Netherlands, Fluſhing loſt, the Towns of Holland revolted, and the Spaniſh Navy vanquiſhed by the Zealanders, Duke D' Alva againſt his will, began to ſhew more kindneſs towards the Engliſh, ſo as in the moneth of January, the Trade which in Anno 1568. had been forbidden, was now allowed again between the Dutch and the Engliſh for two years; but thoſe two years expired, the Engliſh removed their Trading to the Confederate States.

The Earl of Worceſter ſent as Deputy for the Queen, to Chriſten the King of France's Daughter.

The laſt year in the moneth of November, a Daughter was born to the French King, to whom he requeſted Queen Elizabeth to be God-mother, who thereupon ſent William Somerſet Earl of Worceſter into France, with a Font of maſſy Gold to ſtand as her Deputy at the Chriſtning. Hereupon, and for that, the Queen promiſed to obſerve the League ſtrictly, the French King and Queen-Mother began to affect her more and more, and the Duke D' Alanſon wrote ſundry Love-letters to her, and the French King and his Mother interceding for the marriage with all earneſtneſs. It is true, the Queen conceived divers Reaſons why it was fit for her to marry; but the Courtiers for their own ends diſſwaded her as much from it: at laſt the Queen-Mother of France was wonderful importunate, that her Son Alanſon might have leave to come to ſee her: whereunto, being wearied with continual Letters and Meſſages, ſhe gave her conſent; but upon condition, that he ſhould not take it for any diſgrace to him, if he returned without obtaining his Suit: But as ſoon as Queen Elizabeth had notice, that his Brother Henry was elected King of Poland, and that the King of France was very ſick, ſhe gave intimation to Alanſon, by Edward Horſey Governour of the Iſle of Wight, that he ſhould not make too much haſte into England; but ſhould firſt procure a Peace by ſome means or other in France, and declare by ſome notable Argument, his good will towards the Proteſtants, thereby to be the more welcome Gueſt into England. Hereupon a Peace was concluded in France, and in certain places the Proteſtants were allowed to exerciſe their Religion: and then again the French King and the Queen-Mother uſed all their endeavour to have the Marriage go forward (for they were very deſirous that Alanſon who was of a crooked and perverſe diſpoſition, and prone to raiſe tumults) might be removed out of France; and withall, they requeſted of Queen Elizabeth, that if the Duke of Anjou took his Voyage into Poland by Sea; he might have publick caution to ſail through the Britiſh Ocean. To this laſt Requeſt, ſhe not onely conſented with all alacrity, but alſo made offer of a Fleet to conduct him thither. In the mean while, Alanſon fell ſick of the Meazels, which his Mother ſignified to Queen Elizabeth by Count Rhets, excuſing him thereupon for not coming into England as he had determined. The Count found the Queen at Canterbury, where ſhe gave him Royal entertainment: and Matthew Parker Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Royal entertainment to them both.

The Duke D^e Alanſon may come and ſee her, but with condition. In hope of this match the Proteſtants are better uſed in France then before.

James Douglas Earl of Morton is made Regent of Scotland, but is oppoſed by divers of the Lords.

All this while, ſince the death of the Earl of Murre, there had been no Regent in Scotland, but now by the procurement of Queen Elizabeth chiefly, James Douglas Earl of Morton is made Regent; who, when his Authority in a Parliamentary Aſſembly was eſtabliſhed, Enacted many profitable Laws for the defence of Religion againſt Papiſts and Hereticks, in the name of the King: But the protection and keeping of the Kings Perſon, he confirmed to Alexander Ereſkin Earl of Marre (to whom the cuſtody of the Kings in their tender years, by ſpecial priviledge belongeth) though he were himſelf in his Minority: Upon theſe Conditions, That no Papiſts, nor factious perſons ſhould be admitted to his preſence: An Earl ſhould come with only two Servants attending him; A Baron, with only one; All other, ſingle; and every one unarmed. The French King in the mean time, ſent his Embaſſadour Monnſier Kyrtiar to corrupt the Earls of Atholl and Huntley, with large promiſes, to oppoſe the Regent: Queen Elizabeth as much laboured to defend him: but though by the Miniſtry of Killigrew, ſhe had drawn James Hamilton Duke of Caſtle-Herald and George Gourdon Earl of Huntley, and the moſt eminent of that Faction, upon indifferent conditions, to acknowledge the Regent, yet William Kircald, Lord Graunge, (whom Murray when he was Regent had made Governour of Edenburgh Caſtle) the Lord Humes, Lydington, the Biſhop of Dunkeld,

It belongs to the Earls of Marre to have the cuſtody of the Kings perſon in his Minority.

Dunkeld, and others, would by no means admit of the Regents Government, but held that Caſtle, and fortified it in the Queen of Scots name, having Lydington for their Counſellor herein, and truſting to the natural ſtrength of the place, and to the Duke D' Alva's and the French Kings promiſes, to ſend them ſupplies both of men and money. Now when theſe perſons could by no means be drawn to accept of Conditions of Peace, and to deliver up the Caſtle to the Regent, Queen Elizabeth (who could in no caſe indure the French in Scotland) ſuffered her ſelf at length to be intreated by the Regent, to ſend Forces, Guns and Ammunition, for aſſaulting the Caſtle, upon certain Conditions, whereof one was, that ten Hoſtages ſhould be ſent into England, to be ſecurity for returning the Men and Ammunition, unleſs by the common hazard of War they ſhould chance to miſcarry. The Conditions being agreed on; William Drury Marſhal of the Garriſon at Barwick, with ſome great Ordnance, and fifteen hundred Souldiers (amongſt whom were ſome Noble Volunteers, George Carie, Henry Carie, Thomas Cecill, Henry Lee, William Knolles, Sutton, Cotton, Kelway, Will. Killigrew, and others, entred into Scotland, and beſieged the Caſtle, which after three and thirty dayes ſiege, was delivered up to the Regent for the Kings uſe, with all the perſons that were in it; amongſt whom, Kircald Lord Grange, and James his Brother, Muſman and Cook Goldſmiths (who had counterfeited Coyn in the Caſtle) were hanged; although to redeem Granges life, a hundred of the Family of the Kircalds offered themſelves to be in perpetual Servitude to the Regent, beſides an annual Penſion of three thouſand Marks; and twenty thouſand pounds of Scottiſh money in preſent; and to put in caution, that from thenceforth he ſhould continue in duty and homage to the King; but it would not be accepted. Humes and the reſt were ſpared, through Queen Elizabeths merciful interceſſion; Lydington was ſent to Leith, where he dyed, and was ſuſpected to be poyſoned: A man of the greateſt underſtanding in the Scottiſh Nation, and of an excellent wit, but very variable; for which, George Buchanan called him the Chamælion.

Queen Elizabeth ſendeth aid to the Regent of Scotland, with which he repreſſeth the adverſe Faction.

Lidington for his variable diſpoſition called the Chamælion.

And now from this time Scotland began to breath, after long Civil Wars, and as well the Captains of both Parties, as the Souldiers, betook themſelves into Swedeland, France, and the Low-Countries, where they valorouſly behaved themſelves, and won great commendation. As for John Leſley Biſhop of Roſſe, he was now ſet at liberty, but commanded to depart preſently out of England, and being beyond the Sea, he continued ſtill to ſolicite his Miſtreſs the Queen of Scots cauſe, with the Emperour, the Pope, the French King, and the German Princes of the Popiſh Religion; who all led him on with fair promiſes, but performed nothing: For indeed, he in whom he had greateſt confidence, which was the Duke of D' Alva, was at that time called away, partly out of Jealouſie of State, as being thought to grow too great, and partly out of opinion, that by his cruelty he made the people to revolt; and therefore in his place was ſent Ludovicus Zuinga, a man of great Nobility in Spain, but of a more peaceable diſpoſition than D' Alva; and now this man did all good Offices to win Queen Elizabeth to him, and minding his own affairs onely, would not intermeddle with the Scottiſh or Engliſh matters.

The Duke D' Alva is called home, and Zuinga ſent Governour in his place.

About this time, a frantick Opinion was held by one Peter Bourchet, a Gentleman of the Middle Temple, that it was lawful to kill them that oppoſed the truth of the Goſpel; & ſo far was he poſſeſt with this opinion, that he aſſaulted the famous Seaman Captain Hawkins, and wounded him with a Dagger; taking him for Hatton, who at that time was in great favour with the Queen, and of her Privy Councel, whom he had been informed to be a great Adverſary to Innovations. The Queen grew ſo angry hereat, that She commanded Martial Law ſhould be executed upon him preſently, till her Councel adviſed her, that Martial Law was not to be uſed, but in the Field, and in turbulent times; but at home, and in time of Peace, there muſt be legall proceedings: Hereupon Bourchet was ſent to the Tower, where taking a brand out of the fire, he ſtuck it into the brains of one of his Keepers, named Hugh Longworth, and killed him; for which fact, he was condemned of murther, had his right hand cut off, and nailed to the Gallows, and then himſelf hanged.

A frantick opinion of Peter Bourchet.

After the violent death of this Varlet, we may ſpeak of the natural death of two great perſons: Firſt, William Lord Howard of Effingham, Son of that Warlike Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk, by his ſecond Wife Agnes Tilney. This William was made a Baron by Queen Mary, and Lord High Admiral of England, and by Queen Elizabeth Lord Chamberlain, till ſuch time, that being taken with age, he yielded up that place to the Earl of Suſſex, and was then made Keeper of the Privy Seal, which is the fourth degree of Honour in England. His Son Charles ſucceeded him in the Dignity of his Barony, who was after made Lord Chamberlain to the Queen, and then Lord High Admiral of England. A while after him dyed Reginald Gray Earl of Kent, whom the Queen a year before of a private man had made Earl of Kent, when as that Title, from the death of Richard Gray Earl of Kent, who had waſted his Patrimony, and was elder Brother to this mans Grand-Father, had lien aſleep for fifty years together.

The Keeper of the Privy Seal, the fourth degree of Honour in England.

Reginald Gray of a private man made Earl of Kent.

At this time many particular Rebellions were in Ireland; The O-Conors and O-Moors took Arms, and committed many outrages: In Munſter James Fitz-Morris, and Fitz-Edmund did the like; but by the induſtry of Sir John Perrot, Preſident of Munſter, were ſuppreſſed. In Ulſter, Bryan Mac Philym burnt Knockfergus, and many other joyned in Rebellion with him. Againſt theſe, Walter Devereux (whom the Queen had lately created Earl of Eſſex) deſired leave to go; which Sir William Fitz-Williams Deputy of Ireland oppoſed, as fearing that the glory of ſo great an Earl would eclipſe his light. But for this, the Queen finds a remedy, by appointing Eſſex to take a Patent of the Deputy, whereby to be made Governour of Ulſter. But this remedy for Fitz-Williams might have made a ſore in the mind of Eſſex (to receive his Authority from his inferiour) but that the Nobleneſs of his mind made him more to regard the Vertue, than the Glory. And ſo, in the end of Auguſt, he landed at Knockfergus, having with him the Lords Darcy and Rich, and Sir Henry Knolles and his his four Brothers, Michael and John Carves, Henry, William, and John Norrises: At his landing Bryan Mac Phelym welcomed him, tendering unto him all manner of dutifulness and service; but presently after falls from him, and joyns with Turlogh Leynigh. After this revolt, the Earl of Essex finding many difficulties in the business, and himself not well provided of skilful Souldiers, makes suit to the Queen for leave to come home; which the Earl of Leicester (who liked his room better than his company) opposed; till after expence of a years time, and much treasure, he at last obtained leave, and returned home.

An. Reg. 17. The Duke of Alanson continues his suit to Queen Elizabeth.

The next Year, being 1574, and the 17th. year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, the Duke of Alanson grew more importunate in his Suit, than at any time before; so he obtained of the Queen to come into England, any time before the twentieth of May; and this she the rather did, because she perceived him now to be really bent against the Guyses her sworn Enemies. But before this Answer was brought him, Valentine Dale Doctor of the Civil Law, the Queens Embassadour in France, gave intimation to the Queen, That Alanson and Navarre were in restraint, and committed to Keepers: For the Guyses had suggested, that Alanson held intimate friendship with Admiral Colen, the chief Leader of the Protestants in France; and indeed, Alanson being examined, freely confessed, that he had now for a good while desired the marriage of the Queen of England, and conceiving that good correspondence with Colen might be useful to him to that end, he had thereupon had conference with him thereabout, and concerning the Low-Country War. In the mean time Thomas Wilkes, Dales Secretary, got cunningly to Alanson, and in the Queens name, made promise both to him, and to Navarre, that she would omit no opportunity of procuring their inlargement. For which, the subtile Queen-Mother so complained of him to Queen Elizabeth, that he was fain to go into France, and there to crave pardon for his fault. But Navarre, not unmindful of this kindness in Wilkes, when above five and twenty years after, being King of France, he saw him in Normandy, he Knighted him. Hereupon the Queen sent Thomas Randoll into France to the Queen-Mother, that if it were possible, he might gain Reconciliation for Alanson her Son, and for the King of Navarre. But before he was landed in France, Charles the then French King dyed, whose Funeral Rites were solemnly performed in St. Pauls Church in London.

Charles the French King dies.

Henry the new King of France solicites the Queen for Alanson.

As soon as Henry the Third, King of France, was come from Poland, Roger Lord North was sent into France, to congratulate his return, and happy Inauguration into the Kingdom; who thereupon together with the Queen-Mother, did forthwith send their joynt Letters into England, strongly soliciting the business of Marriage between Alanson and the Queen. In the mean time notwithstanding they used all possible devices (and left no means unsought) to get the young King of Scotland to be sent into France, and to deprive Morton who was the Regent, of his Authority, whereof the Queen of Scots also was desirous; she being perswaded, that if her Son were once gotten safely into France, she and the Catholicks in England should be more mildly used. At which time, an aspersion was cast upon the Queen of Scots, as if she had made the match between Charles Uncle to the Queen of Scots (who had lately the Earldom of Lenox confirmed to him by Parliament) and Elizabeth Cavendish the Countesse of Shrewsburies Daughter by a former Husband; upon which ground, both their Mothers, and some others also were kept in prison for a time; and being doubted whereunto this marriage should tend, Henry Earl of Huntington, President of the Councel in the North, is authorized with secret Instructions to examine it. It will be fit here to say something of this place of Government in the North; which from small beginnings is now become so eminent as it is at this day; whereof this was the Original. When as in the Reign of Henry the Eight, after that the Rebellion in the Northern parts, about the subversion of Abbies was quieted, the Duke of Norfolk tarried in those quarters, and many complaints of injuries done were tendered unto him, whereof some he composed himself, and others he commended under his Seal to men of wisdom to determine: Hereof when King Henry heard, he sent down a peculiar Seal to be used in these cases, and calling home the Duke, committed the same to Tunstall Bishop of Durham, and constituted Assistants with Authority to hear and determine the complaints of the Poor, and he was the first that was called President; and from that time, the authority of his successors grew in credit.

How the President of the North came first to be ordained.

An. Reg. 18.

It was now the year One thousand five hundred seventy five, and the eighteenth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when Henry the third King of France being returned from Poland, and Crowned at Rheimes, was careful to have the League of Blois confirmed; which in the year 1572, had been concluded between his Brother Charles and the most Illustrious Queen Elizabeth; Now therefore he confirmed it with His own Subscription, and delivered it to Dale the Queens Legier, as the Queen likewise ratified it at St. James near Westminster: But a little after he demanded by Letters, whether the mutual defence against all persons mentioned in the League, was intended to comprehend the case of Religion also? Whereunto she answered, that it did comprehend it: he thereupon hearing this from the Queen, began presently to prepare War against the Protestants, and Alanson being drawn to the Adverse party, there was no speech of the marriage for a long time.

Henry King of France prepares war against the Protestants.

In the Netherlands at this time, Lodovick Zuinga, who as successor unto Duke D' Alva, was wholly bent to recover the Command of the Seas, which D' Alva had neglected; but not being sufficiently provided of a Navy, he sent Boischoit into England, that with the Queens leave, he might take up Ships and Mariners to go against the Hollanders and Zealanders, but this she would not grant: Then he made suit that the Queen would please not to take it in evil part, if the banished persons of the English in the Low-Countries served the King of Spain in a Sea-fight against the Hollanders; and that they might have free access to the Ports of England, to buy provision for ready money; but this she would not grant neither: Then he made request, that the Dutch, who were Rebels against the King of Spain, might be put out of England; but neither would she grant this, as being an Action void of Humanity, and against the

Laws

Laws of Hoſpitality: yet becauſe ſhe would not be thought to violate the old Burgundian Law, ſhe commanded by Proclamation, that the Ships of the Dutch which were made ready, ſhould not go forth of the Haven; nor yet the Dutch, who had taken up Arms againſt the K. of Spain, enter into the Ports of England, & by Name, the Prince of Orange, and Fifty other the prime of that Faction; and this ſhe did the more willingly, becauſe Zuinga at the interceſſion of Wilſon the Engliſh Embaſſador, had removed the Earl of Weſtmerland, and other Engliſh Fugitives out of the Dominions of the King of Spain, and had alſo diſſolved the Engliſh Seminary at Doway; though in ſtead thereof, the Guiſes through the procurement of Pope Gregory the thirteenth, ſet up another Seminary at Rhemes.

The Engliſh Seminary at Doway is diſſolved, and another ſet up at Rhemes.

And at this time the Prince of Orange, perceiving his Forces but ſmall, and thinking himſelf too weak for the King of Spain, and little hope of aid from England, he entred into Conſultation with the Confederate States, to whoſe protection they were beſt, and in the moſt ſecurity to betake themſelves: The Princes of Germany they knew were not all of one minde, parted from money very hardly, and did not every way, nor would not by any means poſſible accord and concur with them in their Religion; and therefore they were not ſo fit. Then the French they ſaw, were intangled in a Civil Warre, and ſo had enough of their own to do; beſides the old grudges and heart-burnings that were between the French and Dutch; and therefore neither were they ſo fit. There remained then the Engliſh, as fitteſt of any (if it might be obtained) ſeeing they were Neighbours, of the ſame Religion, and of a Language not much different, ſtrong in ſhipping, and rich in Merchandize. Hereupon (conſidering the commodiouſneſs of the Engliſh Nation) they ſent into England Philip Marnize of Saint Aldegond, Janus Dowſa, William Nyvell, and Doctor Melſen; who in an honourable Ambaſſage, offer the Countries of Holland and Zealand to be poſſeſſed or protected by the Queen, foraſmuch as ſhe was deſcended from the Princes of Holland, by Phillippa Wife of Edward the third, Daughter of William of Bavaria, Count of Hanonia and Holland: by whoſe other Siſter, the hereditary Right of thoſe Provinces came to the King of Spain. To this offer, the Queen takes time to anſwer; and at laſt, having maturely adviſed of the matter, her Anſwer was this; That as yet ſhe conceived not how with the ſafety of her Honour, and an upright Conſcience, ſhe could receive thoſe Provinces into her Protection, much leſs aſſume them into her poſſeſſion; but promiſed, ſhe would deal earneſtly with the King of Spain, that a well conditioned Peace might be concluded. Preſently upon this, Zuinga Governour of the Low-Countries died; after whoſe death, the States of Brabant, Flanders, and the other Provinces, took upon them the ancient Adminiſtration and Authority in the Common-wealth; which the King of Spain was fain to confirm to them, till ſuch time as John of Auſtria were come, whom he determined to make Governour there. In the mean time, Queen Elizabeth, in behalf of the King of Spain, ſent William Davyſon in Ambaſſage to thoſe Princes, to exhort them to be peaceable and and quiet, which yet, by reaſon the Spaniſh Souldiers were ſo outragious, little prevailed.

The States of the Low-Countries make choice of Queen Elizabeth to be their Protector, and why.

The Queens Anſwer to their offer.

Zuinga dying John of Auſtria is ſent Governour into the Netherlands.

In England all was calm and quiet for all this year, onely a difference fell out between Sir John Forſter Governour of Berwick, and John Cormichill Keeper of Liddeſdale in Scotland: In compoſing whereof, the Regent of Scotland, having given Queen Elizabeth ſome diſcontentment, was fain to come unarmed before the Earl of Huntington, appointed the Legate for England at Bonderod, and ſo the matter was taken up, and the Regent ever after continued conſtant in obſerving the Queen, and to his great commendation, reſtrained the Free-booters of the Borders, to the great good of both Kingdoms.

This year there dyed in Scotland, James Hamilton Duke of Caſtle-Herald, and Earl of Arran, who was great Grand-child to James the Second, King of Scots, by his Daughter, appointed Tutor to Mary, Queen of Scots, and deſigned Heir and Governour of the Kingdom, during her minority.

At this time the Earl of Eſſex is come into Ireland again, where having done good ſervices, and being in the midſt of Victory, he was on a ſuddain commanded to reſign his Authority in Ulſter: and as though he were an ordinary Commander, is ſet over three hundred Souldiers: which diſgrace was wrought by his adverſaries in Court, to the continual perplexing of his milde ſpirit. And now is Sir Henry Sidney the third time ſent Deputy into Ireland; who going into Ulſter, there came to him and ſubmitted themſelves Mac Mahon, Mac Guyre, Torlogh Leynigh, the O-Conors and O-Moors, the Earl of Deſmond, and the rebellious Sons of the Earl of Clanriccard, all whom he received into favour, and with great commendation adminiſtred the Province.

The Earl of Eſſex going into Ireland again, is diſgraced with being made an ordinary Commander.

At this time the Spaniard in the Low-Countries began to deal roughly with the people, and harried the Inhabitants with all manner of ſpoil and injury; Antwerp, the moſt famous Town of Traffick in all Europe, was miſerably pillaged, the Engliſh Merchants houſe rifled, inſomuch that the States were enforced to take up Arms, and Meſſengers were ſent to all neighbouring Princes; and to Queen Elizabeth was ſent Monſieur Aubigny, both to ſhew her upon how neceſſary and juſt cauſes they had taken up Arms, and alſo to borrow of her a great ſum of money, the better to enable them to reſiſt the Spaniard. But ſhe being certainly informed, That they firſt ſued to the French King for help, denyeth the Requeſt, yet promiſeth to intercede earneſtly with the King of Spain for Peace. And in that imployment, ſhe addreſſed into Spain, John Smith, couſen-german to King Edward the ſixth, a man of Spaniſh behaviour, and well known to the King of Spain, who was liberally received by the King; and with ſuch wiſdom retorted the contumelious ſpeech of Gaſper Quiroga Archbiſhop of Toledo and the Spaniſh Inquiſitors, who would not admit in the Queens Title the Attribute of Defender of the Faith; that he had gained great thanks from the King of Spain himſelf, who requeſted him not to ſpeak of it to the Queen, and gave ſevere command, that the Title ſhould be admitted.

John Smith Embaſſadour into Spain, his ſtout carriage.

And now by this time was John of Auſtria come into the Low-Countries with a large Commiſſion: for he was the Naturall Son of the Emperour Charles the fifth, to whom the Queen ſent

Edward Horſey, Governour of the Iſle of Wight, to congratulate his coming thither, and to offer help, if the States called the French into the Netherlands; yet at the ſame time, Swevingham being exceeding importunate on the States behalf, ſhe ſent them twenty thouſand pounds of Engliſh money; (ſo well ſhe could play her game of both hands) upon condition they ſhould neither change their Prince nor their Religion, nor take the French into the Low-countries, nor refuſe a peace, if John of Auſtria ſhould condeſcend to indifferent Conditions; but if he embraced a peace, then the money ſhould be paid back to the Spaniſh Souldiers, who were ready to mutiny for lack of pay. So carefull ſhe was to retain theſe declining Provinces in obedience to the King of Spain.

At this time a Voyage was undertaken, to try if there could be found any Sea upon the North part of America, leading to the wealthy coaſt of Cathaia, whereby in one commerce might be joyned the riches of both the Eaſt and Weſt parts of the world, in which voyage was imployed Martyn Forbiſher, who ſet ſail from Harwich the eighteenth of June, and the ninth of Auguſt, entred into that Bay, or Sea, but could paſſ no further for Snow and Ice. The like expedition was taken in hand, two years after, with no better ſucceſſe.

Martyn Forbiſher is ſent to diſcover the North part of America.

About this time dyed the Emperour Maximilian, a Prince that deſerved well of Queen Elizabeth and the Engliſh, who thereupon ſent Sir Philip Sidney to his Son Rodolphus King of the Romans to condole his Fathers death, and congratulate his ſucceſſion: as likewiſe to do the like, for the deceaſe of the Count Electour Palatine, named Frederick the third, with his ſurviving Son, Walter Devereux Earl of Eſſex out of diſcontentment dyeth in Ireland.

And now Walter Devereux Earl of Eſex, who out of Liceſters envy, had been recalled out of Ireland, was out of Leiceſters fear, (as being threatned by him) ſent back again into Ireland, but with the empty title of Earl Marſhall of Ireland; with the grief whereof, he fell into a bloudy Flux, and in moſt grievous torments ended his life: When he had firſt deſired the ſtanders by to admoniſh his Son (ſcarce ten years old at that time) to have alwayes before his eyes, the ſix and thirtieth year of his age, as the utmoſt term of his life, which neither himſelf, nor his Father before him could out-go, and the Son indeed attained not to it, as ſhall hereafter be declared. He was ſuſpected to be poyſoned, but Sir Henry Sidney, Deputy of Ireland, after diligent ſearch made, wrote to the Lords of the Councel, That the Earl often ſaid, It was familiar to him upon any great diſcontentment to fall into a Flux, and for his part, he had no ſuſpition of his being poyſoned: yet was this ſuſpicion encreaſed; for that preſently after his death, the Earl of Leiceſter with a great ſum of money and large promiſes, putting away Douglas Sheffeild, by whom he had a Son, openly marryed Eſſex his widow. For although it was given out, that he was privately marryed to her, yet Sir Francis Knolles her Father, who was well acquainted with Leiceſters roving loves, would not believe it, unleſſe he himſelf were preſent at the marriage, and had it teſtified by a publick Notary, At this time alſo dyed Sir Anthony Cook of Gyddy-Hall in Eſſex, who had been School-maſter to King Edward the ſixth, and was no leſſe School-maſter to his own Daughters, whom he made skilfull in the Greek and Latine Tongues; marryed all to men of great Honour; one to Sir William Cecill, Lord Treaſurer of England; a ſecond to Sir Nicholas Bacon, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal; a third to Sir Thomas Hobby, who dyed Embaſſadour in France; a fourth to Sir Ralph Lowlet; and the fifth to Sir Henry Killigrew.

The Earl of Leiceſter marries his Widow.

Sir Anthony Cook dies, and how his learned Daughters were beſtowed.

At this time, the Sons of the Earl of Clanriccard, who ſcarce two months before had obtained pardon for their Rebellion, fell into Rebellion again; but were by the Deputy ſoon ſuppreſt; and William Drury newly made Preſident of Munſter, reduced the whole province to good Order, except only the County of Kerry, whither a number of Vagabonds were gotten, truſting to the Immunities of the place. For King Edward the third made Kerry a County Palatine, and granted to the Earls of Deſmond all the Royall Liberties which the King of England had in that County, excepting Wreck by Fire, Foreſtall, and Treaſure Trove. The Governour notwithſtanding, who wiſely judged that theſe Liberties were granted for the better preſervation of Juſtice, and not for maintainance of outragious maleſactors, entred into it, and violently put to flight and vanquiſhed the miſchievous crew, which the Earl of Deſmond had placed there in ambuſh. The Earl in the mean while made great complaints of Drury to the Deputy; and particularly, of the Tax which they call Ceaſſe, which is an exaction of proviſion of Victuals at a certain rate, for the Deputies Family; and the Souldiers in Garriſon. This Tax not he only, but in Lemſter alſo many Lords refuſed to pay, alleadging that it was not to be exacted but by Parliament; but the matter being examined in England, it appeared by the Records of the Kingdom, That this Tax was anciently impoſed; and that by a certain Right of Majeſty, a Prerogative Royal, which is not ſubjected to Laws, yet not contrary to them neither, as the wiſe Civilians have obſerved. Yet the Queen commanded to uſe a moderation in exactions of this nature, ſaying She would have her ſubjects ſhorn, but not devoured.

The Tax in Ireland called the Ceaſſe.

It was now the year 1577, and the twentieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when John of Auſtria, pretending to Queen Elizabeth nothing but Peace, yet is found to deal ſecretly with the pope, to deprive her of her Kingdom, and himſelf to marry the Queen of Scots, and invade England: of which his practiſes the prince of Orange gives Queen Elizabeth the firſt Intelligence. Whereupon (finding his deep diſſembling) ſhe enters into a League with the States, for mutuall defence both at Sea and Land, upon certain Conditions; but having concluded it (becauſe ſhe would not have it wrongfully interpreted, as though ſhe meant to foſter a Rebellion in the Netherlands) ſhe ſent Thomas Wilkes to the King of Spain with theſe Informations, That ſhe had alwaies endeavoured to keep the Low-Countries in obedience to the King of Spain; had perſwaded (even with threatnings) the prince of Orange to accept of Peace; but withall, if the King of Spain would have his Subjects obedient to him, ſhe then requeſts him to reſtore their priviledges, and to remove John of Auſtria from the Government, who not not only was her deadly enemy, but labored by all means to bring the Netherlands into utter servitude. If this be granted by the King of Spain, she then faithfully promiseth, That if the States perform not their Allegiance to him, as by their promise to her they are engaged to do, she will utterly forsake them, and bend her self with all her Forces to compell them. While Wilkes in Spain unfoldeth these matters, John of Austria sendeth to Queen Elizabeth, in most grievous manner accusing the States for disobedience and making a large declaration of the causes for which he had taken up Arms again. Thus Queen Elizabeth (like a fortunate Princesse) sate as an Honourable Arbitresse between the Spanish, the French, and the States; insomuch that it was not untrue which one wrote, That France and Spain were Ballances in the Scale of Europe; and England the Beam to turn them either way; for they still got the better, to whom she adhered.

An. Reg. 19. A suddain Mortality at the Assizes at Oxford.

About this time, when the Judges sate at the Assizes in Oxford, and one Rowland Jenkes a Book-seller was questioned for speaking opprobrious words against the Queen, suddenly they were surprised with a pestilent savour; whether rising from the noysome smell of the prisoners, or from the damp of the ground, is uncertain, but all that were there present, almost every one, within forty hours dyed except Women and children; and the Contagion went no further. There dyed Robert Bell, Lord chief Baron, Robert D' Oylie, Sir William Babington, D' Olye Sheriff of Oxfordshire, Harcourt, Weyman, Phetiplace, the most of them men in this Tract; Barham the famous Lawyer; almost all the Jurors, and three hundred other, more or lesse.

The Lord Latimers Family in Issue Male extinct, and how his four Daughters were bestowed.

This year the title of the Lord Latimer, (which had flourished in the Family of the Nevills even since the dayes of King Henry the sixth) was extinct in John Nevill, who dyed without issue male, and left a fair estate to four Daughters, whereof the eldest marryed Henry Earl of Northumberland, the second Thomas Cecill, who was afterward Earl of Exeter; the third, Sir William Cornwallis; and the fourth, Sir John Davers.

In Ireland the O-Moores and O-Conors, and others, whose Ancestours the Earl of Sussex in Queen Maries dayes, had for their rebellion deprived of their Patrimony in Leyse and Ophalie, did now break forth into a new Rebellion, under the Conduct of Rorie Oge, that is, Roderick the younger; set on fire the Village of Naasse, assault Lochlin; from whence being driven back by the valour of George Carew the Governour, he was afterward slain.

English Volunteers go into the Low-Countries, and do valiantly.

Out of England at this time there went into the Low-Countries, John North the Lord Norths eldest Son, John Norris second Son to the Lord Norris, Henry Cavendish, and Thomas Morgan Colonels, with many Volunteers, to learn Military Experience. Thither also came Casamire the Elector Palatines Son, with an Army of German Horse and Foot, at the Queens Charges: upon these Don John, assisted by the Prince of Parma, Mondragon, and other the best Commanders of Spain, confident of Victory, flyeth furiously, before they expected him, yet after a long fight, was forced to retreat; but then turning again, and thinking to break through the Hedges and Brakes where the English and Scottish Volunteers had placed themselves, was again repulsed; for the English and Scottish were so hot upon the matter, that casting away their garments, by reason of the hot weather, they fought in their shirts, which they made fast about them. In this Battel Norris fought most valiantly, and had three Horses slain under him, as also Steward the Scot, Bingham, and William Markham.

Now for comfort to the afflicted Provinces, there came at that time into the Netherlands, the Count Swarzemberg from the Emperor; Monsieur Bellievre from the French King; and from the Queen of England, the Lord Cobham and Walsingham, with Commission to procure conditions of Peace, but returned without doing any thing, for that Don John refused to admit the Protestant Religion, and the Prince of Orange refused to return into Holland.

Egremond Ratcliffe is put to death in Flanders, and why.

About this time Egremond Ratcliffe, Son to Henry Earl of Sussex, by his second Wife, who had been a prime man in the Rebellion of the North, and served now under Don John, was accused by the English fugitives, that he was sent under-hand to kill Don John; which (whether true or false) he was thereupon taken and put to death. The Spaniards have affirmed, That Ratcliffe at his last end, confessed voluntarily, That he was freed out of the Tower of London, and moved by Walsinghams large promises to do this Fact; but the English that were present at his death, deny that he confessed any such thing, though the English Rebels did all they could to wrest this confession from him.

John D. Austria dyeth.

At this very time, Don John, in the flower of his age, died of the Pestilence, or (as some say) of grief, as being neglected by the King of Spain his Brother; a man of an insatiable Ambition, who aimed first at the Kingdom of Tunis, and after, of England; and who, without the privity of the French King, or King of Spain, had made a league with the Guises, for the defence of both Crowns.

Alanson solicits his Suit with the Queen afresh.

Alanson although very busie about the Belgick War, yet now began again to pursue the Marriage with Queen Elizabeth; for renewing of which suit, first was Bachervyle sent to the Queen; and soon after Ramboulet, from the French King; and within a moneth after that, Simier, a neat Courtier, and exquisitely learned in the Art of Love, accompanied with a great number of the French Nobility; whom the Queen at Richmond entertained in such loving manner, that Leicester began to rage, as if his hopes were now quite blasted. Certainly a little before, when Ashley, a Lady of the Queens Bed-Chamber, mentioned the Earl of Leicester to her for a Husband, she with an angry countenance replyed, Dost thou think me so unlike my self, and so forgetfull of Majesty, as to prefer my Servant, whom I my self have advanced, before the greatest Princes of the Christian World?

The Earl of Morton Regent of Scotland, is removed, and the King though but twelve years old, is admitted to govern.

But it is now time to return to the Scottish Affairs. The Earl of Morton, Regent of Scotland, though a man of great wisdom and valour, yet was now so overcome with covetousness, that he grew universally hated; and thereupon with the joynt consent of the Nobility, the Administration of the Common-wealth, was translated to the King, though he was yet but twelve years old, and twelve of the chief Lords were appointed to attend him in Councel, three of them by course for three moneths; amongst whom, the Earl of Morton for one, that they might not seem to cast him quite off. The King having taken upon him the Administration, sent presently the Earl of Dumferlin to Queen Elizabeth, acknowledging her great deserts towards him, and requesting to have the Treaty of Edenburgh, agreed on in the year 1559, to be confirmed, for the more happy restraining the Robbers about the borders; and withall, That his ancient Patrimony in England; namely, the Lands granted to his Grand-father Matthew, Earl of Lenox, and the Countess his Grand-mother, might be delivered into his hands who was the next Heir. The Queen readily promised the former demands, but stuck a little at the last, concerning the Patrimony; For she would not grant, That Arbella, the Daughter of Charles the King of Scots Unkle, born in England, was the next Heir to the Lands in England; neither would she grant the Ambassadors proof out of History, That the Kings of Scots, born in Scotland, did anciently (without question) hold the Earldom of Huntington by Right of Inheritance. Yet she commanded a Sequestration to be made of the Revenues of those Lands, by Burleigh Master of the Wards; and willeth the King, That out of the goods of the Earl of Lenox in Scotland, satisfaction might be made to his Grand-mothers Creditors here. For she took it in ill part, that the King had recalled the Enfeoffment of the Earldom of Lenox (made to his Unkle Charles and his Heirs) after the death of Charles, to the prejudice (as was suggested to her) of Arbella; although indeed it be a Priviledge of the Kings of Scotland, That they may recall Donations made in their minority.

The Earl of Morton in the mean while, not enduring the disgrace to be outed of his Regency, regarded not the Prescript Form of Government lately set down, but drew the Administration of all matters to himself, and kept the King in his own power at the Castle of Sterling, admitting none to his presence, but whom he pleased. At this presumption, the Lords growing angry, made the Earl of Atholl their Captain, and in the Kings Name levyed a great Army, and were ready to encounter Morton; but by the Intercession of Robert Bowes, the English Ambassadour, they were stayed from fighting; and Morton presently betook himself home, and the Earl of Atholl soon after dyed, not without suspition of being poysoned.

The King of Spain and the Pope conspire against Queen Elizabeth.

At this time the King of Spain, and Pope Gregory the Thirteenth held secret Consultation, to invade at once both England and Ireland, and to work the absolute ruine of Queen Elizabeth; The Pope to gain the Kingdom of Ireland for his Son James Buon of Campagno, whom he had made Marquess of Vincola: The King of Spain secretly to relieve the Irish Rebels, as Queen Elizabeth did the Dutch, while Friendship in words was upheld on both sides: and being known, That the greatest strength of England consisted in the Navy Royal, and Merchants Ships, it was advised, That the Italian and Dutch Merchants should hire these Ships for long Voyages; to the end, that while they were absent, the Queens Navy might be surprized with a greater Fleet: and at that time Thomas Stukeley, an English Fugitive, should joyn himself to the Irish Rebels with new Forces. For he making great boast, and promising the Kingdom of Ireland to the Popes Bastard Son, had so insinuated himself into grace with the ambitious old man, that he adorned him with the Titles of Marquess of Lemster, Earl of Wexford and Caterlogh, Viscount Morogh, and Baron of Rosse, (the principal Dignities of Ireland) and made him Commander over Eight hundred Italian Souldiers, to be imployed in the Irish War. With which Forces Stukeley setting Sail from Civita Vecchia, arrived at length in Portugal, where he and his Forces were by the Divine Providence diverted another way. For Sebastian King of Portugal (to whom the Chief Command in this Expedition against England was assigned) being first to dispatch a War in Africa, in aid of Mahomet Abdall, Son to the King of Fesse, perswaded Stukeley to go along with him into Mauritania, together with his Italian Souldiers, and then afterward they would go together against Ireland. To this motion Stukeley soon agreed, and therein agreed with his destiny; for in that memorable Battel where three Kings were slain, both he and Sebastian lost their lives.

Thomas Stukeley is by the Pope honoured with the greatest dignities, and sent into Ireland. But diverted by the King of Portugal, is slain in Africa.

At this time Sir Henry Sidney (who had been Deputy of Ireland at several times eleven years) delivered up his Deputy-ship to Sir William Drury, President of Munster: Such a Deputy, for good Government, that if any have equalled him, none have exceeded him.

It was now the year 1579, and the two and twentieth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when John Casimire, Son of Frederick the Third, Count Palatine of the Rhyne, came into England; where, after he had been entertained with Tiltings and Justs, made Knight of the Garter (the Queen tying the Garter about his leg) and rewarded with a yearly Pension, he returned. And now was Alexander Farnese, Prince of Parma, made Governour of the Netherlands by the King of Spain, and Queen Elizabeth supplyed the States with a great sum of money, for which William Davison brought into England the ancient pretious Habiliments of the Family of Burgundy, and their Costly Vessels, laid to pawn by Matthew of Austria and the States.

Alexander Farnese Prince of Parma is made Governour of the Netherlands.

Simier in the mean time here in England ceaseth not by all amorous devices to perswade the Queen to marry Alanson; wherein he drew her so far, that the Earl of Leicester gave out, he crept into the Queens affection by Love-Potions and unlawful Arts: and Simier on the other side endeavoured by all means to cast down Leicester, discovering his marriage with the Earl of Essex Widow: whereat the Queen grew so angry, that she confined him to the Castle at Greenwich, and meant to have him committed to the Tower, but that the Earl of Sussex (though his greatest Adversary) dissuaded her: telling her, That none ought to be molested for contracting lawful Matrimony. But Leicester notwithstanding was so provoked for his Confining, that he was bent to revenge it; and if it be true, as some said, he had suborned one Tinder a Yeoman of the Guard to murther Simier. Sure it is, the Queen by Proclamation commanded, That no person should offer injury to the Ambassadour or any of his Servants. At which time it fell out, that as the Queen, Queen, together with Simier, the Earl of Lincoln, and Hatton Vice-Chamberlain, were rowed in a Barge to Greenwich, a young man ſhooting off a Harquebus out of a Boat, ſhot one of the rowers in the Queens Barge through the Arm with a Bullet, who was preſently taken and led to the Gallows; but upon ſolemn Proteſtation, that he did it unwillingly, and out of no malitious intent, he was let go and pardoned. Some would have perſwaded the Queen, that he was purpoſely ſuborned to ſhoot either her or the French Ambaſſadour: but ſhe was ſo far from ſuſpecting her Subjects, that ſhe would often ſay, She would not believe any thing againſt them, which a Mother would not believe againſt her Children.

Alanſon comes privately into England, and hath ſecret Conference with the Queen.

After a few dayes Alanſon himſelf came privately into England with only one or two attendants, and came to the Queen at Greenwich, at a time when ſhe thought not of it; they had ſecret Conference together, all parties being ſent away: after which, being ſeen of very few, he returned home; but within a moneth or two after the Queen enjoyned the Lord Burleigh Treaſurer, the Earl of Suſſex, Leiceſter, Hatton and Walſingham, ſeriouſly to weigh both the dangers, and the Commodities likely to ariſe from the marriage with him, and to conſult with Simier concerning the marriage Covenants.

Burleigh and others are enjoyned to conſult of the Marriage Covenants.

As in England there was ſome fear of this French-man; ſo in Scotland at this time of another French-man, called Eſme Steward, Lord of Aubigny, who came now into Scotland to viſit the King his Couſen. He was the Son of John Steward Brother to Matthew Steward Earl of Lenox the Kings Grand-father, and had denomination from Aubigny in France, which Title Charles the Seventh King of France had anciently conferred upon John Steward of the Family of Lenox, who being Conſtable of the Scottiſh Army in France, vanquiſhed the Engliſh in one Battel, and was ſlain by them in another: and from that time the Title belonged to the younger deſcent of that Houſe. This Eſme Steward, the King embraced with exceeding great love, made him Lord Chamberlain of Scotland, and Captain of the Caſtle of Dumbriton, and created him firſt Earl and then Duke of Lenox. The fear from this man was, Becauſe he was devoted to the Guiſes and the Popiſh Religion; and that which increaſed the fear from this man, becauſe he applyed himſelf to Mortons Adverſaries: and mediated to have Thomas Carre Lord of Ferniſhurſt called home, who of all men was moſt addicted to the Queen of Scots.

The Title of Lord D'Aubigny, from whence it came.

Eſme Steward made firſt Duke of Lenox.

The Turkey Merchants when ſet up.

About this time Queen Elizabeth, at the requeſt of William Harbourne an Engliſh-man, procured a Grant from the Turkiſh Emperour, for the Engliſh Merchants to exerciſe free Traffick in all places of his Dominions, as well as Venetians, Polanders, and other neighbouring Nations; whereupon they ſet up firſt the Company of Turky Merchants; managing a moſt gainful Trade at Conſtantinople, Alexandria, Ægypt, Aleppo, Cyprus, and other parts of Aſia, bringing home Spices, Perfumes, unwrought Silks, Tapiſtry, Indico, Currants, and the like.

This year dyed Sir Nicholas Bacon, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal; but who by vertue of an Act of Parliament, always exerciſed the Juriſdiction of Lord Chancellor; a very fat man, but ſingularly wiſe, and a chief prop of the Queens Privy Councel: In whoſe place ſucceeded Sir Thomas Bromley the Queens Solicitor, with the Title of Lord Chancellor of England.

In Ireland at this time, in the Province of Munſter, James Fitz-Morris kindled a new fire of Rebellion; for after his former ſubmiſſion upon his knees, vowing all Obedience to the Queen, he ſtole away into France, and promiſed the French King, If he would lend him aſſiſtance, to make him King of Ireland. But being by him ſlighted, he went into Spain, and made the like offer to the King there. The King of Spain ſent him to the Pope, from whom (by means of Nicholas Sanders, an Engliſh Prieſt, and Alan an Iriſh man, both Doctors of Divinity) he obtained a little money, a Legats Authority for Sanders, a conſecrated Banner, and Letters of Commendation to the Catholick King. And returning from Spain with thoſe Divines, three Ships, and a few men, he landed at Smerwick Kerry, a demy Iſland in the Weſt part of Ireland, about the firſt day of July; where (the place being firſt of all conſecrated by the Prieſts) he built a Fort, and brought the Ships cloſe under it; but theſe were preſently ſet upon and carried away, by Thomas Courtney, and thereby the Spaniards deprived of their opportunity of coming thither by Sea. But now John and James, Brothers to the Earl of Deſmond, gathered together a ſmall number of Iriſh, joyn themſelves preſently with their Kinſman Fitz-Morris. Yet the Spaniards ſeeing that but a very few Iriſh, and thoſe unarmed, came unto them, began to diſtruſt the eſtate they were in, and to cry out, That they were undone; whom Fitz-Morris heartned the beſt he could, telling them that Supplies were preſently to come. And going himſelf to get more Company, he paſſed through the Land of his Couſen William a Burgh, who though he had been a Rebel before, yet was now grown Loyal, ſo as there fell out a Skirmiſh between them; in which Fitz-Morris being ſtrucken through with a Pike, and ſhot into the head with a Leaden bullet, died in the place, and moſt of his Company with him; but withall, two of William Burghs Sons were in that skirmiſh ſlain alſo; when the Queen, to comfort him for the loſs of his Sons, adorned him with the Dignity of Baron of Caſtle Conell, and rewarded him with a yearly Penſion beſides: which Favours ſo overwhelmed him with joy, that he lived but a ſhort while after. And now Sir William Drury the Deputy growing very ſick, appointed Sir Nicholas Malby, then Governour of Connaught to be Preſident of Munſter, and General of the Army; at which time, the Earl of Deſmond, who had all this while made a ſhew of Loyalty, breaks openly out into Rebellion; when now Drury the Deputy dying at Waterford, by his death Malbyes Authority ceaſing, Sir William Pelham is by the Councel choſen Juſtice of Ireland, with the Authority of Vice-Roy, untill ſuch time as a Deputy were appointed, and the Earl of Ormond is made Preſident of Munſter. Pelham goeth into Munſter, and ſendeth for the Earl of Deſmond, who refuſing to come, is thereupon proclaimed Traytor, and an enemy to the State; and this being publiſhed, the Juſtice committed the following the War to the Earl of Ormond, who ſlaying moſt of the Spaniards and adherents Fitz Morris raiſeth a Rebellion in Ireland, but is by William a Burgh encountred and ſlain.

Sir William Pelham is made Juſtice of Ireland.

herents to Desmond, compelleth him to send his Wife to the Justice, to beg his pardon.

The Lord Gray is made Deputy of Ireland.

The Lord Justice Pelham now certified, That Arthur Lord Gray was landed with authority to be Deputy of Ireland, at Munster delivereth the Army to George Bourchier the Son of John, second Earl of Bathe of that name, and himself returneth to Dublin, to deliver up the Province to his Successor. The Lord Gray at his landing, before he received the Sword, hearing where the Rebels had their Rendevouz, marched towards them, who presently betake themselves to Grandilough, a grassy Valley, and beset thick with Trees, where they who dwell near, scarce know the winding out; yet the Deputy (taking one Cosbie an old man, well acquainted with the place, to be his leader) entred into it, where he lost divers of his men, namely, Peter Carew the younger, George Moore, Audley, and Cosbie himself that was his Leader.

San Joseph's an Italian with seven hundred Souldiers landeth in Ireland.

A short time after, there landed at Smerwick in Kerry, under the the command of San Joseph an Italian, about seven hundred Italian Souldier, who fortifie the place, and name it Fort del Or: Whereupon the Deputy sent a Trumpeter to the Fort to demand who they were, what they had to do in Ireland, and who sent them; withall commanding them to depart immediately. But they replyed, That some of them were sent from his Holiness, others from the Catholick King, upon whom the Pope had bestowed the Kingdom of Ireland, for that Queen Elizabeth (by reason of heresie) hath forfeited the Right due unto her; and therefore what they had gotten, they would maintain. Upon this the Deputy prepares for battery, lets fly his Ordinance four dayes together; in which time the Spaniards once or twice make Sallies out, to their own losse much, but not an English man slain, but only John Cheek, a couragious young Gentleman, Son to Sir John Cheek,, a learned Knight. And now San Joseph, who commanded the Fort, a white-liver'd Souldier, terrified, with the continuall Battery, and having no hope of relief, either from the King of Spain or Desmond (contrary to the will of all his Souldiers) set up a white Flag, and desired Parlee; but Parlee was denyed, because he had combined with Rebels, with whom it is not lawful to hold Parlee. Then he demanded that his Company might passe away with their Bagge, but neither would this be granted. Then he required that some of the chiefer sort might have leave to depart; but neither could this be obtained. At last, when they could prevail in nothing, they hanged out the White Flag again, and submitted themselves absolutely, without any condition, to the Deputy's mercy, who presently consulted how to deal with them; and this was the Case; Their number was well near as great as the English; there was present fear of danger from the Rebels; and the English were so destitute of meat and apparel, that they were ready to mutiny, unless they might have the spoyl granted them; and besides, there were no ships to send them away if they were spared: For these Reasons it was concluded, (the Deputy gainsaying, and letting tears fall) That only the Leaders should be saved, the rest slain, and all the Irish hanged up; which was presently put in execution, to the great disliking of the Queen, who detested the slaughter of such as yield themselves, and would not accept of any excuses or allegations.

No Parlee to be allowed to Rebels.

San Joseph's yields himself to the Deputy, without any condition.

His men are all slain, and why.

And yet more cruelty then this was at that time commited in the Netherlands; for John Norris, and Oliver Temple, English Commanders, together with some Companies of Dutch, setting out early one morning, took Mechlyn a wealthy Town of Brabant, at an assault with Ladders; where they promiscuously murthered both Citizens and Religious persons, offering violence even upon the dead, taking away Grave-stones, which were sent into England to be sold.

About this time certain English Priests, who were fled into the Netherlands, in the year 1568, by the procurement of William Allen an Oxford Scholar, joyned themselves to study at Doway, where they entred into a Collegiate Form of Government; to whom the Pope allowed a yearly Pension. But Tumults arising in the Low-Countries, and the English Fugitives being commanded by the King of Spains Deputy to depart from thence, other the like Colleges, for the training up of the English Youth, were erected, one at Rheims by the Guises, and another at Rome by Pope Gregory the Thirteenth, which always afforded new supplies of Priests for England, when the old failed, who should spread abroad the seeds of the Romish Religion here amongst us; from whence those Colleges had the name of Seminaries, and they called Seminary Priests who were trained up in them. In these Seminaries, amongst other Disputations, it was concluded, That the Pope hath such fulness of Power, by Divine Right, over the whole Christian World, both in Ecclesiastical and Secular matters, that by vertue thereof it is lawful for him to excommunicate Kings, absolve their Subjects from their Oath of Allegiance, and deprive them of their Kingdoms. From these Seminaries at this time, there came two into England, Robert Parsons, and Edmund Campian, both of them English-men, and Jesuits. Parsons was born in Somersetshire, a fierce and rough conditioned fellow: Campian was a Londoner, of a milder disposition. They had been both brought up in Oxford; Campian a Fellow of St. Johns Colledge, and had been Proctor in the year 1569; and when he was made Deacon, counterfeited himself to be a Protestant, till such time as he slipped out of England. Parsons was of Baylioll College, where he made open profession of the Protestant Religion, till for dishoneſt carriage, he was expelled the House, and then fled to the Popish party. Both these came privily into England, in the disguise one while of Souldiers, another while of Noble-men; sometimes like English Ministers, and sometime in the habit of Apparators. Parsons who was made the Superior, brake forth in such open words amongst the Papists, about deposing the Queen, that some of themselves had a purpose to complain of them to the Magistrates. Campian, though something more moderate, yet in a Writing provoked the English Ministers to a dispute; and published in Latine an elegant Book of his Ten Reasons, in maintenance of the Doctrine of the Romish Church; as Parsons in like manner, set forth another violent Pamphlet against Clark, who had written modestly against Campians Provocation.

What Colledges were called Seminaries, and why.

Parsons and Campian Jesuits come into England in disguise, and of their education.

vocation. But Doctor Whitaker ſoundly confuted Campian, who being after a year apprehended, and put upon the Rack, was afterward brought out to a diſputation; where he ſcarcely made good the great fame that went of him.

Captain Drakes return from his Voyage about the World.

In this year was the return of Captain Drake from his incredible Voyage round about the World (which Magellan had before attempted, but dyed in the Voyage) whereof to relate all particular accidents, would require a large Volume: It may ſuffice in this place, to deliver ſome ſpecial paſſages. He was born of mean Parentage in Devonſhire, yet had a great man (Francis Ruſſell, after Earl of Bedford) to be his God-father. His Father, in King Henry the Eighth's time, being perſecuted for a Proteſtant, changed his Soyl, and lived cloſe in Kent. King Henry being dead, he got a place amongſt the Mariners of the Queens Navy, to read Prayers, and afterward bound his Son Francis to a Ship-Maſter, who in a Ship which went to and fro upon the Coaſt with Commodities, one while to Zealand, another while to France, training him up to pains and skill at Sea; took ſuch a liking to him, that afterwards dying, he bequeathed his Barque to him by his Will: This Barque Drake ſold, and then in the year 1567, went with Sir John Hawkins into America; in which Voyage he unfortunately loſt all he had. Five years after having gotten again a good ſum of money by Trading and Pyracy, (which the Preacher of his Ship told him was lawful) he bought a Ship of War, and two ſmall Veſſels, with which he ſet ſayl again for America, where his firſt Prize was great ſtore of Gold and Silver, carried over the Mountains upon Mules; whereof the Gold he brought to his Ships, but left the Silver, hiding it under ground: after this, he fired a great place of Traffick, called, The Croſs, at the River Chirage, when roaming to and fro upon the Mountains, he eſpied the South Sea; where falling upon his knees, he craved aſſiſtance of Almighty God, to find out that paſſage, which he reſerveth for another Voyage; and for the preſent, having gotten much riches, he returned home. Afterwards in the year 1577, the thirteenth day of November, with five Ships, and ſeamen to the number of 163, he ſet ſayl from Plimmouth, for the Southern Sea, and within five and twenty dayes, came to Cantyne, a Cape in Barbary, and then ſailed along the Iſle of Fago which ſends forth flames of Sulphur: and being now under the Line, he let every one in his Ship bloud. The ſixteenth of April, entring into the mouth of the Plate, they eſpied a world of Sea-Calves; in which place John Doughty, the next to Drake in Authority, was called in queſtion for raiſing Sedition in the Navy, who being found guilty, was beheaded. Some report, That Drake had charge given him from the Earl of Leiceſter, to make away Doughty upon ſome pretence or other, for that he had ſaid, That the Earl of Eſſex was craftily made away by Leiceſter: The twentieth of Auguſt, two of his Ships he turneth off, and with other three came to the Sea, which they call, The Straight of Magellan. The fixth of September, entring into the wide Southern Ocean, which they call, The Pacifique Sea, he found it out of meaſure troublous, ſo that his Ships were here by Tempeſts diſperſed; in one of which, John Winter was Maſter, who returned back into England; Drake himſelf, with only one Ship, coaſted along the ſhore, till he came to the Iſle Moucha, from whence looſing, he lighted upon a fellow fiſhing in a little Boat, who ſhewed him where a Spaniſh Ship laden with Treaſure lay; Drake making towards it, the Spaniards thought him to be their own Countrey man, and thereupon invited him to come on; but he getting aboord, preſently ſhut the Spaniards (being not above eight perſons) under hatches, and took the Ship, in which was four hundred pound weight of Gold. At Tanrapſa, going again to ſhore, he found a Spaniard ſleeping by the Sea-ſide, who had lying by him twenty bars of maſſie Silver to the value of four thouſand Duckats, which he bid his followers take amongſt them, the Spaniard ſtill ſleeping. After this, going into the port of Africa, he found there three Veſſels without any Mariners in them; wherein, beſides other wares, were ſeven and fifty ſilver bricks, each of which weighed twenty pound: From hence, tyding it to Lime, he found twelve Ships in one Road, and in them great ſtore of Silks, and a Cheſt full of money coined, but not ſo much as a Ship-boy aboard; (ſuch ſecurity there was in that Coaſt:) Then putting to Sea with thoſe Ships, he followed the rich Ship called the Cacofogo; and by the way met with a ſmall Ship, without Ordnance or other Arms, out of which he took fourſcore pound weight of Gold, a golden Crucifix, and ſome Emeraulds of a fingers length. The firſt day of March, he overtook the Cacofogo, ſet upon her, and took her; aud in her beſides Jewels, fourſcore pound weight of Gold, thirteen Cheſts of Silver ready coyned, and as much Silver as would ballaſt a Ship. And now thinking he had gained wealth enough, he reſolved to return home; and ſo on the third of Novemb. 1580. he landed at Plymouth, having ſayled round about the World, in the ſpace of three years; to the great admiration of all that know what Compaſs the World is of. 1580.

His Parentage and education.

The Paſſages of his Voyage.

Doughty beheaded by Drake.

How he gained his great Treaſure.

The Queen welcomed him home, but made a ſequeſtration of the Goods, that they might be ready if the King of Spain required them; and commanded the Ship to be drawn on ſhore near Debtford for a Monument (where the Carcaſs of it is yet to be ſeen) and her ſelf feaſted in it; at which time ſhe Knighted Captain Drake. But Bernardine Mendoza, the King of Spains Ambaſſadour in England, began to rage; and earneſtly demanded Reſtitution of the Goods, and complained, that the Engliſh ſailed upon the Indian Sea. To whom it was anſwered, That the Goods were ſequeſtred, and ready to make the King of Spain ſatisfaction, although the Queen had expended againſt the Rebels, whom the Spaniard had excited in England and Ireland, more money than that which Drake brought home. And as for ſayling on the Indian Sea, That it was as lawful for the Queens Subjects as his, ſeeing the Sea and the Air are common for all to uſe. Notwithſtanding, to Pedro Sebura, the King of Spain's Agent in this buſineſs, a great ſum of money was repaid, which was not reſtored to them to whom it belonged, but employed to the Spaniards Wars in the Low-Countries, as was known after, when it was too late.

But

But at this time, when Jackman and Pett, two skilful Pilots were ſent forth with two Ships by the Londoners, to find out a ſhorter cut to the Eaſt-Indies, by the North-Weſt paſſage; they had not the like ſucceſs; for a few Leagues beyond the Iſles of Vaygato, they met with ſuch uncertain Tydes, ſo many Shallows, and ſuch Mountains of Ice, that they could go no further, and had much ado to return home.

Henry Fitz-Alan Earl of Arundel dies, in whom ended the Sirname of that Noble Family. The poſſeſſion of Arundel-Caſtle gives the Title of that Honour.

About this time, Henry Fitz-Alan, Earl of Arundel died, in whom the Sirname of a moſt Noble Family ended, which had flouriſhed in this Honour for above three hundred years, from Richard Fitz-Alan; who being deſcended from the Albanets (ancient Earls of Arundel and Suſſex, in the Reign of King Edward the firſt) obtained the Title of Earl, by reaſon of the poſſeſſion of Arundel Caſtle, without Creation. He had three Daughters by his Wife Katharine, Daughter to Thomas Gray, Marqueſs of Dorſet, all whom he out-lived; Henry a young man of great hope, who dyed at Bruſſels, Joan, Wife to the Lord Lumley; and Mary, who being married to Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk, brought forth Philip, in her right, Earl of Arundel.

In Ireland, Arthur Lord Gray the Deputy going againſt the O-Conors, who raiſed ſtirs in Offhalie, putteth to death Hugh O Moley, quieteth all that Quarter, even the Families of the Mogohigans and O Charles, and in the very beginning ſuppreſſeth a conſpiracy which was breaking forth, by putting to death the Lord Nogent; who being confident in his own innocency, when the Deputy promiſed to ſave his life, if he would but confeſſe himſelf guilty, choſe rather to die and be held guiltleſs, than to live in infamy, by betraying his own innocency. With whoſe death the Queen was extremely diſpleaſed, as by which ſhe was made a patroneſs of cruelty, to her great diſhonour. But the Deputy knew with what kind of people he dealt, and by this example of ſeverity, brought Turlogh Leymigh to accept conditions of Peace; and the O Brians and Cavenaghs (Rebellious Families in Lemſter) humbly to crave leave alſo, and to offer Hoſtages.

In Scotland, at this time great jealouſie was had of Lenox, Lord of Aubigny, left, being in ſo great favour with the King, he ſhould allure him to marry into France, and bring into Scotland the Popiſh Religion. Whereupon (although he purged himſelf by Letters to Queen Elizabeth, and proffered himſelf to be a Proteſtant) yet many courſes were taken to ſequeſter him from the King; but ſo far from taking effect, that on the contrary, the Earl of Morton (who among all other was moſt addicted to the Engliſh) was ſoon after accuſed of Treaſon by the Earl of Arran, and caſt into priſon; and not long after (notwithſtanding all the means the Queen could uſe to ſave him) was beheaded, as convicted to be acceſſary to the murther of the Kings Father. Whereupon the Earl of Agnus, and others who laboured for Morton, fled ſtraightwayes into England.

The Earl of Morton is beheaded, as acceſſary to the murther of the Kings Father.

General Norris raiſeth the ſiege at Stenwick. But is afterward vanquiſhed, wounded, and a great number of his men ſlain.

In the Low-Countries about this time, the Count Rheinberg proceeded victoriouſly for the King of Spain, and beleaguer'd Stenwick in Freezland; againſt whom the States ſent Norris General of the Field, who put the Rheinburghs Company to the worſt, and raiſed the Siege; but afterward joyning Battel with Verdugo the Spaniard at Northone, even when the Victory was almoſt gotten (Roger Williams having put the Enemies to flight) the fortune of the War turned, Norris is vanquiſhed, wounded, and a great number of his men ſlain; amongſt whom were Cotton, Fitz-Williams, and Biſhop, ſtout Commanders. Here it muſt not be omitted, That the Engliſh (who of all the dwellers in the Northern parts of the World, were hitherto the leaſt Drinkers, and deſerved praiſe for their ſobriety) in theſe Dutch Wars learned to be Drunkards; and brought the vice ſo far to over-ſpread the Kingdom, that Laws were fain to be enacted for repreſſing it.

In theſe Dutch Wars the Engliſh learn to be Drunkards.

The King of Spain ſeizeth upon the Kingdom of Portugal, and putteth Don Antonio to flight.

But now whileſt the States and the King of Spain contend about a few Towns in the Low-Countries, he ſeizeth upon the whole Kingdom of Portugal. For the laſt year, Henry King of Portugal dying, many Competitors challenge the Kingdom; as the Duke of Savoy, the Prince of Parma's Son, Katharine Bracant, and the Queen of France. But Philip King of Spain, the Son of Henries eldeſt Siſter, putting the Caſe to his Divines and Lawyers, and adjuring them to pronounce to whom of right it belonged, they pronounced, for him: whereupon he ſent Duke D' Alva, who put to flight Antonio, whom the people had elected King, and within ſeventy dayes ſubdued all Portugal. The Queen of France angry hereat, and enviouſly beholding the King of Spain's Dominions thus enlarged) being now Maſter of Portugal, the Eaſt-Indies, and many Iſlands beſides) adviſeth, amongſt other Princes, Queen Elizabeth, to bethink themſelves in time of reſtraining his ſo exceſſive Dominions. Whereupon the Queen received Don Antonio, and lovingly relieved him, which ſhe thought might be done without any breach of the League with Spain, ſeeing Don Antonio was deſcended of Engliſh blood, and of the Houſe of Lancaſter; and that no Caution was in the League, That the Portuger ſhould not be admitted into England.

Whom Queen Elizabeth received, and relieved.

The Match with Alanſon now Duke of Anjou is purſued afreſh.

And now the Queen-Mother of France, and the King her Son, more eagerly than ever, purſue the Match with Alanſon now Duke of Anjou, for the tranſacting whereof, they ſent in Ambaſſage into England, Francis Bourbon, Prince of Dauphine, Arthur Coſſe, Marſhall of France, and many other honourable Perſonages, who were entertained with great reſpect (a Houſe being purpoſely built at Weſtminſter for that uſe, royally furniſhed; Tilting and Juſts proclaimed, by Philip Earl of Arundel, Frederick Baron of Wandſor, Sir Philip Sidney, and Sir Fulk Grevil, againſt all Comers. The Delegates that were to confer with the French concerning the marriage, were Sir William Cecill Lord Treaſurer, Edward Earl of Lincoln Lord Admiral, Robert Dudley Earl of Leiceſter, Sir Chriſtopher Hatton, and Sir Francis Walſingham Secretary; by whom Covenants of Marriage were at length agreed on; Firſt, That the Duke of Anjou, and the Queen of England, within ſix weeks after the ratification of the Articles, ſhould contract Matrimony, and the reſt, moſt of them ſuch as were before agreed on in the Marriage between Queen Mary and King Philip, chiefly conſiſting in conferring Honour upon the Duke, but Power upon the Queen. It was alſo agreed, That all particulars ſhould be ratified within two Moneths, by the faithful Promiſe and Oath of the French King,

And Articles of the Marriage are agreed on.

King, for him and his Heirs, and a Reſervation was alſo added apart, with the Hands and Seals of every one of the Delegates, That Queen Elizabeth is not bound to finiſh the Marriage, untill ſhe and the Duke have given each other ſatisfaction in ſome particulars, and have certified the Freneh King of the ſame within ſix weeks. Before thoſe ſix weeks were expired, Simier, Secretary to the Councel, is ſent into France, to require the King of France his Confirmation: The King will not hear him, but preſſeth to have the Marriage accompliſhed, as it was contracted, and that nothing elſe was to be done. Simier on the other ſide, ſheweth by the Articles, That a League offenſive and defenſive muſt firſt be concluded, This the French King diſclaimeth: Whereupon Walſingham is preſently ſent to compoſe this difference, who joyntly with Henry Cobham, the Ambaſſadour in ordinary, and Simier, alledgeth to the French King theſe Particulars, That Queen Elizabeth for no other reaſon was willing to marry, but for the ſatisfaction of her people; and ſeeing many Impediments were come in the way ſince the firſt Treaty, namely the Civil War in France, and the Dukes engagement in a War with Spain, which makes the wiſeſt of her Subjects now to be againſt the Match: This hath made her to defer the accompliſhment of it, although her affection be ſtill conſtant toward the Duke. For this cauſe the Queen would have no further Treaty to be held, till the French Duke be freed from the Spaniſh war, and a League of mutual offence and defence be agreed on. The French King willingly accepted of the League defenſive; but of the offenſive he would hear no ſpeech, till the marriage were finiſhed.

But the King of France diſclaimeth the Articles.

The Duke of Anjou comes himſelf into England.

Not long after, the French Duke himſelf came into England, having with good ſucceſſe raiſed the Siege of Cambray; he was here received with as great humanity as he could wiſh, and nothing omitted, whereby he might judge himſelf to be truly welcome: Inſomuch that in November, when the Anniverſary of the Queens Inauguration came to be ſolemnized, the Queen (while they were in Love-conference) drew a Ring off from her finger, and put it upon his, upon ſome private conditions. The ſtanders by imagined, that by this Ceremony the marriage was confirmed between them; and Aldegond Governour of Antwerp being there, preſently diſpatched meſſengers into the Low-Countries, to give notice of it; and thereupon Bonfires were made, and all ſhews of rejoycing. But the Earl of Leiceſter (who privily plotted to croſſe the Match) Hatton the Vice-Chamberlain, and Secretary Walſingham, fret and are enraged, as if the Kingdom, the Queen and Religion, were now utterly overthrown. The Maids of Honour, and Ladies that were familiar with the Queen, made grievous lamentation, and ſo terrified and daunted her, that ſhe could take no reſt that night. The next day, ſhe calleth to her the French Duke, and cauſing all company to go aſide, they privately entertain a long diſcourſe. At length the Duke returning to his lodging, caſt the Ring away from him, and after a while takes it up again, terribly exclaiming againſt the levity and inconſtancy of Women.

And in a private conference with the Queen, ſhe draws a Ring from off her Finger and puts it upon his. The Engliſh Lords and Ladies imagining the marriage to be confirmed, fret exceedingly.

The next day ſhe calleth the French Duke to her, and after a long diſcourſe, made him exclaim on the Inconſtancy of Women.

The Queen at this time was much troubled at a Book lately put forth, with this Title, The Gulph wherein England will be ſwallowed, by the French Marriage: whereof, conceiving that ſome Puritan was the Author; it made her highly diſpleaſed with the Puritans: whereupon, within a few dayes, John Stubbes of Lincolns-Inne, a zealous Profeſſor, and the Author of this Book, (whoſe Siſter, Thomas Cartwright the Father of the Puritans had married) William Page that diſperſed the Copies, and Singleton the Printer were apprehended, againſt whom Sentence was pronounced, That their Right hand ſhould be cut off, by vertue of a Law made in the Reign of Philip and Mary, againſt the Authors and diſperſers of Seditious Writings, (though the chief Lawyers and Judges of the Kingdom could not agree concerning the force of that Statute.) Hereupon Stubbes and Page were brought to the Scaffold, made of purpoſe, in the Market-place at Weſtminſter, and their right hands with a Butchers knife & a mallet cut off by the wriſt; the Printer was pardoned. At that time, Stubbes when his right hand was cut off, uncovered his head with the left, and cryed out, God ſave the Queen, to the great amazement of all the Beholders.

Stubbes and Page have their Right hands cut off for writing a ſeditious Book againſt the marriage.

At this time the Queen, upon importunate ſuit of her Councel, gave way, that Edmund Campian, Ralph Sherwin, and Alexander Bryant, Prieſts, ſhould be called to the Bar, who being accuſed by vertue of a Law made in the five and twentieth year of King Edward the third, to have plotted the ruine of the Queen and Kingdom; to be adhering to the Pope, the Queens Enemy, and coming into England, to raiſe Forces againſt the State, were then condemned of High-Treaſon, and accordingly executed. Campian after he was convicted, being demanded; Firſt, whether Queen Elizabeth were a lawful Queen? would make no anſwer; afterward, Whether he would ſtand for the Queen, or the Pope, if he ſhould ſend an Army againſt the Queen; he plainly profeſſed, That he would be of the Popes ſide, and witneſſed ſo much under his hand. After this ſome other Papiſts upon the like occaſion were alſo put to death, which the Queen rather neceſſarily, than willingly aſſented to, as being unwilling to force the conſcience of any. Theſe, and the like exorbitances of Papiſts, were cauſe, that new and ſtrict Laws were enacted againſt them the Parliament following, which began the next January.

Campian, Sherwin and Bryant Prieſts are executed.

The Duke of Anjou goes out of England, whom the Queen brought on his way as far as Canterbury.

The French Duke after three moneths abode in England, took his Journey in February into the Low-Countries, whom the Queen her ſelf brought on his way as far as Canterbury; and then commanded the Earl of Leiceſter, the Lords Charles Howard, Hunſdon, Willoughby, Windſor, Sheffield, Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Francis Ruſſel, Sir George Bourchier, and ſome other prime Knights to accompany him to Antwerp, where he is made Duke of Brabant, Limbourgh and Lorrain; for the Dutch had long before removed the King of Spains Government, and quitted the people from their Oath of Allegiance, that it might be in their own power to chooſe any other Prince. Here the Duke of Anjou gave free leave to exerciſe the Roman Religion, to as many as would ſwear Fealty to him, and abjure the King of Spains authority: but after all, having ſpent a great maſſe of mony, with which he was ſupplyed from England; and obſerving that onely vain and empty titles were conferred upon him, while the States held all the Dominion in their own hands, he raſhly enterprized an aſſault upon Antwerp, and ſome other Towns, and ſhortly departed without any great matter performed.

At this time Queen Elizabeth, as well to get her ſome friends, as ſhe had procured her ſelf many enemies; received into the Order of the Garter, Frederick the ſecond King of Denmark; to whom ſhe employed Sir Peregine Bertye (whom ſhe had lately made Lord Willoughby of Eresby) to inveſt him.

Sir Peregine Bertye made Lord Willoughby of Eresby.

But now to prevent the Duke of Guyſes deſign in Scotland, which was to make uſe of the Duke of Lenox favour with the King, to withdraw his affection from the Engliſh: William Reuthen, whom the King had lately made Earl of Gowry, endeavoured with others, by all means to remove Lenox and the Earl of Arran from the King; and ſo, while Lenox was gone from Perth, (where the King at that time was) to Edenburgh, and Arran was alſo abſent on a journey: the Earls Gowry, Marre, Lindſey, and others, taking the opportunity, invited the King to the Caſtle of Reuthen, and there detained him, not permitting him to walk abroad: All his truſty ſervants they removed from about him; Arran they caſt in Priſon, enforced the King to call home the Earl of Angus, and to ſend away Lenox into France, who being a man of a ſoft and gentle diſpoſition, for the Kings ſafety readily conſented; and not content with all this, they compelled the King by his Letters to Queen Elizabeth, to approve and allow of this his thraldom. The Queen of Scots in the mean while, bewailing her own hard fortune, and the diſtreſs of the King her Son, layeth open the ſame in a large Letter, written to the Queen in French: With which Letter Queen Elizabeth being ſomewhat affected, ſent unto her Robert Beal Clerk of the Councel, to expoſtulate with her concerning the querulous writing, and joyntly with the Earl of Shrewsbury, to treat of the ſetting her at liberty. And indeed ſerious conſultations were held at the Councel Table about it, and the moſt were of opinion, that upon certain conditions ſhe ſhould have her liberty; but the Scottiſh of the Engliſh faction oppoſing it, nothing was effected.

The Earl Gowry and other Lords take the King, and keep him a priſoner.

Soon after this, the King ſent Colonell William Stewart and John Colvill to Queen Elizabeth, profering all manner of reſpect and obſervance, and requeſting her advice for quieting the tumults in Scotland, and alſo for his contracting of marriage. At which time, news was brought, that the Duke of Lenox was dead in France, who departing this life at Paris, & even at the very point of death, as often times before, made open profeſſion of the Proteſtant Religion; thereby confuting thoſe who had maliciouſly traduced him for a Papiſt. After whoſe death, when the ſurpriſers of the King were lift up in their own conceits, as thinking they had him ſafe enough; He on a ſudden (though ſcarce eighteen years of age) with ſome few others, conveyed himſelf to the Caſtle of St. Andrews, to whom the Nobility preſently repaired, bringing Armed Bands with them, as fearing ſome danger might befall him. Afterwards, in fair words he adviſed ſome of his ſurprizers to go from the Court, for avoiding of tumult, and promiſing them pardon, if they would crave it. But Gowry onely asked pardon, and ſubmitted himſelf, uſing this diſtinction, That he had not offended in matter, but in form only; and then the King ſent for the Earl of Arran to the Court, and reſpected him as his intimate friend, imploying him to compoſe the Differences amongſt the Nobility, and to purge the Kingdom and his own Court from civil diſſenſions.

The King of Scots frees himſelf from thoſe that had ſurprized him.

Whiles he is ſedulous in theſe cares, comes Sir Francis Walſingham from Queen Elizabeth, to adviſe him not to be led away by evil Counſellors, to the deſtruction of both Kingdoms. He findeth the King accompanyed with the flower of the Nobility, and beholdeth another manner of Majeſty than he looked for in Scotland: Having Audience given him, he put the King in mind of what the Queen out of Iſocrates, in private Letters had formerly admoniſhed him: That a Prince muſt be ſuch a lover of Truth, that more credit may be given to his bare word, than to anothers Oath; and in many words adviſed him, to beware now in his Youth of evil Counſellours, and alwayes to be like himſelf. The King anſwered, that he was an abſolute Prince, and would not that others ſhould appoint him Counſellours whom he liked not; but that he had long ſince devoted the firſt-fruits of his amity to the Queen of England his dear Siſter, and doth now willingly make profer of the ſame. Walſingham now dealt with him further; not to lay to the Queens charge what broyls had lately fallen out in Scotland; ſheweth, how beneficial to him, and to both Kingdoms Amity had been hitherto, and would be in time to come alſo, ſo it were not neglected; and that the ſame might the better be confirmed, if the variance between the Nobility were laid aſleep, by a Law of Oblivion Enacted in Parliament, and the Peers which now were removed from the Court called back again, religion looked into, and a firm League concluded between both Kingdoms. The King made anſwer, that he gladly embraced Amity with England, and that he would conſtantly defend the Religion already eſtabliſhed: Afterward he lovingly diſmiſſed Walſingham, though he held him no good friend to him and his Mother; and carefully looking to matters with underſtanding, even above his years, propoſed and profered reconciliation to thoſe that had ſurpriſed him, if within a limited time they asked pardon; which they were ſo far from doing, that they entred into new conſultations to ſurpriſe him again; whereupon they are commanded within a ſet ſet time to leave the Kingdom, of which number, Marre, Glames, Paſlet, and ſome other, betook themſelves into Ireland; Boyde, Zeſter, Weeme, Lochlevin, into the Low-Countries; Dumferlin into France; the Earl of Angus is confined to his Earldom, Gowry onely to his own ruine, ſtayeth behind after the limited time, hatching new deviſes.

Walſingham is ſent to the King of Scots, to adviſe him to take heed of evil Counſellours: and the Kings Anſwer.

About this time happened a difference, and thereupon a War between the Emperour of Muſcovia and the King of Sweden; when John King of Sweden, doubting himſelf to be no fit Match for the Emperour, ſent a Royal Ambaſſage to Queen Elizabeth, requeſting her to intercede for him to the Emperour; which ſhe did without delay, and by her Ambaſſadour drew the Muſcovian to a Peace upon reaſonable Conditions. But the the Muſcovian ſhortly after dying, and Theodorus his Succeſſor granting free Traffique to Merchants of all Nations that would come thither; the Queen importuned him to admit of none but Engliſh Merchants, requiring him to confirm the Priviledges which his Father had granted them: Whereto, by way of Anſwer, he commanded Free Trading for all the Engliſh, ſaying, it was not fit that a ſmall Company ſhould exerciſe a Monopoly, and all other be reſtrained: But as for Cuſtoms, he promiſed to take leſs by half of that Company than of any other, becauſe they firſt opened the way thither.

Albertus Alaſco a Palatine of Poland comes into England.

The next Summer, Albertus Alaſco, a Palatine of Poland, of a comely perſonage, and great learning, came into England to ſee the Queen, who was nobly entertained, both by her and the Nobility, as alſo by the Scholars of Oxford, with learned Orations, and other Recreations: but having tarryed here four moneths, and run into much debt, he ſecretly withdrew himſelf and departed. This man I ſaw my ſelf afterward in Crakow, very bare, though it was reported of him, That he had in a Dowry with a Wife, fifty Caſtles of great value: but what Mine can bear the charges of prodigality?

A year fatal to divers great men.

This year proved fatal to divers great men; for there dyed, firſt Thomas Ratcliff, the third Earl of Suſſex of this Family; a man of a great ſpirit, and great faithfulneſs to his Countrey. There dyed alſo Henry Wryotheſly Earl of Southampton, one exceedingly devoted to the Romiſh Religion, and a great Favourer of the Queen of Scots, which coſt him Queen Elizabeths diſpleaſure, and impriſonment beſides. There died alſo Sir Humphry Gilbert, who was caſt away at Sea, in his return from the North part of America, whither he lately ſayled with five Ships, having ſold his Patrimony, in hope to plant a Colony there. There dyed alſo Edmund Grindall Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being blind through age, a grave and pious Prelate, who ſtood highly in the Queens favour for a long time, till he loſt it at laſt, by favouring (as was ſaid) the Puritans Conventicles; but the true cauſe indeed was, for the diſallowing the Marriage of Julio an Italian Phyſitian with another mans Wife, againſt the Earl of Leiceſters pleaſure. Grindall dying, John Whitgift ſucceeded in the See of Canterbury, being tranſlated thither from the See of Worceſter.

Somervile and Arden are condemned; and why.

At this time, certain Popiſh Books written againſt the Queen, and Princes Excommunicate, withdrew divers from their Allegiance, and particularly, ſo intoxicated one Somervile, an Engliſh Gentleman, that he went privately to the Court, and breathing out nothing but blood and death againſt all Proteſtants, ſet upon one or two by the way with his drawn Sword. Being apprehended, he ſtuck not to ſay, That he would murder the Queen with his own hands. Hereupon he, and upon his intimation, Edward Arden his father-in-law (a man of an ancient Houſe in Warwick-ſhire) Ardens wife, their Daughter, Somervils wife, and Hall a Prieſt, were brought to the Bar, and all condemned; Somervile as principal, the reſt as acceſſaries. Three dayes after, Somervile was found ſtrangled in the Priſon, Arden was executed and quartered; the women and Prieſt were ſpared. Many pitied the old Gentleman Arden, as miſled by the Prieſt, and (as it was generally believed) brought to his end through the envy of Leiceſter, who he uſed to call Whore-maſter, Up-ſtart, and many ſuch opprobrious names.

In the Netherlands, the Engliſh Garriſon at Aloſt in Flanders being neglected, the Governour Pigot, and the other Captains, for want of pay, upon Compoſition, yielded up the Town to the Spaniard, and then fearing diſgrace at home, joyned themſelves to the Prince of Parma; at whoſe hands finding them ſlighted, by degrees they ſtole all away, and came all to unlucky ends.

Gyrald Fitz-Gyrald, the famous Rebel in Ireland, is by a Common Souldier ſlain. His great poſſeſſions, and numerous Kindred, all dead within the ſpace of three years.

In Ireland the famous Rebell Gyrald Fitz-Gyrald, the eleventh Earl of Deſmond of this Family, having a long time in lurking places eſcaped the Engliſh, was now by a common Souldier found out in a poor Cottage and ſlain. His head was ſent into England, and ſet upon London Bridge. This end had this great Lord, deſcended from Maurice, the Son of Gyrald of Windſore, an Engliſh man, famous amongſt thoſe who firſt ſet upon Ireland, in the year 1170. He poſſeſſed whole Countries, together with the County Palatine of Kerry, and had of his own Name and Race, at leaſt five hundred Gentlemen at his Command. All whom, and his own life alſo, he loſt within the ſpace of three years, very few of the Houſe being left alive. And this diſaſter he fell into, by proving Trayterous to his Prince, at the inſtigation of a certain Popiſh Prieſt. Of whom, the chief was one Nicholas Sanders an Engliſh man, who at the ſame time dyed miſerably of Famine, being ſtarved to death, when as being forſaken, and running mad upon his ill ſucceſſe, he roamed up and down the Mountains and Groves, finding nothing to ſuſtain him. In his Scrip were found certain Orations and Letters, written to hearten the Rebells, and promiſing large rewards from the Pope and King of Spain: Upon the Rebels ill ſucceſs, James Fitz-Euſtace, Viſcount Baltinglas fled into Spain, where he pined away with grief. He out of zeal to the Roman Religion, a little before he had taken up Arms with the Rebels, and exhorting the Earl of Ormond his Neighbour to do the like, (who drew his Linage from St. Thomas of Canterbury, he uſed theſe words to perſwade him, That if Saint Thomas of Canterbury had not died for the Church of Rome, thou hadſt never been Earl of Ormond: for King Henry the Second, to expiate the murther of Thomas Becket, gave large Lands in Ormond to his Predeceſſors.

The beginning of the next Spring, certain Scots, together with Gowry, plotted again to ſurprize the King, pretending onely a care of Religion, and to remove ill Counſellors from him: but the King having intelligence of their practiſe, uſed means by Colonell Steward, to have Gowry taken and caſt into priſon: whereupon Marre, Glames, Angus, and other of the Confederates flie into England, and beſeech the Queen to commiſerate their eſtate, who had incurred the Kings diſpleaſure, to do her and the Kingdom of England ſervice. The King on the other ſide, accuſeth them to the Queen of hainous Crimes, and requires to have them delivered up into his hands. But Secretary Walſingham, who bore great good will to theſe men, ſent

Whether a Secretary of State may not transact without special Commission from the Prince.

Letters with a Command, That they ſhould be ſafely admitted into Lindisferne, otherwiſe called, The holy Iſland; where Hunſdon being Governour there, and greatly addicted to the King of Scots, reſiſted Walſinghams Command, alledging he could not ſatisfie the Secretary in this point, unleſs the Queen gave expreſs Command. Hereupon grew a Diſpute, Whether a Secretary of State might not tranſact buſineſs of State, without ſpecial Commiſſion from the Prince. How this Caſe was determined, is uncertain; but ſure it is, the Scots came not thither, though ſome favour they had ſhewed them here in England. In the mean time, Gowry was tryed by his Peers at Sterlyn, where, being accuſed of many Treaſons, though he gave colourable anſwers to them all, yet was found guilty, condemned, and beheaded; whoſe head his Servants ſewing to his body, committed to the Grave.

The Earl Gowry is arraigned, condemned and beheaded.

Many practiſes are plotted againſt Queen Elizabeth in behalf of the Queen of Scots.

About this time were practiſes plotted againſt Queen Elizabeth, in behalf of the Queen of Scots, chiefly by Francis Throgmorton, eldeſt Son of John Throgmorton Juſtice of Cheſter, who came to be ſuſpected, by reaſon of Letters ſent to the Queen of Scots, which were intercepted. Upon his apprehenſion, Thomas Lord Paget and Charles Arundel, privately ſtole away into France, grievouſly complaining againſt Leiceſter and Walſingham, for alienating the Queen from them, and uſing ſuch wiles, that ſcarce any man was able to live in ſafety. Henry Earl of Northumberland, and Philip Earl of Arundel, were confined to their Houſes, his Wife committed to the cuſtody of Sir Thomas Shirley, William Howard, the Earls Brother, and Henry Howard their Uncle, Brother to the Duke of Norfolk, were examined about Letters from the Queen of Scots, and many Stratagems were ſet on foot, dangerous to ſome particular perſons, but neceſſary (as ſhould ſeem) for the Queens ſecurity. Certain it is, That now the Malice of the Papiſts againſt the Queen, brake forth more violently than ever before; for in printed Books, they ſtirred up the Queens own ſervants to attempt the like upon her, that Judith did on Olophernes. The Author of theſe Books could not be found, but the ſuſpition lay upon one Gregory Martin ſometime of Oxford; and Carter a Stationer, who printed the Books, ſuffered for it. And whereas the Papiſts every where traduced the Queen for cruelty, ſhe deſirous alwayes to leave a bleſſed remembrance behind her, grew extremely offended with the Commiſſioners for Popiſh cauſes, taxing them of too much cruelty: inſomuch, that they were fain, in a printed Declaration, to clear themſelves, proteſting; That they queſtioned no man for his Religion, but onely for dangerous attempts againſt the Queen and State; and that Campian himſelf was never ſo racked, but that he could preſently walk up and down. But all this gave not the Queen ſatisfaction, but ſhe Commanded the Commiſſioners to forbear Tortures, and the Judges other Puniſhments; and not long after, when ſeventy Prieſts were taken, and ſome of them condemned, and the reſt in danger of the Law, ſhe cauſed them all to be ſhipped away, and ſent out of England: The chief of whom were Gaſper Heywood, the great Epigrammatiſt's Son, the firſt Jeſuite that ever ſet Foot in England; James Boſgrave, John Hart, and Edmund Riſhton.

Sir William Wade ſent into Spain being not admitted to have Audience of the King, comes away without doing his Meſſage. Mendoza the Spaniſh Embaſſador is thruſt out of England, and why.

At this time Mendoza the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour, was thruſt out of England, for joyning with Throgmorton in his Treaſon againſt the Queen; whereupon Sir William Wade was ſent to the King of Spain, to ſatisfie him how ill Mendoza had diſcharged the Office of an Ambaſſadour here in England; who, when the King admitted him not to his Preſence, but in a ſlighting manner, putting him off to his Counſellours; Wade taking it in great diſdain, boldly ſaid, That it was a declared Cuſtom amongſt Princes (though in heat of War) to give Ambaſſadors audience, and thereupon ſtoutly refuſed to declare his Ambaſſage, and ſo returned into England unheard. The greateſt matters laid to Mendoza's charge, were gotten out of Throgmorton's Confeſſion; for when he was in danger to be apprehended, he ſent to Mendoza a box of Writings; and when his Cheſts were ſearched, there were found two Scrowls, one with the names of the Ports of England, and in the other, the names of the Nobility and Gentry in England, that favoured the Romiſh Religion. Theſe, when Throgmorton ſaw brought forth, he ſaid they were counterfeited, and ſtood to it upon the very Rack, but being brought to the Rack the ſecond time, he then confeſſed all; That Morgan, by Letters out of France, had given him information, that the Catholick Princes had decreed to invade England, and with the help of the Duke of Guyſe, to free the Queen of Scots; and that nothing was now wanting, but money and aid in England: and that for procuring of this, Charles Paget, under the counterfeit name of Mope, was ſent into Suſſex, where the Duke of Guyſe intended to land; and that he had imparted all this matter to Mendoza, and intimated the names of the Ports, and of the Noble men that ſhould aſſiſt. But being arraigned at the Guild-hall, he denied all this again, ſaying, He had ſpoken ſo, becauſe he would not be Racked again. Yet being condemned to die, he flying to the Queens mercy, confeſſed in a manner all he had before related; and then at the Gallows went about to deny it again. So falſe to it ſelf is the mind of man, when it is divided between hope and fear, and lies under the burthen of a guilty conſcience.

Sir William Wade is ſent to the Queen of Scots to treat with her about ſome conditions for ſetting her at liberty.

Sir William Wade being returning from Spain, was employed to the Queen of Scots about the Treaty begun two years before: To whom the diſtreſſed Queen ſincerely profeſſed, That ſhe devoted her ſervice and her ſelf to the Queen of England; and made ſolemn promiſe, That if the former Treaty might go on, ſhe would mediate with the King her Son, to receive into favour the Earl of Angus, and the other Scottiſh Lords, and would charge the Biſhops of Roſſe and Glaſco, her Agents in France, to have no further to do with the Engliſh Fugitives. Theſe things Queen Elizabeth heard gladly, and thereupon ſent Beal to the Queen of Scots, who joyntly with the Earl of Shrewsbury ſhould ſignifie unto her, That if ſhe continued ſtill in the ſame mind as ſhe had delivered to Wade; Sir Walter Mildmay ſhould come out of hand to her, and treat concerning her liberty; but withall, ſhe commanded Mildmay and Beal to dive into her as well as they could, to know what practiſes the Duke of Guyſe had on Foot. To that which ſhe had ſpoken to Sir William Wade, the Queen of Scots made a wary

wary anſwer; but to that concerning the Duke of Guyſe, ſhe plainly confeſſeth; That being ſickly her ſelf, and weak of body, ſhe had committed her ſelf and her Son to the Protection of the Duke of Guyſe, her dear Couſen, of whoſe intendments ſhe knoweth nothing; nor if ſhe did, would ſhe diſcloſe them, unleſs ſhe might be ſure of her own liberty. Laſtly, ſhe requeſteth, That being a free and abſolute Prince, ſhe may not be worſe handled, than Queen Elizabeth her ſelf was, when ſhe was a ſubject, and kept in priſon by her Siſter. Theſe things had a hearing, but no feeling, and the rather by a ſtrange accident; for Creighton a Scotiſh Jeſuite, ſayling from the Low-Countries, and taken by Dutch Pirats, had certain papers which he tore, and threw away, which thrown overboord, and by the wind blown back unto the Ship, miraculouſly (as Creighton himſelf ſaid) they were brought to Sir William Wade, who patching them together with much labour and cunning, diſcovered by them ſome new intendments of the Pope, the King of Spain, and the Guyſe, about the Invading of England: Whereupon, and upon divers other rumours, the better to provide for the ſafety of the Queen, a number of her Subjects (the Earl of Leiceſter being the formoſt) men of all ranks and conditions, bound themſelves mutually to each other by their Oaths and Subſcriptions, to perſecute all thoſe to the very death, that ſhould attempt any thing againſt the Queen; which League of theirs they called the Aſſociation.

An Aſſociation of Lords and others in defence of Queen Elizabeth.

The Queen of Scots who preſently apprehended, that this Aſſociation was entred into for her deſtruction; making this propoſition by Nave her Secretary, to the Queen and the Councel; That if ſhe might have her liberty granted, and be aſſured of the Queens love, ſhe would enter a ſtrict League and Amity with her, and paſſing by all matters of offence, eſteem and honour her above all the Princes of the Chriſtian world: yea, and (ſaving the ancient League betwixt France and Scotland) ſhe would her ſelf be comprehended in the Aſſociation, and a League defenſive, againſt all that ſhould go about to injure the Queen. Herewith Queen Elizabeth was wonderfully pleaſed, and at that time certainly had an inclination to grant her freedom. But ſee what malice can do; for many in England, but eſpecially the Scots of the adverſe party, endeavoured by all means to hinder it; exclaiming, That the Queen ſhould be no longer in ſafety, if the Queen of Scots were ſet at liberty; That both Kingdoms were utterly undone, if ſhe were admitted into the joynt Government of the Kingdom of Scotland, and that the reformed Religion lay a bleeding, if Papiſts were admitted within the Court walls; nor was this all, but the Scottiſh Miniſters in their Pulpits, loaded the Queen of Scots with all manner of contumelies, ſlandring the King himſelf, and his Councel in the moſt bitter manner; and being cited to appear before him, refuſed, ſaying, That the Pulpits were exempted from all Regal Authority, and that Eccleſiaſtical perſons were not to be cenſured by the Prince, but by their own Conſiſtory (directly againſt the Laws made the year before in Parliament) whereby the Kings Authority over all perſons, whether Eccleſiaſtical or Secular, was confirmed; and namely, That the King and his Councel were Supreme Judges in all Cauſes; and that whoſoever refuſed to be tryed by them, ſhould be holden guilty of High-Treaſon; all Presbyters and Lay-conventicles forbidden, Parity of the Clergy taken away, and the Authority of Biſhops reſtored, whoſe Calling the Presbiteries had condemned as wicked and Antichriſtian: And laſtly, all ſcurrilous Libels againſt the King and his Mother prohibited; namely, the Scottiſh Hiſtory of George Buchanan, and his Dialogue, de Jure Regni apud Scotos.

The Queen of Scots offers to enter into the Aſſociation, if ſhe may have her liberty.

To which Queen Elizabeth is inclining.

But is made averſe from it by Scots and Engliſh of the adverſe party, and eſpecially by Scottiſh Miniſters.

The Queen of Scots is taken from the Earl of Shrewsbury, and committed to the cuſtody of Sir Amias Pawlet.

At this time, upon her Adverſaries ſuggeſtion, the Queen of Scots is taken from the Earl of Shrewsbury, and committed to the cuſtody of Sir Amias Pawlet and Sir Drue Drury, and that on ſet purpoſe (as ſome were perſwaded) to drive her into abrupt and deſperate attempts; and indeed upon this, ſhe grew more importunate with the Pope and King of Spain, to haſten their intendment, whatſoever became of her, as ill indeed was like to become of her, if it be true (as ſome ſaid) that Leiceſter ſent out aſſaſſinates to make her away, but that Drury deteſted the villany, and would grant them no acceſs.

A Combination in the Catholicks, to marry the Queen of Scots to ſome Engliſh Nobleman of the Romiſh Religion; and who he was thought to be.

And now to alienate Queen Elizabeth utterly from her; it is ſuggeſted to her, That Allen for the Catholicks of the Clergy, Inglefield for the Laity, and the Biſhop of Roſſe for the Queen of Scots, with conſent of the Pope and King of Spain, had joyntly combined to depoſe her, and to bar the King of Scotland from his hereditary Right to the Crown of England, and to marry the Queen of Scots to an Engliſh Nobleman of the Romiſh Religion, and him the Engliſh Catholicks ſhould chooſe King of England, and the Pope confirm the Election: and all this upon the credit of Hart the Prieſt: but who this Engliſh Nobleman ſhould be that ſhould marry the Queen of Scots, could not be found, though Walſingham were buſie to ſearch it out: the fame went upon Henry Howard the Duke of Norfolks Brother, who was a ſingle man, a great Papiſt, and of high eſtimation among the Catholicks.

Charles Nevill the laſt Earl of Weſtmerland of this Family, dies in Exile: and of the many Noble Perſonages deſcended from that Houſe.

This year died in Exile and miſery Charles Nevell, who was in the Rebellion in the North, the laſt Earl of Weſtmerland of this Family; a houſe from whence deſcended many Noble Perſonages, ſix Earls of Weſtmerland, two Earls of Salisbury and Warwick, an Earl of Kent, a Marqueſs Mountacute, a Duke of Bedford, Baron Ferrers of Ouſley, the Lord Latymer, the Lord of Aburgaveny, one Queen, & five Dutcheſſes (to let paſs Counteſſes and Baroneſſes) an Archbiſhop of York, and a numerous company of other Lords. In England died none of reckoning this year, but only Plowden the famous Lawyer; but in France, the Duke of Anjou died of grief; and in Holland, William Prince of Orange, ſhot into the body with three Bullets, by one Balthaſar Gerard, a Burgundian.

Plowden the great Lawyer dies.

The Prince of Orange is ſhot and ſlain by a Burgundian.

It was now the year 1585, and the 28th. of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when, to tie the French King more nearly to her, whom the year before ſhe had received into the number of the Knights of the Garter, ſhe ſent the Earl of Derby into France, to inveſt him with the Robes and Ornaments, according to the due ſolemnity; which he kindly accepted, and at Evening Prayer was inveſted with them.

1585.

At this time a Parliament was aſſembled at Weſtminſter, wherein William Parry a Welſh-man,

William Parry Doctor of the Laws, condemned, and executed; and for what cause, a Doctor of the Laws, when in the Lower House a Bill was read against the Jesuites, he alone stood up, and exclaimed that it was a cruel and bloody Law: and being asked his reason, he stoutly refused, unless he were required by the Lords of the Councel. Hereupon he was sent to the Gate-house, but upon submission, was received into the House again. Soon after, he was accused by Edward Nevill, for holding secret consultations about making the Queen away; Who thereupon apprehended, upon his examination, confessed in effect thus much, That out of discontent he went beyond the Sea, where, by the encouragement of Campegio, the Popes Nuntio at Venice, and grant of a plenary Indulgence from the Pope, he undertook to kill the Queen; but coming into England to that intent, he altered his mind, and disclosed to the Queen the whole matter. After this, he received a Letter from the Cardinal of Como, perswading him to go forward with the Enterprise; and this Letter also he shewed the Queen. After this, he chanced to see a Book of Doctor Allens, written contra Justitiam Brittannicam, wherein was declared, That Princes who were for heresie excommunicate, might lawfully be deprived of their life and Kingdom. This Book wonderfully confirmed him, and he read it to Nevill; who, though he took an Oath of secrecy, yet now upon a hope of the Earldom of Westmerland, betrayed him. This was his confession before Baron Hunsdon, Sir Christopher Hatton, and Sir Francis Walsingham: as likewise in his Letters to the Queen, to the Lord Burleigh, and the Earl of Leicester, acknowledging his fault, and craving mercy. A few days after, he was called to the Bar in Westminster-Hall, where he confessed himself guilty, and thereupon was condemned. After the sentence of death pronounced, he furiously cited the Queen to Gods Tribunal: five days after he was laid upon a Hurdle, and dragged through the City to Westminster, where at the Gibbet he made a vain-glorious boasting of his faithfulness to the Queen, but not so much as in a word commended himself to God; and in the great Palace at Westm. was executed as a Traytor, the Nobility & Commons sitting then in Parliament.

Laws made for safeguard of the Queen.

In this Parliament, the Association before spoken of, was universally approved, and enacted in this Form; That four and twenty, or more, of the Queens Privy-Councel, and Peers of the Realm, should be selected and authorized under the Great Seal of England, To make enquiry of all such persons as shall attempt to invade the Kingdom, or raise Rebellion, or shall attempt any evil against the Queens Person, for whomsoever, and by whomsoever that layeth any claim to the Crown of England; and that person for whom, or by whom they shall attempt any such thing, shall be altogether uncapable of the Crown; and more to this purpose. Laws also for the Queens safety, were enacted against Jesuits and Popish Priests, and against all that shal receive or relieve them. These Laws terrified many, and particularly out of fear of them, Philip Earl of Arundel, the Duke of Norfolks eldest Son, purposed with himself to travel beyond Seas; for having been once or twice cited before the Lords of the Councel, and confined to his House, and after six moneths set at liberty, he thereupon wrote a Letter to the Queen, That for the service of God, and his Souls health, he purposed to leave his Country, but not his loyal affection towards her; but as he was taking Shipping, by his own servants treachery he was discovered, apprehended, and laid in the Tower.

The Earl of Arundel committed to the Tower, and why.

Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland being in the Tower, is found dead in his Bed.

At the same time lay in the Tower Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland; a man of a lofty spirit, being suspected by reason of secret consultation with Throgmorton, the Lord Paget and the Guises, about the invading of England, and freeing of the Queen of Scots (whose cause he ever highly favoured) but in the moneth of June, he was found dead in his bed, shot into the body with three bullets, under his right Pap, and the door bolted on the inside. The Coroners Inquest examining the matter, found and pronounced that he had killed himself. Three days after, the Lords meeting in the Star-chamber, Bromley Lord Chancellor, declared this fact of the Earls, and then commanded the Attorney-General to shew the cause of his imprisonment, and the manner of his death; whereupon, Popham first, and then Egerton the Queens Solicitor, in long Orations, lay open all his Treasons, and how for fear of the Law, he had laid violent hands upon himself.

Queen Elizabeth enters League with the Princes of Germany.

And now the Queen knowing that the seeds of these Treasons proceeded from the Duke of Guise, and his adherents, she sought for the strengthening of her self, to enter into the League with the Princes of Germany; and to this end, she sent Sir Thomas Bodley to the King of Denmark, to the Count Elector Palatine of the Rhine, to the Duke of Saxony, Wittenbergh, Brunswick, Lonceburgh; the Marques of Brandenburgh, and the Lantgrave of Hessia; and into Scotland, she sent Sir Edward Wotton, to let the King understand how sincerely she was affected towards him, and withal to draw the King (if he could) into a League of mutual defence and offence, and to commend to him the Match of the King of Denmarks Daughter. The King was very inclinable to the matter of the League, but for the present, the business was interrupted by the death of Francis Russel, Son to the Earl of Bedford, slain at a meeting to compound a difference between the Borderers, by a sudden tumult of the Scots, but who it was that slew him, was not known. The English laid it upon the Earl of Arran, and the Lord Fernihurst Governour of the middle Borders; whereupon, at the Queens complaint, the Earl of Arran was confined, and Fernihurst committed to prison at Dundee, where he died; a man of great valour and resolution, and one that was always firm for the Queen of Scots. But Queen Elizabeth not thus satisfied, gave leave by way of connivence to the Scottish Lords that were fled into England, namely, the Earl of Angus, the Hamiltons, and John Gladius, the Earl of Marre, Glames, and other, that they should steal away into Scotland, (she supplying them with money) there to master and subdue the Earl of Arran. For Maxwell, who was lately made Earl of Bothwell, Baron Humes, Goldingnolls, and other in Scotland, had already promised them their assistance, even in the very Court. Sir Patrick Gray (Arrans great Rival for the Kings favour) Belenden, and Secretary Maitland (by Wottons craft) were made against Arran. These men, upon their first entry in Scotland, command all persons in the Kings Name, to aid them for conserving the truth of the Gospel, for freeing the King from corrupt Counsellors, and for maintaining of Amity with the English, so as there presently joyned joyned with them about eight thousand men. The Earl of Arran hearing hereof, makes haſt to the King, and accuſeth Patrick Gray as Author of this commotion: but whiles Arran was making proviſion for defence of the Town, the enemies were ready to ſcale the Walls: whereupon Arran being adviſed, that onely his life was ſought, gets ſecretly away with onely one Servant, the reſt betook themſelves to the King in the Caſtle. The Rebels get into the Market-place, and diſplay their Banners againſt the Caſtle: The King ſends Gray to know the reaſon of their coming; they anſwer, to ſubmiſs themſelves, and in humble manner to kiſs the Kings hands: the King offereth reſtitution of all their Goods, if they would depart; They deſire to be admitted to his Preſence, which upon theſe conditions the King granted. That they ſhould not attempt any thing againſt his life, or thoſe whom he ſhould nominate, nor make any innovation in the Goverment. They proteſt, They are ready to ſacrifice their Lives for the Kings ſafety; and of any Innovation, they had not ſo much as a thought; onely they requeſt to have their adverſaries, and the Fortifications of Scotland delivered up into their hands. Hereupon after a dayes Conſultation, they are admitted into the Kings Preſence, and forthwith the Earls of Mount-Roſſe, Crawford and Rothſay; Colonell Steward, Downs, Arran's Brothers, and others, were delivered to them: The Earl of Arran, who was fled into the Weſtern Iſlands, is called home: the Aſſaulters were pardoned, and pronounced good Subjects. Hamilton is ſet over Dumbriton Caſtle; Goldingknolles over Edenburgh; the Earl of Angus over Tantallon; the Earl of Marre over Sterlin; and Glames ismade Captain of the Guard. Upon this, all Proſcriptions and Out-lawries againſt all Perſons, ſince the Kings Inauguration (ſaving ſome few proſcribed for the murder of the Kings Father) are called in, and with an unanimous conſent of all Parties, the Treaty of a League with the Queen of England is agreed upon, and Delegates nominated to that purpoſe.

A combuſtion in Ireland, how cauſed, and how pacified.

In Ireland likewiſe was a Combuſtion this year, firſt the Burkes (deſcended of the ancient Family of the Burroughs in England) provoked by the ſevere Government of Richard Bingham Governour of Connaght, raiſe Rebellion; but this was ſoon ſuppreſſed, for Thomas Burk dyed fighting; Meyler and Theobald Burk were taken and hanged. After this the Clan Gibbons, Clan Donells and Joyes, combined together in great numbers, and ſay plainly, They will have a Mac-William of their own, one of the Burks to rule over them, or ſome other Lord out of Spain; they will admit of no Sheriff into their Country, nor appear before the Engliſh Courts of Juſtice; and thereupon harried all the Country with Fire and Sword, and neither by the perſwaſions of the Archbiſhop Twan, nor by the intreaties of the Earl of Clan-riccard (the chief of the Houſe of the Burks) would be quieted, till John Bingham the Preſidents Brother, following them into the Woods, drave away five thouſand head of their Cattell, ſo as after forty dayes, half ſtarved, they came forth and ſubmitted themſelves. But this was not yet an end; for now the Preſident underſtood, That two thouſand Scottiſh Iſlanders were landed, and ready to break into Connaght; whereupon he muſters his men to give them battell; but they flying to Bogs and Woods, he retires back, as though in fear, thereby to draw them from the Bogs to firm ground, and then with his whole Forces ſet upon them, ſlew three thouſand of them (indeed all but fourſcore) amongſt whom were Donell Garmy and Alexander Garmy, the Sons of James Mac-Conel, who had long diſquieted this part, and thoſe Burks who were the firſt Authors of this Rebellion. This was a famous Victory, for the good of the preſent and future times; for hereby the name of the Mac-Williams in Connaght was utterly extinct, and the inſolent attempts of the Scottiſh Iſlanders abſolutely cruſhed.

The Name of Mac-Williams in Connaght is utterly extinct.

The States of the Low-Countries fly to Queen Elizabeth for protection, which ſhe for the preſent refuſeth.

In the Low-Countries at this time the States were very hard beſet, ſo as they held a Conſultation, whither to flie for Protection, either to the French King, or to the Queen of England. Monſieur Prunie the French Ambaſſadour ſhewed many advantages, and gave many reaſons why they ſhould flie rather to the French King; the Engliſh on the other ſide, alledged many Reaſons why they ſhould flie rather to the Queen of England; but in concluſion, they have firſt recourſe to the King of France, and afterward being by him neglected, to the Queen of England. But then in England it was conſulted, Whether it were meet to protect them; wherein the Counſel was divided; ſome were of Opinion, That it were good to receive and aid them, leſt the Spaniard firſt conquering them, might have the better way to annoy England; others again thought, They were to be held no better than Rebels to their lawful Soveraign, and therefore unworthy of aſſiſtance. After long debating the matter, the Queen refuſeth to take them into Protection, much leſs to exerciſe Soveraignty over them. Nevertheleſs to raiſe the Siege of Antwerp, which was then beleaguer'd by the Prince of Parma, ſhe was content to ſupply them with four thouſand Souldiers, ſo as the Town of Sluce, and the Ordnance belonging to it, were given up into their hands: but while this matter was diſcuſſing, the Town of Antwerp was fain to yield it ſelf.

But at laſt ſhe undertakes it.

But the Queen better bethinking her ſelf, partly as fearing the growth of the King of Spain's Power, and partly, as commiſerating the afflicted of her own Religion, at laſt reſolves to undertake their protection, upon condition of her part, to ſupply them with five thouſand Foot, and a thouſand Horſe, under a ſufficient General, paying them during the War; and afterward the expenſes to be payed back, upon condition on their part, by way of Pledge, to deliver Fluſhing and the Fort of Ramekin, the Town of Brill, with the two neighbouring Forts: and for the juſtifying of this her action, ſhe ſet forth a large Declaration. And knowing that herein ſhe incenſed the King of Spain, ſhe thought beſt to turn his anger further from home, and thereupon ſent out Sir Francis Drake and Chriſtopher Carlile, with a Navy of one and twenty Ships (wherein were two thouſand Volunteers and Mariners) towards the Weſt-Indies; who firſt ſurprized the Town of St. Jago, afterward St. Dominick (where five and twenty thouſand Crowns were given them, to ſpare the Town from burning) afterward Cartagena,

She ſends Sir Francis Drake and Chriſtopher Carlile to the Weſt, and what they effected there.

Cartagena, which they held ſeven weeks, till the Spaniards redeemed it for a hundred and ten thouſand Crowns. After this, the Calenture waxing hot, and diminiſhing their Forces, they returned homewards, paſſing by Virginia, a Colony which Sir Walter Raleigh had there planted; from whence Drake brings home with him Ralph Lane, who was the firſt that brought Tobacco into England, which the Indians take againſt crudities of the Stomach. At this Expedition were loſt about ſeven hundred men, who for the moſt part died of Calentures: their Booty amounted to the value of threeſcore thouſand pounds Sterling, beſides two hundred and forty Braſs and Iron Pieces. Theſe things were done under the Torrid Zone in America; when in the mean while, Captain John Davis, with two Ships (at the charges of William Sanderſon, and other Citizens of London) found out a way to the Eaſt-Indies, by the higher part of America, under the Frigid Zone.

Tobacco firſt brought into England at this time by Ralph Lane.

John Davis finds out a way to the Eaſt-Indies by the higher part of America.

At the end of this year, the Earl of Leiceſter is ſent General of the Queens Forces into Holland, accompanied with the Earl of Eſſex, the Lords Audley and North, Sir Wil. Ruſſel, Sir Tho. Sherley, Sir Arthur Baſſet, Sir Walter Waller, Sir Gervaſe Clifton, and divers other Knights, beſides five hundred Gentlemen. Landing at Fluſhing, he was firſt by Sir Philip Sidney the Governor his Nephew, after by the Towns of Zealand and Holland, entertained in moſt magnificent manner; and coming to the Hague in January, the States by Patent committed to him the command and abſolute authority over the united Provinces, with the Titles of Governor and Captain General of Holland, Zealand, and the Confederate Provinces: So as being now ſaluted with the Title of his Excellency, he began to aſſume unto him Princely ſpirits. But the Queen took him ſoon off from further aſpiring, writing unto him in moſt peremptory manner; That ſhe wondred how a man whom ſhe had raiſed out of the duſt, could ſo contemptuouſly violate her commands, and therefore charged him upon his Allegiance, to put in execution the Injunctions ſhe ſent him by Hennage her Vice-Chamberlain; Withall, in Letters apart, ſhe expoſtulateth with the States, that to her great diſparagement, they had caſt upon the Earl of Leiceſter her Subject, the abſolute command over the united Provinces, without her privity, which ſhe her ſelf had utterly refuſed; and therefore willeth them to deveſt him of that abſolute authority, to whom ſhe had ſet bounds, which he ſhould not paſs. The States return Anſwer, That they are heartily ſorry they ſhould incur her diſpleaſure by conferring upon the Earl that abſolute Authority, not having firſt made her acquainted, but they beſeeched her to conſider the neceſſity of it; ſeeing, that for avoiding of confuſion, that Authority muſt needs be caſt upon ſome one or other; Neither was there any great matter in the word Abſolute, ſeeing the Rule and Dominion reſided ſtill in the people. By theſe Letters and Leiceſters own ſubmiſſive writing, the Queen was ſoon ſatisfied; Leiceſter all this while receiveth Contributions and Rewards from all Provinces, maketh martial Laws, and endeavouring likewiſe to raiſe new Cuſtoms upon Merchandizes, incurred great diſlike amongſt the common people. His firſt ſervice was to relieve Grave a Town in Brabant, which the Prince of Parma, by Count Mansfield had beſieged: Hither he ſent the Count Hohenlo a German, and Norris General of the Engliſh Foot, but notwithſtanding all the great Service they did there, the Town in the end was taken; but Hemart the Governor, for his cowardly yielding it up, loſt his head. From hence the Prince of Parma marched into Gelderland, and pitched his Tents before Venlow, where Skenkic a Frizlander, and Roger Williams a Welſhman performed great ſervice, yet that Town in a ſhort time was taken alſo. But in the mean while the Lord Willoughby Governor of Bergen ap Zome, cut off the enemies Convoyes, and took away their Victuals; and Sir Philip Sidney and Maurice the Prince of Oranges Son, upon a ſudden onſet, took Axale, a Town in Flanders. From Venlow the Prince of Parma goes to Berke, where there were twelve thouſand Engliſh, under the command of Colonell Morgan; he notwithſtanding laid Siege to the Town, which the Earl of Leiceſter came to raiſe, but finding his Forces too weak to raiſe it, he ſeeks to divert it, by beleaguering Duisburgh; which before the Prince of Parma could come to relieve, he took. And now the Prince of Parma, fearing leaſt Zutphen ſhould come in danger, commandeth Victuals to be carried thither, which the Spaniards carrying along in a fogge, the Engliſh by chance lighted on them, vanquiſhed a Troop of their Horſe, ſlew Hannibal Gonzaga, and divers others, but then on the Engliſh ſide was one ſlain, more worth than all the Engliſh and Spaniards put together, Sir Philip Sidney, who having his Horſe ſlain under him, and getting upon another, was ſhot into the thigh, and 25 days after, in the flower of his age, dyed: A man of ſo many excellent parts of Art and Nature, of Valour and Learning, of Wit and Magnanimity; that as he had equalled all thoſe of former Ages, ſo future Ages will hardly be able to equal him. His Funerals were in ſumptuous manner ſolemnized at St. Pauls Church in London. James King of Scotland made his Epitaph, and both Univerſities celebrated his death with Funeral Verſes.

The Earl of Leiceſter is ſent General of the Queens Forces into Holland.

The States commit to him the abſolute command over the united Provinces. Which the Queen is angry at.

What was done by the Earl of Leiceſter at his being in Holland.

Sir Philip Sidney is ſlain.

1586.

After this Leiceſter aſſaulted Zutphen, where ſetting upon a Fort, he takes it in this manner: Edward Stanley (of the Stanlies of Elford) catching hold of a Spaniards Launce, which was brandiſhed at him, held it ſo faſt, that by it he was drawn into the very Fort; whereupon the Spaniards being affrighted (as thinking all the enemies were coming up) forſook the place; Leiceſter Knighted Stanley for this act, gave him forty Pounds in preſent money, and a yearly Penſion of an hundred Marks during his life. And now though in this forwardneſs to win the Town, yet Winter being already come on, he thought it unſeaſonable to beſiege it any longer (eſpecially ſo many Engliſh Garriſons lying round about it, which were in the nature of a Siege) but returned to the Hague, where the States entertained him with complaints, that their money was not carefully husbanded, that the number of the Engliſh ſupplies were not full, that forreign Souldiers were levyed without their conſent, that the Priviledges of the United Provinces were ſet at nought, and new devices for contribution invented; for all which evils, they intreated him to provide ſome preſent remedy. To which complaints (having a purpoſe to go for England) he gave a friendly anſwer; answer; but upon the very day in which he was to depart, he committeth the Government of the Province, to the deliberation of the States; and the same day made another private instrument of Writing, where he reserved to himself the whole authority over the Governours of the several Provinces, Cities, and Forts; and more than this, taketh away the wonted Jurisdiction from the States Councel, and Presidents of the Provinces; and came into England the third day of December. And thus passed the Affairs of the Netherlands for this year.

The States complain of the Earl of Leiceſters carriage.

And the States excuſe it.

Philip Earl of Arundel is fined, and why.

But in England, Philip Earl of Arundel, who had lyen in prison a whole year, was at last brought to the Starchamber; and being charged with fostering of Priests, and having correspondence with Allen and Parsons the Jesuite, and offering to depart the Kingdom without license, was fined ten thousand Pounds, and imprisonment during the Queens pleasure.

A League of strict Amity concluded with the King of Scots.

At this time, the Queen, by Sir Horatio Palavicino, supplyed with a large sum of money the King of Navarre; through whose side the Guyses opposed the reformed Religion in Scotland, but her most intentive care was how to unite England and Scotland in a solid friendship: To which end, she sent Thomas Randall into Scotland, who making Propositions to the King, touching a League offensive and defensive, though the King at first required some additions, and though the French Ambassador infinitely opposed it, yet at last he consented to it; and in July following, there met at Berwick, Edward Earl of Rutland, William Lord Ewer, and Thomas Randall for the Queen of England; Francis Earl of Bothwell, Robert Lord Boyde, and Humes for the King of Scots, and there the League (which was called the League of strict amity; for that the word Offensive, liked not the Scots) was upon certain points concluded; First, for the maintenance of the Reformed Religion, and then other such Articles, as commonly in Leagues are usual.

A dangerous Conspiracy is at this time discovered, begun by John Savage, but prosecuted by Anthony Babington and divers others.

The very same moneth that this League was agreed on, a most daugerous Conspiracy against the Queen was discovered. For first, one John Savage was by the perswasion of Gifford, Doctor of Divinity, induced to believe, that it was a meritorious work, to take away the lives of Princes Excommunicate, who thereupon vowed to kill Queen Elizabeth: but to make the Queen and her Councel secure, at the same time they wrote a Book, exhorting the Papists in England to attempt nothing against their Prince, and to use only the Christian weapons of Tears, Prayers, Watching, and Fasting. About Whitsuntide one Ballard a Seminary Priest of Rheims, acquainted with the Vow of Savage, (having dealt in France with Mendoza and Charles Paget, about invading of England) arrived here in a Souldiers habit, and by a counterfeit name, called Captain Foscu; with these matters he acquainted one Anthony Babington, a Gentleman of Derbyshire, who by the Bishop of Glasco, the Queen of Scots Ambassador in France, had been commended to her as one worthy of her love; so, as between them there passed often Letters in unknown Characters. In short time, Babington had drawn into the Plot, other Gentlemen as zealous of the Romish Religion as himself; namely, Edward Windsor Brother to the Lord Windsor, Thomas Salisbury of a good Family in Devonshire, Charles Tilney one of the Queens Pensioners, Chydiock Tichburn of Hampshire, Edward Abington (whose Father was Cofferer to the Queen) Robert Gage of Surrey, John Travers, and John Charnock of Lancashire, John Jones, Savage formerly spoken of, Barnwell of a noble Family in Ireland, and Henry Dunne a Clerk in the Office of First-Fruits and Tenths; one Pollie also screued himself into their company, a fellow throughly acquainted with the affairs of the Queen of Scots, who was thought to have revealed all their Consultations to Walsingham day by day. To these Gentlemen, Babington communicateth his affairs, but not every particular to every one, but to Ballard, Tichburn, and Dunne, he sheweth the Letters which passed between him and the Queen of Scots: with Tilney and the rest, he dealeth to be assistants; of whom, some at first loth, at last consented, and in a foolish vain-gloriousnesse, a Picture of the Assassinates was made to the life, and Babington in the midst, with these words, Quorsum hæc alio properantibus? This Picture (they say) was gotten and privately shewed to the Queen, who knew none of them by face, but only Barnwell, (who had oftentimes come to her in the causes of the Earl of Kildare, whose servant he was.) Certain it is, that the Queen one day walking abroad, spied this Barnwell, and turning to Hatton, said, Am not I well Guarded, that have not so much as one man in the company with a sword by his side? Thus much Barnwell himself told the rest of his Confederacy, and how easie a matter it had been to have dispatched her at that time, if the rest had been present. The chief discoverer of the Plot, was the aforesaid Gifford: This man was a Gentleman of a good House at Chellington in Staffordshire, not far from Chartley, where the Queen of Scots was kept prisoner, and was now sent by the English Fugitives in France, under the counterfeit name of Luson, to put Savage in mind of the Vow he had made, and to convey Letters between them and the Queen of Scots. But he, whether pricked in Conscience, or dismayed in minde, came to Walsingham privately, revealing who he was, and for what end, and by whom sent into England. Walsingham courteously entertained him, and sent him down into Staffordshire, to do the work he had undertaken. Here Gifford bribing the Brewer of the house, where the Queen of Scots lay, contrived the matter in such sort with him, that by a hole in the Wall, in which a loose stone was put, he should give in, and receive forth Letters, the which by messengers purposely laid by the way, came ever more to Walsinghams hands, who broke them open, copied them out, and by the rare cunning of one Thomas Philips, found out the meaning of the private Characters, and by the singular Art of Arthur Gregory, sealed them again so curiously, that no man would imagine them to have been opened, and ever sent them to the parties, to whom the superscription directed them. In like manner were the former Letters from the Queen of Scots to Babington intercepted; as also other Letters written at the same time to Mendoza the Spanish Ambassador, Charles Paget, the Lord Paget, the Archbishop of Glasco, and Francis Englefield. The Queen as soon as she understood by these Letters of the storm hanging over her her head, both at home and abroad, commanded Ballard to be apprehended, who on a ſuddain is taken in Babingtons houſe. Babington hereupon goeth to Walſingham, with whom he had long been a ſuiter, for licence to go into France, promiſing to do great matters in diſcovering the practiſes of the Fugitives; Walſingham with fair promiſes drives him off from day to day; and now perſwades him, that for a ſmall ſpace till he could get his licenſe ſealed, he would lodge at his houſe in London, where they might have ſecret Conference without ſuſpition. This web Walſingham himſelf had ſpun hitherto, and no other of the Queens Councel were made acquainted; and longer yet he would have drawn the thread out, but that the Queen was unwilling; leſt (as ſhe ſaid) by not avoiding danger when ſhe might, ſhe ſhould ſeem rather to tempt God, than to truſt in him. Whereupon, Walſingham ſent a Note to his man Scudamore from the Court, to look carefully to Babington: This Note was delivered in ſuch manner, that Babington ſitting by a Table when Scudamore read it, over-looked him, and read it likewiſe: Hereupon ſuſpecting that all was diſcovered, the next Night he and Scudamore, and one or two more of Walſinghams ſervants ſupping at a Tavern, and being very merry, he made an excuſe that he muſt needs ſtep aſide, and roſe up, leaving his Cloak and his Sword, and ſo made haſte through the dark to Weſtminſter, where Gage and he changed apparel, and then together withdrew themſelves into St. Johns Wood near the City, whither Barnwell and Dun betook themſelves. In the mean ſpace they were proclaimed Traytors all England over. Hereupon they lay lurking in Woods and by-places; they ſhave Babingtons face, diſfigure the beauty of his Countenance (for he was of an extraordinary beauty) with the huſks of green Wallnuts; and when they were half ſtarved, went to the houſes of the Bellamies, near Harrow on the Hill, who were great Papiſts; There they were hid in Barns, and put into a Countrey habit: But notwithſtanding all their ſhifting, within ten days after they were diſcovered and brought to London. The other Complices were ſoon after taken, moſt of them in the Suburbs of the City, Salisbury and Traverſe in Cheſhire, and Jones in Wales, who harboured them in his houſe, after he knew they were proclaimed Traytors; Windſor only was never heard of. Many days were ſpent in the examination of them, who cut one the others Throats, with their own Confeſſions. All this while, the Queen of Scots and her Servants are ſo narrowly looked to by Pawlet, that ſhe knew nothing of all theſe paſſages: As ſoon as they were apprehended, Thomas George was ſent to acquaint her with the whole matter, which yet he did not do, till ſhe was got on Horſe-back to ride a hunting, and was not then ſuffered to return, but in ſhew of Courteſie was carried up and down, to ſee the Houſes of the Gentry thereabouts. In which mean while John Manners, Edward Acton, Richard Bagot, and Sir William Wade, took Nave and Curle the Queen of Scots Secretaries, and the reſt of her Servants, and delivered them to Keepers apart, that they might have no ſpeech between themſelves, nor with their Lady the Queen of Scots. Then they broke open all dores, and ſuch Desks and Boxes as they found with any Papers in them, they ſet their ſeals upon, and ſent them to the Court: In which, being broken open before the Queen, were found a number of Letters from Foreign parts, the Copies likewiſe of Letters ſent to ſeveral perſons, and threeſcore Alphabets at leaſt of private Characters; as alſo, Letters to her from ſome of the Engliſh Nobility, containing great proffers of love and ſervice, which the Queen notwithſtanding took no notice of, but paſſed over in ſilence, according to her Motto, Video & Taceo, I ſee, and ſay nothing. Gifford now, who had all this while ſerved their turn, is ſent into France; but ere he went hence, left an Indenture with the French Ambaſſador here in England, with Inſtructions that he ſhould deliver no Letters to the Queen of Scots, or the Fugitives in France; but to him that exhibited an Indenture matching with that, the which he ſent under-hand to Sir Francis Walſingham.

Babington ſeeks to eſcape.

But is diſcovered and taken.

The Queen of Scots hath her Cloſets broken open, and her Boxes ſearched.

The twentieth of September, ſeven of the forenamed Conſpirators were Arraigned, and pleading guilty, were condemned of High-Treaſon. Two dayes after, ſeven other were called to the Bar, who pleaded not guilty, but notwithſtanding were found guilty by their own confeſſions, and condemned; Pollie only, though he were privy to all paſſages, yet becauſe he had diſcloſed many things to Walſingham, was not called in queſtion. The twentieth day of the moneth, the firſt ſeven in St. Giles Fields, where they were wont to meet, were hanged, cut down inſtantly, their privy members cut off, and themſelves yet living and beholding it, were in cruel manner bowelled and quartred; namely, Ballard, Babington, Savage, (who, the roap breaking, fell down from the Gibbet, and was preſently taken by the hangman, his privy members cut off, and bowelled, while he was perfectly living) Barnwell, Tichburn, Tilney, and Abbington. The next day, the other ſeven were drawn to the ſame place, and executed in the ſame faſhion, but in a more gentle manner, by the Queens ſpeciall charge who deteſted the former cruelty, for they were to hang til they were quite dead, Salisbury firſt, then Dun, then Jones, Chernock, Traverſe, Gage, and with them Hierome Bellamy, who had concealed Babington after he was proclaimed Traytor (whoſe Brother being guilty of the ſame fact, had ſtrangled himſelf in priſon.)

Fourteen of the Conſpirators are Arraigned, and hanged.

When theſe men were executed, Nave a French man, and Curle a Scoth man, Secretaries to the Queen of Scots, were examined concerning the Letters, the copies of Letters, and private Characters found in the Queen of Scots Cloſet; who under their own voluntary ſubſcriptions acknowledged, that they were their own handwritings, dictated in French by the Queen her ſelf, taken by Nave, turned into Engliſh by Curle and copied out in ſecret Characters. Hereupon, Sir Edward Wotton was ſent out of hand into France, to make known to the King, the order of the Treaſon, and to ſhew him the copies of the Queen of Scots Letters, confirmed by the teſtimony of ſundry of the Engliſh Nobility, that the French King might ſee what dangerous plots were by Charles Paget, and the Engliſh Fugitives contrived againſt the Queen of England.

Sir Edward Wotton is ſent into France, to acquaint the King with this Conſpiracy.

And now, what ſhould be done with the Queen of Scots, was a great conſultation; wherein the Counſel-

Consultation is held, what should be done with the Queen of of Scots, and the resolution.

Counsellours were not all of one mind; some conceived, That it were not good to take any rigorous course against her, but only to hold her in fast custody; both for that she was not Author of the Treason, but only conscious to it, and because she was crazie, and not likely to live long. Others, out of a care of Religion, were of opinion, to have her forthwith Arraigned and put to death according to Law; Leicester thought it better to have her poysoned and sent a Divine to Walsingham to prove it lawfull, but Walsingham protested against that course. A difference then arose amongst them, by what Law to proceed against her; Whether by the Law of the 25. of Edward the Third; (In which they are pronounced guilty of Treason, who plot the destruction of the King or Queen, raise War in his Dominions or adhere to his Adversaries) Or else by the 27 of the Queen Enacted a year since: Their opinion at last prevailed who thought best to proceed against her by this later Law, as being indeed in this case provided. Whereupon, divers of the Lords of the privy Counsel, and others of the Nobility, are Authorized by the Queens Letters, to enquire by vertue of that Law, and passe sentence against all such as raised Rebellion, invaded the Kingdom, or attempted any violence against the Queen. These Commissioners therefore upon the eleventh day of October repaired to Fotheringay Castle in Northamptonshire, where the Queen of Scots was then held prisoner; and the next day, sent unto her Walter Mildmay, Paulet and Edward Barker, publick Notary; who delivered her the Queens Letters; which having with a setled countenance read, she said, It seems to me strange, that the Queen should lay her Command upon me, to hold up my hand at the Bar, as though I were a Subject, seeing I am an absolute Queen, no lesse than her self; but howsoever, I will never do any thing prejudiciall to Princes of my degree, nor to my Son the King of Scotland. After many meetings, she standing still upon her innocency, and upon her exemption from answering, as being an absolute Prince, and specialy for yeelding to be tryed by the English Laws; of which, One (she said) had lately been made of purpose for her destruction: It was at last told her plainly, by the Chancellour and Treasurer, That if she refused to answer to such crimes as should be objected, they would then proceed against her, though she were absent. Being brought at last with much ado to consent, the Commissioners came together in the Presence Chamber; a Chair of Estate was set for the Queen of England, in the upper end of the Chamber under a Canopy; beneath over against which, was placed a Chair for the Q. of Scots; on both sides of the Cloth of Estate stools were set, upon which on the one side sate the Lord Chancellour, the Lord Treasurer, the Earls of Oxford, Kent, Derby, Worcester, Rutland, Cumberland, Warwick, Pembroke, Lincoln, and Viscount Mountacute: On the other side sate the Lords Aburgaveny, Zouch, Morley, St. John of Bletsho, Compton, and Cheyney; Next to these sate the Knights that were Privy Counsellors, Sir James Crofts, Sir Christopher Hatton, Sir Francis Walsingham, Sir Ralph Sadler, Sir Walter Mildmay, and Sir Amias Paulet; Forward, before the Earls, sate the two Chief Justices, and the Lord Chief Baron; on the other side, the two Barons, and the other Justices; Dale and Foord Doctors of the Civil Law; at a Table in the midst, Popham the Queens Attorney-General, Egerton her Solicitor, Gawdie her Serjeant at Law, the Clerk of the Crown, and two Notaries. When the Queen of Scots was come, and had placed her self, silence being made, Bromley Lord Chancellor turning towards her, said, That the Queen had appointed these Commissioners, to hear what she could answer to Crimes laid to her charge, assuring her, That nothing would be cause of more joy to the Queen, than to hear that she had proved her self innocent. Upon this she rising up, said, That although, being an absolute Prince, she could not be compelled to appear before the Delegates, yet to manifest her innocency, she was now content to appear. Then Gawdie opened every speciality of the Law lately made (against which she had taken Exception) shewing by Babingtons Confession, by Letters passed between them, by the confessions of Ballard and Savage, by the Confessions of her Secretaries Nave and Curle, that she was privy to their Treasons, and consented to the Invasion of England, and destruction of the Queen. To which she answered, That Letters might be counterfeited, her Secretaries might be corrupted; the rest, in hope of life, might be drawn to confess that which was not true: In this she stood peremptorily, That she never consented to any attempt against the Queens Person; though for her own delivery, she confessed she did. After many other charges by the Commissioners, and replies by the Queen of Scots; At last, she requested, that she might be heard in a full Parliament, or before the Queen her self, and her Councel. But this request prevailed not; for on the Twenty fifth day of October following, at the Star-Chamber in Westm. the Commissioners met again, and there pronounced sentence against her; Ratifying by their Seals and Subscriptions, that after the first day of June, in the seven and twentieth year of our Soveraign Lady Queen Elizabeth, divers matters were compassed and imagined in this Kingdom, by Anthony Babington and others, with the privity of Mary Queen of Scots, pretending Title to the Crown of England, tending to the hurt, death, and destruction of the Royal Person of our said Soveraign Lady the Queen.

Commissioners are sent to the Qu. of Scots, to acquaint her with the resolution.

But she stood upon her Innocency, and upon her exemption from answering as being an absolute Prince.

Yet at last she was brought to consent.

Whereupon she appears before the Commissioners.

And the Queens Councel open the Crimes with which she was charged.

Upon which afterward, in the Star-Chamber, Sentence was pronounced against her.

After a few dayes, a Parliament was holden at Westminster, the which was begun by Authority from the Queen, derived to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Treasurer, and the Earl of Derby; and the same, not without some Presidents. At this Parliament, the Proscriptions of the Lord Paget, Charles Paget, Francis Inglefield, Francis Throgmorton, Anthony Babington, Thomas Salisbury, Edward Jones, Chydiock Tichburn, Charles Tilney, and other the Complices, was confirmed, and their goods and possessions adjudged confiscate. Also the Peers of the Kingdom, with an unanimous consent, exhibit a Petition to the Queen by the Lord Chancellor, That for the preservation of the true Religion, and safety of the Queen, of themselves, and their Posterity, the Sentence passed against Mary Queen of Scots, might according to Law be presently promulged: They put the Queen in minde of the fearful Examples of Gods Judgments extant in Scripture, upon King Saul, for sparing of Agag; and upon Ahab, for not putting Benhadad to death. But the Queen anſwereth them to this effect: First, acknowledging Gods miraculous preſervation of her, and then their conſtant affection towards her, for whoſe ſakes only ſhe deſires to live: Otherwiſe, when ſhe calls to mind things paſt, beholds the preſent, and expects what may happen in time to come, that ſhe accounts them moſt happy, who go ſooneſt hence. That the Law lately made, by which the Queen of Scots is condemned, was not made (as ſome maliciouſly have imagined) to enſnare her, but contrariwiſe, to forewarn and deter her from attempting any thing againſt it, which though it had not been made, yet were there other ancient Laws enough to condemn her. Nothing could have been more grievous to me, than that a Prince, and one ſo near allied unto me, ſhould deſerve the ſentence pronounced againſt her; and ſeeing the matter is of rare example, and of a very weighty conſequence, I hope you will not expect, that I ſhould at this preſent determine any thing; yet that there may be no danger in delay, I will in due time ſignifie my minde unto you; and in the mean time, would have you expect from me, whatſoever good Subjects look for from a Gracious Prince.

And in a Parliament presently following, the Lords petition the Queen, That the Sentence passed against her might presently be promulged.

And the Queens Anſwer.

Twelve dayes after, having deeply weighed the matter in her minde, ſhe ſent the Lord Chancellor to the Peers, and Puckering to the Lower-Houſe, entreating them to adviſe more diligently concerning ſo weighty a matter, and to bethink themſelves of ſome wholeſome remedy, by which the life of the Queen of Scots might be ſpared, and their ſecurity alſo provided for. They, when they had a long time in a moſt ſerious manner deliberated hereof, return at laſt this Verdict, That the Queens life could not be in ſafety, while the Queen of Scots lived, unleſs ſhe either repented and acknowledged her Crimes, or were kept in ſtraight cuſtody, or bound by her Oath and Obligations, or gave Hoſtages; or laſtly, departed the Kingdom. And ſeeing none of theſe were likely to be remedies, it remained, that only her death would be a remedy. Repentance in her they could little hope for, who would not ſo much as acknowledg her ſelf faulty: Cloſe Impriſonment, Obligations, Oath, and Hoſtages, they accounted as nothing, which all vaniſhed, if the Queens life were once taken away; and if ſhe departed the Kingdom, they feared ſhe would ſtraightway go about to invade it again. Theſe things the Lord Chancellor, and Puckering the Speaker of the Lower Houſe, declared to the Queen at large, and urged her in their names, to have the Sentence put in execution. Herenpon the Queen after a ſhort pawſe, ſpake at laſt to this effect: I proteſt, my chief deſire hath been, that for your ſecurity, and my own ſafety, ſome other way might be deviſed, than that which is now propounded; but ſeeing it now evident and certain, that my ſafety without her deſtruction, is in a more deplorate eſtate, I am moſt grievouſly affected with inward ſorrow; that I, who have pardoned ſo many Rebels, have neglected ſo many Treaſons (either by connivence, or ſilence) ſhould now at laſt exerciſe cruelty upon a Prince ſo nearly allied to me. As for your Petition, I beſeech you to reſt in an Anſwer, without an Anſwer: If I ſay I will not grant your Petition,

A while after, the Queen intreats the Lords to think of ſome way, by which the Queen of Scots life may be ſaved, and her own not endangered.

The Lords return Anſwer, That there can be no way of her ſafety, but the Queen of Scots death.

I ſhall happily ſay what I meant not; If I ſhould ſay, I will grant it, then caſt I my ſelf into deſtruction headlong, whoſe ſafety you ſo earneſtly deſire; And that I know, you in your Wiſdoms would not I ſhould do.

After this, the Parliament was prorogued, and then were the Lord Buckhurſt and Beal ſent to the Queen of Scots, to let her underſtand that Sentence was pronounced againſt her, and confirmed by Parliament, and that the execution of it was earneſtly deſired by the Nobility and the Commons; and therefore perſwaded her, that before her death, ſhe would make acknowledgement of her offences, againſt God and the Queen; Intimating, that if ſhe lived, the Religion received in England, could not ſubſiſt. Hereupon, ſhe was taken with an unwonted alacrity, and ſeemed to triumph for joy, giving God thanks, and gratulating her own felicity, That ſhe ſhould be accounted an Inſtrument, for eſtabliſhing Religion in this Iſland; and therewith requeſted, ſhe might have ſome Catholick Prieſt to adminiſter the Sacrament to her; but was denyed, which ſome deemed, not inhumane only, but tyrannical and heatheniſh. The Biſhop and the Dean, whom for this cauſe they commended to her, ſhe utterly rejected, and jeered at the Engliſh Nation, ſaying, The Engliſh were ever and anon wont to murther their own Kings, and therefore no marvell, they ſhould now thirſt after her deſtruction. In December following the Sentence againſt her was proclaimed in London firſt, and after over all the Kingdom, wherein Queen Elizabeth ſeriouſly proteſted, that this Promulgation of the Sentence was extorted from her, to her great grief, by the importunity of the whole body of the Kingdom. The Queen of Scots being told hereof, ſeemed not a whit dejected with it; but writing to the Queen, never maketh interceſſion for her ſelf, nor expoſtulateth her death, but only makes three ſmall requeſts; one, That ſhe might be buried in France by her Mother; another, That ſhe might be put to death privately, but her ſervants to be preſent; the third, That her ſervants might freely depart, and enjoy ſuch Legacies as ſhe had given them. Of which Requeſts, ſhe deſireth the Queen to vouchſafe her an anſwer; but whether this Letter ever came to Queen Elizabeth, is uncertain.

Upon this the Queen of Scots is made acquainted with the Lords Petition to have the Sentence executed, at which ſhe ſeemed to rejoyce.

This condemnation of the Queen of Scots, as a thing ſtrange, and ſcarce credible, was ſoon ſpread far and near; ſo as interceſſions came thick in her behalf to Queen Elizabeth, but ſpecially from the King of Scots, and the King of France, who ſent their ſeverall Ambaſſadors, uſing all the reaſons that naturall affection in the one, and likeneſſe of condition in the other, could urge, for ſparing of her life; but when the neceſſity of the State, ſeemed to obſtruct all ways of clemency, the French Ambaſſador L'Aubeſpine, falleth from reaſons to action, and thinketh no way ſo effectuall for ſaving of the Queen of Scots life, as to take away Queen Elizabeths life; and thereupon, firſt, he dealeth covertly with William Stafford, a young Gentleman, and prone to embrace hopes (whoſe Mother was of the Bed-chamber to Queen Elizabeth, and his Brother at that time, Ambaſſador Lieger in France) and afterward, more openly by Trappe his Secretary, to murther the Queen. Stafford, though not daring to act ſuch a villany himſelf himself, yet commended one Moody to him, a resolute fellow, and one that for money would be sure to do it. Upon this, Stafford brings Trappe to Moody, being then in the common Goal, who upon Trapps offer, undertakes it: But then the consultation was, by what way it should be done? Moody propounded poyson, or else to lay a bag of Gunpowder under the Queens Bed, and suddenly fire it. Bnt Trappe liked of neither of these ways, but would rather have it done, as was done to the Prince of Orange. But while they are thus consulting about the way of doing it, Stafford discovers all to the Lords of the Councel. Whereupon Trappe who was now bound for France, was apprehended, and being examined, confessed the whole matter. Upon this, the Ambassadour himself was sent for to Cecils house, the twelfth of January; where met him by the Queens appointment, Cecill Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Leicester, Sir Christopher Hatton Vice-Chamberlain, and Davyson one of her Secretaries; who declare to the Ambassadour every particular which Stafford, Moody, and Trappe his Secretary had confessed. Assoon as Stafford was brought forth, and began to speak, the Ambassadour interrupted him, and reviling him, made asseveration, that Stafford first propounded it; when Stafford falling on his knees, made fearfull imprecations, that the Ambassadour first propounded it himself. But whosoever propounded it (saith Burleigh) it appears, that you were made acquainted with the matter. To which he presently replyed; That if he had known of any such thing, yet, being he was an Ambassador, he ought not to give notice of it, but to his own King. After much reasoning in this manner, the Lord Burleigh admonished him to beware how he offended hereafter in this kinde; and let him know, That he is not quitted from the offence though for this time the Queen be pleased to forbear him.

Queen Elizabeth terrified with many rumors, seals a Warrant for executing her.

But upon this Treason, the Queen of Scots Adversaries put many terrors into Queen Elizabeths minde, giving out, That the Spanish Navy was come to Milford Haven, That the Scots were broken into England; That the Duke of Guyse with a great Army was landed in Sussex; That the Queen of Scots was escaped out of Prison, and had gotten a Company up in Arms, and many other such feigned suggestions; Through which, at length they drew the Queen to this: That she sealed Letters, for executing the Sentence against the Queen of Scots; and one of her greatest perswaders to it (as the Scots reported it) was one whom the King of Scots had sent to disswade her from it; namely Patrick Grey, who sounded often in her ears, Mortua non mordet; when she is dead, she cannot bite.

The Queen notwithstanding, began to weigh with her self, whether it were better to rid her out of the way, or else to spare her; and many great reasons offered themselves on both sides, but where only speculative reasons presented themselves for sparing her; many practicall reasons, and those pressed both by Courtiers and Preachers, were presented to her; so as long holden in suspence, she would oftentimes sit speechlesse, and her countenance cast down; At last, her fear prevailing, she delivered to Secretary Davyson, Letters under her hand and Seal, to get the Commission made under the Great Seal of England, for the Execuion of the Queen of Scots, which might be in a readinesse upon any fear of danger; charging him not to disclose the matter to any whomsoever. But the next day her mind was altred and sent Sir William Killegrew to Davyson, to countermand the making of the Commission. Whereupon Davyson goes to her, and lets her know, That the Commission was already made, and the Seal put to it; Whereat, the Queen extremely angry, rebuketh him sharply for his hastinesse; yet Davyson imparteth the matter to Privy Counsellors; and perswades them, That the Queen commanded, the Commission should be put in execution. Hereupon, Beale Clerk of the Councel, is sent down with Letters, wherein authority is deputed to the Earls of Shrewsbury, Kent, Derby, Cumberland, and others, that she should be put to death according to the Law; with which proceeding, the Queen was not once made acquainted; and more than this, although she had intimated to Davyson, That she would take some other order concerning the Queen of Scots, yet did not he stay Beale from going.

But being long in suspense about it, at last she commanded Secretary Davyson to get the Commission made: but not disclose the matter to any.

Yet Davyson acquaints divers of the Privy Councel with it. Hereupon Beal is sent down to give authority to the Earl of Shrewsbury and others to see her executed.

1587.

And now comes in the last Act of the Queen of Scots Tragedy; for as soon as the Earls were come to Fotheringay; they, together with Sir Amias Pawlet, and Sir Drue Drurie, with whom she was then in custody; go unto her, and reading the Commission, signifie the cause of their coming; and in a few words, admonish her to prepare her self for death, for that she must die the next day. Whereto, without any change of countenance or passion of minde, she made answer; I had not thought that my Sister the Queen would have consented to my death, who am not subject to your Laws; but since it is her pleasure, death shall be to me most welcome. Then she requesteth, that she might confer with her Confessor, and Melvyn her Steward, which would not be granted: The Bishop or Dean of Peterborough they offered her, but them she refused. The Earls being departed, she gave order that Supper should be hastened, where she eat (as she used to do) soberly, and sparingly; and perceiving her men and women servants to lament and weep, she comforteth them, and bid them rejoyce rather, that she was now to depart out of a world of misery. After Supper, she looketh over her Will, read the Inventory of her Goods and Jewels, and writ their names severally by them, to whom she gave any of them; at her wonted hour she went to bed, and after a few hours sleep, awaking, spent the rest of the Night in her devotion. And now the fatal day being come, which was the Eighth of February, she getteth up, and makes her ready in her best Apparel, and then betook her self in her Closet to Almighty God, imploring his assistance with deep sighs and groans; untill Thomas Andrews Sheriff of the County gave notice, that it was time to come forth, and then with a Princely Majesty, and Chearful Countenance she came out, her head covered with a linnen Vail, and carrying an Ivory Crucifix in her hand; In the Gallery the Earls met her, and the other Gentlemen, where Melvyn her Servant upon his bended knees, deplored his own fortune, that he should be the messenger to carry this sad news into Scotland; whom she comforted, saying, Do not lament Melvyn, Thou shalt by and by see Mary Steward freed from all cares. Then turning

turning her ſelf to the Earls, ſhe requeſted that her Servants might ſtand by her at her death, which the Earl of Kent was very loth to grant, for fear of ſuperſtition; to whom ſhe ſaid, Fear nothing, theſe poor wretches deſire only to give me my laſt farewell. I know the Queen my Siſter would not deny me ſo ſmall a requeſt. After this, the two Earls, and the Sheriff of the County leading the way, ſhe came to the Scaffold, which was ſet up at the upper end of the Hall, where was a Chair, a Cuſhion, and a Block, all covered with Mourning. Then the Dean of Peterborough going to Prayers, ſhe falling upon her knees, and holding up the Crucifix in both her hands, prayed with her Servants in Latine, out of the Office of the bleſſed Virgin. Prayers being ended, ſhe kiſſed the Crucifix, and ſigning her ſelf with the ſign of the Croſs, ſaid, As thy Arms, O Chriſt, were ſpread forth upon the Croſs, ſo embrace me with the open arms of thy mercy, and forgive me my ſins. Then the Executioner asking her pardon, ſhe forgave him. And now her women helping off her outer Garments, and breaking forth into ſhrieks and cries, ſhe kiſſed them, ſigned them with the Croſs, and willed them to leave lamenting, for now an end of her ſorrowes was at hand; and then ſhadowing her face with a linnen cloth, and lying down on the Block, ſhe repeated the Pſalm, In te Domine ſperavi, ne confundar in æternum; at which words ſhe ſtretching forth her Body, her head at two blowes was taken off. Her Body was afterward Royally buried in the Cathedral Church at Peterborough; but ſince that, her Noble Son James, King of Great Brittain, erected a Royal Monument for her, in King Henry the Seventh's Chappel at Weſtminſter. This end had Mary Queen of Scots, in the ſix and fortieth year of her age, and of her Impriſonment in England the eighteenth; a Lady ſo compleat in all excellent parts of body and mind, that it muſt needs have made her a happy Woman, if ſhe had not been a Queen; and perhaps a happy Queen too, if ſhe had not been Heir to the Crown of England: For why did all her Endeavours want ſucceſs, but only from the fear of that Succeſſion? and no innocency of hers could be a Defence, where the fury of Jealouſie made the Aſſault.

She is beheaded,

Her age when ſhe dyed.

Queen Elizabeth hearing of her death, is infinitely dejected,

As ſoon as it came to the Queens knowledge, that the Queen of Scots was put to death, her Countenance grew dejected, and her ſpeech failed her; inſomuch that all in mourning weeds, ſhe gave her ſelf over to ſorrow, commanded her Counſellors from her Preſence, and cauſed Davyſon to be cited to the Star-Chamber. And as ſoon as grief would ſuffer her, ſhe wrote a Letter with her own hand to the King of Scots, and ſent it by Sir Robert Cary, to this effect; That her minde was infinitely diſquieted, in regard of this lamentable event, againſt her meaning and intent; entreating him to believe, That if ſhe had commanded it, ſhe would never have denyed it, and withall proteſting her true affection towards him, and her aſſiduous watchfulneſs for the proſpering of his affairs.

And ſoon after writes to the King of Scots to ſatisfie him in it, that it was done againſt her meaning.

Davyſon is cited in the Star-Chamber, and charged with violating her Majeſties Truſt.

While Cary was on his journey, Davyſon is cited to the Star-chamber before theſe Delegates, Sir Chriſtopher Wray Chief Juſtice of the Kings-Bench, for that time made Lord Privy Seal, the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, the Earls of Worceſter, Cumberland, and Lincoln, the Lords Gray, and Lumley, Sir James Croft, Comptroller of the Queens Houſe, Sir Walter Mildmay Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Edmund Anderſon, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, and Sir Roger Manwood, Lord Chief Baron (where note, that Bromley Lord Chancellor, Burleigh Lord Treaſurer, Leiceſter, and Hatton, who were indeed more guilty of the fact than Davyſon, were none of the number,) Before theſe Delegates, Popham the Queens Atturney layeth to Davyſons charge Contempt of the Queens Majeſty, violating of his truſt, and neglect of his duty; laying open all particulars of his fact; which after Egerton the Queens Solicitor, Gandy, and Puckering, Serjeants at Law, urged alſo againſt him with great aggravation: To which Davyſon mildly anſwered, That he would not conteſt with the Queen; only Proteſts, That if he had done any thing otherwiſe than he ought, it was out of ignorance and miſtaking, and not out of any purpoſe, to diſobey her Majeſty. It ſeems the Queen had carried her ſelf, as one that would have it done, and yet was loath to do it, ſcarce knowing her own mind, and yet would have another know it; meaning to make it the work of miſtaking, rather then of Purpoſe, that ſo at leaſt ſhe might leave ſome place of ſatisfaction to her ſelf, that it was not abſolutely of her doing.

And his anſwer.

The pleadings ended, the Commiſſioners went to cenſure; Manwood began, and gave his Opinion, That Davyſon for the inconſiderateneſs of his fact, ſhould be fined ten thouſand pounds, and Impriſonment during the Queens pleaſure; the reſt went on in that Sentence, only the Lord Gray excuſed Davyſon ſo far, That he thought him worthy of reward rather than of puniſhment: The concluſion was, the firſt Sentence for his Fine and Impriſonment, was by Wray Keeper of the Privy Seal confirmed; and Davyſon never after recovered the Queens favour, though ſhe relieved him ſometimes in his neceſſity. A man ingenious indeed, but not throughly acquainted with the ways of the Court; and thought to have been raiſed to this place, of purpoſe to act this part, and for nothing elſe.

His Cenſure in the Star-chamber.

By this time Sir Robert Cary, Son to the Lord Hunſdon, who was ſent to excuſe the Queen, was come to the Borders; but being come thither; was not ſuffered to ſet foot in Scotland; The King would ſcarce hear him by another, and with much ado received his Letters. He called home his Ambaſſador out of England, and thought of nothing but revenge.

The King of Scots will not admit the Queens Meſſenger, and threatens revenge.

But the Queen ſtill laying the fault upon Davyſon, and the unadviſed credulity of her Counſellors, by little and little allayeth his paſſion; and expecting till time had ſomewhat aſſwaged his grief, that it would indure to be touched, at length by her Agents in Scotland, and ſoon after by the Lord Hunſdon Gouernour of Berwick, ſhe admoniſhed him, How dangerous it would be for him, to break out into War againſt England, and what little help he could juſtly expect from either Spain or France; but if he perſiſted in amity with England, he might be ſure the Queen of England would moſt lovingly account him for her Son. And to the end that he ſhould aſſure himſelf, that the Queen his Mother was put to death without her privity, ſhe ſent him the ſentence againſt Davyſon, Queen Elizabeth ſeeks to pacifie him, and by what reaſons.

ſon, under the Seals of all the Delegates, and atteſted under the Great Seal of England; and another Inſtrument likewiſe ſigned with the hands of the Judges of England; in which they aver, That the Sentence againſt the Queen of Scots, could in no wiſe be prejudice to his right in the Succeſſion.

Drake is ſent to the Coaſt of Spain, and what miſchiefs he did the King.

Having now by theſe and the like courſes ſomewhat aſſwaged the King of Scots indignation; to prevent the War which they foreſaw was imminent from the King of Spain, they ſend forth Drake with four of the Queens Ships and others, unto the Coaſt of Spain, to ſet upon their Ships in the Havens, and to intercept their Munition. Drake entring into the Port of Cales, ſunk, took, and fired about an hundred Ships, wherein was great ſtore of Munition and Victuals: Then returning to the Cape of St. Vincent, he ſet upon three Forts, and compelled them to yield. Thence ſetting ſail to the Weſtern Iſlands, called Azores, under the great Meridian; by great good fortune he happened upon an huge and wealthy Carack, called St. Philip, returning from the Eaſt-Indies, and eaſily vanquiſhed it; Whereupon the Marriners on both ſides, from the name of Philip, portended no good luck to Philip King of Spain.

And the like alſo did Thomas Cavendiſh of Suffolk.

At the ſame time, Thomas Cavendiſh of Suffolk, in the other part of the World, who two years before had ſet ſail from England with three Ships, paſſing through the Straights of Magellan, in the Coaſt of Chily, Peru, and Nova Hiſpania, fired a great number of Spaniſh Towns, took and pillaged Nineteen great Ships, and amongſt them a wealthy Ship of the Kings nigh unto Caliphornia, in North America; and ſo by the Philippine Iſles, the Molucces, the Cape de Bone Eſperance, and the Iſland of St. Helene, returned home the next year, being the third after Magellan, that ſailed about the World.

York and Stanley in the Low-Countries perfidiouſly deliver up Towns to the Spaniards and their ends.

As Drake and Cavendiſh at this time gained great fame and renown; ſo two other men in the Netherlands (Stanley and York) purchaſed as great infamy and diſgrace: This York was a Londoner, a bold fellow, and of looſe behaviour; famous for bringing firſt into England, the manner of turning the point upon the Adverſary in ſingle Combats, whereas the Engliſh till this time, were wont to be armed with Bucklers and Swords, and to ſtrike with edge, and it was held no manhood to turn the point, or ſtrike below the girdle. He ſuffered ſome affront from the Earl of Leiceſter, fled away, and for a time, ſerved under the Spaniards in the Netherlands, till at length being reconciled to Leiceſter, he was ſet over the Fort near Zutphen; but being bribed, he not only yielded up the place to the Enemy, but drew to the like villany one Stanley, who with great valour had ſerved in an Iriſh Expedition, to yield up Daventry to the Spaniards, a Wealthy and well fortified Town. But what got they by their treachery? The Spaniards ſet York and Stanley at variance, they poyſon York, and ſeize upon his goods, his Carcaſs was three years after digged up by the States Commandment, and hanged upon a Gibbet till it rotted away; Stanley went into Spain, where there was no credit given to him; for the Spaniards have a ſaying, It is lawful to give honour to a Traytor ſometimes, but never to truſt him.

Upon the complaint of the States, againſt the Earl of Leiceſter, the Lord Buckhurſt is ſent to examine his doings.

Theſe late Treacheries wrought the Earl of Leiceſter much Envy with the Confederate Netherlands, becauſe the Traytors were very intimate with him; whereupon the States in large letters to the Queen, accuſe Leiceſter for his ill managing of the Weal publick, in the matter of money, Merchandize, and Military affairs; and to his credulity, they impute the harm which accrewed by York and Stanley. The Queen, for the narrow ſifting of the matter, and compoſing it; ſent thither Thomas Sackvile, Lord Buckhurſt (lately taken into her Privy Councel in Leiceſters abſence) Norris, and Bartholomew Clerk: But when the officious diligence of Buckhurſt, ſeemed to trench upon Leiceſters Reputation; his grace with the Queen proved ſo forcible, that Buckhurſt at his return, was for certain moneths confined to his houſe.

Afterward Sluce being beleaguered by the Prince of Parma, Leiceſter was by the States ſent for out of England, to ſuccour it; the Town was furiouſly aſſaulted with Seventeen thouſand great ſhot, and a mighty breach was made into it; which nevertheleſs Roger Williams, Francis Vere, Nicholas Baskerville, with the Garriſon of the Engliſh and Walloons, valiantly defended for a while, but at laſt were enforced to yield it up; Leiceſter, that came to relieve it, finding himſelf too weak for the Beſiegers, being gone away. And indeed, the States would not commit any great Army to his Command; who (they knew) had a determination to ſeize Leyden, and ſome other Towns into his own hands, and had a purpoſe to ſurpriſe the abſolute Government. Whereupon the States uſed means, that Leiceſter was called home; gave up the Government to the States, and in his room ſucceeded Maurice of Naſſau Son to the Prince of Orange, being now but twenty years of age. Peregrine Lord Willoughby, was by the Queen made General of the Engliſh Forces in the Low-Countries, to whom ſhe gave command to reduce the Engliſh Factions into the States obedience; the which, with the help of Prince Maurice, he eaſily effected.

Leiceſter is called home, and gives up the Government to the States.

Being called to examination before the Lords of the Councel, how he eludes it.

Leiceſter being now come home, and perceiving that an Accuſation was preparing againſt him by Buckhurſt and others, for his unfaithfull managing of Affairs in Holland; privately with tears he caſt himſelf down at the Queens feet, entreating her, that ſhe ſhould not receive him with diſgrace at his return, whom ſhe had ſent forth in honour; and ſo far prevailed with her, that the next day being called to examination before the Lords, he took his place amongſt them, not kneeling down at the end of the Table, as the manner of Delinquents is; and when the Secretary began to read the heads of his accuſation, he interrupted him, ſaying, That the publick Inſtructions which he had received, were limited with private reſtriction; and making his appeal to the Queen, eluded the whole crimination, with the ſecret indignation of his Adverſaries.

How the Honour of Aburgavenny came to the Family of Nevil.

This Year was famous for the Death of many great Perſonages: In the moneth of February, dyed Henry Nevill Lord of Aburgavenny, great Grandchild to Edward Nevil, who in the Reign of King Henry the Sixth, got his Title in the right of his Wife, only Daughter and Heir to Richard Beauchamp Earl of Worceſter, and Lord of Aburgavenny; gaveny; In which right, when as the only Daughter of this Henry, Wife to Sir Thomas Fane, challenged the Title of Baroneſs of Aburgaveny, a memorable Contention aroſe concerning the Title between her, and the next Heir Male, to whom by Will (and the ſame confirmed by Authority of Parliament) the Caſtle of Aburgaveny was bequeathed. This queſtion being a long time debated; at laſt in a Parliament holden in the Second year of King James, the matter was tryed by Voyces; and the Heir male carried the Lordſhip of Aburgaveny; and the Barony Le Diſpencer, was ratified to the Female. This year alſo in the moneth of April, dyed Anne Stanhope, Dutcheſs of Somerſet, Ninety years old, who being the Wife of Edward Seymour Duke of Somerſet and Protector of England, contended for Precedency with Katherine Parre, Queen Dowager to King Henry the Eighth. There dyed alſo Sir Ralph Sadler Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, the laſt Banneret of England, with which Dignity he was adorned at the Battel of Muſſelborough in Scotland. After him dyed Thomas Bromley Lord Chancellor of England; and ſix days after, he, whom the Queen meant ſhould have ſucceeded him, Edward Earl of Rutland; but he now failing, Sir Chriſtopher Hatton was made Lord Chancellour, who though he were a Courtier, yet the Queen knowing him to be an honeſt man, thought him not unfit for the Place, where Conſcience hath, or ſhould have more place than Law: Although ſome were of Opinion, That it was not ſo much the Queens own choice, as that ſhe was perſwaded to it by ſome that wiſht him not well; both thereby to be a cauſe of abſenting him from the Court, and thinking that ſuch a ſedentary place, to a corpulent man that had been uſed to exerciſe, would be a means to ſhorten his life; and indeed he lived not full out three years after.

Anne Stanhope Dutcheſs of Somerſet dyes, of great age.

Sir Ralph Sadler dies, the laſt Banneret of England.

Sir Chriſtopher Hatton is made Lord Chancellor.

This year Sir John Perrot was called home out of Ireland, and left all in great quiet to Fitz Williams his Succeſſor. For hitherto the Engliſh found it no hard matter to vanquiſh the Iriſh, by reaſon of their unskilfulneſs in Arms; eight hundred Foot, and three hundred Horſe, was held an invincible Army: but after by Perrots command, they were exerciſed in Feats of Arms, and taught to diſcharge Muskets at a Mark, and had in the Low-Countries learned the Art of Fortification, they held the Engliſh better to it, and were not ſo eaſily overcome.

And now we are come to the one and twentieth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, being the year 1588, long before ſpoken of by Aſtrologers, to be a wonderfull year, and even the Climacterical year of the World. And yet the greateſt Wonder that happened this year, was but the wonderful Fleet that Spain provided for invading of England, if the defeat of that wonderfull Fleet were not a greater Wonder.

In the time of a Treaty of Peace between England and Spain, the King of Spain ſends his great Armado againſt England.

It is true, there was at this time a Treaty of Peace between England and Spain; and the Earl of Derby, the Lord Cobham, Sir James Crofts, Dale and Rogers Doctors of Law, Commiſſioners for the Queen; for the Prince of Parma, the Count Aremberg, Champignie, Richardot, Mais, and Garvyer, Doctors, had many meetings about it, neer to Oſtend; but it ſeemed on the part of Spain, rather to make the Engliſh ſecure, that they ſhould not make proviſion for War, than that they had any purpoſe of reall proceeding ſeeing they accepted not of any reaſonable Conditions that were offered, but trifled out the time, till the Spaniſh Navy was come upon the Coaſt, and the Ordnance heard from Sea, and then diſmiſſed the Engliſh Delegates.

Of what number of Ships the Armado conſiſted: and who was General.

The Spaniſh Navy conſiſted of one hundred and thirty Ships; whereof Galeaſſes and Galleons ſeventy two, goodly Ships, like to floating Towers; in which were Souldiers 19290; Mariners, 8350; Gally ſlaves, 2080; Great Ordnance, 2630; For the greater holineſſe of their Action, twelve of their Ships were called the twelve Apoſtles. Chief Commander of the Fleet was Don Alphonſo, Duke of Medina; and next to him, John Martine Recalde, a great Sea-man. The twentieth of May they weighed Anchor from the River Tagus, but were by Tempeſt ſo miſerably diſperſt, thtt it was long ere they met again: but then they ſent before to the Prince of Parma, That he with his Forces, conſiſting of fifty thouſand old Souldiers, ſhould be ready to joyn with them, and with his Shipping conduct them into England, and to land his Army at the Thames Mouth.

The Queens preparation both by Sea and land to reſiſt it.

The Queens Preparation in the mean time was this; The Lord Charles Howard, Lord Admirall, with all her Navy, and Sir Francis Drake Vice-Admiral, were to be ready at Plimouth; and the Lord Henry Seymer, (ſecond Son to the Duke of Somerſet) with forty Engliſh and Dutch Ships, to keep the Coaſts of the Netherlands, to hinder the Prince of Parma's coming forth. Then for Land Service, there were laid along the Southern Coaſt, twenty thouſand Souldiers, and two Armies beſides of Trained men were levyed; over one of which, conſiſting of a thouſand Horſe, and two and twenty thouſand Foot, the Earl of Leiceſter commanded, and pitched his Tents at Tilbury, near the Thames mouth: Over the other, appointed to guard the Queens Perſon, and conſiſting of four and twenty thouſand Foot, and two thouſand Horſe, the Lord Hunſdon was Generall. Arthur Lord Grey, Sir Frances Knolles, Sir John Norris, Sir Richard Bingham, Sir Roger Williams, and other Military men, were choſen to make a councel of War, and conſult how the Land ſervice ſhould be ordered. Theſe declared amongſt other things, That the places which lay fitteſt for the Enemies landing, as Milford-haven, Falmouth, Plimouth, Portland, the Iſle of Wight, Portſmouth, the Downs, the Thames mouth, Harwich, Yarmouth, Hull, and ſuch other, ſhould be fortified with Works and Garriſons; the Trained Souldiers of thoſe Shires, which lay near the Sea Coaſt, ſhould defend thoſe places, and be ready at the Alarm to hinder the Enemy from Landing; but if he did land, then to ſpoil the Country round about, that he might find no Food; and by continual crying, Arm, Arm, give the Enemy no reſt, but yet ſhould not give Battel, till good ſtore of Commanders were come together.

Many Papiſts are committed to cuſtody in Wisbych Caſtle.

At this time many fearing the Papiſts at home, no leſſe than the Spaniards abroad, perſwaded the Queen to take off the heads of ſome of the greateſt of them; but ſhe deteſting ſuch cruelty, took order only, That ſome of them ſhould be committed to cuſtody to Wisbych Caſtle.

And

And now all things on both sides prepared, the Spaniſh Navy ſet forth out of the Groyn in May, but was diſperſed and driven back by weather. The Engliſh Navy ſet forth ſomewhat later out of Plimouth, bearing up towards the Coaſt of Spain; but partly by occaſion of contrary winds, partly by advertiſement that the Spaniards were gone back, and upon ſome doubt alſo that they might paſs by towards the Coaſt of England, whileſt they were ſeeking them afar off, they returned to Plimouth: At which time, a confident (though falſe) advertiſement came to the Admiral, That the Spaniards could not poſſibly come forward that year: whereupon the Engliſh Navy was upon the point of disbanding, and many of the men were gone on ſhore, when ſuddenly the invincible Armada (for ſo it was called in a Spaniſh oſtentation) was diſcovered upon the Weſtern Coaſt: whereof the Lord-Admiral being informed, had much ado to get the Queens Navy out of the Haven (the wind being contrary) yet at length he haled it forth. The next day, the Engliſh beheld the Spaniſh Ships, in height like to Caſtles, ſayling ſlowly along, whom they ſuffered peaceably to paſs by, that they might have the benefit of the wind to follow after. The one and twentieth day of July, the Admiral of England ſent a Pinnace before, called The Defiance, which by a great ſhot, challenged the Spaniards to fight, and by and by they fell to it. Then Drake, Hawkins, and Forbiſher, let fly againſt the outmoſt Squadron, which Recalde commanded, making him glad to fly to their main Navy for ſuccour. The night following, a mighty Byſcayner of Oquenda's (in which the King of Spains Treaſure was) was by chance fired with Gun-powder, but was timely quenched by other Ships ſent to her ſuccour; one of which Ships, was the Galeon of Don Pedro, whom Sir Francis Drake took Priſoner, and ſent him to Dartmouth. The Biskayner it ſelf (the Treaſure being taken out by the Spaniards) they left behind them, which the Engliſh brought into the Haven at Weymouth.

The two Fleets encounter; and the paſſages and events of it.

The three and twentieth day of this Moneth they had a ſecond fight, in which moſt of the Spaniſh ſhot flew over the Engliſh Ships, and never hurt them; Only Cock an Engliſh man, being with his little Veſſel in the midſt of the Enemies, died valiantly. The four and twentieth day they reſted on both ſides; in which time the Lord Admiral ranked his whole Fleet into four Squadrons: The firſt he ruled himſelf, Drake the ſecond, Hawkins the third, and Forbiſher the fourth.

The five and twentieth day (which was Saint James's day) they fell to it the third time; in which Fight, the Engliſh had again the better, ſo as after this time, the Spaniards would no more turn upon the Engliſh, but holding on their courſe, diſpatched a Meſſenger to the Prince of Parma; requiring him forthwith to joyn himſelf to the Kings Fleet, and withall to ſend them Bullets.

The day following, the Lord Admiral Knighted Thomas Howard, the Lord Sheffield, Roger Townſend, John Hawkins, and Martin Forbiſher; and holding a Councel of War, they decreed not to ſet again upon the Enemy, till they came to the ſtraight of Calice, where the Lord Henry Seymor and Sir William Winter waited for their coming. And now ſo far were the Engliſh from being terrified with this invincible Navy, that many of the Nobility and other of ſpecial note, hired Ships at their own charges, and came to the Admiral; as the Earls of Oxford, Northumberland, Cumberland, Thomas and Robert Cecill, Henry Brook, Sir Charles Blunt, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir William Hatton, Sir Robert Cary, Sir Ambroſe Willoughby, Sir Thomas Gerard, Sir Arthur Gorge, and others.

The ſeven and twentieth of July, towards the Evening, the Spaniards caſt Anchor near unto Calice, and not far from them rode the Engliſh Admiral, within ſhot of a great Ordnance, to whom Seymor and Winter joyned themſelves: ſo as by this time there were in the Engliſh Navy a hundred and forty Ships, nimble and ſerviceable for fighting or Sayling, yet only Fifteen of them bore the ſtroke of the Battell. And now again the Spaniards ſent Poſt after Poſt to the Prince of Parma to ſend them forty Fly-boats, without which they were not able to skirmiſh with the Engliſh, by reaſon of the greatneſs and unwieldineſs of their Ships, and importune him preſently to put to Sea with his Army; but he was unprepared, and his Flat-bottomed Boats were full of chinks, and leaked; and beſides, the Hollanders hovered before the Ports of Dunkerk and Newport, in ſuch ſort, that he durſt not look forth.

The Prince of Parma is unprepared to put to Sea.

The eight and twentieth day, the Lord-Admiral made ready eight of his worſt Ships, on the out-ſide dawbed with Wilde-fire, Rozin and Brimſtone, within full of combuſtible matter, and under the Conduct of Young and Prowſe, ſent them down with the winde in the ſilent time of the night, towards the Spaniſh Fleet; the which when the Spaniards ſaw approach them, and the Sea as it were all on a light fire; imagining withall, that thoſe Fire-ſhips might carry in them ſome murthering Engine; they made a hideous noiſe, took up Anchors, cut Cables, ſpread Sailes, and betook themſelves to their Oars, but more to flight: One of the Spaniſh Galeaſſes having loſt her Rudder, and floating up and down, was held in fight by Amias Preſton, Thomas Gerard, and Harvie, who ſlew Captain Hugh Moncada, caſt the Souldiers over boord, and carried away a great deal of Gold, but the Veſſel and Ordnance was wreck to the Governour of Calice.

A ſtratagem uſed by the Engliſh Admiral.

Drake and Fenner in the mean while perceiving the Spaniſh Fleet to gather together again before Graveling, ſet upon them with great violence, to whom ſtraightwayes Fenton, Southwell, Beeſton, Croſſe, and Riman joyn themſelves, and ſoon after the Admiral himſelf, Sir Thomas Howard, and the Lord Sheffield; the Galeon called Saint Matthew, was ſorely battered by Seymor and Winter, driven toward Oſtend, and ſet upon again by the Zealanders, and at laſt was taken by the Fluſhingers.

And now the Spaniſh Navy having want of many neceſſaries, and no hope of the Prince of Parma's coming, they reſolved to return Northward for Spain; in which paſſage they loſt both many Ships and men, the Engliſh Navy ſtill following them cloſe, till they were fain to give them over for want of Powder. Whileſt theſe things paſſed at Sea, the Queen in Perſon came to Tilbury, to view the Army and Camp there,

The Spaniſh Navy returns home.

The Queen in perſon comes to Tilbury to the Army.

where ſhe ſhewed ſuch undaunted Courage and Reſolution, that it wonderfully animated the ſpirits of them all.

And thus this Navy, which was three whole Years in preparing, in the ſpace of a Moneth was often beaten, and at length put to flight, many of their men being ſlain, more than half of their Ships taken and ſunk (of the Engliſh not above a hundred at the moſt miſſing, nor ſo much as a Ship, but Cocks little Veſſel) and ſayling about all Brittain by Scotland, the Orkeneys and Ireland, they returned into Spain with as much diſhonour as they came out with boaſting, for indeed Mendoza in France by a Book in Print, triumphed before the Victory.

Queen Elizabeth comes to Pauls, and gives publick thanks to God for this Victory.

For the happy ſucceſſe of this Action, Queen Elizabeth appointed Prayers and Thanksgiving over all the Churches in England, and ſhe (as it were in Triumph) came in Perſon, attended with a great Troop of Nobility into the City, and went into the Cathedral Church of St. Paul (where the Banners taken from the Enemy were placed in view) and there in moſt humble manner gave thanks to Almighty God. And that which increaſed the publick joy, was the News which Sir Robert Sidney brought out of Scotland, That the King had over-paſt all injuries, was lovingly affected towards the Engliſh, and deſired to imbrace ſincere and perfect amity with the Queen. For as for the King of Spain, he wittily told the Embaſſadour, that he expected no other curteſie from him, but ſuch as Polyphemus promiſed Ulyſſes, that he ſhould be the laſt whom he would devour.

The King of Scots is reconciled to the Queen.

The Earl of Leiceſter dies.

And now dyed the great Earl of Leiceſter the fourth day of September, at his Mannor of Killingworth, of a violent Feaver; I may well ſay the great Earl, conſidering the many great Honors he injoyed, which are extant in the Story; yet one honour greater than he had before, he effected even then when he was ready to go out of the World, and that was, To be Vice-gerent in the high Government of England and Ireland, for which the Patent was already drawn, and had been ſealed, but that Burleigh and Hatton ſhewed the Queen how dangerous a thing it might prove, for ſo great Authority to reſide in one Subject. He was while he lived in ſo great favour with the Queen, that ſome thought (and himſelf not the leaſt) that ſhe meant to marry him; yet when he dyed, his Goods were ſold at an Out-cry to make payment of the Debts he owed her.

Philip Earl of Arundel is cited to be tryed by his Peers, by whom he is condemned, but the Queen ſpares his life.

About this time Philip Earl of Arundel, who three years before had been caſt in priſon, was now cited in Weſtminſter-Hall, to the Judgment of his Peers, and Henry Earl of Derby was made High Steward of England for the time. The matters laid to his Charge were theſe: That he had contracted friendſhip with Cardinal Allen, Parſons the Jeſuite, and other Traytors, exciting divers both abroad and at home to reſtore the Romiſh Religion, promiſing his aſſiſtance thereunto: and for that reaſon had a purpoſe to depart the Kingdom. That he was privy to the Bull, in which Pope Sixtus Quintus had depoſed the Queen, and given England to the Spaniard; That being impriſoned in the Tower, he cauſed Maſſe to be ſaid for the proſperous ſucceſſe of the Spaniſh Fleet, and for that purpoſe had framed peculiar Prayers for his own private uſe. Being demanded whether he were guilty of theſe things; turning himſelf to the Judges, he asked them theſe queſtions: Firſt, whether it were lawful to heap up ſo many Crimes together in one Bill of Indictment? They anſwered, that it was: Then whether Arguments taken from preſumptions were of force? They anſwered, that it was lawful for him to interpoſe exceptions, if he ſaw cauſe. Then again, if he might be Arraigned for thoſe things which were Capital, by the Law made the thirteenth year of the Queen, after that the time expreſſed in the Act was expired? They promiſed, they would proceed againſt him by no Law, but the old Statute of Treaſon, made in the Reign of King Edward the third. But now again asked, if he were guilty or not? he pleaded, Not Guilty; whereupon Puckering the Queens Serjeant at Law, Popham Attorney-General, Shuttleworth Serjeant at Law, and Egerton the Queens Sollicitor, in their turns, urged and proved the Crimes objected; ſome whereof he denyed, ſome he extenuated; but in concluſion, was by his Peers found guilty, and condemned; yet the Queen ſpared his life, and was content with thus much done in terror to the Papiſts.

Norris and Drake undertake an expedition into Spain, to ſet Don Antonio in his Kingdom of Portugal, but prevailed not, and why.

It was now in the year 1589. and the two and thirtieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when to be in ſome ſort revenged of the Spaniards for their Invaſion, ſhe gave leave to Sir John Norris and Sir Francis Drake to undertake an Expedition at their own private Charges, requiring nothing of her but a few Ships of War, who took along with them Anthony the Baſtard, laying Claim to the Kingdom of Portugal, and of Souldiers to the number of eleven thouſand, of Seamen about fifteen hundred: ſetting ſayl from Plimouth the fifth day of April, they arrived at the Groyne in Galizia; whereof with great valour they took firſt the Lower Town, and afterward the Higher, and from thence Sayling towards Portugal, they met Robert Earl of Eſſex, who without the Queens leave had put to Sea: After two days they arrive at Penycha a Town of Portugal, which they took; and left the Caſtle to Don Antonio, and from thence they march by Land towards Lisbon threeſcore miles off: The Foot Companies led by Norris, whom Drake promiſed to follow with the Fleet; being come to the Weſt Suburbs of Lisbon, they found no body there but a few poor diſarmed Portugals, who cryed out, God ſave King Antonio. The day following the Spaniards made a ſally out, in which Skirmiſh, Bret, Careſly and Carre (ſtout Commanders) were ſlain; yet did the Earl of Eſſex drive the Spaniards to the very Gates of the City. And now having tarryed here two days, and ſeeing no ſign of the Portugals revolting; which Don Antonio had aſſured them would be, finding freſh Supplies come into the Town, their own Army ſickly, Victuals and Powder failing; and which was moſt of all, Sir Francis Drake not bringing the great Ordnance as he promiſed, they departed from the Suburbs of Lisbon towards Caſcais, a little Town at the mouth of the River Tagus, which Town Drake had taken this mean while, who excuſed his not coming to Lisbon, by reaſon of the Flats he muſt have paſſed, and the Caſtle of Saint Julian Fortified with fifty pieces of great Ordnance. Near this place they found threethreescore Hulks of the Hanse Towns of Germany, laden with Corn and all manner of Munition, which they took as good prize towards their Charges, in regard the Queen had forbidden them to carry Victuals or Munition to the Spaniard. From hence they set sayl to Virgo, a forlorn Town by the Sea-side, and pillaging all along that Quarter, returned for England, having lost in the Voyage of Souldiers and Mariners about six thousand; yet not so much by the Enemy, as by eating of strange Fruits, and distemper of the Climate.

It concerns the state of England, to look at this time into the state of France, for while those things were in doing between Spain and England, the Popish Princes of France, under pretext of defending the Catholick Religion, entred into a Combination, which they called, The holy League: The purpose whereof was, to root out the Protestants, and to divert the Right of Succession to the Crown of France; For they bound themselves to each other by Oath, to suffer no person but a Catholick to be King of France; which was directly to exclude the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde, if the present King without Issue-male should fail. The head of this League was the Duke of Guise, who having given some overthrows to the German Forces that came into France in aid of the Protestants, was immeasurably extolled by the Clergy and others; and grew to such a height of reputation, that entring into Paris, he made the King glad to leave the City, and in an Assembly at Bloys, to make him great Master of the French Cavallery, and to consent by Edict, to the cutting off the Protestants. So as the King standing now in fear of him, used means at last, even in the very Court, to have him murthered; and soon after, the Cardinal his Brother to be strangled. Hereupon so great a confusion followed, that the people every where disobeyed the Magistrates, and spoyled the Kings very Palace at Paris. Some Cities affected a Democracy, others an Aristocracy, but few liked of a Monarchy. The Confederates in the mean while made a new Seal, usurped the Royal Authority, seized into their hands the best fortified places, intercept the Kings Revenues, call in Spanish Souldiers, and in all places denounce war and violence against the King. And the King in this case being forced to fly to the Protestants for succour, they then most wickedly, by one James Clement a Monk, made him away. The King being ready to die, Declareth the King of Navarre to be his lawful Successor, but the Confederates would exclude him as an open Heretick; and yet whom to make choice of they cannot well agree; some would have the Duke of Lorrain, as being descended from the ancient Kings of France; some the Duke of Savoy, as born of the French Kings Daughter, a Prince Potent and Couragious; others would have the Duke of Guises Brother that was murthered; others the King of Spain; but the greatest part gave their Voyces for the Cardinal of Bourbon, who was one degree nearer allyed to the slain King, than the King of Navarre his Nephew. He therefore was proclaimed King of France, with the Title of Charles the Tenth; but he being a Priest, the King of Navarre also was at the same time proclaimed King of France, who abode at Dieppe, a Sea-Town in Normandy, and doubted not to drive the Cardinal easily out of France.

A combination, called the Holy League, is made in France.

The head of this League was the Duke of Guise.

Whom the King for his insolent carriage, caused to be murthered in the very Court.

The Confederates make a New Seal, and usurp the Royal Authority.

The King is murthered by a Monk.

Being ready to die, he declareth the King of Navarre to be his lawful Successor.

The Cardinal of Bourbon is proclaimed King of France, and at the same time also, the King of Navarre.

The King of Navarre being thus raised in Dignity, but weak in means, implored Aid of the Queen of England, offering to make a League Offensive and Defensive; the Queen out of a pious respect to a King of her own Religion, sent him presently two and twenty thousand pound sterling in Gold (such a sum of Gold, as he professed he had never seen at one time before) and withall supplyed him with four thousand Souldiers, under the Command of Peregine Lord Willoughby; for Colonels, she appointed Sir Thomas Wilford, who was made Marshal of the Field, John Boroughs, Sir William Drury, and Sir Thomas Baskervyle, and gave them a moneths pay in hand. Hereupon the Confederates (whom the King had vanquished a little before at Argues beyond all expectation) began to quail, and the day before the arrival of the English, they vanished away: with this addition of Forces, the King marcheth to Paris, and being ready to enter the City, caused a retreat to be sounded, as loath to have spoil made of a City, which he hoped shortly should be his own. Afterwards by the assistance of the English he won many Towns, and then having marched at least five hundred miles on foot, he gave them leave after a long Winters service, to return into England. In which Voyage of men of note, died Captain Hunnings, but of a natural death, also Stubbs (he whose right hand was cut off for writing the Book against the Queens marriage) and Sir William Drury slain by Master Boroughs in a single Combat, where the quarrel was, that he being but a Knight, would take place of Boroughs that was the younger Son of a Baron, contrary to the Laws of the English Gentry.

The King of Navarre is aided by Queen Elizabeth, both with money and men.

Sir William Drury is slain by Mr. Boroughs in a single combat, upon a quarrel of taking place, the one being a Knight, the other a Barons younger Son.

About this time, James King of Scots (with Queen Elizabeths good liking) espoused Anne the Daughter of Frederick the second King of Denmark by his Deputy; but she afterward sayling for Scotland, was by tempest cast upon Norway, and there, through continual storms forced to stay, so as the King in the Winter-season set sayl thither, that the marriage according to his vow might be accomplished within the year: some were of opinion, that those storms were caused by witchcraft, and was confirmed indeed by some Witches taken in Scotland; who confessed they had raised those storms to keep the Queen from landing in Scotland, and that the Earl Bothwell had asked Counsell of them concerning the Kings end; who was thereupon cast into prison, but in a short time breaking loose, occasioned new stirs in Scotland.

James King of Scots marries Anne the King of Denmarks Daughter.

This year many Noble personages dyed; Frances Countess of Sussex, Sister to Sir Henry Sidney, Sir Walter Mildmay, Chancellor and Vice-Treasurer of the Exchequer, William Somerset Earl of Worcester, so numerous in his off-spring, that he could reckon more children of both Sexes, than all the Earls of England. Also John Lord Sturton, Henry Lord Compton, and at Bruxels the Lord Paget.

Many great Personages die.

William Somerset Earl of Worcester, his numerous issue.

At this time, the Queen who was alwayes frugal, strained one point of Frugality more than ever she had done before; for upon the information of one Caermarden, (though Leicester, Burleigh, and Walsingham were offended, that credit 1590.

It was now the year 1590, and the three and thirtieth of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, in which the Earl of Cumberland made a Voyage to the Indies, where he laid level to the ground the Fort of the Iſle of Fiala, and brought away eight and fifty Pieces of great Ordnance.

Many Noble Perſonages die.

This year was fatal to many Noble perſonages; firſt dyed Ambroſe Dudley Earl of Warwick, (Son to John Duke of Northumberland without Iſſue.

Sir Francis Walſingham dies.

After him Sir Francis Walſingham Secretary, a man more skilful in the Politicks, than in the Oeconomicks; more cunning in managing matters of the publick State, than of his own private eſtate, which he left ſo mean, and dyed ſo much indebted, that he was fain to be buried by night, without any Funeral pomp, in the Cathedral Church of Saint Paul; leaving behind him one only Daughter, famous for her three Husbands, all of them the goodlieſt men of their time; the firſt, Sir Philip Sidney; the ſecond, Robert Earl Eſſex; the third, Richard Burgh Earl of Clanriccard, by King Charles made Earl of Saint Albans. Within two Moneths after Walſingham, died Sir Thomas Randoll, who had been fourteen times ſent in Embaſſage to ſeveral Princes, yet was never rewarded with any greater dignities, than the Chamberlainſhip of the Exchequer, and the Poſtmaſterſhip of England. Soon after him dyed Sir John Crofts, who had done good ſervice in Scotland, in Edward the Sixths time; in Queen Marie's time was condemned of High Treaſon; in Queen Elizabeths time ſet at liberty, and made Comptroller of her houſe. After him died George Talbot, the ſeventh Earl of Shrewsbury of this Houſe; He was made Earl-Marſhal of England, and left behind him a memorial of Wiſdom and Integrity. Laſtly died Thomas Lord Wentworth, the laſt of the Engliſh that had been Governour of Calice.

Some diſturbances in Ireland, but ſoon compoſed.

In Ireland at this time Hugh Gaveloc (ſo called, becauſe he had been long kept in Fetters) the natural Son of Chain O Neale, accuſed Hugh Earl of Tir-Oen, for holding private conſultations with certain Spaniards, who in 88 were by Ship-wrack caſt upon the coaſt of Ireland: Tir-Oen to prevent the Accuſation, took the ſaid Hugh, and when others refuſed to do it, took a cord, and with his own hands ſtrangled him. Hereupon he was ſent for into England, and came, and upon pardon obtained, ſolemnly undertook in preſence of the Queen at Greenwich, to maintain the peace with Turlogh Leynigh; Not to uſurp the Title of O-Neale, nor any authority over the Gentry about him; to reduce the Territory of Tir-Oen to the form of a County, and civil behaviour, and many ſuch matters; giving Hoſtages for his true performance; and indeed for a time he obſerved all things very duly. This trouble allayed, another aroſe; for ſoon after this, Hugh Roe Mac-Mahon, a Potentate in the Territory of Monagan, compelled thoſe under his juriſdiction to pay him Tribute; whereupon the Deputy cauſed him to be taken, and tryed by a Jury of common-Souldiers, and then to be hanged up, dividing his lands amongſt certain Engliſh, and ſome of the Mac-Mahons, reſerving a certain yearly Rent to the Crown of England, by this means thinking to extinguiſh the Power and Title of Mac-Mahon. But hereupon, O Rork fearing that he ſhould be ſerved in like manner, took up Arms againſt the Queen, whom Bingham Preſident of Connaght ſoon diſtreſſed, and drave into Scotland, and at the Queens requeſt, was by the King delivered up into his hands.

It was now the year 1591. and the four and thirtieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when ſhe, careful leſt Britany ſhould come into the Spaniards hands, ſent Edmund York into France, to adviſe the King to take care thereof; and promiſing to ſend him Forces to that end, if he would name ſome Towns, where they might be in ſafety. Hereupon he named Cherburg, Granville or Breſt, as the fitteſt; and it was agreed, that three thouſand Engliſh ſhould be ſent into Britany and Picardy; but in the mean time, Henry Palmer was ſent to Sea with certain Ships, who ſeized upon thirteen Spaniſh Ships, as they were returning from Nova Francia. And now Roger Williams, with a Company of ſix hundred Souldiers, paſſeth over to Diepe in Normandy; and Sir John Norris, with the reſt of the Forces, haſted into Britany ſoon after. Roger Williams with his own ſix hundred, and the help of Charter Governour of Diepe, put to rout the Confederates, that had blocked up the paſſages; whoſe valour, the French King in his Letters to the Queen, highly extolled. Whereupon growing more courragious, and not minding his Charge, which was to ſtay at Diepe, he accompanied the King to the very Suburbs of Paris, where, in honour of his Nation, he ſent a Challenge to the Spaniards, to encounter two hundred Pikemen of the Engliſh, and a hundred Muſque-teers, with as many Spaniards, in open Field.

Sir Roger Williams extolled by the King to France.

After this, the King of France acquainted the Queen, that he had a purpoſe to ſet upon Roan or New-haven, before the Prince of Parma ſhould come into France, and thereupon requeſted her, to ſend four thouſand Engliſh into Normandy, which upon certain conditions ſhe willingly did, and ſent them under the Command of Robert Earl of Eſſex, accompanied with Sir Thomas Leighton and Sir William Killegrew as his Counſellours. When the Earl came into France, he found that the King was at Noyon, and in Normandy no preparation for the War at all, which ſeemed ſtrange, and much troubled him; but by and by Sir Roger Williams comes to him from the King, requeſting him to come to Noyon, that they might confer concerning a courſe of War. Thither the Earl made a tedious journey, and being come thither, the King told him, he was now of neceſſity to go himſelf into Champagine; but promiſeth to ſend Marſhall Biron, and the Duke of Montpenſier forthwith to him, to lay ſiege to Roan. Hereupon the Earl returned to his Tents, expecting their coming, but neither of them came, which troubled the Earl more than before; ſo as being weary now of doing nothing, he made himſelf one approach to Roan, where his Brother Walter Devereux was unfortunately ſlain. Indeed the affairs of the King of France were at this time upon ſo uncertain terms, that before he could act what he had reſolved, ſomething ſtill intervened, that diverted him; for which, by his Letters he excuſed himſelf to the Hacket's prodigious carriage.

At this time was memorable the prodigious carriage of one Hacket, born at Oundle in Northamptonſhire, a mean fellow of no learning, whoſe firſt prank was this; That when, in ſhew of Reconciliation to one with whom he had been at variance, he imbraced him, he bit off his Noſe, and the man deſiring to have his Noſe again, that it might be ſowed on, while the wound was green, he moſt villanouſly eat it up, and ſwallowed it down before his face. After this, all on a ſudden, he took upon him a ſhew of wonderful holineſs, did nothing but hear Sermons, and getting Scriptures by heart, and counterfeiting Revelations from God, and an extraordinary calling, grew to be magnified by certain zealous Miniſters, and ſpecially of one Edward Coppinger, (a Gentleman of a good Houſe) and one Arthington, a great admirer of the Geneva Diſcipline; that they accounted him as ſent from Heaven, and a greater Prophet than Moſes or John Baptiſt; and finally, that he was Chriſt himſelf, come with a fan in his hand, to judge the World. And this they proclaimed in Cheapſide; giving out that Hacket participated of Chriſts glorified body, by his eſpecial Spirit, and was now come to propagate the Goſpel over Europe, and to ſettle a true Diſcipline in the Church of England; and that they themſelves were two Prophets, the one of Mercy, and the other of Judgment; with many other ſuch incredible Blaſphemies; whereupon Hacket was apprehended and arraigned; and at laſt, hanged, drawn and quartered, continuing all the time, and at his death, his blaſphemous Aſſertions, Coppinger a while after ſtarved himſelf to death in Priſon, Arthington repented, and made his Recantation in a publick writing.

He takes upon him to be Chriſt.

The calling of Biſhops at this time cryed down by ſome; but maintained by the Queen.

Beſides theſe, others alſo at this time oppoſed the eſtabliſhed Government of the Church of England, crying down the calling of Biſhops, with whom ſided ſome Common Lawyers alſo, affirming, that the Queen could not depute, nor theſe men exerciſe any ſuch Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and that the Oath Ex Officio was unchriſtian. But the Queen conceiving, that through the ſides of the Prelates, ſhe her ſelf was ſhot at, ſuppreſſed them what ſhe could, and maintained the Government formerly eſtabliſhed.

About this time, the Lord Thomas Howard, ſix of the Queens ſhips having waited at the Azores ſix whole Moneths, for the coming of the Spaniſh Fleet from America, was at laſt ſet upon by Alphonſo Baſſano, with three and fifty ſhips, ſent out for the Convoy of the American Fleet, where Richard Greenvile Vice-Admiral, being in the Revenge, and ſeparated from his company, was ſo hemmed in by the Spaniſh ſhips, and ſo battered with great ſhot, that moſt of his men being ſlain, his Main-maſt cut off, himſelf ſore wounded in the head, he commanded to ſink the Ship, that it might not come into the Spaniards hands; but this being countermanded by moſt voyces, it was agreed, to yield it to the Spaniards, upon condition that the men ſhould be ſet at liberty. Greenvile himſelf was carried into the Spaniſh Admiral, where within two dayes he dyed, not without praiſe of his very enemies; Thus the great Ship called the Revenge, was yielded, but had ſo many leaks in the Keel, that ſoon after it was caſt away in a ſtorm; and the loſſe of this one Ship ſoon made good upon the Spaniards, by taking many of theirs.

Cavendiſh caſt away in the Straits.

About this time alſo, Cavendiſh, who in the year 1578. had ſailed round about the World, now with five Ships bent his courſe towards the Magellan Straits; but by reaſon of foul weather, was not able to paſſe them, and being driven to the coaſt of Braſile, was there caſt away.

And now, enmity increaſing daily between Spain and England, two Proclamations were ſet forth; one, prohibiting upon pain of High Treaſon, to carry Victuals or Munition into any of the King of Spains Dominions: Another, forbidding all perſons to entertain any in their Houſes, till enquiry made, what they were, leſt they might entertain Popiſh Prieſts, who at this time came ſwarming into England, by reaſon the King of Spain had lately founded a Seminary at Valadolid for the Engliſh.

Sir Chriſtopher Hatton Lord Chancellour dies.

At this time died Sir Chriſtopher Hatton Lord Chancellour, whom of a mean Gentlemans houſe, the Queens favour raiſed to this height of Dignity; a goodly perſonage of body, of Noble, but no aſpiring ſpirit; the onely of all the Queens ſpecial Favourites, that died a Batchelour; and therefore left William Newport his Siſters ſon his Heir, who erected for him in Saint Pauls Church, a ſumptuous Monument. After his death, the keeping of the great Seal was for certain Moneths committed to the Lord Burleigh Treaſurer, Hunſdon, Cobham and Buckhurſt: Afterward Puckering the Queens Serjeant at Law was elected, not Chancellour, but Keeper of the great Seal.

Puckering the Queens Serjeant at Law is made Lord-Keeper.

Brian O-Rork an Iriſh Potentate, condemned and hanged; and why.

At this time alſo, Brian O-Rork, the Iriſh Potentate, was arraigned at Weſtminſter; his Indictments were, for raiſing Rebellion againſt the Queen, for dragging her Picture at a Horſe-tail, for giving the Spaniards entertainment; which things being told him by an Interpreter, (for he underſtood no Engliſh) he ſaid, He would not be tryed, unleſs the Queen her ſelf in perſon ſate to judge him. Yet being told, that it was the Law, he only ſaid, If it muſt be ſo, let it be ſo; and ſo condemned, was executed at Tyburn as a Traytor, whereof he ſeemed to make as little reckoning, as if it had been but in jeſt. And now this year, the Queen made the Colledge of Dublin in Ireland, an Univerſity, which was formerly the Monaſtery of All-Saints, endowing it with power to confer Scholaſtical Dignities.

The Colledge in Dublin made an Univerſity.

Sir John Perot arraigned, and condemned: and why. Yet his life was ſpared, and he died in the Tower.

At this time, Sir John Perot, who had been Deputy of Ireland, and done good ſervice there, was yet by the malice of his Adverſaries, of whom Hatton was one, called in queſtion, before the Baron Hunſdon, the Lord Buckhurſt, Sir Robert Cecill (lately made a Counſellour) Sir John Forteſcue, Sir John Wolley, and ſome of the Judges: His Accuſations were; Firſt, that he had ſpoken opprobrious words againſt the Queen, ſaying, She was illegitimate and cowardly; Secondly, that he had foſtered notorious Traytors, and Popiſh Prieſts; Thirdly, that he held correſpondence with the Prince of Parma, and the Queens enemies. To the firſt of which he confeſſed, that in his paſſion he had ſpoken of the Queen unadviſedly, for which he was infinitely grieved; the reſt he denyed: And all men knew, knew, he was never Popishly affected. His Accusers were one Philip Williams, sometime his Secretary; Denys O-Roghan an Irish married Priest, whose life he had saved; and one Walton, a fellow of no worth or reputation. Yet the crimes being urged against him by Popham and other Lawyers, till eleven a clock at night; he was at last condemned of High-Treason, but Sentence was not pronounced till twenty dayes after; and yet was not put to death, but dyed a natural death in the Tower; he was a man of a goodly personage, stout and cholerick, and one whom (many thought) the Queen had the more reason to respect, for her Father King Henry the Eighths sake.

The Earl of Essex chalkengeth Monsieur Villerse to a single combat, but is refused.

The Earl of Essex, after a tedious Winters Siege in Normandy, challenged Monsieur Villerse Governour of Roan to a single combat; who refusing to meet him, he then returned into England, being called home by the Queen, whose favour, by his long absence, might else have suffered prejudice.

And now the King of France, hearing that the Prince of Parma was coming into France, once again was fain to flie to the Queen for succour, to whom, upon certain conditions, she granted an Army of four thousand men, and some great Ordnance, with which Sir John Norris was sent into France; whom yet the French King imployed not, as was agreed, to the great displeasure of the Queen. But as for the Prince of Parma's coming into France, he was prevented by death, when he had governed the Netherlands under the Spaniards fourteen years; a Prince of many excellent parts, and whom Queen Elizabeth never mentioned but with honour.

The Prince of Parma dies.

Sir Walter Raleigh sent with 15 ships against the Spaniards; and what he did.

And now Queen Elizabeth considering that the King of Spains chief strength was in his Gold of America, sends forth Sir Walter Raleigh with a Fleet of fifteen Ships to meet with the Spanish Fleet; who passing by a Promontory of Spain, received certain intelligence, that the Spanish Fleet was not come forth that year: Whereupon dividing his Navy into two parts; whereof the one he committed to Sir John Boroughs, the other to Sir Martin Forbysher; he waited other opportunities, when, soon after, a mighty Caraque came in view, called The Mother of God, which from the Beak to the Stern, was a hundred threescore and five foot long, built with seven Decks, and carrying six hundred men, besides rich Merchandize. This great Vessel they took, and in it, to the value of a hundred and fifty thousand pounds sterling, over and above what the Commanders and Sea-men pilfered.

The Queen in her Progress goes to Oxford; her entertainment there, and her Counsel to the Universfity.

This year, the Queen going in Progress, passed through Oxford, where she was entertained by the Scholars with Orations, Stage-Playes and Disputations; and by the Lord Buckhurst Chancellor of the University, with a sumptuous Feast. At her departure she made a Latine Oration, wherein she vowed a Vow, and gave them counsel: Her Vow was, That as she desired nothing so much, as the prosperity and flourishing estate of her Kingdom, so she as much wished to see the Universities and Schools of learning to flourish likewise. Her Counsel was, That they would serve God above all, not following the curiosity of some Wits, but the Laws of God, and the Kingdom; That they would not prevent the Laws, but follow them, nor dispute whether better Laws might be made, but observe those which were already Enacted.

Anthony Brown Viscount Montacute dies, and how this honour came to his Family.

This year dyed Anthony Brown Viscount Montacute, whom Queen Mary honoured with this Title; because his Grand-mother was Daughter, and one of the Heirs of John Nevill Marquess Montacute; who, though he were a great Roman Catholick, yet the Queen finding him faithful alway, loved him, and in his Sickness went to visit him. There dyed at this time also, Henry Lord Scroop of Bolton, Knight of the Garter, and long time Governour of the Western Borders toward Scotland.

Henry Barrow a seditious Sectary is put to death.

At this time Henry Barrow, and his Sectaries, condemning the Church of England to be no Christian Church, and derogating from the Queens Authority in matters Ecclesiastical; he the said Barrow, as Ring-leader of the rest, was put to death, in terror to all such disturbers of the peace of the Church.

About this time, by reason of the Queens correspondence with the Turk, to the end her Subjects might have free Trading in the Territories; it was maliciously given out by some, that she had excited the Turk to a War against the Christians; which caused the Queen to write to the Emperor, shewing him the falseness of this report, wherein she gave him full satisfaction.

The King of France embraceth the Romish Religion: and acquaints the Queen with the necessity of his doing it.

And now a constant report came into England, That the King of France had already embraced, or was ready to embrace the Romish Religion: which so much troubled the Queen, that she presently sent Thomas Wilkes into France; with Reasons (if it were not too late) to divert him from it. But before Wilks came, the King indeed had openly professed the Romish Religion at the Church of Saint Denis in Paris; of which his Conversion, he declared the causes to Wilks at large, shewing the necessity of it, unless he would suffer himself to be utterly thrust out of the Kingdom. And the French Ambassadour signifying as much to the Queen, in great perplexity, she writ to him to this effect:

The Queens Letter to him, out of her sorrow for it.

Alas, what grief? what anxiety of minde hath befallen me, since I heard this news? was it possible that worldly respects should make you lay aside Gods fear? could you think, That he, who had hitherto upheld and kept you, would now at the last, leave you? It is a dangerous thing to do evil, that good may come thereof. But I hope your mind may alter; In the mean while, I will pray for you, and beg of God, That the hands of Esau, may not hinder the blessing of Jacob.

And the Kings Answer.

To this the King answered, That though he had done this in his own person out of necessity; yet he would never be wanting to those of the Reformed Religion, but would take them into his special care and Protection.

Richard Hacket condemned, and executed: and why.

And now was Richard Hacket condemned, and executed for Treason, being sent from the English Fugitives beyond Sea, to perswade Ferdinand Earl of Derby, Son to Henry newly deceased, to assume the Title of the Kingdom, by right of Descent from Mary, Daughter to Henry the Seventh; and threatning him, that unlesse he undertook this enterprize, and withall, concealed him the Abbettor, he should shortly die in most wretched manner. But the Earl fearing a trap was laid for him, revealed the matter; yet the fellows fellows threatning proved not altogether vain, for the Earl within four Moneths dyed a moſt horrible death. This year, Death had his tribute paid from the Nobility; for there dyed Henry Ratcliffe Earl of Suſſex, and three renowned Barons, Arthur Grey of Wilton, Henry Lord Cromwel, and Henry Lord Wentworth; beſides Sir Chriſtopher Carlile, whoſe Warlike Proweſſe at Sea and Land, deſerves to be remembred.

Tir-Oen in Ireland aſſumes to himſelf the title of O-Neale, more eſteemed, than to be called Emperour.

In Ireland, at this time, divers great men in Connaght Rebelled; and Turlogh Leynigh being dead, Tir-Oen aſſumed to himſelf the Title of O-Neale, (which in Ireland is more eſteemed, than to be called Emperour;) but upon a ſudden, diſſembling his diſcontent, he ſubmitted himſelf to the Deputy, and promiſed all Obedience.

The Papiſts think upon a Succeſſor to the Queen. Some would have the Earl of Eſſex; and frame a Right to him by Deſcent.

It was now the year 1594. and the ſeven and thirtieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when the good correſpondence between the King of Scots and Queen Elizabeth, gave the Papiſts ſmall hope that ever he would prove an Inſtrument to reſtore the Catholick Religion. Whereupon, they began to bethink themſelves of ſome Engliſh Papiſt, that might ſucceed the Queen; but finding none of their own Sect a fit perſon, they fixed their thoughts upon the Earl of Eſſex, who alwayes ſeemed a very moderate man; and him they deviſed to have ſome right to the Crown, by Deſcent from Thomas of Woodſtock, King Edward the Thirds Son. But the Engliſh Fugitives were for the Infanta of Spain; and deſiring to ſet the King of Scots and the Earl of Eſſex at odds, they ſet forth a Book, which they Dedicated to Eſſex, under the name of Doleman, but was written indeed by Parſons (Dolemans bitter Adverſary) Cardinal Allen, and Francis Engleſield. The ſcope of which Book was, to exclude from Succeſſion all perſons whatſoever, and how near ſoever allied to the Crown, unleſs they were Roman Catholicks; Contending further, for the right of Iſabella, Infanta of Spain, as being deſcended from Conſtance, Daughter of William the Conqueror; from Eleanor eldeſt Daughter to Henry the Second, married to Alphonſo the ninth King of Caſtile; from Beatrix, Daughter to King Henry the third: Titles obſolete, and which exceed the bounds of Heraldry to diſcuſſe. This year, the nineteenth of February, was Henry Prince of Scotland born, to whom the Queen was Godmother, and ſent Robert Earl of Sußex for her Deputy.

The moſt are for the Infanta of Spain, as having divers juſt Titles.

Prince Henry of Scotland is born.

The Spaniards ſent Lopez a Jew, and Phyſitian to the Queen to kill her, and how the matter was carryed.

But now greater matters were in hand, Plots were laid againſt the Queens life; ſome Spaniards thinking to make her away by Poyſon, and not daring to truſt any Engliſh man in ſuch a buſineſs, they treat to that purpoſe, with Roderick Lopez a Jew, and Phyſitian to the Queen, with Stephen Ferreira, Emmanuel Loyſie, and other Portugals; for divers of that Nation came into England at this time, in relation to Don Antonio; who being diſcovered by Letters of theirs that were intercepted, were Arraigned at Guild-hall, and by their own confeſſions convinced, to have conſpired againſt the life of the Queen: they were all condemned, and Executed at Tyburn; Lopez profeſſing that he loved the Queen as well as Jeſus Chriſt: which was the cauſe of laughter to them that knew him to be a Jew. The next day after them, was condemned Patrick Cullen an Iriſh Fencer, ſent hither by the Engliſh Fugitives, to kill the Queen, who was ſtraightway executed, though he were at that very time ſick and ready to die.

He is executed at Tyburn.

About this time, Sir John Norris having been in a hot conflict at Sea againſt the Spaniard, where Sir Martin Forbyſher received his deaths wound, was now called home, with a purpoſe to ſend him into Ireland. In which mean while, Richard Hawkins ſon of Sir John Hawkins the famous Sea Captain, had been ſet forth a year ſince, with three of the Queens ſhips, and two hundred men in them; whereof one of them at the Iſle of St. Anne was by chance fired, another of them ſeparated by tempeſt, returned into England; himſelf in the third, paſſed the Straights of Magellan, being the ſixth man in the Spaniſh accompt, that had ever done it; and being now come into the wide Southern Sea, he took five ſhips laden with Merchandize; one whereof he took away, the reſt he ſuffered to redeem themſelves for two thouſand Duckats: But at laſt being ſet upon by Bertrandus a Caſtro, who was ſent out by the Vice-Roy of thoſe parts, with eight ſhips againſt him, after three days battery, he yielded, and though upon compoſition, yet was nevertheleſs ſent into Spain, and there for divers years kept priſoner.

Richard Hawkins taken priſoner by the Spaniards.

But James Lancaſter in another part of America, had better ſucceſs; for being ſet forth by ſome London Merchants (whoſe goods the Spaniards had ſeized) with three Ships and a long Boat, he took nine and thirty Spaniſh Ships, and at Fernanbucke in Braſile, where the wealth of an Eaſt-Indian Caraque was lately unloaden; he deſperately venturing upon the ſhoar, loaded fifteen ſhips with the wealth of the Indian Caraque; Sugar, Reed, Red-wood called Braſil, and other Merchandize, and then ſafely and victoriouſly returned home.

James Lancaſter takes nine and thirty Spaniſh ſhips, and much rich Merchandize.

At Rome, about this time died Cardinal Allen, born in Lancaſhire, of an honeſt Family, brought up in Oxford, in Orial Colledge. In Queen Maries days he was Proctor of the Univerſity, and after Canon of the Cathedral Church at York. Upon the change of Religion in England; he left the Kingdom, and was Divinity Profeſſor at Doway in Flanders, and made Canon of the Church at Cambray. He procured a Seminary to be ſet up in Doway for the Engliſh; another at Rheims, and a third at Rome; and through zeal of the Romiſh Religion, forgot whoſe Subject he was born.

Cardinal Allen dies, and of his Education.

At home, at this time, died John Peers Archbiſhop of York, in whoſe place, ſucceeded Matthew Hutton, tranſlated from the See of Durham. There died alſo Ferdinand Stanley Earl of Derby, being in the flower of his age, miſerably tormented, and vomiting ſtuffe of a dark ruſty colour, being thought to have been poyſoned or bewitched. There was found in his Chamber a little Image of wax, with hairs of the colour of his hairs, thruſt into the belly: which ſome thought was done of purpoſe, that men ſhould not ſuſpect him to be poyſoned; his vomit ſo ſtained the ſilver Andirons, that it could never be gotten out, and his body though put in ſearclothes, and wrapped in lead, did ſo ſtink and putrifie, that for a long time none could endure to come near where he was buried. The Maſter of the Horſe was much ſuſpected, who the ſame day the Earl took his bed, took one of his beſt Horſes, and fled away. About this time alſo died Gregory Fines, Lord

Lord Dacres, a man ſomewhat crazed, the Son of Thomas Lord Dacres, hanged in the Reign of King Henry the Eight.

William Ruſſel is ſent Deputy into Ireland, to whom Tir-Oen ſubmits himſelf but diſſemblingly.

And now Sir William Fitz-Williams Lord Deputy of Ireland was called home, and William Ruſſel youngeſt Son of Francis Earl of Bedford, was ſent in his room; to whom preſently came the Earl of Tir-Oen, and in humble manner craved pardon of his fault, that he had not preſented himſelf at the call of the late Lord Deputy. Bagnal Marſhal of the Iriſh Forces, exhibited many Articles againſt him, but he ſo pleaded for himſelf with promiſe of loyalty hereafter, that he was diſmiſſed. But ſee the ſubdoulouſneſs of this man, for he would never after be gotten to come again, though the Deputy ſent for him with many kind meſſages.

Edmund York and Richard Williams executed for being bribed to kill the Queen.

It was now the year 1595. and the eight and thirtieth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign; when Edmund York and Richard Williams, who were formerly apprehended, came to their tryal, and were executed at Tyburn, for being bribed to kill the Queen.

A new rumor ſpread of a new Fleet of Spaniards to invade England, but falſe.

At this time a conſtant rumour was blown abroad from all parts of Europe, that the Spaniards were coming again againſt England, with a far greater Fleet than that in Eighty eight, and that it was already under ſayl; whereupon, Souldiers were levyed, and placed on the Sea-coaſt. Two Navies were made ready, one to expect them at home in the Chanel; the other to go for America, under Hawkins and Drake; but when all came to all, it was but certain Spaniards, who looſed from the Sea-coaſt of France, with four Gallies, which betimes in the morning landing in Cornwal, fired a Church ſtanding alone in the fields, and three Villages of Fiſhermen, Newlyne, Mowſhole and Penſans, and then preſently retired, not taking or killing any one perſon; And theſe were the firſt and laſt Spaniards that in hoſtile manner ever ſet Foot upon Engliſh ground.

And now miſchiefs growing daily in France, a great number perſwaded the King, to conclude a Peace with Spain, and the Queen her ſelf began to miſtruſt him, eſpecially, having lately received Intelligence out of the Pope's Conclave; that he was received into the boſome of the Church of Rome, with the Popes Benediction, and upon conditions prejudicial to the Proteſtants.

Sir Walter Rawleighs Voyage to Guyana, and what he did.

And therefore at this time, were divers undertakings of the Engliſh againſt Spain; Sir Walter Rawleigh Captain of the Guard, having defloured a Maid of Honour (whom afterward he married) had loſt the Queens favour, and was held in priſon for certain moneths; but afterward being ſet at liberty, though baniſhed the Court, he undertook a Voyage to Guyana; ſetting ſayl from Plimouth in February, he arrived at Trinidada, where he took St. Joſephs Town, but found not one jot of Mony there. From hence, with Boats, and a hundred Souldiers, he entred the vaſt River Orenoque, ranging up in Guyana four hundred miles, but getting little but his labour for his travel. In like manner, Amyas Preſton and Sommers, pillaged ſundry Towns of the King of Spains in the Weſtern parts, and three ſhips of the Earl of Cumberland ſet upon a huge Caraque, which by caſualty was fired when they were in fight, and theſe were the enterpriſes of private perſons: but the Queen being informed, that great ſtore of wealth for the King of Spains uſe was conveyed to Port Rico, in St. Johns Iſland, ſent thither Hawkins, Drake and Baskervile, with land Forces, furniſhing them with ſix ſhips out of her own Navy, and twenty other men of War. They ſet ſail from Plimouth the laſt of Auguſt, and ſeven and twenty days after came upon the Coaſt of the great Canarie, which being ſtrongly fortified, they forbore to aſſault. A moneth after, they came to the Iſle of St. Dominick, where five Spaniſh ſhips being ſent forth to watch the Engliſh, lighted upon one of the ſmall Engliſh ſhips which was ſtrayed from the Company, and putting the Maſter and Mariners upon the Rack, underſtood by them, that the Engliſh Navy was bent to Port-Rico; whereupon they make all poſſible ſpeed to give notice thereof, that being forewarned, they might accordingly be armed. And thereupon as ſoon as the Engliſh had caſt Anchors in the Road of Port-Rico, the Spaniards thundered againſt them from the ſhore; Sir Nicholas Clifford and Brute Brown were wounded as they ſate at ſupper, and two dayes after dyed: Hawkins alſo and Drake, partly of diſeaſe, and partly of grief for their ill ſucceſs, died ſoon after. At the end of eight moneths, the Fleet came home, having done the Enemy little hurt, fired onely ſome few Towns and Ships, but received infinite damage themſelves; loſt two ſuch Sea-men, as the Kingdom, I may ſay, all Europe had not their like left. For the Spaniards having of late years received great harms by French and Engliſh, had now provided for themſelves with Fortifications which were not eaſily to be won.

Hawkins, Drake and Basker ile, are ſent to Port-Rico.

Their ill ſucceſſe, though grief whereof Hawkins and Drake died.

At this time the Queen made known to the States in the Low-Countries, the great charges ſhe had been at in relieving them ten years together; for which ſhe requireth ſome conſiderable recompence: The States again alledge the great charges they were at in Eighty eight, in repelling the Spaniards in her cauſe; yet (not to fall out about the matter) they were content to allow ſome reaſonable retribution; but yet for the preſent, nothing was concluded. Likewiſe at this time, the Hanſe Towns in Germany make a complaint to the Emperour, and the Princes of the Empire, That the Immunities from Cuſtoms anciently granted them by the Kings of England, began to be antiquated, and that a Monopoly of Engliſh Merchants was ſet up in Germany; To which the Queen by Sir Chriſtopher Perkins, firſt ſhewing the cauſe of the firſt Grant, and then the reaſon of Queen Maries prohibiting it afterward, makes them ſo ſatisfactory an anſwer, that thoſe very Hanſe-Towns which complained, brought into England at this time ſuch ſtore of Corn, that it prevented a mutiny, which through dearth of Corn, was like to have hapned in London.

This year many great perſonages died.

This year was famous for the death of many great Perſonages, Philip Earl of Arundel, condemned in the year 1589. The Queen had all this while ſpared, but now death would ſpare him no longer, having ſince that time been wholly given to contemplation, and macerated himſelf in a ſtrict courſe of Religion, leaving one onely Son, Son, Thomas by his Wife Anne Dacres of Gillisland. He had two Brothers, Thomas Lord Howard, whom Queen Elizabeth made Baron of Suffolk; and William Lord Howard of the North, who yet liveth; and one Sister, the Lady Margaret, married to Robert Sackvile, afterward Earl of Dorset, and father of Edward Earl of Dorset now living; a Lady so mild, so vertuous, and so devout in her Religion, that if her Brother macerated himself being in prison, she certainly did no lesse, being at liberty; whom I the rather mention, because I had the happinesse to know her living, and the unhappinesse to be a Mourner at her Funerall. There dyed this year also, William Lord Vaulx, a zealous Papist, and Sir Thomas Hineage, Vice-Chamberlain, and Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaster, whose only Daughter marryed to Sir Moyle Finch of Kent, was no small advancer of that House. There dyed also William Whitaker, Master of St Johns Colledge in Cambridge, and Divinity Professor: As likewise Sir Roger Williams, and Sir Thomas Morgan; so as this year was honoured with the deaths of two great Lords, one exquisite Courtier, one great Scholar, and two famous Souldiers.

In Ireland at this time, Russel the Deputy doubting a storm of War from Tir-Oen, sent into England, requiring to have some experienced Souldiers sent to him with Forces, who though he desired Baskervyle to be the man, yet Sir John Norris was sent to him with thirteen hundred old Souldiers, besides a further supply; whom Tir-Oen hearing to be coming, set presently upon the Fort of Blackwater, and in the absence of Edward Cornwall the Governour, took it. But now being doubtfull of his case, in a subdolous manner (as he was a double dealing man) he both offereth his help to the Earl of Kildare, against the Deputies servants; and at the same time, maketh promise to the Earl of Ormond, and Sir Henry Wallop; of loyalty and obedience; but notwithstanding he was forthwith proclaimed Traytor, under the name of Hugh O-Neal, bastard Son to Con O-Neal. There was at this time with the Rebels in Ulster a thousand Horse, and 6280 Foot: and in Connaght, two thousand three hundred, all at Tyr-Oens command: and the Forces of the English under Norris, not much fewer, with whom the Deputy himself joyned, and marched together to Armach; which so terrified the Rebels, that Tir-Oen forsaking the Fort of Blackwater, began to hide himself. Whereupon the Deputy returned, leaving Norris to follow the War, with the Title of General of the Army. But this satisfied not Norris, and therefore out of emulation betwixt himself and the Deputy, he performed nothing worth the speaking of, and seemed to favour Tir-Oen, as much as the Deputy hated him; insomuch, as he had private Conference with him (a thing not lawful with proclaymed Traytors) and upon his submission, and Hostages given, a Truce was granted both to him and Odonell, till the first of January. When the Truce was expired, Tir-Oen exhibited certain petitions, protesting, if they were granted, he would then perform all duties of a loyal subject. In consulting about which Petitions, another Truce was concluded, till the first of April: during which Truce, Tir-Oen dealt secretly with the King of Spain for Aid to be sent him, making nevertheless a fair shew of willingnesse to obedience, so far, that by the procurement of Norris and Fenton, a pardon was granted him; the which he pretended to receive more joyfully, than the Instrument which conferred the Earldome upon him; yet all this was but dissimulation, to win time for his own ends.

Sir John Norris is sent into Ireland with an Army to ayd the Deputy.

The Earl of Tir-Oen proclaymed Traytor.

Norris out of emulation to the Deputy favours Tir-Oen.

Tir-Oen to win time; dissembles.

In the midst of these Irish Affairs, Albertus Arch-Duke of Austria and Cardinal, whom the King of Spain had newly set over the Netherlands, mustered together the Spanish Forces, upon pretence of raising the Siege of La Fere in Picardy; but upon a sudden turneth aside, and besiegeth Calice; and taking Newnham Fort, the very first day became Master of the Haven. The Queen informed hereof, forthwith upon the very Sunday in time of Divine Service, commandeth to levy Souldiers, whom she committeth to the Earl of Essex; but before they could be shipped, certain news came, That the Town and Fort were taken by the Spaniard: Whereupon, the Queens Army was dismissed, and only some money lent to the French King.

Albertus Duke of Austria takes Calice by a sudden assault.

But a few dayes after, a far greater, and more select Army is raised in England, wherein many of Noble Houses served as Volunteers: For the Queen, to divert the King of Spain from invading her Borders, thought it the best way to invade his: Whereupon a Navy of a hundred and fifty Ships was made ready; where were Souldiers under pay, Six thousand three hundred and threescore; Volunteers of the Nobility and Gentry, One thousand; Mariners, Six thousand seven hundred seventy and two, besides the Dutchmen, who brought two and twenty Ships. Robert Earl of Essex, and Charles Howard Lord Admiral of England, were made Generals with equal Authority; but the Admiral to hold Prerogative at Sea, Essex at Land. To these, for a Councell of War, were joyned the Lord Thomas Howard, Walter Rawleigh, Francis Vere, George Carew, and Conyers Clifford. The whole Fleet was divided into four Squadrons; The Admirall commanded the first; Essex the second; the Lord Thomas Howard the third; and Rawleigh the fourth. The Officers of the Army were Francis Vere Serjeant Major General, or Marshall; John Winkfield Quarter-Master General; George Carew Master of the Ordnance; Conyers Clifford Serjeant Major. Colonels were Robert Earl of Sussex, Sir Christopher Blunt, Sir Thomas Gerrard, Sir Richard Winkfield; William Winkfield was Commander of the Volunteers, and Anthony Ashley Secretary to the Councel of War, was to Register their Acts and Consultations. The Commission being drawn, the Queen gave them private Instructions, and withall, a Prayer of her own making, to be daily used in every Ship.

Robert Earl of Essex, and Charles Howard Lord Admiral, are sent with Forces against Spain, who take Cales; and the passages of it

This Fleet set forth from Plymouth at the beginning of June. Nigh unto Cabo S. Vincent they lighted upon an Irish Barque, which told them, That at Cales they were secure, and then in the Haven there were at Anchor Gallies, Ships of War, and a great many Merchant Vessels. The twentieth of June, they cast Anchor on the West side of the Island; within two dayes they were agreed to ſet upon the Spaniſh Ships, whereat the Earl of Eſſex caſt up his Cap for joy. This buſineſs was allotted to the leſſer Ships, becauſe the Road was too ſhallow for the great. The Galleys quickly fled, and creeping along the ſhore, ſhifted away, but the Spaniſh Ships that lay at Anchor at Puntall, turned their broad ſides; ſo as the Engliſh fight with them laſted from break of day till noon; at which time the Spaniards having their Galleons miſerably torn, and many of their men ſlain, reſolved to fire the ſhips, or run them on ſhore. The Spaniſh Admiral being Fifteen hundred Tun of Burthen, was fired by a Moor, and two other Ships which lay next her took the fire, and were loſt likewiſe. When this Sea-Fight was ended, Eſſex landed Eight hundred Souldiers at Puntall, a league from the Town of Cales, when half a mile from the Town, the Spaniſh Horſe and Foot ſhewed themſelves, and preſently gave back again; but ſtraightway cometh forth a greater number: Then Eſſex commanded his Forces to make a fair retreat; and having enticed forth their Enemies, they turned upon them with ſuch violence, that they forced them back into the Town. Then the Earl got up to a Bulwark newly raiſed, near the Gate, where he ſpyed a paſſage into the Town, but ſo high from ground, that they muſt leap a Spears length to get down. Yet Evans the Earl of Suſſex his Lieutenant, Arthur Savage, and others leaped down; and the mean while Sir Francis Vere broke the Gate, and ruſhed in, and the reſt with him. In the Market-place John Winkfield was ſhot in the Head, and with ſtones from the tops of Houſes divers were wounded; amongſt whom, Samuel Bagnall received eight Wounds, and Arthur Savage was bloudy all over; which two were Knighted in the place. The next day the Caſtle was yielded, upon condition, That the Inhabitants might depart with the Cloathes on their backs, the reſt to be left for ſpoyl. For five hundred and fourſcore thouſand Duckets the Caſtle was to be redeemed; and for the payment, forty of the chief Citizens to be ſent Hoſtages into England. Now Rawleigh was commanded to fire the Merchants Ships lying at Port-Realt, when they promiſed two Millions of Duckets to redeem them: but this the Admiral would not hear of, ſaying, He was ſent to deſtroy Ships, not to diſmiſs them upon Compoſition. A world of Munition was found in the City, and great ſtore of Money privately carried away, every one ſhifting for himſelf. It was thought by the wiſer ſort, That the Spaniard could not be damnified leſs by this Expedition, than Twenty Millions of Duckets. None of Note was ſlain amongſt the Engliſh, but onely Winkfield, who alſo ſlew a Spaniſh Captain; and now at laſt, threeſcore Military men were honoured with Knighthood. After this, having ſpoyled the whole Iſland, and demoliſhed the Fort, they returned into England, much againſt the will of Eſſex, who would fain have been attempting ſome other enterpriſe.

The Queen receiving them home with much affability, giving many thanks to thoſe of principall Note, but extolling the Earl of Eſſex and the Admiral, above the reſt. And now bethinking her ſelf of a fit man to be Governour of the Bryl, which was given by the States, as a Caution Town for money due, ſhe made choice of Sir Francis Vere, although Eſſex commended other to her for the place: But another thing he took with great indignation, That in his abſence ſhe had made Sir Robert Cecill Secretary, whereas he had formerly with great inſtance, commended Sir Thomas Bodley to her.

Sir Robert Cecill is made Secretary of State.

And now the King of Spain to recover his Honour loſt at Cales, ſetteth forth a Navy for England and Ireland, with a great number of Iriſh Fugitives; but being at Sea, moſt of his Ships were either run upon Rocks, or caſt away in ſtorms; ſo as this Expedition came to nothing.

But the Queen, at this time, for her better ſecurity, entred a League of Defence and Offence with the French King, againſt the Spaniard, upon certain Conditions; which Leagne ſhe confirmed by Oath, in the Chappel at Greenwich, the Nine and twentieth of Auguſt, laying her hand upon the hand of Henry de la Tour, Duke of Bulloigne, and Marſhal of France; the Biſhop of Chicheſter holding forth the Evangeliſts, and a great Company of the Nobility ſtanding round about. In September following, Gilbert Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury, was ſent on Ambaſſage into France, to take the French Kings Oath, and to preſent Sir Anthony Mildmay for the Queens Ambaſſadour in Ordinary in the room of Sir Henry Unton lately there deceaſed, and to inveſt the King with the Order of the Garter. Soon after, Baskerville wafted into Piccardy with Two thouſand Souldiers; for no more were by agreement to be ſent this year.

Queen Elizabeth enters a League Offenſive and Defenſive with the King of France.

It was now the year 1596, and the Nine and thirtieth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when Thomas Arundel of Warder returned into England, from the War in Hungary againſt the Turk, whom, for his good ſervice done there, the Emperour by his Letters Patents, had created Earl of the Sacred Empire, and all and ſingular his Heirs and their Poſterity, Males or Females, lawfully deſcended from him, to be Earls and Counteſſes of the holy Empire for ever. Thoſe who are graced with this Title, have a Place and Voice in the Imperial Diets, may purchaſe Lands in the Emperours Dominions, may take up voluntary Souldiers, and are not bound to anſwer any matter before any Judge, but onely in the Chamber of the Empire. At his return, a great Queſtion came in agitation, Whether Titles of Honour given to the Queens Subjects without her privity, ought to be accepted by them, or admitted by her. For this new Earl ſtuck in the ſtomachs of the Engliſh Barons, who inwardly grudged to give him place. The matter was long diſputed on both ſides, but what iſſue it had, or whether he were permitted this honour here at home, I find not. Certain it is, That Sir Nicholas Clifford and Sir Anthony Sherley, whom the French King two years ſince received into the Order of St. Michael, were laid in Priſon at their coming home, and charged to reſign their Robes of the Order.

This

Many great Persons die.

This year many great Persons dyed; John Puckering Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, whom Thomas Egerton succeeded; Richard Fletcher Bishop of London, who for marrying the Lady Baker (as goodly a Lady as he was a Prelate) incurred the Queens displeasure; and to cure his Cares, fell immoderately to drinking of Tobacco, and so expired. Henry Cary Baron of Hunsdon, Lord Chamberlain of her Majesties House, and her Cousin german. Sir Francis Knolls, who married Hunsdons Sister, in Queens Maries days an Exile in Germany for the Gospel, by Queen Elizabeth made first Vice-Chamberlain, then Captain of the Guard, afterward Treasurer of the Houshold, and Knight of the Garter. Henry Hastings Earl of Huntington, and President of the Councel in the North, who spent his Estate upon Puritan Ministers: Francis Lord Hastings, Nephew to him by his Brother George, who succeeded him in the Earldom, and Margaret Clifford Countess of Derby, (who descended of the Blood Royal, from Charles Brandon) consulted with Sorcerers and cunning men, and thereupon a little before her end, was in a manner excluded from the Queens Favour.

The Earl of Essex, Sir Walter Rawleigh and others are sent to seize upon the Spanish Fleet, but are distressed by Tempests.

The Queen at this time was told, That the King of Spain was preparing a new Fleet against Ireland; whereupon to encounter him, she also prepared a Navy of a hundred and twenty Ships, seventeen of the Queens, three and forty lesser Ships of War, the rest for the carriage of provision. They were parted into three Squadrons: Essex commanded the first, who was also Chief Commander in the Expedition; the Lord Thomas Howard the second, and Rawleigh the third. In this Fleet were sundry of the Nobility and Gentry, Charles Blunt Lord Mountjoy, Vere, Carew, Sir Christopher Blunt, the Earls of Rutland and Southampton, the Lords Grey, Cromwell, Rich, and many others. The ninth of July they weighed Anchor from Plymouth, and were to direct their course to Ferall and the Groyn, to seize upon the Spanish Fleet in the Harbour, and towards the Isles called Azores, & to intercept the Indian Fleet at their return into Spain; but this Expedition was crossed and overthrown by Tempests, for they had not sailed forty Leagues from Plymouth, when they were shaken with such a terrible Tempest for four days together, that the Mariners themselves were at their wits end, and the Fleet had much ado to recover Plymouth, The Navy being amended, they hoise up Sayl the second time, but the Wind fell presently again so crosse, that for a whole moneths time they could not get out of the Haven; returning to Plymouth the seventeenth of August they got out of the Haven; and now the third time, with a side-wind hoise up sayl, but before they came in view of Spain, they were dispersed by another horrible Tempest, wherein of the two great Ships which were taken at Calice, one was dashed in pieces, the other wandred no man knew whither. At the Island Flores the Fleet met again, where Rawleigh being distressed for Water went on shore without leave; and ere he had watered, had charge to follow Essex to Fayall: but not finding him there, he observed the Port, and calling a Councel, the Commanders wished him to set upon the place, and not let slip so fair a Booty. Upon this Rawleigh with some of the prime Volunteers, got to shore, and won the Town, but found no booty in it. The next day Essex came thither, whom Merrick informeth what Rawleigh had done, affirming spitefully, That he had done it only to prevent his Lordship in the honour of the Exploit: whereupon some perswaded the Earl to call a Councel of War and then displace him: others again, to take off his head for going to Land without the Chief Commanders leave; saying, he was never like for to have such another opportunity to be rid of his Adversary; upon this Sidney, Brett, Berry, and other of Rawleighs Company were displaced, and laid by the heels; Rawleigh himself was sent for, and entertained with a grim look by Essex and all his Party; Essex rebuketh him angerly, for landing his Forces, which none upon pain of death might do, without the Generals command; Rawleigh made answer, That the Captains indeed, Shipmasters, and the rest were within the compass of that Law; but not the Three prime Commanders, of whom himself was One: That he had a long time waited his coming, and longer would have waited, but that the Islanders provoked him to fight. And now the Lord Thomas Howard mediated, that no severity might be used against Rawleigh, and perswaded him to acknowledg his fault; which being done, all were friends, and the displaced Captains were restored to their places, for the Earl was of a placable disposition; easily apt to take offence, and as easily to remit it.

Rawleigh, without leave, goes ashore, and takes Fayall.

For this he is questioned by the Earl: but his Answer, and the Lord Tho. Howards mediation; reconciles all.

From hence they sail to Gratiosa, where the Inhabitants craved mercy and obtained it; and here Essex would have tarried, in expectation of the Indian Fleet; but that Graves the Pilot disswaded, because the Harbour was not good: and now see the unluckinesse of ill counsel, for the English were not gone above an hour, or two, from this place; when loe, the American Fleet (wherein were forty Ships, and seven of them loaden with treasure) cometh thither; which, hearing that the English were thereabouts, directed their course to Tercera, where they gained the Haven, all but three Ships, indifferent wealthy; which the English took: and then were minded to set upon the rest, in the Port; but finding the attempt not feasible, they passed from hence to St Michaels; where Southampton, Rutland, Evers, Bredon and Dockwray were Knighted. And then Essex landed within six miles of the Town, nigh unto Villa Franca, a fair Town, and well furnished with Merchandise, Wine, Wood, and Corn; where they tarried six days: and the common Souldiers found good booty. And now a Caraque was espied, coming out of the East-Indies which by a warning piece shot off in a Dutch Ship, perceiving that the English were there; run her self ashore, unloaded her Metchandize, and then fired her self. Thus the English had ill luck every where in this expedition: And the ninth of October they hoisted sail for England: but within two dayes, a terrible tempest from the Northward dispersed them; and the Spanish Fleet also at the same time, so as they never came in view of one another: one Spanish Ship was cast upon Dertmouth, the Mariners and Souldiers half starved in her; who intimated, that the Spanish Fleet intended to seize upon some Haven in Cornwall, which being nigh the mouth of the Channel, might be convenient to receive Forces from

The English miss the Spanish Fleet, through ill Counsel.

Spain: but the Divine Providence fruſtrated the deſigns both of the Spaniard and the Engliſh.

But now at his return, the Earl of Eſſex found that done in England, in his abſence, which infinitely diſcontented him; Sir Robert Cecill made Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaſter; and which was more, Charles Lord Howard, created Earl of Nottingham, with relation in his Patent to the Victory in Eighty eight, and his good ſervice at Cales: This glory he envied him, and beſides ſtomached it, that he muſt now take place of him: It being enacted in the Reign of Henry the Eighth, That the chief Officers of the Kingdome ſhould have Precedence of all men of their degree, Whereupon the Queen, to give him content, was fain to create him Earl Marſhal of England; by which he recovered his place again.

Charles Howard Lord Admiral is created Earl of Nottingham, to the diſcontentment of the Earl of Eſſex.

The Earl of Eſſex is made Earl Marſhal, of purpoſe to take place of the Admiral.

About this time, an Ambaſſadour came into England, from the King of Poland; who, when the Queen expected he ſhould give her thanks for having procured a Peace between the King his Maſter, and the Turk; he clean contrary expoſtulated unkindneſs, for breach of Priviledges, in trading with Spain, requiring a preſent remedy, or elſe the King would otherwiſe right himſelf. The Queen not a little offended, ſuddenly replyed; How was I deceived? I expected an Ambaſſador, and behold a Herald; ſuch a ſpeech I never heard in all my life-time. And after ſome further checking of him for his boldneſs, ſhe referred him to her Councel; and then retired into her Cloſet. The Ambaſſadour afterward, in private Conference with ſome of the Councel, excuſed himſelf, ſaying, That his Speech was penned by others, and then given him in Writing. To his Meſſage, the Councel gave the like anſwer, as they had given before to the Hanſe-Towns, upon the like occaſion: though now again, the Hanſe-Towns obtain of the Emperour, to prohibit the Engliſh from trading in Germany, which made the Queen to prohibit the Hanſe-Towns from trading in England, and put them out of the Steel-yard till this difference was accorded.

The ſawcy ſpeech of a Polish Ambaſſador to the Queen, and her Anſwer.

This year the Chancellor of Denmark came into England to reſtore the Garter, which ſhe had beſtowed upon the Kings Father, and withall offering the Kings help, to make a Peace for the Queen with the Spaniard. The Queen thanked him; but meant not to uſe his help for that which ſhe did not deſire, and eſpecially not now, when he had newly moleſted the King of France her Allye, and had taken Amyens the ſtrongeſt Town of Picardy: Though why ſhould the Queen be ſo tender of the French King, when now to get an Aid of Four thouſand Souldiers from her, he fell to devices; intimating unto her, That he was now offered by the Popes Nuntio a very commodious Peace, if he would but forſake her. But while theſe things were in Treaty, Amyens was recovered again by the valour of Baskerville; (who dyed at the Siege) and of Sir Arthur Savage, as the King in his Letters to the Queen thankfully acknowledged, Baskerviles and Sir Arthur Savages ſervice in recovering of Amyens.

About this time a Parliament was holden at Weſtminſter, where Subſidies were willingly granted; and to this Parliament was called the Lord La Ware, and reſtored to his bloud, which by Act of Parliament in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth was tainted. Alſo to this Parliament was called Thomas Lord Howard, by the Title of Baron Howard of Walden.

The Lord Tho. Howard is made Baron of Walden.

In Ireland at this time, a great part of Ulſter, and almoſt all Connaght was in Rebellion; Whereupon Ruſſel the Deputy was called home, and Thomas Lord Burroughs ſent in his place, a man very ſtout and couragious, but no Souldier: This infinitely diſcontented Norris, who thought himſelf ſure of the place, and now to ſee his Rival preferred before him, and himſelf to be under him, Preſident of Munſter, drave him into ſuch a melancholy, that in a very ſhort time (and as he thought to himſelf with much diſgrace) he ended his life.

The Lord Burroughs is ſent Deputy into Ireland.

Norris that expected the place, diſcontented, falls ſick and dies.

And now the Earl of Tir-Oen craveth, and obtaineth a moneths Truce of the new Deputy, at the moneths end the Deputy marcheth againſt the Rebels, and gaineth the Fort at Black-water, when ſuddenly the Rebels ſhew themſelves upon a Hill hard by, againſt whom the Earl of Kildare marcheth and puts them to flight; but yet with ſome loſs of his own ſide, as Francis Vaughan the Deputies Brother in Law, Turner a Serjeant Major, and two Foſters, Brothers of the Earl of Kildare, whoſe death he took ſo heavily, that within a few days he dyed himſelf.

The Fort of Black-water gained by the Deputy.

As ſoon as the Deputy had fortified the Caſtle at Black-water, and withdrawn his Army, the Rebels began to beſiege it again; (for this was the main place of their ſtrength) which cauſed the Deputy with all poſſible ſpeed to make thither, but unhappily dyed by the way. Whereupon the Rebels ſet upon the Fort more fiercely than before; but being ſtill repelled, they comforted themſelves with this, that there was not many days proviſion left in the Fort; yet the admirable fortitude of Thomas Williams the Captain and the Garriſon Souldiers ſaved the place, who, when their Horſe-fleſh was all ſpent, fed upon weeds growing within the Trenches, and endured all kind of miſery. And now the Lord Burroughs the Deputy being dead, the Army by direction from England, was committed to the Earl of Ormond, and the Government to two Lords Juſtices, Adam Loftbouſe Archbiſhop of Dublin and Chancellor, and Robert Gardiner: To this new Lieutenant, Tir-Oen exhibiteth a Bill of his oppreſſions and grievances with requeſt of pardon, and at the ſame time ſtirreth up Mac-Hugh to a new Rebellion in Leinſter.

The Lord Burroughs dyes.

Tir-Oen complains to the new Lieutenant of his grievances; and at the ſame time ſtirreth up Mac-Hugh to a new Rebellion.

In France at this time, the French King being importuned by the Pope, and by his own ſubjects began to incline to a Peace with Spain; which the Queen underſtanding, ſhe ſent into France Sir Robert Cecill, Herbert and Wilks, (who dyed at his landing in France:) The States likewiſe ſent thither Juſtine of Naſſaw, and Barnevelt, and others likewiſe into England to diſſwade the Peace; but notwithſtanding all they could ſay or do, the French King ſhortly after concluded a Peace, to the great diſcontentment of the Queen and the States, but to the great good, and eſtabliſhment of the French Commonwealth.

The King of France concludes a Peace with Spain againſt Q. Elizabeths liking.

And now the Queen providing for her own and her Peoples ſafety, ſent Sir Francis Vere to the States, to know if they were willing to joyn in a Treaty of Peace with the Spaniard: if not, what what they would afford toward a War; and to deal earneſtly with them about repayment of money due to her from them. At home in the mean time, was holden a great Conſultation, Whether a Peace with Spain were convenient for England, or no? and many Reaſons were on both ſides alledged. Burleigh Lord Treaſurer was for Peace, Eſſex for War, and ſo vehement in it, that the Treaſurer, after a long debating, in a ſtrange manner of Preſage, reached forth the Book of the Pſalms to him, pointing him to that Verſe, The bloudy minded man ſhall not live out half his dayes. Which made Eſſex afterward to ſet forth an Apology, with Reaſons for juſtification of his Opinion.

A Conſultation, whether a Peace with Spain were convenient for England or no. Burleigh is for it, Eſſex againſt it.

But now another Conſultation was held, about a fit man to be Deputy of Ireland; The Queen intended to ſend Sir William Knolles, Eſſex his Uncle; but Eſſex was violent for Sir George Carew, whom he had a minde to remove from the Court; and when he could not by any means perſwade the Queen to it, he then, forgetting himſelf and his duty, uncivilly and contemptuouſly turned his back upon the Queen, muttering certain words. Whereupon ſhe growing impatient, gave him a box on the ear, and bid him be gone with a vengeance; Eſſex laid his hand upon his Sword hilt, and ſwore a great oath, That he could not, nor would not put up ſuch an indignity; and that he would not have taken it at King Henry the Eighth his hands; and ſo in a rage flung away from the Court. But afterward, admoniſhed by the Lord Keeper, he became more milde, and in a ſhort time returned into the Queens favour.

The Queen gives the Earl of Eſſex a box on the ear, and why: and how he took it.

About this time, William Cecill Lord Burleigh, and high Treaſurer of England, finding himſelf to droop with age, (for he was now threeſcore and ſeventeen years old) ſent Letters to the Queen, intreating her to releaſe him of his publick charge; whereupon ſhe went to viſit and comfort him; but within a few dayes he ended his life, after he had been the principal ſtay of the Engliſh Common-wealth for many years together. One great good he did to his Countrey a little before his death, that he brought the States of the Low-Countries to a Compoſition, for the payment of Eight hundred thouſand pounds, by Thirty thouſand pounds yearly; likewiſe a new League to be concluded with them.

The Lord Burleigh Lord Treaſurer dies.

The King of Denmarks Subjects having lately ſeized upon ſome goods of the Engliſh as Prize, to the value of a hundred thouſand Dollars; the Queen ſent the Lord Zouch, and Chriſtopher Perkins Doctor of Law, in Embaſſage to the Dane, both to congratulate his late marriage with the Electors Daughter of Brandenburg; and alſo to crave reſtitution of the Engliſh Goods; who obtained, that in lieu thereof, Threeſcore thouſand Dollars were repaid. And now George Clifford Earl of Cumberland, having with a Navy of eleven ſhips, waited for Portugal Cariques, and the American Fleet, till the ſeaſon of the year was paſt (they not daring to ſtir forth) he at laſt ſet upon Port-Rico and took it; but ſeven hundred of his men falling ſick of Calentures, and dying within forty days, he was fain to return home with ſome honour, but little profit.

The Earl of Cumberland takes Port-Rico.

About this time, one Edward Squire was Arraigned of high Treaſon; he had been at firſt an ordinary Scrivener, afterwards a Groom in the Queens ſtable, and going as a Souldier in Drakes laſt expedition, was taken priſoner and carried into Spain, there he came acquainted with one Wallpoole an Engliſh Jeſuite, who cauſed him to be put into the Inquiſition for an Heretick, and the fellow taſting of miſery, was eaſily drawn to become a Papiſt, and afterward to attempt any thing for the Catholick cauſe. His ghoſtly father perſwaded him it were meritorious to make away the Queen and the Earl of Eſſex, and ſent him into England with a certain poyſon, wherewith to anoint the pommel of the Queens Saddle, and the chair in which the Earl ſhould ſit, which he acordingly performed, but neither of them took effect, whereupon Wallpoole ſuſpecting Squires fidelity was bent to revenge it, and ſent one into England, who in generall terms ſhould lay this aſperſion upon him; whereupon Squire is called in queſtion, and never thinking that his Confeſſor would detect him, directly denyed all at firſt; but after ſeeing himſelf betrayed, confeſſed all the matter and was executed.

Edward Squire executed and why.

This whole year the rebellion was hot in Ireland; For Tir-Oen notwithſtanding his pardon lately obtained, all on a ſudden beſieged the Fort at Blackwater, to the raiſing of which ſiege, the Lieutenant Generall (for there was as yet no Deputy) ſent thirteen Companies under the command of the Marſhal, Tir-Oens ſworn adverſary, him Tir-Oen ſlew, and put his whole Army to rout, and atchieved ſuch a Victory, with ſo great loſſe to the Engliſh, as they had never felt the like ſince they firſt ſet footing in Ireland; for thirteen valiant Commanders, and fifteen hundred common Souldiers were ſlain at this Skirmiſh, and ſoon after the Fort of Blackwater was yeelded up. And now Tir-Oens fame began to reſound as the Aſſertor of the liberty of the Nation, and upon a ſudden all Munſter brake forth into Rebellion. For the cheriſhing whereof Tir-Oen ſent thither Ouny Mac-Rorye and Terell (who originally an Engliſh man, was grown a deadly enemy to the Engliſh Nation) with four hundred Kernes. Againſt theſe, Thomas Norris Preſident of the Province, marched to Killmallock with a good force; but finding that the Iriſh Souldiers of his Company were ready to revolt, he was fain to diſperſe his Army and retire to Corke. Hereupon the Rebels grew inſolent, ſpoyled the Countrey, and in cruel manner put all the Engliſh to the ſword. Furthermore they declare Fitz Thomas to be Earl of Deſmond; but upon condition he ſhould hold of O-Neale, that is, of Tir-Oen, who now diſpatched Letters to the Spaniard, relating his Victories to the full, and vowing to accept no terms of peace with the Engliſh, and yet at the ſame inſtant (after his wonted treacherous manner) proffered ſome kinde of ſubmiſſion to the Leiutenant, but withall made unreaſonable demands.

Tir-Oen breaks openly into Rebellion, and gives the Engliſh a greatde feat.

Yet at the ſame time makes ſome offer of ſubmiſſion.

1597.

The State of Ireland being thus in combuſtion, a ſerious conſultation is holden whom to ſend to quench it: the Queen and moſt of the Councel thought Sir Charles Blunt Lord Mountjoy the fitteſt man; but Eſſex covertly intimated, that he had no military experience, and beſides was too Bookiſh to prove a good Commander: he ſeem'd to aim at the place for himſelf, though he made a ſhew modeſtly to refuſe it, and yet ſtill ready with with his exceptions if any other were nominated: many thought it dangerous to have an Army put into his hands, for his followers talked of great matters, that he (forsooth) was descended of the bloud Royal of Scotland and England, and had better Right to the Crown, than any other of the Competitors. In conclusion, he is appointed Vice-Roy, with ample Authority, to make War or conclude Peace, and pardon all offenders, even Tir-Oen himself. An Army is allotted him as great as he desired: Indeed greater than ever Ireland had seen before, Twenty Thousand Foot, and Thirteen Hundred Horse: with these, and a great Retinue besides of the Nobility, he passeth into Ireland; where as soon as he had taken the Sword, contrary to his Commission (which was to go immediately against the Arch-rebel) he marched towards Munster, against the petty Rebels, taketh the Castle of Cahir, and driveth the Rebels into the Woods and Groves adjoyning. His Forces being now impaired, he tarrieth to make them up; but in the mean time sendeth directions to Sir Coniers Clifford, President of Connaght, to set upon the Rebels in one place, (thereby to sever their forces) while he assaulted them in another; Clifford marched toward Belike, with 1500 Souldiers, where the Rebels are upon them at unawares, under the conduct of O-Rorke, (his Son that was hanged here in England) The English repel them at first with ease, and march along, but the Rebels finding they wanted Powder, set upon them again, and put them to flight; in which skirmish, Clifford and many of the old Souldiers were slain.

At last the Earl of Essex is sent with ample authority.

Essex having by this received new supplies out of England, and a check for neglecting the Queens Command, setteth forth at length towards the Borders of Vlster, with Thirteen hundred Foot, and five hundred Horse; being come thither, Tir-Oen by a Messenger requested parley, Essex refuseth, saying, he might speak with him the next morning, between the two Armies; the next day word is brought to Essex, that Tir-Oen craved the Queens mercy, and that he might only be heard speak, appointing the shallow of Balla Clinch for a most convenient place; thither came Essex alone, with whom Tir-Oen (riding his Horse up to the girts) had private conference a full hour; A while after, Con (Tir-Oens base Son) came to Essex, requesting in his Fathers name a second parley, and that some of the chief on both sides might be present: Essex consented, so there came not more than six. At the day appointed, many words had not passed, but it was agreed, that their Delegates should Treat the next day concerning a Peace: between them it was concluded, that a Truce should be held from six weeks to six weeks, till May day.

He hath private Conference with Tir-Oen.

A Truce is concluded.

By this time, the Queen understanding that no more was done, after so much time and money spent, in a great anger taxeth the Earls proceedings, and I know not how, it fell from her to some others that stood by, that he had other thoughts in his minde, than the good of his Prince and Countrey: And thereupon dispatched very sharp Letters to him, blaming his delay, and letting slip every fair opportunity: with which Letters Essex was so nettled, and chiefly troubled, that the Queen had now made Cecil Master of the Wards, which he expected himself: that he began to cast strange projects within his minde, and held Private consultations of returning into England with part of his Forces, to surprize his Adversaries; But from this course, the Earl of Southampton, and Sir Christopher Blunt dissuaded him, as being dangerous and wicked. Yet within a moneth over he went, and came to the Court at Nonesuch, to inform the Queen of the State of Ireland. By the way the Lord Gray of Wilton crossed him, but saluted him not; whom one of his followers offered to kill for his contempt: but Essex would not suffer him: And made such hast, that early in the Morning he was upon his Knees before the Queen in the Privy Chamber. She entertained him courteously, but not with the countenance she was wont: and after a little talk bid him keep in his Chamber; And soon after, Committed him to Custody, in the Lord privy Seals House; where entring into Consideration of his case, he giveth himself wholly to Divine Contemplation, and writeth wonderfull Letters to his friends, of the vanity of the things of this life.

Essex without leave comes over to the Queen.

Is welcommed with committing him to the Lord Privy Seal.

It was now the year one thousand six hundred, and the two and fortieth of Queen Elizabeths Reign, when after the departure of the Earl of Essex, Tir-Oen began to carry himself as Monarch of Ireland, and sendeth Kernes to make spoil in the possessions of such as continued in their loyalty to the Queen, under Mac-Guir their Captain, who lighting casually upon Sir Warham Saint-Leger, thrust him through with a spear, and was himself thrust through withall. Whereupon the Queen sent Sir Charles Blunt Lord Montjoy, to take upon him the Deputies place, who loseth no time, but first of all marcheth towards Vlster, buildeth a fort within eight miles of Armagh, which, in honour of Sir John Norris, under whom he had his first military schooling, he calleth by the name of Mount Norris; there he placed Edward Blanye, who kept the Rebels in awe in those parts, from thence back he goeth into Leinster, wherein the Glynnes he reduceth into order, Donel-Spaniah, Phelim Mac-Pheoph, and the rebelling Nation of the O-Tooles, taking hostages of them; then back into Vlster again, being victor whereseever he cometh, and at Tredagh, receiveth into protection Mac-Henry, Mac-Cowly, and other Rebels, who fell at his feet for mercy. All this and more he did in his first year, and no lesse successeful was Carew president of Munster, who drave out of the County the Titular Earl of Desmond, and having found Munster a turbulent Province in April, he overcomed and made it so quiet by December following that the Rebels maintained no one Fort in it against the Queen.

The Earl of Tir-Oen, upon Essex his departure, carries himself as Monarch of Ireland.

Sir Charles Blunt Lord Montjoy is sent Deputy into Ireland.

And now a new Consultation was holden in England, touching a peace with the King of Spain, the which he sought both by the French King, and by Albertus the Arch-Duke, who was now returned into the Netherlands out of Spain, where he was marryed to the Infanta, The Queen consenting to a Treaty, left it to the French King to nominate both the time and place for the meeting of the Delegates, who set down the moneth of May, and Bulloign in France; But now foreseeing that a question would arise about Precedency, some were appointed to search Ancient Records concerning that point. These men found in the Book of the Ceremonies of the Court

A Treaty of Peace is agreed on with Spain.

The Queen writes to Essex, blaming his delay.

Court of Rome, which (according to the Canons) giveth Rule to the reſt, as the Lady and Miſtreſſe; that amongſt Kings, the firſt place is due to the King of France, the ſecond to the Kings of England, and the third to the King of Caſtile; That the Engliſh quietly held this priviledge in the General Councels of Baſil, Conſtance, and others: beſides the Kingdom of Caſtile, which is the Spaniards firſt Title, (and which is but an upſtart in regard of England) had Earls, but no Kings till the year 1017. In like manner, Pope Julius the third, gave ſentence for Henry the ſeventh of England, againſt Ferdinand, who was then King of Caſtile.

The Engliſh Commiſſioners have a charge not to give Precedence to Spain; and why.

At the day appointed, the Delegates met at Bulloign, Sir Henry Nevill, Leiger Ambaſſadour, Sir John Herbert, Robert Beal, & Thomas Edmunds for the Engliſh, and other for the King of Spain and the Archduke. The Engliſh had inſtructions, firſt concerning Precedency, in no caſe to give way to the King of Spain; yet if they contended, to put the matter to the deciſion of Lots, rather than the Treaty ſhould be diſſolved; and for the reſt, to propoſe and mention the renewing of the ancient Burgundian League, freedom of commerce, &c.

The Spaniards being denyed Precedence, break off the Treaty.

At the meeting, when they had ſeverally ſhewed their Commiſſions; the Engliſh challenge the Precedency, the Spaniards do the like, and in ſo peremptory a manner that without it they would diſſolve the Treaty, Hereupon the Engliſh made a propoſition, to let paſſe the queſtion of Precedency; and to tranſact the buſineſſe by writing, and Meſſengers between them: Or that the Treaty might be intermitted only for threeſcore days, not quite broken off; but all was to no purpoſe; and at three moneths end they parted.

The States the mean while were ſo far from regarding a Peace, that at this time they thought upon reducing the Sea Coaſt of Flanders into their Command; and thereupon they landed an Army there, of fourteen thouſand Foot, and three thouſand Horſe, under the conduct of Maurice of Naſſaw; and fifteen hundred of the Engliſh under the command of Sir Francis Vere, and his Brother Horatio. At which time happened the famous Battail of Newport, againſt the Archduke, where nine thouſand of the Spaniards were ſlain; and the Victory, by the valour of the Engliſh, fell to the Dutch; for ſo forward were the Engliſh in this Battail, that of their fifteen hundred, eight hundred were ſlain and ſore wounded, Eight Captains killed, and of the reſt every man hurt.

The Famous Battail of Newport, won by the valour of the Engliſh.

All this year, and the year paſt, ſundry quarrels and complaints aroſe between the Engliſh and French, touching repriſals of goods taken from each other by Pirates of either Nation: Alſo touching Cuſtoms and Impoſitions, contrary to the Treaty of Bloys, and deceit in Engliſh Clothes, to the great infamy of the Nation. In Denmark likewiſe aroſe controverſies touching commerce, and the Fiſhing of the Engliſh upon the Coaſt of Iſland and Norway. The Queen alſo at that time, for the encreaſe of Navigation and Commerce, Founded the Company of Eaſt-India Merchants, allowing them large Priviledges: but whether this hath proved beneficiall to the Common-Wealth, (there having been by this means ſuch a maſſe of money and great ſtore of other commodities carried out of the Kingdom, and ſo many Mariners loſt every year) wiſe men make a queſtion.

The Company of Eaſt-India Merchants Founded by the Queen.

About this time alſo, Pope Clement the eighth, perceiving the Queen to be in her declining age, ſent two Breeves into England, the one to the Popiſh Clergy, the other to the Laity, to ſuffer no perſon whatſoever, to take the Kingdom upon him after the Queens death, but one that ſhould promiſe by Oath, to promote with all his might, the Roman Catholick Religion, how neer ſoever otherwiſe, he were allyed to the Bloud Royal of the King of England.

This year by reaſon of intemperate weather, happened a great ſcarcity of Corn in England, and thereby many grievous complaints were occaſioned. The common people caſt out reproachful ſlanders againſt the Lord Treaſurer Buckhurſt, as the granter of Licences for tranſportation of Corn; but he appealing to the Queen, ſhe forthwith defended his Innocency, and made it known by open Proclamation, imputed the fault upon the Broggers of Corn, and Foreſtallers of Markets, and gave order that the ſlanderer ſhould be reprehended and puniſhed.

The Earl of Eſſex, who had now been Priſoner ſix moneths in the Houſe of the Lord Privy Seal, he then began to repent in good earneſt, reſolving to put away his perverſe Counſellors Gilly Merrick and Henry Cuffe, and then he ſhewed ſo much patience and great ſubmiſſion, that the Queen then ſent him to his own houſe, and to be there confined, alwayes proteſting, that ſhe would doe nothing that ſhould be for his ruine, but only that, which ſhould be for his amendment. Nevertheleſſe, when as the common people extolled his Innocency, ſhe could not for the removal of ſuſpition of injuſtice, free her ſelf and her Counſellors, but bring him to trial; not in the Star-Chamber, leſt the Cenſure ſhould fall too heavy on him, but in the houſe of the Lord Privy Seal, where the cauſe ſhould have a plain hearing before the Lords of the Councel, four Earls, two Barons, and four Judges of the Realm. The objections were, That contrary to his Commiſion he had made the Earl of Southampton Generall of the Horſe, had drawn his Forces into Munſter, neglecting the Arch-rebell Tir-Oen, entertained a Parlee with him againſt the Dignity of the Queens Majeſty, and the perſon of a Viceroy, which he repreſented: and that the ſaid Parlee was ſuſpicious, in regard it was private. Some aggravations the Lawyers added from abrupt ſentences in his Letter to the Lord Privy Seal, written two years ſince, as theſe: No ſtorm is more fierce than the indignation of an Impotent Prince. What? cannot Princes erre? May they not injure their Subjects? and ſuch like.

The Earl of Eſſex upon his penitence is allowed to live at his own houſe.

Yet he is brought to a private Trial in the Lord Privy Seals Houſe, and what was objected againſt him.

He falling upon his knee at the end of the Board, profeſſed he would not conteſt with the Queen, nor excuſe the faults of his young years either in whole or in part; Proteſting that he always meant well, howſoever it fell out otherwiſe, and that now he would bid the World farewell; withall ſhedding many tears, ſo as the ſtanders by wept alſo. Yet could he not contain himſelf, but began to plead excuſes, till the Lord Privy Seal interrupted him, adviſing him to proceed as he begun, to fly to the Queens Mercy, who would not have him queſtioned for diſloyalty, but only for a contempt; and that he did not well to pretend obedience in words, which in deeds he had not performed. At length, in the name of the reſt, he pronounceth this Sentence againſt him; That he ſhould be depoſed from the Office of a Privy Counſellor, ſuſpended from the functions of the Earl Marſhall, and Maſter of the Ordnance, and be impriſoned during the Queens pleaſure, She had given expreſſe charge, not to ſuſpend him from the Office of Maſter of the Horſe (minding ſhortly to take him into favour) and that his Cenſure in no caſe ſhould be Recorded. After this he made ſhew of wonderfull humility and mortification, which ſo affected the Queen, that ſhortly ſhe removed Barkeley his Keeper, and gave him leave to go at large; only admoniſhing him, To make his own Diſcretion his Keeper, and not to come at the Court, or in her Preſence.

What his Cenſure was.

Yet upon his humility he had leave to go at large.

After this Sentence, Cuffe, who alwayes perſwaded the Earl to ſtand ſtoutly in his own defence, began ſo plainly to tax him of cowardize and puſillanimity; that the Earl in anger, commanded his Name to be put out of the Roll of his Servants; yet Merrick the Steward did it not, as being of Cuffes mind himſelf.

Cuffe taxeth the Earl for cowardize.

Eſſex being now ready to go into the Countrey, remembred himſelf to the Queen, by the Lord Henry Howard, in theſe words; That he kiſſed the Rod, and the Queens hands, which had onely corrected, not overthrown him; yet he ſhould never enjoy ſolid comfort, till he might ſee thoſe bleſſed Eyes, which had been his load-ſtars, whereby he had happily ſteered his courſe, while he held on his way at lawful diſtance; But now he reſolved to eat graſs with Nebuchadnezzar, till it pleaſe the Queen to reſtore his Senſes. She being greatly joyed with theſe his ſpeeches; Would to God (ſaid ſhe) his deeds be anſwerable to his words; He hath long tryed my Patience, I muſt now make tryal of his humility.

The Earls ſubmiſſive Letter to the Queen.

And now the Earl grew ſo confident of the Queens Favour, that he became a Suitor to her for the Farm of ſweet Wines; but ſhe to try his temper, and with what mind he would bear a repulſe, made him Anſwer, That ſhe muſt firſt know what it was worth, and not give away things hand over head; and had oftentimes in her mouth, the Aphoriſm of Phyſitians, That foul Bodies, the more you nouriſh them, the more you corrupt them. And indeed, this was the right way to finde, whether the Ulcer of his Mind were throughly cured or no; for being not throughly cured, it would endure no touching; and no more did his, but as though every denyal of a courteſie, were an injury that required revenge; his Melancholy was preſently turned into Choler, now he began to hearken to Cuffe again; telling him, That it was now plain, the Queen determined to make him as poor as Job, that he ſhould live of the Basket, and gathers crums under the Table. Hereupon he returned to London, Southampton is ſent for out of the Low-Countries, his doors are ſet open for all comers, Merrick his Steward receiveth to his own Table decayed Souldiers, diſcontented and audacious perſons; Sermons are made there every day by Puritan Miniſters, to which the Citizens flock, and all ſigns of Popularity appeared; which matters coming to the Queens Ears; alienated her affection from him daily more and more; but eſpecially ſhe was exaſperated, that her Perſon was deſpiſed by him; for (not to ſay the worſt) he had muttered, That the Queen was now old and decrepit, and withered as well in minde as body.

Uſeth all the wayes of popularity.

And now again, he runneth upon deſperate counſels, for the removall of his adverſaries from the Court, ſeeketh to ſcrue himſelf into the King of Scots favour, to whom he traduceth his adverſaries, by name Rawleigh, Cobham, Carew, Cecill, and the Admirall as inclined to the Spaniſh Faction, and at one and the ſame time, ſeeketh to win to him both Puritans and Papiſts. Many were of his party, but few of his counſell; and theſe were the Earl of Southampton, Sir Charles Davers, Sir Ferdinando Gorge Captain of the Garriſon of Plimouth, Sir Chriſtopher Blunt, and ſome other. With theſe he met privately in Drury Houſe to avoid ſuſpition, where he firſt giveth them a Catalogue of the Nobility and Gentry that favoured him, to the number of a hundred and twenty. Then they conſult, Whether it were better to ſet upon the Tower of London, or the Queens Palace; this later they reſolve upon, which ſhould be done in this manner; Blunt ſhould keep the great Gate with a ſelect number of men, and Davers ſeize upon the Preſence Chamber: Then Eſſex with his Company ſhould come from the Mues, and preſent himſelf before the Queen. But now ſuſpitions ariſing from divers circumſtances, Secretary Herbert was ſent to call him before the Councel, at the Treaſurers Houſe; but he doubting the matter, excuſeth himſelf that he was not very well. And now the Plot of ſeizing upon the Court, which had been four moneths in contriving, was by this means quite daſhed, for they had ready at the preſent, neither Souldiers, nor Munition, ſo as ſome ſpeedier courſe muſt now be thought on; at which time very opportunely cometh one to them (ſet on no doubt by Eſſex his Adverſaries) as if he had been ſent on purpoſe from the Citizens, to promiſe him their Aid; which made Eſſex to applaud his own great good fortune.

Who were his chief adherents and Counſellors.

They reſolve to ſet upon the Queens Palace, and in what manner.

But are prevented.

And now were four of the Lords, namely the Lord Keeper, the Earl of Worceſter, Sir William Knolles, and the Lord Chief Juſtice of England, ſent by the Queen to Eſſex Houſe, who could hardly be ſuffered to come in, all their Attendants were kept out, ſave he that carried the Seal before the Keeper. In the Court they found a confuſed number of people, and the Earls of Eſſex, Rutland, and Southampton in the midſt of them. The Keeper turning himſelf to Eſſex, told him, The Queen had ſent him and the reſt to underſtand the cauſe of this concourſe, promiſing Juſtice, if any perſon had done them wrong. Eſſex with a loud voice cryeth out, They lye in wait for my life, we are met to defend our ſelves. The Keeper urging Eſſex again to unfold ſome part of his grievance; the unruly multitude cryeth out, Away, let us be gone, they come to betray you, Kill them, caſt away that Great Seal. Eſſex retireth into the Houſe, the Lords follow him; he chargeth them to make the doors faſt, and turning him to the Lords, Have patience for a while (ſaith he) I muſt go into the City, to diſpatch a little buſineſs with the Mayor and Sheriffs, I will return preſently.

The Lord Keeper and three other of the Privy Councel, ſent to Eſſex houſe, to know the cauſe of this concourſe, and his Anſwer.

But preſently giving charge to keep the Lords, he goes into the City.

There

There the Lords are kept priſoners; Eſſex maketh haſt into the City, with a Troop of 200 men at his heels; the Earl of Bedford, the Lord Cromwell, and other Lords meeting him by the way, joyn themſelves: coming into London, he cryeth out aloud, For the Queen, for the Queen, they lay wait for my life. The Citizens came running to gaze, but not ſo much as one perſon took Arms to take his part. Paſſing along the City, he came all in a ſweat to the Sheriff Smith's houſe, who ſhifteth himſelf forth at a back-door, and goeth to the Lord Mayor. By this time, certain of the Nobility entred the City with a Herald, declaring Eſſex and his adherents Traytors. Hereupon, hearing alſo that the Lord Admiral made towards him with an Army, he began to be diſheartned; George taketh care for himſelf, requeſteth he might be ſent to releaſe the Counſellors, and with them to crave the Queens mercy, whiles the iſſue was yet doubtful. The Earl content that Popham only ſhould be freed; but he refuſed, unleſs the Keeper alſo might be diſmiſſed. Then George freeth them all, and goeth along with them to the Court by water.

He comes to Sheriff Smith's houſe, looking for aid, but Smith was gone.

Eſſex is proclaimed a Traytor.

George goeth and ſetteth all the Lords at liberty.

Now when Eſſex thought to return, he found a chain faſtened croſs the ſtreet, at the Weſt end of Pauls, and men in Arms on the other ſide: then he began to draw his Sword; and having once given the word, Blunt letteth fly at them, ſlew one of them incontinent, himſelf being ſorely wounded and taken. Eſſex himſelf had his Hat ſhot through; whereupon retiring, he took Boat at Queen-Hythe, and went to Eſſex Houſe; where, finding the Counſellors all diſmiſſed, he grew extreme angry and diſmayed, and caſt certain papers into the fire, ſaying, They ſhould tell no tales. By and by the Admiral beſiegeth the Houſe, commanding them to yield. Southampton offereth, if the Admiral would give Hoſtages to ſecure them, they would preſent themſelves to the Queen. The Admiral anſwereth him by Sidney, That Rebels are not to proffer Conditions. Within an hour, Eſſex finding the caſe deſperate, reſolved to ruſh forth; and the Lord Sands (the moſt aged in the company) greatly urged it, ſaying, It were better to die valiantly than by the hands of a Hang-man. But Eſſex his mind upon a little deliberation altering, they fell upon their knees, and deliver their weapons to the Admirall, when it was ten a clock at night. Owen Salisbury, and one or two more were ſlain with Musket ſhot, and as many of the Beſiegers. The next day, Thomas Lea, Commander of a Company of Souldiers in Ireland, who to one Croſſe a Sea-Captain (that detected him) intimated, how noble an exploit it were, for ſix ſtout Fellows to go to the Queen, and compel her forcibly to releaſe Eſſex and Southampton, was preſently apprehended, examined, found guilty, and executed. Eſſex and Southampton were carried firſt to Lambeth, to the Archbiſhops houſe, becauſe it was a dark night; but anon were ſent to the Tower, by the Queens direction; and with them, Rutland, Sands, Cromwell, Mounteagle, Danvers and Bromley, the reſt were put in common priſons.

Eſſex returning and finding the Counſellors all diſmiſſed, grows much diſmayed.

At ten a clock at night, Eſſex yields himſelf to the Lord Admiral.

He is ſent to the Tower, together with the Earl of Southampt. and other Lords.

On the nineteenth of February, Eſſex and Southampton were called to their Arraignment, before their Peers in Weſtminſter-Hall, where Buckhurſt Lord Treaſurer, was appointed Lord High-Steward of England for that time. The Peers being ſeverally called by their names, Eſſex demanded, If it were not lawful for them to except againſt ſome of the Peers, as private perſons might do againſt the Jurors. The Judges made anſwer, That the credit and fidelity of the Peers of England was preſumed to be ſuch, that in Tryals they were not bound to take an Oath, nor are they lyable to any exception. Then were they joyntly indited of High-Treaſon; namely, that they plotted to deprive the Queen of her life and Kingdom, To ſurprize her in her very Palace; and that they brake forth into open Rebellion, by impriſoning the Counſellors of the Kingdom; by exciting the Londoners to Rebellion with vain Fictions; by aſſaulting the Queens loyal Subjects in the City; and by defending of Eſſex Houſe againſt the Queens Forces. Hereunto they pleaded, Not guilty: Eſſex withall averring, That they had done nothing but of neceſſity, and the Law of Nature. Yelverton aggravateth the ſpecialties; and Edward Coke Attorney argueth, That the Earl could not excuſe himſelf from the Law of Nature, ſeeing Majeſty is not to be affronted for private revenge. The Earl of Eſſex with great confidence made anſwer, That to his Prince and Country, he alwayes had and would bear a loyal affection. Then Francis Bacon (one that was little expected to ſpeak againſt Eſſex, by whom he had been raiſed) in defence of Cobham, Cecill and Rawleigh, aggravateth his crying out, That the Crown of England was ſold to the Spaniard: whereto Eſſex replyed, That he heard indeed, that Cecill the Secretary ſhould ſay to one of the Lords of the Councel, That the right of the Infanta of Spain to the Kingdom of England, was as good as any of the Competitors. Upon this Cecill (who ſtood by as an Auditor) ſteppeth in, and falling upon his knees, beſeecheth the Steward, that with his good leave, he might quit himſelf from this foul aſperſion: which leave being granted him, he provoked Eſſex, if he durſt, to name the Counſellor; but he would not: therefore (ſaith Cecill) it is a Fiction: ſtill Eſſex averreth it. Then Cecill turning himſelf to Southampton, beſought him by all manner of Obteſtations to name the man. He referreth it to the Honourable Aſſembly, and to Cecill himſelf, if in Honour and good Reaſon he ought to do it: they affirming, He might, Southampton nameth Sir William Knolles, Eſſex his Uncle. He being ſent for, at Cecills intreaty, ſaid, That Cecill two years ſince told him, that one Dolman in a Book, had aſſerted the Right of the Infanta; and had ſpoken no otherwiſe than ſo.

They plead, Not guilty.

Now after the Judges had delivered their opinion what was Law in the matters alledged, the Earls, by the Stewards direction, were taken aſide: Then the Peers roſe, and went apart, and having conſulted about an hour, returned to their ſeats, and in their order, pronounced the Earls guilty of High Treaſon. Then the high Steward adviſing Eſſex to implore the Queens mercy, giveth Sentence, and that done, brake his Staff, and departed.

But are found guilty by their Peers.

Eſſex and Southampton are arraigned.

The next day, Sir Robert Vernon, Sir William Conſtable, Sir Edward Baynham, Littleton, Cluff, Captain Whitlock, John and Chriſtopher Wright, and Orell an old Souldier, were called to their Tryal: but the Queen (informed by Sir Fulk Grevill, That moſt of them were drawn unwittingly into the danger) commanded that onely Littleton, Baynham, and Orell ſhould have their Tryal, the reſt to be ſent back to priſon. Theſe were all condemned, but their lives ſpared; which favour (Rawleigh for a good ſum of money received of Baynham) procured.

Eſſex in the mean while, requeſted he might ſpeak with ſome of the Counſellors, to whom he reconciled himſelf, and to Cecill eſpecially; and then intimating that the Queen could not be in ſafety while he lived; he requeſted he might be executed privately in the Tower: He grievouſly inveyeth againſt ſome of the Conſpiracy, and wiſheth to ſpeak with ſome of them, but ſpecially with Blunt and Cuffe; whom as ſoon as he ſaw, he brake forth into theſe words; O Cuffe, ask pardon of God and the Queen, for thou haſt chiefly provoked me to this diſloyalty. Alſo he intimated Sir Henry Nevill ordinary Ambaſſadour in France, to have been acquainted with the Conſpiracy; and that other in Scotland, France, the Netherlands, and the Lord Mountjoy Deputy of Ireland knew of his purpoſe, and other in England; who being many in number, and the Lord Mountjoy, ordering the Affairs of Ireland in good faſhion, the Queen wiſely would take no notice of it.

Eſſex complains of Blunt and Cuffe.

The five and twentieth day of February, which was to be the fatal day, there were ſent to the Earl divers Miniſters, to give him ghoſtly comfort. The Queen now wavering in her ſelf, one while remembring the ancient kindneſſe ſhe had ſhewed him, ſhe commanded he ſhould not be executed; then again, thinking of his ſtubbornneſs, that he would not once ask her mercy, and had ſaid openly, That he could not live, but ſhe muſt periſh; countermanding her former word, ſhe gave order that he ſhould be executed.

He is executed in the Tower.

Then was he brought forth into the Yard, where a Scaffold was erected, and ſundry of the Nobility preſent, among whom Rawleigh alſo; but being told, it was an inhumane thing to ſtand by and behold the death of his Adverſary, he withdrew himſelf into the Armory, and from thence beheld the Tragedy. Eſſex being aſcended the Scaffold, uncovered his head, caſt up his eyes towards Heaven, and crying God mercy for the manifold ſins of his youth, but this laſt ſpecially, which he ſaid was a bloody, crying and contagious ſin; craved pardon of the Queen and her Counſellors, commended his Spirit into the hands of God, and had his head taken off at the third blow, though the firſt bereft him both of his ſenſe and motion.

Cuffe pleading for himſelf at his Tryal.

The fifth of March, Sir Chriſtopher Blunt, Sir Charles Davers, Sir John Davis, Sir Gyllie Merrick and Cuffe, were brought to their Tryal in Weſtminſter-Hall, before the Queens delegates. The Heads of their Inditements, were the ſame which were objected to Eſſex and Southampton. The others ſaid little in their defence, only Cuffe ſtood upon theſe two Anſwers; Whereas (ſaith he) I am challenged of Treaſon, becauſe I was in Eſſex houſe the day of the Rebellion; by the ſame Argument the Lyon in the Cellar might be indited; all that day I lamented the Earls fortune, and dealt with him to fly to the Queens mercy. And as for the Conſultation in Drury Houſe, it is no more to be called High Treaſon, than an Embryon may be accounted a perfect man. The Lawyers on the other ſide demonſtrated, That no neceſſity lay upon him to tarry in the Houſe; and that the Conſultation in Drury Houſe was it ſelf a Treaſon, though it had never broke forth into act. Merrick ſaid only this, The Earl of Eſſex raiſed me, and he hath overturned me.

Merrick and Cuffe are drawn to Tyburn, and there executed.

The thirteenth of March, Merrick and Cuffe are drawn to Tyburn, where Cuffe entring into a long Speech, was by the Sheriff interrupted; and then, after prayers to God, and deſiring God and the Queen to pardon him, he was caſt from the Ladder: a man of great Wit and Learning, but of a boyſterous and turbulent diſpoſition. In the ſame manner dyed Merrick.

Sir Charles Davers and Sir Chriſtopher Blunt beheaded at the Tower-Hill.

The fifteenth of March, Sir Charles Davers and Sir Chriſtopher Blunt were beheaded on the Tower-Hill; albeit Davers offered ten thouſand pounds to redeem his life, though with perpetual impriſonment. The Earl of Southampton and the Sheriff Smith were kept priſoners; though Smith, after ſome time, was upon ſureties ſuffered to go at large. The eighth of July, Sir Henry Nevill was cited before the Lords of the Councel, where it was laid to his Charge, That he was preſent at the Conſultation in Drury Houſe, yet had not revealed their ſiniſter purpoſes; and had imparted to Eſſex the ſecrets of his French Embaſſage. He confeſſed, That at the Earls intreaty, he ſhewed him the Commentaries of the French proceedings, was preſent at one of their Conſultations only; but contemned their counſels, yet durſt not be an Informer againſt ſo great Perſonages. Hereupon he had a grievous check given him, and was committed to priſon.

One act of the By, is not here to be omitted. Eſſex at his Arraignment had complained, That his hand-writing was counterfeited. It happened the Counteſſe of Eſſex being fearful in her Husbands behalf, gave a Letter which ſhe had received from him, to the cuſtody of one Rhihove, a Dutch woman that waited on her: this Dutch womans husband named Daniel, lighted by chance upon the Letter, and perceiving ſome paſſages in it which might bring the Earl of Eſſex into danger, got a cunning Fellow to draw a counterfeit Copy of the ſaid Letter; with this he cometh to the fearful Lady, who was newly brought to bed, threatning to give the ſame to her husbands Adverſaries, unleſs ſhe would preſently give him three thouſand pounds. She to ſhun the danger, paid him eleven hundred and ſeventy pounds at the very inſtant; yet did he deliver her the counterfeit Copy onely, meaning to make uſe of the true one, to get another ſum of the Earls Adverſaries. This impoſture being found out, he was cenſured to perpetual impriſonment, condemned in three thouſand pounds (two of which were to go to the Counteſſe) and his Ears nailed to the Pillory, with this Writing over his head; A notorious Cheater.

The Queen ſets forth a Proclamation, declaring all Monopolies to be void.

Soon after a Parliament was aſſembled, wherein grievous complaints being tendred to the lower Houſe touching Monopolies; the Queen, by way of prevention, ſendeth out Proclamations, declaring the ſaid Licences and Patents to be void in part, leaving ſome part to the diſcuſſion of the Laws: which thing was ſo acceptable to the lower Houſe, that they preſently ſent eighty eighty ſelect perſons, together with the Speaker, to give the Queen thanks; and ſhe on the other ſide gave them thanks, for being ſuch faithful Monitors to her, to recal her from an error, whereinto, through ignorance, not wilfulneſs, ſhe was fallen.

1602. In Ireland, the Deputy at the entry of the Spring, draweth his Forces together, and driveth Tir-Oen from where he had fortified himſelf; Carew Preſident of Munſter, taketh the titular Earl lurking in a Cave, and receiveth intelligence, That the Spaniards invited by Tir-Oen, had a purpoſe to land in Munſter, yet could not perſwade the Deputy they had any deſign for Ireland; but in the midſt of September, certain News was brought, the Spaniards were in ſight, who wanting wind to carry their Fleet to Cork, put into Kinſale the three and twentieth of September, and land their Souldiers without reſiſtance. Richard Percy having but few Souldiers to defend the Town, is commanded to come away and leave Kinſale to the Spaniards, into which they enter with Enſignes diſplayed, and by the Magiſtrates and Inhabitants, were bidden welcome.

The Spaniards land in Ireland, and take Kinſale.

D' Aquila, who commanded the Spaniards, publiſheth a Declaration, wherein he ſheweth, That Queens Elizabeth was depoſed from her Kingdom by ſentence of the Pope, her Subjects abſolved from their Allegiance; And that the Spaniards were now come to deliver Ireland from the jaws of the Devil. Tir-Oen joyneth his Forces with them, ſo as they were now ſix thouſand Foot, and five hundred Horſe, and promiſed themſelves aſſured Victory, the Engliſh being not near ſo many. The four and twentieth of December a Battel is joyned; where, after long fight, the Victory inclined to the Engliſh. Tir-Oen, Odonell, and the reſt caſt away their weapons, and ſave themſelves by flight. Alphonſo O Campo chief Ruler of the Spaniards, together with three other Captains, was taken priſoner, and ſix Enſign-bearers; twelve hundred were ſlain, nine Colours taken, whereof four belonged to the Spaniards: of the Engliſh not many were ſlain, but a great number wounded.

Tir-Oen joyneth his Forces with the Spaniards, which together make a great Army, but in a battail are defeated.

Alphonſo O Campo their chief leader is taken priſoner.

After ſix dayes, D' Aquila ſendeth Letters to the Deputy by a Drummer, requeſting that ſome perſon of account might be ſent to him, with whom to confer; Sir William Godolphine is ſent, to whom he complained of the cowardiſe, and (he feared) treachery of the Iriſh; and therefore, although he wanted nothing to hold out the Seige, and did daily expect great Forces from Spain, yet was willing to make a Compoſition: whereupon, at laſt it was agreed, The Spaniards ſhould yield up Kinſale to the Deputy, as alſo the Caſtles and Forts at Baltimore, Bere-Haven, and Caſtle-Haven, and ſhould depart with life and goods, and Colours diſplayed. The Engliſh at a reaſonable price, ſhould furniſh them with ſhips and proviſion into Spain; and that they ſhould not carry Arms againſt the Queen of England, till they were arrived in Spain, &c.

D' Aquila who commanded the Spaniards, requires a Compoſition, and departs.

And now the Spaniards being driven out of Ireland, the Queen, to prevent their coming again, ſendeth out Sir Richard Leviſon and Sir William Mounſon, with eight ſhips of her own, and ſome ſmaller ſhips of War, to attempt ſomething upon the Coaſt of Spain. On the nineteenth of March, Leviſon hoiſeth Sayl, and Monſon afterward, having in vain tarryed behind for ſome Dutch ſhips to joyn with them. Leviſon in the mean time lighted upon the Spaniſh Navy of eight and thirty ſhips, which brought the Treaſure from America, and ſet upon them, but to no purpoſe. When Monſon was come with the reſt of the Fleet, they had certain notice, That a mighty Indian Caraque of ſixteen hundred Tun, and richly laden, was upon the Coaſt of Portugal. There indeed they found it, but it lay cloſe under a Fort, attended with eleven Gallies; and the Caraque it ſelf appeared as big as a Caſtle; yet they reſolved to fire it, if they could not take it. The next day they thundred ſo violently againſt the Gallies, that within ſeven hours the Marqueſſe of St. Croſſe, together with the Portugal Gallies which he commanded, withdrew themſelves; two of them were taken and fired; and in them was great ſtore of powder, which was going for the Low-Countries. And now Leviſon ſignified to the Captain of the Caraque, That the Gallies which they truſted to, were driven away, and therefore, if they now refuſed mercy, they muſt expect none hereafter. After much ſpeech to and fro, it was at laſt agreed, That the Caraque, with the Ordnance and Merchandize ſhould be yielded up. Thus the Engliſh having a fair wind returned home with a Booty, to the value of a Million of Duckets, by the Portugal account, and not paſt five of their men loſt in the Voyage.

Sir Richard Leviſon ſets upon the Spaniſh Fleet of Treaſure, but cannot prevail.

But he takes a Caraque of 16. hundred Tun, worth a Million of Duckets.

At this time there aroſe a Conteſtation amongſt the Popiſh Clergy here in England; for the Jeſuites and Secular Prieſts made bitter Invectives in their writings, one againſt the other. The original of the Prieſts quarrel was, That Blackwell, one wholly at the beck of the Jeſuites, was ſet over them as Arch-Presbyter, who firſt of all deſpoyled them of their Faculties; and when they appealed to the Pope, cauſed them to be declared Schiſmaticks and Hereticks. They in ſundry Books extolled the Queen very highly, as one that dealeth mildly alwayes with the Catholicks, till ſuch time as they ſet all in a combuſtion in England; and by their Treaſons, cauſed moſt ſevere Laws to be enacted againſt the Catholicks. Parſons they traduced as a Baſtard, an Equivocator and a Traytor. Whether they contended thus in good earneſt, or in jeſt only, is hard to ſay; but the Biſhop of London politickly nouriſhed the contention, and all he gained, was this, That the Queen and her Councel, finding them dangerous to the Common-wealth, both the one and the other, upon penalty of the Laws, were by Proclamation commanded to depart out of the Kingdom preſently.

The Jeſuites and the ſecular Prieſts contend againſt one another.

Both of them are commanded to depart the Realm.

In France, the Marſhal Biron, for entring into dangerous attempts againſt the publick Peace, was arraigned, and loſt his head. His confeſſion brought ſome other into danger; and amongſt them, the Duke of Bulloign, of the Proteſtant Religion, that when he was cited, he durſt not appear, but fled into Germany. Hereupon the King of France ſendeth to Queen Elizabeth, complaining that the Duke held his marriage unlawful, and the Popes diſpenſation nothing worth, pronouncing his Sons illegitimate; had deſtined the Prince of Conde to the Succeſſion of the Crown, and conſpired the Deſtruction of the prime of the Nobility. The Queen, by her Legier Ambaſſadour, adviſeth the King not too credulouſly to entertain thoſe reports, as doubting theſe ſuggeſtions might proceed from ſome of the Spaniſh Faction. Hereupon the King grew very angry, ſaying, The Queen held a better opinion of the Duke than he deſerved, and that he was one of the chief Architects of Eſſex his Treaſon; and being queſtioned by the King about it, was not able to deny it. About this time alſo, the Duke of Savoy, by cunning ſleights, and open force, practiſed againſt the State of Geneva; and the Queen relieved them with a great ſum of money, gathered amongſt the Clergy and Laity all over England.

Tir-Oen yields himſelf to the Deputy abſolutely without any condition.

And now the Earl Tir-Oen, preceiving himſelf in a deſperate eſtate, reſolved to ſue for mercy, and promiſed at laſt to ſubmit his life and fortunes to the Queens pleaſure, abſolutely without condition. Hereupon, being admitted to the preſence of the Deputy, at the very entry of the room, he fell on his knees; and then paſſing on a few ſteps, proſtrated himſelf again, ſaying, I confeſſe and crave pardon for my great fault againſt God, and a moſt bountiful Prince my dread Soveraign; I fly to the Queens mercy, as a ſacred Anchor, permitting her to diſpoſe of my life and fortunes at her pleaſure. Upon this his ſubmiſſion, the Deputy commanded him to go aſide, and the next day took him along to Dublin with him, meaning to bring him into England, that the Queen might deal with him according to her Royal pleaſure: But before he could come into England, the Queen dyed.

Her Taxations.

IN a Parliament holden the firſt year of her Reign, a Subſidy was granted, of two ſhillings eight pence the pound of Goods, and four ſhillings of Lands, to be paid at two ſeveral Payments, of every perſon Spiritual and Temporal. In her ſixth year, in a Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, one Subſidy was granted by the Clergy, and another by the Laity, together with two Fifteenths and Tenths. In her eighth year, in a Parliament then holden, there were offered to her four Subſidies, upon condition, ſhe would declare a Succeſſor; but ſhe refuſed their offer, and directly remitted the fourth Subſidy which they had granted, ſaying, It was all one, whether the money were in her Subjects Coffers, or in her own. In her thirteenth year, in a Parliament then holden, towards her charges of repreſſing the Northern Rebellion, there was granted her by the Clergy, a Subſidy of ſix ſhillings in the pound; and by the Temporality, two Fifteenths, with a Subſidy of two ſhillings and eight pence in the pound. In her ſix and thirtieth year, a Parliament was holden, wherein was granted by the Clergy, two whole Subſidies, and by the Laity three, beſides ſix Fifteenths and Tenths; but it was put into the Act, That this great Contribution, the like whereof had not been known in former Ages, ſhould not be drawn into example. In her fortieth year, in a Parliament at weſtminſter, were granted her by the Clergy, three entire Subſidies; and by the Laity as many, with ſix Fifteenths and Tenths. In her two and fortieth year, to furniſh her with money towards the Iriſh War, ſhe delegated certain Commiſſioners, to

Of her Laws and Ordinances.

IN a Parliament holden in her firſt year, an Act was made, That every perſon ſhould go to Divine Service upon Sundays and Holy-days, or elſe pay twelve pence to the poor. Alſo it was enacted, That Biſhops ſhould not let the Lands of the Church, longer than for one and twenty years, or three Lives, except to the Queen or her Succeſſors. In her third year, a Proclamation was made, That the Teſton coyned for twelve pence, and in the Reign of King Edward embaſed to ſix pence, ſhould not be current but for four pence; the Groat, but for two pence; and the piece of two pence, but for a penny: And not long after, all the ſaid baſe moneys were called in, and fine Sterling money was allowed for them after the Rate. For Ireland alſo, ſhe coyned Sterling money; where nine pence in England, went for twelve pence there. The Queen was the firſt that brought certain Countries to deliver Proviſion at a certain rate, that ſo they might be freed from the Purveyors: Alſo the firſt that granted allowance to Judges for their Circuit. In her ſixth year, in a Parliament then holden, it was made Treaſon to refuſe taking the Oath of Supremacy; yet with this limitation, That by it the blood ſhould not be diſhonoured, nor goods confiſcate; nor the Oath to be required of any Baron of the Kingdom. Alſo this year, by a Common-councel in London, it was enacted, That all ſuch Citizens as from thenceforth ſhould be conſtrained to ſell their Houſhold-ſtuff, Leaſes of Houſes, or ſuch like, ſhould firſt cauſe the ſame to be cryed through the City, by a man with a Bell, and then to be ſold by the common Out-cryer appointed for that purpoſe, and he to receive one farthing upon the ſhilling for his pains. In her three and twentieth year, ſhe repreſſeth by Proclamation exceſs in Apparel, Gold Chains, and Cloaks which men wore done to their heels. The length of Swords was limited to three Foot, and Daggers to twelve Inches, beſides the hilts. Buildings likewiſe in the Suburbs were reſtrained, In-mates forbidden, and expreſs charge ſet forth, That no dwelling houſe ſhould be new built within three miles of any City Gates, under pain of impriſonment, and loſs of the materials. In her time was ſet on foot by Sir Thomas Smith, the Law made for the ſerving of Colledges with proviſion, to the great benefit of thoſe Scholaſtical Societies. In her two and fortieth year, ſhe ſetteth forth Proclamations againſt the Tranſportation of Gold or Silver, wrought or unwrought, according to the former Acts of Parliament in that caſe provided. This year alſo ſhe founded the Company of the Eaſt-India Merchants, and allowed them ample Priviledges. In her three and fortieth year, all Monopolies are called in by Proclamation. In her four and twentieth year, ſevere Laws are made againſt Papiſts, ſome inflicting death, ſome fine and impriſonment. In her eight and twentieth year, a Proclamation was ſet forth, prohibiting to ſow

In her five and twentieth year, was first instituted and founded a publick Lecture in Chirurgery: to begin to be read in the Colledge of Physitians in London, and the Reader to have a stipend no lesse than those of the Universities erected by King Henry the eighth.

Affairs of the Church in Her time.

The Protestant Religion is by degrees established.

ON Sunday the first of January next after the Queens coming to the Crown, by vertue of her Proclamation, the English Letany was read accordingly as was used in her Graces Chappel, in all Churches through the City of London, and likewise the Epistle and Gospel of the day, begun to be read at Masse-time in the English Tongue. Also in a Parliament holden in her first year, the first Fruits and Tenths were restored to the Crown, and the Supreme Government over the state Ecclesiastical, and the Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments in the English Tongue was restored, and by degrees the Protestant Religion was establisshed. The Bishops that refused the Oath of Supremacy, were all removed, and Protestant Bishops placed in their room. It was enacted also, That all persons should go to Divine Service upon Sundays and Holy days, and a Fine of twelve pence imposed upon every one that should be absent, and the same to be given to the poor. In her fourth year, the Queen was solicited by Pope Pius, to send her Oratours to the Councel of Trent, which she refused, as not acknowledging it a lawful Councel. In a Parliament holden in her eighth year, it was enacted and by a general consent declared, That the Election of the Archbishops and Bishops in England, together with their Consecration, Confirmation, and Investiture (which some persons slanderously called in question) was lawful and Canonical, and that they were rightly, and according to the Acts and Statutes of the Kingdom, chosen and consecrated. In her eleventh year, there arose in England two contrary factions in Religion: on the one side, Thomas Harding, Nicholas Sanders, and other Divines that had fled out of England, began to exercise the Episcopal Jurisdiction upon the Queens Subjects which they had derived from the See of Rome: On the other side, Coleman, Burton, Hallingham, Benson, and other, making profession of the pure Religion, would allow of nothing but what was directly taken out of the Scriptures, openly condemning the received Discipline of the Church of England, together with the Church Liturgy, and the very calling of Bishops, as savouring too much of the Roman Religion, Protesting in the Pulpits, That it was an impious thing to hold any thing common with the Church of Rome, and used all diligence to have the Church of England, reformed in every point, according to the Rule of the Church of Geneva. These, although the Queen commanded to be committed to Prison, yet it is incredible how upon a sudden their followers encreased, known by the envious name of Puritans. This Sect so mightily encreased, that in her sixteenth year, the Queen and Kingdom was extremely troubled with some of the Clergy, who breathing out nothing but Evangelical parity, cryed down the Ecclesiastical Form of Government (as a thing polluted with Roman dregs) and setting forth Books likewise, Intituled, The Admonition to the Parliament, and the Defence of the Admonition: they refused to resort to the Divine Service publickly in use, and framed to themselves other Rites. Whereupon, the Queen to suppress them, whom by no means she liked, commanded every where the severity of the Law touching the Uniformity of Common-Prayer, to be put in execution, and those Books, upon pain of Imprisonment, to be delivered into the hands of the Bishops, or some of the Queens Councel. And this year were taken at Masse in their several houses, the Lord Morley's Lady and her Children, the Lady Guilford, and the Lady Brown, who being thereof indited and convicted, suffer the penalty of the Law in that case provided. Untill the twentieth year of Queen Elizabeths Reign, the Papists in England were mercifully connived at, while they solemnized their own Rites within their private houses (though that also were against the Laws) but when as that Thunderbolt of excommunicating the Queen came abroad, then was the Law enacted against those who brought into the Kingdom any Agnus Dei, or hallowed Beads, or reconciled any of the Queens Subjects to the See of Rome; yet for six whole years together after this Law was made, it was not executed upon any Papist, till Cuthert Mayn a Priest, and an obstinate maintainer of the Popes authority against the Queen, was executed at Launceston in Cornwall, and the Gentlemans goods that harboured him confiscate, and himself adjudged to perpetual Imprisonment. In her three and twentieth year, divers Priests and Jesuites came into England; amongst whom, Robert Parsons and Edmund Campian, English men and Jesuites, being now bound for England, to promote the Catholick Cause, at which time a Proclamation was set forth, That whosoever had any Children beyond the Sea, should by a certain day call them home; and that no person should receive or harbour any Seminary Priest or Jesuite. At this time also, there arose up in Holland a certain Sect, naming themselves, The Family of Love, who perswaded their followers, that those onely who were adopted into that Family, were elected, and no other could be saved, but were all Reprobates, and damned, and that it was lawful for them to deny upon Oath whatsoever they pleased, before any Magistrate, or whomsoever that were not of that Family. Many of their Books were printed, under these titles, The Gospel of the Kingdom, The Lords Sentences, The Prophesie of the spirit of love, The publication of Peace upon earth, by the Author H. N. but who this Author was they would by no means reveal: at last he was found to be Henry Nichols of Layden, who blasphemously preached, That he was partaker of the Divinity of God, and God of his humane Nature: all which Books were by Proclamation commanded to be burnt. In a Parliament holden the eight and twentieth year of her Reign, some out of a desire of Reformation, began to pick quarrels at the Clergy, desiring to pass Laws for the restraint of Bishops in their granting of Faculties, conferring of holy Orders, Ecclesiastical Censure, and the Oath Ex Officio. They complained likewise of the non-residency of of Miniſters, and the like. But the Queen, who alwayes hated Innovation (which for the moſt part changeth for the worſe) would give no ear unto them; conceiving beſides, That theſe proceedings in Parliament in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, derogated from her Prerogative. In her ſix and twentieth year, the Queen gave a ſpecial charge to Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to ſettle an Uniformity in the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, according to the Laws, which through the connivence of Biſhops, and perverſneſs of the Puritans, lay now almoſt gaſping: Whereupon, he provided three Articles, to which every Miniſter ſhould ſubſcribe.

Parliaments not to meddle in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

Three Articles to which every Miniſter muſt ſubſcribe.

The firſt, That the Queen had Supreme Authority over all perſons born within her Dominions, of what condition ſoever they were; and that no other Prince, or Prelate, or Potentate, hath, or ought to have any Juriſdiction, Civil or Eccleſiaſtical, within her Realms and Dominions.

The ſecond, That the Book of Common Prayer, and the Ordination of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, containeth nothing contrary to the Word of God, but may lawfully be uſed, and that they will uſe that and no other.

The third, That the Articles agreed on in the Synod holden at London in the the year 1562, and publiſhed by the Queens Authority, they did allow of, and believe them to be conſonant to the Word of God.

It is incredible what Reproaches the Archbiſhop incurred by ſetting forth theſe Articles, both from factious Miniſters, and from ſome alſo of the Nobility; yet by his patience and conſtancy, he brought at laſt peace to the Church, making this his Motto, Vincit qui patitur. Neither did theſe at home onely diſturb the Peace of the Church, but others alſo from abroad, as Robert Brown, a young Student of Divinity in Cambridge; from whom came the Sectaries called Browniſts; and Richard Harriſon a petty Schoolmaſter. Theſe preſuming to judge matters of Religion by their own private ſpirit, by Books ſet forth in Zealand, and diſperſed at this time over England, condemned the Church of England for no Church, and enſnared many in the Nets of their new Schiſm. Neither could they be reſtrained, though their Books were prohibited by the Queens Authority, and ſoundly confuted by ſundry learned men; and one or two of the Ring-leaders executed at St. Edmunds Berry. In her one and thirtieth year, theſe Puritans flames brake forth again, Books are written by the names of Martin Mar-Prelate, and A Demonſtration of the Diſcipline, by Penry and Udal againſt the Government of Biſhops; and nothing would pleaſe them, but the Diſcipline of Geneva: Many Abettors they had, Knightly and Wigſtone, Knights, beſides Cartwright (the father of them) Snape, King, Pardlow, Payn, and others; who though called in queſtion, fined and impriſoned, could never be reclaimed. In her ſix and thirtieth year, the Queen cauſed the ſeverity of the Laws to be executed upon Henry Barrow and his Sectaries, for diſturbing the Church, and the publick Peace, by ſcattering of their monſtrous Opinions, condemning the Church of England as no Chriſtian Church, and derogating from the Queens Authority in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical.

THis Queen converted Weſtminſter Abbey into a Collegiate Church, and there ordained a Dean, twelve Prebendaries, a Maſter, Uſher, and forty Scholars, Vicars, Singing-men, and twelve Alms-men. In her third year, the Merchant-Taylors founded a notable Grammar-Shool in the Pariſh of St. Lawrence Pountney in London. Alſo this year, William Harper Mayor of London founded a Free-School in the Town of Bedford, where he was born. In her ſeventh year, on the ſeventh of June, Sir Thomas Greſham laid the firſt ſtone of the Royal Exchange in Cornhil, which in November the year after, at his own charges was finiſhed, being the year 1567. In her tenth year, the Citizens of London builded a new Conduit at Walbrook corner, near to Dowgate, the water whereof is conveyed out of the Thames. Alſo this year, Sir Thomas Roe Mayor of London, cauſed to be encloſed within a wall of Brick one Acre of ground near unto Bedlam, without Biſhops-Gate, to be a place of Burial for the dead of ſuch Pariſhes in London as lacked convenient ground within their Pariſhes: He alſo builded a convenient Room in Pauls Church-yard, on the South ſide of the Croſſe, to receive a certain number of Hearers at Sermon time. Sir William Peter having himſelf been born at Exceter in Devonſhire, he gave to Exceter Colledge in Oxford, a hundred pounds Lands a year: He alſo builded at Ingerſtone in Eſſex, Alms-houſes for twenty poor people, and giving them ſome competent maintenance. Sir Thomas Greſham had his dwelling-houſe in Broad-Street, London, which he dedicated to the profeſſion of the Liberal Sciences, erecting there Lectures of Divinity, Civil Law, Phyſick, Geometry, Aſtronomy, Muſick and Rhetorick, allotting to the Profeſſors very competent allowances. In her ſeventeenth year died Matthew Parker, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who founded a Grammar-School in Roeldale, in the County of Lancaſter: He alſo procured to Corpus Chriſti Colledge in Cambridge, thirteen Scholarſhips, and built two Chambers for Scholars, and the inward Library of the ſame Colledge, and procured to it the Patronage of St. Mary Abchurch in London, with many other works of like kind. Sir Nicholas Bacon Lord Keeper gave for ſix Scholars to be found in Benet Colledge in Cambridge, three pounds ſix ſhillings and eight pence for ever. Edmund Grindall Archbiſhop of Canterbury, founded a Free-School in Cumberland, where he was born, and gave many Penſions to both Univerſities. Frances Counteſſe of Suſſex, Siſter to Sir Henry Sidney, founded Suſſex-Sidney Colledge in Cambridge: As likewiſe Sir Walter Mildmay Chancellor of the Exchequer, founded Emanuel Colledge in the ſame Univerſity. Sir Thomas Bodley erected and furniſhed the famous publick Library at Oxford. Alexander Nowell Dean of Pauls, endowed Braſe-noſen Colledge in Oxford, where he was brought up with two hundred pounds per annum, and dyed in the year 1602. Alſo in her time, namely, in the year 1595. Bevis Bulmar Gentleman, builded a large houſe of great height, called an Engine, at the Bridge-foot, for the conveying and forcing of Thames water to ſerve in the middle and weſt parts of the City. Alſo in her time, namely, in the year 1596. Ralph Rokeby one of her Maſters of Requeſts, then dying, gave by his Will, to Chriſts Hoſpital in London, 100 l. to the Colledge of the poor of Queen Elizabeth in Eaſt Greenwich, 100 l. to the poor Scholars in Cambridge, 100 l. to the poor Scholars in Oxford, 100 l. to the priſoners in the two Compters in London 100 l. to the priſoners in the Fleet 100 l. to the priſoners in Ludgate 100 l. to the priſoners in Newgate 100 l. to the priſoners in the Kings Bench 100 l. to the priſoners in the Marſhalſey 100 l. to the priſoners in the White-Lyon 20 l. a liberal and pious Legacy; and worthy not to be forgotten.

Caſualties in Her time.

IN the firſt year of her Reign, dyed Sir Thomas Cheyney, Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports, of whom it is reported for a certain, That his pulſe did beat more than three quarters of an hour after he was dead, as ſtrongly as if he had been ſtill alive. In her third year there was found near Keſwick in Cumberland, a moſt rich Vein of pure and native Braſs, which had lain neglected a long time: Alſo the ſtone called Lapis Calaminaris, which is of great uſe in Braſs-Works, was firſt brought into England at this time, and in moſt plentiful manner. Likewiſe this Queen was the firſt that cauſed Gun-powder to be made in England, which before was had from forrain parts, and at dear rates. In her third year, the Spire of the Cathedral Church of Pauls, being five hundred and twenty foot from the ground, and two hundred and ſixty from the ſquare Steeple where it was placed, and was made of wooden materials, but covered with Lead, was with lightning burnt down, together with the Roofs of that large Church, and that within the ſpace of five hours; the Roofs were after re-edified, but the Spire is yet wanting. The Queen gave towards it a thouſand Marks in Money, and a thouſand load of Timber; and the City granted a Benevolence, and three Fifteenths; and the Clergy alſo contributed to it. Alſo this year there was many monſtrous Births: A Mare brought forth a Foal with two heads, and a long tail growing out between the two Heads. A Sow farrowed a Pig with two Bodies, eight Feet, and but one Head. A man-child was born at Chicheſter in Suſſex, having Arms and Legs like to an Anatomy, the Breſt and Belly monſtrous big, about the Neck a great collar of fleſh and skin, growing like the ruff of a ſhirt. In her ſixth year, upon the returning of the Army from Newhaven, the Peſtilence was brought into England, but eſpecially into London; where, in one year there dyed one and twenty thouſand and five hundred. This year alſo, in the Moneth of December, was driven on the ſhore at Grimſeby in Lincolnſhire, a monſtrous Fiſh, in length nineteen yards, his tail fifteen foot broad, and ſix yards between the eyes. Twelve men ſtood upright in his mouth to get the Oyl. In her ſeventh year, on the one and twentieth of December, began a Froſt, ſo extreme, that on New-years Even people paſſed over the Thames on foot; ſome played at Foot-ball; ſome ſhot at pricks, as if it had been firm ground. Yet this great Froſt, the third of January at night began to thaw, and by the fifth day, there was no Ice at all to be ſeen; which ſudden thaw cauſed great Inundations. In her eighth year, within the ſpace of ten Moneths, there dyed in London ſeven Aldermen, namely, Edward Banks, Richard Chamberlain, Sir Martin Bowes, Sir Richard Mallory, Sir William Hewet, Sir Thomas White, and Richard Lambert, one of the Sheriffs for that year. The ſame yeat alſo, in the Town of Oßeſtry in Wales, two hundred houſes, in the ſpace of two hours, were conſumed with fire, In her tenth year, were taken in Suffolk, at Downham Bridge near to Ipſwich, ſeventeen monſtrous Fiſhes; ſome of them being ſeven and twenty Foot in length: And in the ſame year, many Dutch flying into England, to avoid the perſecution of the Duke D' Alva, were the firſt that brought into England the Art of making Bayes, Sayes, Serges, and ſuch woven ſtuffs both Woollen and Linnen. In her time a rich Vein of Copper was found in the Earl of Northumberlands Grounds, which ſhe by her Prerogative ſeized upon. In her thirteenth year, a prodigious Earth-quake happened in the Eaſt parts of Herefordſhire, a little Town called Kinnaſton. On the ſeventeenth of February, at ſix of the clock in the evening, the earth began to open, and a Hill with a Rock under it (making at firſt a great bellowing noiſe, which was heard a great way off) lifted it ſelf up a great height, and began to travell, bearing along with it the Trees that grew upon it, the Sheeps-folds, and Flocks of Sheep abiding there at the ſame time. In the place from whence it was firſt moved, it left a gaping diſtance forty foot broad, and fourſcore Ells long; the whole Field was about twenty Acres. Paſſing all along, it overthrew a Chappel ſtanding in the way, removed an Ewe-Tree planted in the Church-yard, from the Weſt into the Eaſt; with the like force it thruſt before it High-wayes, Sheep-folds, Hedges and Trees, made tilled-ground Paſture, and again turned Paſture into Tillage. Having walked in this ſort from Saturday in the evening, till Munday noon, it then ſtood ſtill. In her fifteenth year, in the moneth of November, a new Star, or rather a Meteor (but that it was found to be above the Moon) was ſeen in Cathedra Caſſiopeæ, exceeding Jupiter in brightneſs, and in that place was carried with the Diurnal motion of the Heavens ſixteen moneths together, though after eight moneths it was perceived to grow leſs and leſs. In her ſixteenth year, was a great Dearth, ſo as Wheat was ſold at five and ſix ſhillings the Buſhel, and other things in proportion. In her ſeventeenth year, a vaſt mighty Whale was caſt upon the Iſle of Thanet in Kent, twenty Ells long, and thirteen foot broad from the belly to the back-bone, and eleven foot between the eyes. One of his eyes being taken out of his head, was more than a Cart with ſix Horſes could draw; the Oyl being boyled out of the head, was Parmacittee. This year alſo, the River Thames ebbed and flowed twice within an hour: and in the moneth of November, the Heaven ſeemed to be all on a fire. Alſo on the four and twentieth of February, being a great Froſt, after a Flood which was great, there came down the River of Severne ſuch a ſwarm of Flyes and Beetles, that they were judged to be above a hundred Quarters; the Mills thereabout were dammed up with them for the ſpace of four dayes, and then were cleanſed by digging them out with Shovels. In her two and twentieth year, a ſtrange apparition happened in Somerſetſhire, threeſcore perſonages all cloathed in black, a furlong in diſtance from thoſe that beheld them; and after their appearing, and a little while tarrying, they vaniſhed away, but immediately another ſtrange company, in like manner, colour and number appeared in the ſame place: and they encountred one another, and ſo vaniſhed away. And the third time appeared that number again, all in bright armour, and encountred one another, and ſo vaniſhed away. This was examined before Sir George Norton, and ſworn by four honeſt men that ſaw it to be true. In her three and twentieth year, in the beginning of April, about ſix a clock after noon, happened an Earthquake not far from York, which in ſome places ſtrook the very ſtones out of Buildings, and made the Bells in Churches to jangle. The night following, the earth trembled once or twice in Kent, and again the firſt day of May. In this year alſo, in the Town of Walſham in Suſſex, a childe of eleven years old, named William Withers, lay in a trance for the ſpace of ten dayes without any ſuſtenance; and at the laſt coming to himſelf, he uttered to the ſtanders by, many ſtrange ſpeeches; inveighing againſt Pride, Covetouſneſs, coldneſs of Charity, and other enormous ſins. In her ſix and twentieth year, being the year 1588, the like Prodigy happened in Dorſetſhire; as in the year 1571 had happened in Herefordſhire; A Field of three Acres in Blackmore, with the Trees and Fences, moved from its place, and paſſed over another Field, travelling in the High-way that goeth to Herne, and there ſtayed. In her eight and twentieth year, Tobacco was firſt brought out of the Weſt-Indies into England by Ralph Lane. In her five and thirtieth year, there was ſo great a drought, that not onely the Fields, but the Springs themſelves were dryed up, and many Cattel every where died for want of water. The River of Thames likewiſe did ſo fail, that a Horſeman might ride over at London-Bridge. In her ſix and thirtieth year, was a great Plague in London, ſo as there dyed this year in London and the Suburbs, ſeventeen thouſand eight hundred and ninety, beſides the Lord Mayor, and three Aldermen; and Michaelmas Term was holden at St. Albans. For the prices of Victuals in her time, we may take a pattern of the reſt by one kind: for John Stow reporteth, that in his youth he fetched many a half peniworth of Milk from a Farm by the Minories, and never had leſs than three Ale Pints for a half peniworth in the Summer, nor leſs than two Ale pints for a half peny in the Winter. Alſo in the year 1533, a fat Ox was ſold at London for twenty ſix ſhillings at the moſt; a fat Weather for three ſhillings four pence; a fat Calf the like price: a fat Lamb for twelve pence, three pound of Beef for a peny.

Oyl

Another prodigious Earthquake.

Of Her Perſonage and Conditions.

SHe was of ſtature indifferent tall, ſlender and ſtraight, fair of Complexion, her hair inclining ro pale yellow, her fore-head large and fair, her eyes lively and ſweet, but ſhort ſighted; her Noſe ſomewhat riſing in the midſt; the whole compaſs of her countenance ſomewhat long, yet of admirable beauty, but the beauty of her mind was far more admirable: She had been a ſubject, which taught her to Rule; ſhe had been in miſery, which taught her to be merciful; and indeed, never Prince ruled with more juſtice, and with her juſtice mingled more mercy: She had more Valour in her than was fit for a woman, but that ſhe was Ruler over men; and more Humility in her than was fit for a Prince, but that ſhe meant to be a Preſident to women. She delighted in nothing ſo much, as in the love of her people, which ſhe procured by ordaining good Magiſtrates, and forbearing Impoſitions. Her way not to need them, was frugality; and her way to have them when ſhe needed them, was liberality. She made honour in her time the more honourable, by not making it common; and indeed, knowing it to be an influence from her ſelf, ſhe kept it, as her ſelf, a Virgin, and would not proſtitute it to unworthy perſons. She declined being a Mother of Children, to the end ſhe might be a Mother of her Country; and indeed, no mother ever loved her children more, than ſhe did her people; and therefore never children loved a mother more, than her people did her. She coveted not ſo much to be an owner of riches, as of rich Subjects; for ſhe thought money did as well in their Coffers, as in her own: and indeed, ſhe never wanted it, when they had it; and they alwayes had it, when ſhe needed it. Never Prince had a wiſer Councel than ſhe, yet never Prince needed it leſſe; for ſhe was her ſelf a Counſellor to her Councel. In ſum, whatſoever may in flattery be ſaid of a wiſe, juſt, merciful, religious, and learned Prince, may truly be ſaid of her: in all which, if ever ſhe had an equal, yet ſhe never certainly had a ſuperiour. In playing her game of Fortune, ſhe loved not an after-game; for ſhe liked Preventions better than Remedies. She was admirable in expreſſing her mind, both by ſpeech and writing: and if collection could be made of her Apophthegms, and extemporal Orations, it would certainly excell any thing extant in that kind: And for her writing, Sir Henry Savile affirms; That he had ſeen ſome Tranſlations of hers, which far exceeded the Originals. Never Prince kept greater State with leſſe ſtatelineſſe: Her Penſioners and Guard were alwayes the talleſt and goodlieſt Gentlemen and Yeomen of the Kingdom: her Maids of Honour and other Women about her, the faireſt and moſt beautiful Ladies of the Realm; and yet her ſelf a Diana amongſt her Nymphs; inſomuch that a great Lord of France being entertained at Court, and the Queen asking him how he liked her Ladies, made anſwer, It was hard to judge of Stars, in the preſence of the Sun.

Of

Of her Death and Buriall.

IT was now the Year 1602, when ſhe feeling ſome Infirmities of Old Age and Sickneſſe, retired her ſelf at the end of January, to Richmond; at which time, in a ſad Omen, ſhe commanded the Ring to be filed off her finger, wherewith ſhe was ſolemnly at the firſt inaugurated into the Kingdom, and ſince that time had never taken it off, it being grown into the fleſh in ſuch manner, that it could not be drawn off without filing. At the beginning of her Sickneſſe, the Almonds of her Jawes began to ſwell, and her appetite by little and little failed her; withall ſhe gave her ſelf wholly to ſadneſſe and heavineſs, which ſome imputed to her care for the loſſe of the Earl of Eſſex; Others, becauſe ſhe heard, That divers of the Nobility ſought the favour of the King of Scots, adoring him as the Sun riſing, and neglecting her: but howſoever, in March a kinde of benummedneſſe ſeized upon her, with a deep melancholy, ſo as ſhe would ſit ſilently, refrain her meat, and not admit of any Conference, but with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with whom ſhe prayed fervently, till ſuch time as her ſpeech failed her, which failed her a day before ſhe dyed. She being in this caſe, it was thought fit the Admiral and Secretary ſhould go to her, to know her minde concerning a Succeſſor; to whom ſhe gave this Anſwer; My Throne hath been the Throne of Kings, I would not a mean Perſon ſhould ſucceed me. The Secretary requeſting her to ſpeak more plainly, I will (ſaid ſhe) have a King ſucceed me; and what King, but the King of Scots, my neareſt Kinſman? After this, the Archbiſhop exhorted her to think of God; That do I (ſaid ſhe) nor do my thoughts ever wander from him. And when her tongue no longer ſerved her, it was evident by the lifting up of her hands and eyes, that her thoughts were fixed upon him. And ſo on the four and twentieth day of March, being the laſt day of the year 1602, ſhe yielded up her Soul to God, when ſhe had lived Threeſcore and nine years, ſix moneths, and ſeven dayes; Reigned Four and forty years, four moneths, and ſeven dayes. Her Body was embalmed, wrapped in Lead, and brought to White-Hall; from whence on the eight and twentieth of April following, in great ſolemnity, it was carried into the Collegiate Church of Saint Peters at Weſtminſter, and there interred in the Vault of her Grand-father, King Henry the Seventh, in his Magnificent Chappell, where our Renowned Soveraign King James hath built her a Princely Monument, inſcribed with Epitaphs to her eternall glory. At her Funerall were ſaid to be Mourners in black, to the number of One thouſand and ſix hundred perſons.

Men of Note in her Time.

THE Ocean is not more boundleſs, than the number of Men of Note in her time; but though all of them cannot be reckoned, yet ſome of them muſt not be omitted. And to begin with Stateſ-men: An exquiſite Stateſ-man for his own ends, was Robert Earl of Leiceſter; and for his Countries good, Sir William Cecill Lord Burleigh; as alſo Sir Francis Walſingham, that great underminer of Conſpirators. Famous Sea-men, were the Earl of Cumberland, the Lord Thomas Howard, afterward Earl of Suffolk: and of meaner Rank, Sir John Hawkins, Sir Martin Forbyſher, Sir Walter Rawleigh, Cavendiſh, Preſton, Ryman; and, to name the worthieſt laſt, Sir Francis Drake, who though he were but a ſhort ſquare bodied man, yet his great Acts have made the Spaniards believe that he was ſome goodly Perſonage. Great Commanders by Land, were Robert Earl of Eſſex, the Lord Willoughby, the Lord Grey of Wilton, Sir Francis Vere, Sir Roger Williams, Baskervile, Savage, and the Honour of his Family, and our Engliſh Nation, Sir John Norris. Learned Gentlemen and Writers, were Sir Thomas Chaloner, employed by Queen Elizabeth as her Leiger in Spain, who wrote five Books of the reſtoring of the Engliſh Common-wealth, in Elegant Verſes, while (as he ſaid) he lived in a Stove in Winter, and in a Barn in Summer: Roger Askam, born in Yorkſhire, notably skilfull in the Greek and Latine Tongues, who had ſometime been School-maſter to Queen Elizabeth, and her Secretary for the Latine Tongue; but taking too great delight in Gaming and Cock-fighting, he both lived and dyed in mean eſtate, yet left behind him ſundry Monuments of Wit and Induſtry. Sir Thomas Smith born at Saffron Walden in Eſſex, ſometime Secretary to King Edward the Sixth, who wrote an imperfect Work of the Engliſh Common-wealth, a ſingular Book of the Orthography of the Engliſh tongue, and another of the Pronunciation of the Greek; the firſt man that ſet on foot the Law for ſerving the Colledges with Proviſion. Sir Henry Savill, Provoſt of Eaton, and Reader to Queen Elizabeth, who ſet forth all St. Chryſoſtoms Works in Greek, and by tranſlating of Cornelius Tacitus, deſerved as much of the Engliſh Tongue, as he of the Latine. But above all, the admirable Sir Philip Sidney, who by writing in a light Argument, ſhewed how excellently, and beyond all compariſon he could have done in a grave. Learned Divines were John Jewell born in Devonſhire, a Student in Corpus Chriſti Colledg in Oxford, in Queen Maries time an Exile, by Queen Elizabeth made Biſhop of Salisbury, who wrote an Apology for the Proteſtant Doctrine, and dyed at ſcarce Fifty years of age, in the Fourteenth year of Queen Elizabeth. John Whitaker, Maſter of St. Johns Colledg in Cambridge, who learnedly anſwered all the Books of Bellarmine. Biſſon Biſhop of Wincheſter, ſometimes Fellow of New Colledg in Oxford, who, amongſt his other learned Works, hath written notably of Chriſts deſcent into Hell. Richard Hooker, Preacher at the Temple, who with too much meekneſs ſmothered his great Roger Askam his delight in Gaming and Cock-fighting.

Learning, yet hath ſomething diſcovered it in his five Books of Eccleſiaſticall Diſcipline, and died in the year 1599. Alexander Nowel Dean of Pauls, who forbearing deeper Works, ſet forth a Catechiſm, according to the Doctrine of the Engliſh Church, and dyed in the year 1620. After ſuch men, it might be thought ridiculous to ſpeak of Stage-players; but ſeeing excellency in the meaneſt things deſerve remembring, and Roſcius the Comedian is recorded in Hiſtory with ſuch commendation, it may be allowed us to do the like with ſome of our Nation. Richard Bourbidge and Edward Allen, two ſuch Actors as no age muſt ever look to ſee the like: and, to make their Comedies compleat, Richard Tarleton, who for the Part called the Clowns Part, never had his match, never will have. For Writers of Playes, and ſuch as had been Players themſelves, William Shakeſpeare and Benjamin Johnſon, have ſpecially left their Names recommended to poſterity.

THE REIGN OF KING JAMES.

Anno Dom. 1603.

JAMES the Fourth King of Scotland, married Margaret eldeſt Daughter of Henry the Seventh King of England, by whom he had James the Fifth, who had one onely Child Mary Queen of Scots, who had one only Son James the Sixth, who from James the Fourth had undoubted Right to the Kingdome of Scotland; and from Margaret, King Henry the Seventh's eldeſt Daughter, (the Male line being clean extinct) unqueſtionable Title to the Crown of England: whereupon Queen Elizabeth being dead about Ten a clock in the morning the 24th of March, King James the Sixth, King of Scotland was the very ſame day (Mr. Secretary Cecill himſelf reading his Title, and Queen Elizabeths Will) proclaimed King of England, Scotland, and Ireland, by ſound of Trumpet, firſt at White-Hall, and then in Cheapſide, in preſence of all the Lords of the Councel, and other of the Nobility, with a general Acclamation of all ſorts of people, that we may truly ſay, Sorrow was never more deceived than at this time; for where upon the death of Queen Elizabeth, it was expected there would be nothing for a long time but ſorrowing and lamenting; now that very ſorrow was ſwallowed up of joy, her death bringing with it no other alteration but only of Sex, in all other points in a manner the ſame, the like Wiſdome, the like Learning, the like Juſtice, the like Religiouſneſs in them both: onely bettered in this, that we changed a Queen of 70 years old, whom we could not look to keep long, for a King of 36, whom we might well hope to enjoy many years.

King James is proclaimed King of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

Queen Elizabeth was no ſooner dead, but Sir Robert Cary a younger Son of the late Lord Hunſdon, poſted away unſent, to King James in Scotland, informing him of the accident: for bringing which news, the King afterwards rewarded him with making him a Baron of the Realm, and Lord of Leppington. But though it were ſufficient for the Kings information, that he heard the news by Sir Robert Cary; yet it was not ſufficient for the Lords of the Councel in diſcharge of their duty, if he heard it not from them, and therefore within a very few dayes, as ſoon as they could provide fit men, they ſent firſt Sir Charles Piercy, and Mr. Thomas Somerſet, and after them Sir Thomas Lake Clerk of the Signet, a man well acquainted with the State of the Kingdom, both to acquaint him with the general applauſe of all the Realm, to receive him for their Soveraign, and alſo inform him in what terms the ſtate of the Kingdom ſtood, that ſo he might not come altogether a ſtranger when he came into it.

Sir Robert Cary acquaints him with the Queens death.

Queen Elizabeth indeed had left him not only a Kingdom, but a Kingdom without incumbrance; no Wars abroad, no Sedition at home; and not only ſo, but a Kingdom furniſhed with all the fruits of Peace, plenty of all things neceſſary, and of all neceſſary things; the chiefeſt a Wiſe Councel, for ſhe left Sir Thomas Egerton Lord Chancellor, Thomas Lord Buckhurſt Lord Treaſurer, Charles Earl of Nottingham Lord Admiral, and Sir Robert Cecill Principal Secretary: Four ſuch men that the meaneſt of them were ſufficient to ſit at the Helm of any Kingdom. Yet to theſe and divers others beſides (all whom the King now by his Letters authorizeth to exerciſe their ſeveral places, as formerly they had done) he addeth certain new ones of his own chooſing, as namely the Earls of Northumberland, and Cumberland, the Lord Thomas Howard, and then after the Lord Henry Howard; the one the brother, the other the ſon of the late Duke of Norfolk who had ſuffered ſo much, that at laſt he ſuffered for the Queen his mother. But although the calling of theſe two laſt to ſuch place, was don (no doubt) out of favour to that houſe; yet one of them being known, the other doubted to be a Papiſt, it was preſently apprehended, as a favour to that ſide; and the Catholicks were not a little confident of his his good inclination to them all in general. And it was indeed but neceſſary they ſhould at this time have ſuch a conceit, for in the late Queens ſickneſſe, a little before her death, Pope Clement the eight, had written two Brieves to the Catholicks in England, to admit of none to ſucceed in the Kingdom, when that miſerable woman ſhould happen to die (ſo he pleaſed to ſtyle the moſt glorious Queen that ever lived) but ſuch a one, of whoſe good inclination to the See of Rome, they ſhould at leaſt be well perſwaded. And now King James having ſetled the Goverment of his Kingdom of Scotland, & made convenient preparation for his journey: on the fifth of April 1603, he ſet forward and rode that day from Edenburgh to Dunglaſſe, and from thence the next day to Berwick, where having ſtayed two days the eighth of April he rode to Withrington a houſe of Sir Robert Caries, from thence the ninth to *Newcaſtle*r where he ſtaied Sunday and heard the Biſhop of Durham preach, and ſo joyfull were the Townſmen of his being there, that all the time of his ſtay they bore the charge of his houſhold. The thirteenth of April he ſet forward to Durham and from thence the fourteenth to Waltworth, the fifteenth towards York, where his train encreaſed to ſuch a multitude, that he was fain to publiſh an inhibition of the peoples reſorts, and flocking to him. At York it was a queſtion to whom it belonged to bear the ſword before the King in that place, for both the Earl of Cumberland claimed it as hereditary to his Houſe, and the Preſident of the North claimed it as belonging to his place, but it was adjudged to George Earl of Cumberland; who accordingly did it. From York the eighteenth day the King rode to Grimſton, to a houſe of Sir Edward Stanhops, the nineteenth to Pomfret, and ſo to Doncaſter, where he lodged at the ſign of the Bear and Sun: The twentieth of April he rode towards Worſuppe, a houſe of the Earl of Shrewſbury; from thence the twenty one to Newark upon Trent, where a Cutpurſe being taken in the fact, was by the Kings warrant hanged; a moſt unſeaſonable delinquent, who would force the King to a work of Juſtice at a time when he intended nothing but mercy: the 22, to Beaver Caſtle, a houſe of the Earl of Rutlands, hunting all the way as he rode: From Beaver the 23 to Burleigh, where having ſtayed two or three days, the 27 he removed to Hinchinbrook, a houſe of Sir Oliver Cromwels, where the heads of the Univerſity of Cambridge met him. From thence he rode towards Royſton, and as he paſſed through Godmancheſter, a Town cloſe by Huntington, the Bailiffs of the Town preſented him with 70 Teem of Horſe all traced to fair new Ploughs, at which the King wondring, they ſaid, it was their ancient cuſtom ſo to do when any King of England paſſed through their Town, and by which as being the Kings tenants, they held their land. At Royſton, he lodged that night at Mr. Cheſters houſe, at his own charge, which he had not done before, ſince his coming into England. The 30 of April he rode to Standon, a houſe of Sir Thomas Sadlers, where he ſtayed Sunday and heard the Biſhop of London Preach. The ſecond of May he removed to Broſbourn a houſe of Sir Henry Cocks, cofferer to the late Queen, and now to the King, where met him the Lord Keeper, the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Admiral, and divers other Lords: The third of May he came to Theobalds, a houſe of Sir Robert Cecils; when all the Lords of the late Queens moſt honourable Privy Councel preſented themſelves, and there the Lord Keeper made a grave Oration. At this houſe, the fourth of May, the King made divers Noblemen of Scotland of his Privy Councel here in England; namely the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Marre, the Lord Hume, and Sir George Hume Treaſurer of Scotland, Sir James Elpingſton his Secretary, and the Lord of Kinloſſe, made afterward maſter of the Rolles. Saturday the ſeventh of May, he rode towards London, where by the way, the Sheriff Swinnerton, and the Aldermen met him; and by their Oratour Mr. Richard Martin, made him an Eloquent Oration; and then he rode on to the Charter-houſe near Smithfield, a houſe belonging to the Lord Thomas Howard, where he ſtayed four days: and at his departing from thence made the Lord Zouch, and the Lord Burgley, of his Privy Councel. But wee muſt not here omit, that from the Kings firſt ſetting forth of Scotland; as he was in all places received with Royal entertainment and rich preſents; ſo he again carried himſelf moſt affable, and diſtributed his favours in moſt plenteous manner: in ſome places diſcharging all priſoners but ſuch as lay for Treaſon or Murther: but eſpecially in conferring the order of Knighthood, of which ſort the firſt he made, was Mr John Peyton, ſon to Sir John Peyton, Lieutenant of the Tower. After him divers Scots in ſundry places; at Theobalds, eight and twenty; (of which number the compiler of this work, though the unworthieſt, was one;) at the Charter-houſe above fourſcore: and not many days after, no fewer than at leaſt a hundred; and before the year went about God knows how many hundreds, that one would wonder what the King would do with ſo many Milites, having no war toward: But it was indeed fit to give a vent to the paſſage of Honour, which during Queen Elizabeths Reign had been ſo ſtopped, that ſcarce any County of England had Knights enow to make a Jury.

Before we go further, it will not be amiſſe, to ſhew what great men attended King James out of Scotland; as namely the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Marre, the Lord Hume, and many other great Lords; and many other whom he afterward made great Lords, as being in his ſpeciall favour: firſt Sir George Hume, made afterward Earl of Dunbarre: then Sir Thomas Erſkin, made Earl of Kelly; then Sir John Ramſey made Earl of Holderneſſe; (which two laſt had the fortune to come firſt in to his reſcue againſt the Gowries) then Sir James Hay, made afterward Earl of Carliſle; and then Sir Richard Preſton made Earl of Kildare in Ireland; but whoſe great fortune by marrying the Heir of that Earldom was afterward the occaſion of his great misfortune; for coming out of Ireland, he was unfortunately caſt away and drowned.

But though King James was now ſafely come himſelf to London; yet he accounted himſelf but half come, untill his Queen and children were come to him, and therefore there are now appointed to go to conduct them; of Lords, the Earl of Suſſex, the Earl of Lincoln, the Lord Compton, the Lord Norris, and Sir George Caren Knight Lord Preſident of Munſter: of Ladies, the Counteſſe of Worceſter, the Counteſſe of Kildare, the Lady Anne Herbert Daughter to Henry Earl of Pembroke; broke; the Lord Scroopes Lady, the Lady Rich wife to the Lord Rich, and the Lady Walſingham, one of the late Queens Bed-chamber: But although theſe only were appointed to go, yet many other Lords and great Ladies went of themſelves to attend her Majeſty, as the Counteſſe of Bedford, the Lady Haſtings, the Lady Cecill, the Lady Hatton, the Lady Harrington, and divers other: & with this Princely attendance, the Queen with two of her children, namely Prince Henry of the age of nine years, and the Lady Elizabeth on the eleventh of June came to York: where reſting themſelves ſome few days, on the ſeven and twentieth of June they came to Eaſton in Northamptonſhire, a houſe of Sir George Fermors, where the King met them at dinner: and afterward they rode together to a houſe of Sir John Forteſcue, and ſo to London. The Kings younger ſon, Charles Duke of Albany came not at this time, as being not three years old, and therefore not thought able to endure ſuch a journey, but the year following falling ſick of a Feaver, Doctor Atkins one of the Kings Phyſitians was ſent to conduct him, who in ſix weeks cured him of his feaver; and the firſt week of October brought him ſafe to Windſor, where the King then lay; for which ſervice he was ſo well rewarded, that together with the gains of his uſuall practiſe, he grew to a greater wealth than was uſuall for Phyſitians.

The King ſets forward into England.

At Godmanchester the King is preſented with 70 Teem of horſe, and why.

Divers Noblemen of Scotland made of his Privy Councel.

Lords made by the King.

King James had diſtributed the meaner Order of Knighthood, very plentifully; now he thinks fit to raiſe his diſtributions to a higher degree, and thereupon the twentieth of May, he made Sir Robert Cecill Baron of Eſindon; Sir Robert Sidney Baron of Penhurſt; Sir William Knowles Baron of Greyes; and Sir Edward Wooton Baron of Morley; and not long after he made the Lord Henry Howard Earl of Northampton; and Thomas Sackvile Lord Buckhurſt, he made Earl of Dorſet.

Ambaſſadors from all Princes of Chriſtendome come to congratulate the Kings happy coming to the Crown.

The King had by this time found the love and affection of his own people; but the affection of neighbouring Princes towards him ſtood yet in ſuſpence, when now to take away that doubt came firſt in the beginning of June, an Ambaſſador from the Palſgrave of Rhine; preſently after another from the States of Holland and Zeland; another from the Archduke of Auſtria; another from the King of Spain; from the Seigniory of Venice another; another from the Duke of Florence; and laſtly on the eight of June Mounſieur de Roſny from the King of France: all congratulating his happy coming to the Crown of England; for entertainment of which Ambaſſadours, and all other that ſhould come after; the King had erected an Office by the name of Maſter of the Ceremonies, allowing him two hundred pounds a year Fee, and the firſt that had the place was Sir Lewis Lewkenor: a Gentleman, who beſides other good parts, was very skilfull in the neighbouring languages.

The Office of Maſter of the Ceremonies erected.

Fourteen Serjeants of Law made.

Upon the ſeventeenth of May this year, were made fourteen Serjeants at Law: whereof eleven had received Writs the laſt year of Queen Elizabeth: namely, Thomas Coventry, Robert Haughton, Lawrence Tanfield, John Crook, Thomas Foſter, Edward Philips, Thomas Harris, James Altham, Henry Hubbard, Auguſtine Nicholls, and Robert Parker; to whom the King added three new; John Skerly, George Snygge, and Richard Hutton, who all kept their Feaſt together in the middle Temple Hall.

Valentine Thomas for offences againſt Queen Elizabeth is hanged and quartered.

One would think that at this time all Offences againſt Queen Elizabeth had been forgotten; but King James more tender of wrongs done to her than to himſelf, would not ſuffer Valentine Thomas ſo to eſcape; who after he had lyen many years priſoner in the Tower, was on the fourth of June arraigned at the Kings Bench Bar and for conſpiracy againſt the late Queen and ſome of her Councel, was on the ſeventh of June after ſix a clock at night, drawn to St. Thomas Watrings, and there hanged and quartred.

The Lord Montjoy brings Tir-Oen into England, who is fully pardoned.

About this time the Honourable Charles Lord Montjoy returned out of Ireland; bringing along with him Hugh O-Neal, Earl of Tir-Oen at whoſe coming to the King, the Lord Montjoy was ſworn of the Kings Privy Councel; and the Earl of Tir-Oen, who had been the cauſe of ſo much Engliſh bloud ſhed, was yet pardoned, and proclamation made, that by all men he ſhould be uſed with reſpect and honour.

The Earl of Rutland ſent with the Garter to the King of Denmark, The Lord Spencer to the Duke of Wirtenberg.

All this while the King had moved within his own Sphear, and had done nothing out of the Realm; his firſt Imployment abroad was now in June, to his brother the King of Denmark, to whom he ſent in Ambaſſage the Earl of Rutland upon two occaſions: the one to be Godfather to his Son, who was named Chriſtianus, the other to preſent him with the Order of the Garter; upon the like imployment, ſoon after, he ſent the Lord Spencer to Frederick Duke of Wirtenberg; which Lords ſaw the ſaid Princes inveſted with the Garter, and after honourable entertainment returned home.

A Treaſon of a ſtrange compoſition.

It was now a time that every man might ſit under his Vine, and enjoy the happineſſe of a peaceable Goverment: when ſuddenly like a ſtorm in a fair Summers day, brake forth a Treaſon of a ſtrange Compoſition: for where in all Treaſons commonly they are all of ſome one Faction, in this, there were people of all ſorts; Prieſts and Laymen, Papiſts and Proteſtants, Noblemen, Knights and Gentlemen; that one would think it ſhould be a well managed Treaſon, and yet was the ſhalloweſt that was ever ſet on foot; ſo ſhallow, that it could ſcarce be obſerved, either what the Authors of it ailed, or what it was they would have done. Indeed the great favour which King James at his firſt coming to the Crown, ſhewed to the Earl of Southampton, was like to breed no good blood in thoſe that were his oppoſites; and it was ſaid (how true I know not) that as the King had ſent to enlarge the Earl of Southampton, and appointed him to meet him upon the way: ſo when he heard of an intention that the Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Rawleigh had to meet him; he ſent them word they ſhould ſpare their labour. But whether it were ſo or no, it ſeems they found ſome cauſe of diſcontentment, and diſcontentment will never want Complices; and by this means was the compoſition of this Treaſon made up, and thereupon were apprehended Henry Lord Cobham, and George Brook his brother, Thomas Lord Grey of Wilton, Sir Walter Rawleigh, Sir Griffith Markham, and Sir Edward Parham Knights, Bartholomew Brookesby, and Anthony Copley Gentlemen, William Watſon and William Clerk Prieſts: But though they were apprehended in July, yet they came not to their arraignment till

November following; for by reaſon of the ſickneſſe, which was then hot in London, the Term was put off till Craſtino Martini, and, then to be kept at Wincheſter in Hampſhire, only the Courts of the Exchequer, Wards & Liveries, and the Dutchy of Lancaſter were kept in the Kings Manor at Richmond in the County of Surrey; and ſo in the fourth of November following, all the foreſaid Delinquents were removed from the Tower of London and other Priſons, by ſtrong Guards to Wincheſter, and there arraigned; whoſe Indictment was for Conſpiring

The Lord Cobham, Sir Walter Rawleigh, and others arraigned at Wincheſter; and why.

1. To kill the King.
2. To raiſe Rebellion.
3. To alter Religion.
4. To ſubvert the State.
5. To procure Invaſion by Strangers.

Concerning the firſt Point, it was proved, that the Lord Grey intended to obtain the levying of 2000 men, for defence of the Low-Countries, and with them to ſeize upon the King and Prince, and take the Lords of the Councel in their Chambers. For the other Points, It was proved, That the Lord Cobham and Sir Walter Rawleigh, met at St. Martins in the Fields, and there conſulted about raiſing Sedition, moving Rebellion, altering Religion, ſubverting the State, and to ſet up the Lady Arbella. And particularly for the Point of ſubverting the State; it was proved, that Watſon was deſigned to be Lord Chancellor, George Brook Lord Treaſurer, Sir Griffith Markham Secretary, and the Lord Grey to be Maſter of the Horſe, and Earl Marſhal of England. And for effecting of theſe Treaſons, It was proved, that Watſon the Prieſt had deviſed Oaths in writing, by which all parties were bound to keep them ſecret. And for the laſt point, It was proved, that Sir Walter Rawleigh was appointed to treat with Count Aremberg for ſix hundred thouſand Crowns, and the Lord Cobham to go to the Archduke and to the King of Spain, to perſwade them to aſſiſt the Lady Arbella. Theſe things being proved againſt them; on the days in which they were ſeverally Indicted, the moſt which was replyed in mitigation of their fault, was firſt by Watſon, who affirmed it could not be Treaſon, becauſe the King was not yet Crowned; and then by the Lord Grey, that it was but a verbal matter, and never took effect, and therefore could be no Treaſon: but theſe aſſertions being both refuted, they were all (except Sir Edward Parham, who only was acquitted) on their ſeveral days of indictment, found guilty of Treaſon; and had Judgement accordingly. The Prieſts Watſon and Clerk were executed at Wincheſter, the nine and twentieth of November: George Brook was beheaded the fifth of December; but then the hand of Juſtice ſtayed, and this was the courſe which the King held in ſhewing mercy. After the death of the three before named, he ſigned three other Warrants for the execution of the late Lord Cobham, the Lord Grey, and Sir Griffith Markham, on a certain day then following; but before that day came, he privately framed another Warrant written with his own hand to the Sheriffe, (who was then Sir Benjamin Titchburn) by which he countermanded the former Warrants, and that there might be no notice taken of it, he ſent it by Mr. John Gybbe, a Scotch-man, and one utterly unknown of all the Company, appointing him to deliver it ſo, that it might not take effect, till after their ſeveral confeſſions, and at the very point of their Execution; which was accordingly performed. At which time it was a wonderful thing to ſee how the Delinquents falling upon their knees, lamented their miſdoings, and moſt of all how they extolled the Kings unſpeakable mercy. But though thus pardoned, yet were they carried back to the Tower, where the Lord Grey not long after dyed, and in him was extinct that Barony, which had formerly brought forth many valorous and worthy men. Sir Griffith Markham after ſome time was ſet at liberty, and paſſed beyond Sea, where he lived long after in mean account. The Lord Cobham likewiſe was afterward diſcharged of Impriſonment, but deprived of his Eſtate, lived divers years in great penury; and in him ended that Noble Family, which had flouriſhed in great honour many Ages. Sir Walter Rawleigh was kept in the Tower, where to his great honour he ſpent his time in writing, and had been a happy man if he had never been releaſed. But ſuch is our ſtate, that no mans fortune is underſtood, whether it be good or bad, untill it be diſcovered by the Event.

The Lord Grey dies in the Tower, in whom that Barony was extinct.

The Lord Cobham diſcharged of Impriſonment, but lived in great penury, and in him that Barony alſo was extinct.

Sir Walter Rawleigh is kept in the Tower: where, and how he ſpent his time.

But in this mean time many things had paſſed, for his Majeſty having deferred the Feaſt of St. George untill his being at ſome of his own Houſes, held now the ſaid Feaſt at Windſor, the ſecond of July; where the Prince was inſtalled Knight of the Garter; as alſo the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Southampton, the Earl of Marre, and the Earl of Pembroke; and at the ſame time were elected the King of Denmark, and the Duke of Wirtenberg: though their inveſting have been ſpoken of before.

The Prince and others made Knights of the Garter.

And now was preparation made for the Kings Coronation, and for a preparative unto it, he firſt reſtored the Earl of Southampton, and then raiſed in honour theſe following: Sir Thomas Egerton Lord Chancellor, he made Baron of Elſmere; Sir William Ruſſel, Baron of Thornaugh; Sir Henry Grey, Baron of Groby; Sir John Peter, Baron of Writtle; Sir John Harrington Baron of Exton; Sir Henry Denvers Baron of Dantſey; Sir Thomas Gerrard, Baron of Gerard Bromley in the County of Stafford; and Sir Robert Spencer, Baron of Wormeleyton. After this he conferred inferiour Orders; and made Knights, all the Judges and Serjeants at Law, all Civilians and Clerks of the Signet, all his Gentlemen Uſhers and divers other: and laſtly made Knights of the Bath three-ſcore and two, moſt of them Noblemens ſons, and the reſt Gentlemen of ſpeciall worth. Theſe things done, on the five and twentieth of July, being St. James day, the King and Queen were together crowned, and anointed at Weſtminſter, by the hands of John Whitegift, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, in preſence of the Nobility and other, namely Sir Robert Lee Lord Mayor of London, in a Gown of Crimſon Velvet, his Brethren the Aldermen in Gowns of Scarlet, and 12 principal Citizens admitted to attend on them: all other Citizens ſtayed from paſſing thither either by water or land by reaſon of the ſickneſſe; and the firſt of Auguſt following all ſuiters were by Proclamation forbidden to repair to the Court till the Winter following.

Divers Lords made.

The King and Queen are Crowned together.

And all condemned but Sir Edward Parham.

Watſon and Clerk executed.

George Brook beheaded.

The reſt ſpared, and the courſe the King held in it.

At

The fifth of August kept holy-day, for the Kings deliverance from the Gowries.

At this time the King forgot not a deliverance he had formerly had, which though it were had in Scotland, yet he would have notice of it taken in England, which was his deliverance from the conspiracy of the Gowries on the fifth day of August three years before and thereupon Friday being the fifth of August was by commandment appointed to be holy day, with Morning Prayer, Sermons, and Evening Prayer that day, and Bonefires at night; which was then and after, during his life solemnly observed.

King James had in him as it were two persons; one as he was the King of Scotland; and in this he was in perfect amity with the King of Spain; another as he was King of England, and in this he had some difference with Spain but he, as Rex pacificus, took the best from both, and was altogether for the Olive branch, and thereupon when at his coming into England, he found letters of Mart granted against the Spaniards, he first caused them all to be called in, and then consented to a Treaty of perfect reconcilement: In which Treaty handled at London, the 18th of August, 1604, the Commissioners for the King of England were Tho. Earl of Dorset, Charles Earl of Nottingham, Charles Earl of Devonshire, Henry Earl of Northampton, and Robert Viscount Cranburn: For the King of Spain, John de Valasco Constable of Castile, John de Tassis Earl of Villa Mediana, and Alexander Robidius Professor of the Law in the College of Millain: For the Archdukes, Charles Count of Aremberg, John Richardot President of the Privy Councel, and Lodowick Verreiken principal Secretary: by whom a Peace being concluded and contained in many Articles; the Summer following, the King of Spain sent Don John de Valasco Constable of Castile and Duke of Fryas, also Pedraca de lay Syerra, his great Chamberlain accompanied with divers Marquesses, Earls and Barons, who coming into England, were by the Earl of Devonshire on the nineteenth of August Brought to the Court, where the King in his Chappel in the presence of the Commissioners and other English Lords; (the Duke of Fryas holding the Kings hands between his) took his Oath upon the holy Bible, religiously to observe and keep all the Articles of the Peace and League agreed upon: and in March following, being now the third year of King James, Charles Earl of Nottingham, Lord high Admiral of England was sent into Spain to take in like manner the King of Spain's Oath: who accompanied with three Barons, and many Knights, Gentlemen & other, to the number of six hundred and fifty, the fifteenth of April arrived at Groyne, from whence he was conducted to Valledolid, three hundred miles off, where the King of Spain then kept his Court, entertained in all places as he passed, at the King of Spain's charge, with so great provisions and such demonstration of love and gladnesse, that it plainly shewed the Spaniards were as glad of our friendship as we of theirs. The Lord Ambassador being come to the Court, he caused Thomas Knoll Esquire, to deliver the presents sent from the King of England, which were six goodly Horses, with saddles and saddle clothes very richly imbroidered, whereof three for the King, and three for the Queen: two Crosse-bows with sheafs of arrows: four fowling pieces inlaid with plates of gold: and a couple of Lyme-hounds of singular qualities: which the King and Queen in very kind manner accepted; and then on the thirtieth of May, the Lord Ambassador being sent for, the King came forth into a large room: where having a little Table set before him, and a Bible very reverently laid upon it, together with a Crucifix: the Archbishop of Toledo read the Oath, at the reading whereof, the Lord Ambassador held the Kings hands between his, and the King kneeling down, laid his hands upon the Book, and after his Oath, subscibed to the Articles formerly concluded. Whilest the Earl of Nottingham was thus imployed in Spain, the right honourable Edward Earl of Hertford, was likewise sent Ambassador to Albertus and Isabella, Archdukes of Austria, to take their Oaths, for confirmation of the said Articles of Peace, which were taken at Bruxels the first of May with great state and solemnity: After which, as the Earl bestowed on the Archdukes servants, to the full sum of three thousand pounds; So the Archduke at his departrue, bestowed upon the Earl, a Jewel worth nine hundred pounds, and a suit of Arras worth three hundred, and bore his charges all the time of his stay at Bruxels. And now was King James truly Rex pacificus, in peace and amity with all Princes of Christendom, which few of his Ancestors ever were.

All Letters of Mart called in.

A Treaty of Peace with Spain, and who were Commissioners.

A Peace concluded, and the solemn manner of confirming it.

Charles Earl of Nottingham Lord Admiral, is sent into Spain to take the Kings Oath, and his entertainment.

The Kings Presents to the King and Queen of Spain.

A little before this, in the Moneth of August, in the year 1604, the strong Town of Ostend in Flanders, after above three years siege, and the slaughter of above a hundred and twenty thousand men of both sides, and in defence whereof, Sir Francis Vere General, and his brother Sir Horatio Vere had shewed great Valor, was by the Marquess Spinola taken; for which service, the King of Spain made him Duke of Santa Severina, and the Lord General of all the Forces in the Low-Countries.

Ostend taken by the Marquess Spinola.

It was now the third year of King James his Reign, when he kept Saint Georges Feast at Greenwich, and their made two nevv Knights of the Garter; namely the High and Mighty Prince Duke Vlrick, heir of Norway, and brother to our gracious Queen Anne: and the right Noble Lord Henry Howard Earl of Northampton. And upon the Saturday following in the Hall at Greenwich, being richly hanged with Arras, he created three Earls, one Viscount and four Barons: namely Sir Robert Cecill Viscount Cranburn, he created Earl of Salisbury: Thomas Cecill Lord Burley his eldest brother, he created Earl of Exceter, and Sir Philip Herbert, younger brother to the Earl of Pembroke, he created Earl of Montgomery, then Robert Sidney Baron of Penhurst Lord Chamberlain to the Queen, he created Viscount Lisle: Sir John Stanhope, Vicechamberlain to the King, he made Lord Stanhope of Harington: Sir George Carew Vicechamberlain to the Queen, he made Lord Carew of Clopton: Mr. Thomas Arundell of Devonshire, he made Lord Arundell of Warder: and Mr. William Cavendish, he made Lord Cavendish, of Hardwick.

An. Reg. 3. 1605.

Earls and Barons created.

About this time a strange fancy possessed the brains of a professed Physitian, one Richard Haidock of new Colledg in Oxford, who pretended to preach at night in his sleep, in such sort, that though he were called aloud or stirred and pull'd by the hands or feet, yet would make no shew of either hearing or feeling. And this he did often, in the presence of many honourable persons, that came came to hear him, ſo as within a ſhort time, his fame was ſpread through the land, by the name of the ſleeping Preacher. At length the King commanded him to be brought to the Court, whete his Majeſty ſate up the moſt part of a night to attend the event: when at laſt Haidock making a ſhew to be aſleep, began to pray; then taking a Text, made his Diviſion; applying it to his purpoſe, for in his Preaching his uſe was to invey againſt the Pope, againſt the Croſs in Baptiſm, and againſt the laſt Canons of the Church of England, and having ended his Sermon, ſeemed to continue ſleeping. His Majeſty having well obſerved the manner of his carriage; after a few dayes, called the ſaid Haidock before him, and in Conference with him (as he had indeed an admirable ſagacity in diſcovering of Fictions) made him confeſſe, that all he did was but impoſture: and thereupon to fall upon his knees, and ask forgiveneſs: which the King granted, upon condition, that in all places he ſhould openly acknowledge his offence; becauſe many were brought into belief, that his nightly preaching was either by inſpiration, or by viſion.

Diſcovered by the King.

We may not here think it unworthy the relating, ſeeing King James thought it not unworthy the ſeeing, thereby to obſerve the nature of the Lyon, and make a ſolemn matter of it; for on Munday the third of June (taking with him the Duke of Lenox, and divers Earls and Lords) he went to the Lyons Tower, and cauſed two Lyons, a male and female, to be put forth, and then a live Cock to be caſt before them; which they (as being their natural enemy) preſently killed and ſucked his blood. Then a live Lamb to be put down to them, which the generous Lyons (as having reſpect to its Innocency) never offered to touch, though the Lamb was ſo bold as to go cloſe unto them. Then the King cauſed thoſe Lyons to be taken away, and another Lyon to be put forth, and two Maſtifs to be put in to him, who preſently flew upon the Lyon, and turned him upon his back, and though the Lyon were ſuperior to them in ſtrength, yet it ſeems they were his matches in courage, and ſo much ſuperior as they were the firſt aſſailants, with whom otherwiſe, perhaps the Lyon would not have offered to meddle.

The King tries the nature of the Lyon, with a Cock and a Lamb.

On Fryday the 4th. of January in the Kings ſecond year, Charles Duke of Albany, the Kings ſecond Son, being then but four years old, was created Duke of York; which becauſe it was done with extraordinary ſolemnity, is not unworthy to have the manner of it here related. Firſt were appointed Knights of the Bathe, the Duke of Albany himſelf, then the Lord Willowby, the Lord Chandois, the Lord Compton, the Lord Norris, William Cecill Son and heir to the Viſcount Cranburn, Allen Percy Brother to the Earl of Northumberland, Thomas Somerſet ſecond Son to the Earl of Worceſter, Francis Mannors Brother to the Earl of Rutland; Thomas Howard ſecond Son to the Earl of Suffolk, and John Harington Son and heir to the Lord Harington, the Earls of Oxford and Eſſex were Eſquires to the Duke of Albany; all the Knights took their lodging that night in the firſt Gate-houſe going to Kings-ſtreet; where they ſupped, and had Bathes provided for them. The next morning being Saturday, they went out into the Park in their Hermits weeds, the Minſtrels playing, and the Heralds going before them into the Court, and ſo into the Chappel, where every Knight with his Eſquires went to the Altar, and there offered, (the Dean of the Chappel, in a rich Cope, holding the Baſon.) After this they went up into their lodgings, and there new attired themſelves in Robes of Crimſon Taffaty, with Hats and white feathers, and ſo went back to the great Chamber: where, by the King, they were girded with the Sword, and had guilt ſpurs put upon them. This done, they were ſolemnly ſerved at Dinner, and after went again to the Chappel, and there offered their Swords. The next day being Sunday, and Twelfth day, in Robes of purple Stattin, with Doctors hoods on their ſhoulders, and Hats with white feathers, they iſſued out of the Reveſtry with the Duke of Albany (being then to be made Duke of York) into the Hall, where the King ſate under the Cloth of Eſtate, and then the Heralds going before, the Knights of the Bathe followed, and then the Earl of Suffolk, Lord Chamberlain came alone, then followed Henry Howard Earl of Northampton, and Charles Blunt Earl of Devonſhire, carrying the Robes of Eſtate for the Duke of York; after whom Wriothſley Earl of Southampton carried the Coronet, George Clifford Earl of Cumberland the Golden Rod, the Earl of Worceſter the Cap of Eſtate, and the Earl of Nottingam bore the Duke of Albany in his Arms, ſupported by the Earls of Dorſet and Northumberland, who all coming in this order before the King; the Duke of Albany was after the Patent read, created Duke of York, with the Robes and Coronet put on him; and the Golden Rod delivered into his hand: all which performed, they went to Dinner, and the Solemnity ended.

Charles the Kings younger Son is created Duke of York, and the ſolemn manner of it.

About this time, on the fifteenth of June, Thomas Douglas a Scotch-man, was committed to the Tower, and had Irons put upon him, being ſent hither but three dayes before from the Count Palatine of Rhyne. His offence was, that he had counterfeited the Kings Privy-Seal to divers Princes of Germany; One to the Archbiſhop of Cullen, another to the Archbiſhop of Tryer, another to the Duke of Cleve, another to the Archbiſhop of Moguntia, and a fifth to the Count Palatine of the Rhyne; whereof being examined and convicted, he was drawn on a Hurdle into Smithfield, and there hanged and quartered.

Thomas Douglas a Scotch-man hanged in Smithfield, and why.

And now was a ſecond Parliament appointed to be held at Weſtminſter, on the nineteenth of March following, when four dayes before the day of ſitting, the King, the Queen and Prince rode ſolemnly in great ſtate through the City of London, where in divers places were erected Pageants, Preſents given, Orations made, and all demonſtrations of love and obſervance; and then the Parliament beginning, the King made a long and loving Speech to the Houſe, wherein he ſignified the cauſes of his calling it; but in the time when it ſhould have proceeded, there was ſuddenly diſcovered a Plot of Treaſon (ſo damnable and foul, that poſterity will hardly think it true, when they ſhall hear of it!) the Plot was to blow up with Gun-powder both Houſes of Parliament at a time, when the King, Prince, and all the Nobility ſhould be ſitting in the Upper-Houſe, and all the Knights and Burgeſſes in the lower.

The Gun-powder Treaſon.

By whom first plotted.

The principal contriver of this Plot was Robert Catesbie, a Gentleman of great account in Northamptonshire, descended from that Catesbie who had been a special Counsellor of King Richard the third, to whose family the Divine Providence had now ordained to give a diastrous period. This Catesbie not able to perform the work himself alone, draws in many to assist him, as namely, Thomas Percy, Thomas Winter, John Grant, Ambrose Rookwood, John Wright, Francis Tresham, Guido Fawks, and at last Sir Everard Digby, all earnest Papists, and all bound by Oath, and by receiving the Sacrament to be secret; For effecting of this plot, they hired a house close adjoyning to the Upper House of Parliament, where they were to dig through a Wall, for the fit placing of their Powder. About Candlemasse they had wrought the Wall half through: when suddenly they heard a noise in the next Room, which made them fear they had been discovered: but sending Guy Fawks (who went now under the name of John Johnson, as Master Percies man) to see what the matter was, he brought word, that it was a Cellar where Sea-coals had been laid, and were now a selling, and the Room offered to be let for a yearly Rent. This Room therefore as most fit for their purpose, being right under the Parliament House, Master Percy presently went and hired, laying into it twenty Barrels of Powder, which they covered with Billets and Faggots, for being discovered. Thus the first part of the plot was put in good readiness. It now remained to consider what was to be done, when the blow should be given: for though the King and Prince might be slain, yet the Duke of York and the Lady Elizabeth should still be safe, and so they should be no nearer their end than now they were. This work therefore for surprizing the Duke of York, Percy undertook, and for surprizing the Lady Elizabeth, they agreed upon a match of hunting near to Dunchurch, under colour whereof they would draw company together, and surprize her at the Lord Harringtons house in Warwickshire, where she then lay, and then proclaim her Queen, and so be sure to have all things done as they would themselves. Thus far their bloody Plot went fairly on, and had perhaps gone on so still, if they had continued only bloody; but now a tenderness of heart took some of them, least their Friends should perish together with the rest, and this tenderness overthrows them; for to prevent such promiscuous slaughter, a Letter was framed, and sent to the Lord Monteagle, Son and heir to the Lord Morley, brought him by one of his Foot-men, which he received from an unknown man in the street; The Letter was this: My Lord, out of the love I bear to some of your friends, I have a care of your preservation; therefore I would wish you, as you tender your life, to forbear your attendance at this Parliament; for God and Man have concurred to punish the wickedness of this time: And think not slightly of this Advertisement: for though there be no appearance of any stir; yet I say, they shall receive a terrible blow this Parliament, and yet shall not see who hurts them. This counsel is not to be contemned; because it may do you good, and can do you no harm; for the danger is past, as soon as you have burnt this Letter; and I hope you will make good use of it.

And with what Assistants.

By what means first discovered.

My Lord having read the Letter, though much perplexed, yet went presently to the Court at White-hall, (the King being then a hunting at Royston) and delivered it to the Earl of Salisbury, principal Secretary of State, and the Earl having read it, acquainted first the Lord Chamberlain with it, and then the Lord Admiral, the Earl of Worcester and Northampton, who as soon as the King was returned from Hunting, acquainted him with it: the Earl of Salisbury telling him, that he thought it must be written either by a fool, or mad man, because of those words, (for the danger is past as soon as you have burnt this Letter) for if the danger were so soon past, what needed any warning? But the King considering it more deeply, apprehended presently some violent motion; and that it must be some sudden danger by blowing up with powder; and thereupon commanded, that diligent search should be made in the Parliament House, and all other Rooms and Lodgings near adjoyning: which search was made by the Lord Chamberlain, accompanied with the Lord Monmeagle, who entring the Cellar under the Upper House, found there great store of Faggots and Billets; which was answered to be for Mr. Percie's own provision: but then (it being considered why such store should be laid in for Mr. Percie, who used to make but little stay in Town) and thereupon more diligent search being made, there was found under the Billets one of the Barrels of Powder; and after that all the rest, being six and thirty; together with other Instruments fit for their purpose, and then spying the said Fawks to stand suspiciously, they apprehended him, and found in his pocket a piece of Touch-wood, a Tynder-box to light the Touch-wood, and a Watch, which Mr. Percie had bought the day before, to try the short and long burning of the Touch-wood, which he had prepared to give fire to the train of powder. The Plot being thus discovered, yet the most of the confederates met at Dunchurch, as they had agreed; where they divulged many detestable untruths against the King and State: signifying withall, that they were there met for advancement of the Catholick cause; hoping thereby to have many to joyn with them in their Rebellion: but this availed them nothing: for first Sir Richard Verney high Sheriff of Warwickshire chased them from thence; and Sir Richard Welsh Sheriff of Worcestershire, knowing them to be entred into Master Littletons house at Walbach, beset them round, where Catesbie and Percie issuing forth, were both slain with one shot of a Musquet; and after them, both the Wrights, John and Christopher, were likewise slain outright; Thomas Winter was taken alive: all which time, Francis Tresham remained still about the Court, offering his service for their suppression: but being suspected, was examined, and sent to the Tower, where he confest all, and within a few dayes after dyed of the Strangury. On the seven and twentieth of January following, a Commission was directed to divers Lords and Judges of both Benches, for tryal of the rest of the Confederates: namely, Thomas Winter, Guydo Fawks, Robert Keyes, Thomas Bates, Robert Winter, late of Hoodington in Warwickshire Esquire, John Graunt, late of Yorthbrook, in the County of Warwick Esquire, Ambrose Rookwood, late of Staningfield in Fawks first apprehended.

Catesbie and Percie slain.

The rest of the Confederates arraigned, condemned and executed.

in Suffolk Esquire, Sir Everard Digby, late of Gotthurſt in Buckinghamſhire, Knight, who were all condemned, and had Judgment to dye, and on the Thurſday following Sir Everard Digby, Robert Winter, Grannt and Bates, were accordingly drawn, hanged and quartered, at the Weſt end of Pauls Church in London, and the Friday the other four; namely, Thomas Winter, Keyes, Rookwood, and Fawks were executed in the Parliament yard at Weſtminſter. Of all whom, none was ſo much lamented as Sir Everard Digby, and indeed worthily; for he was a goodly perſonage, and of excellent parts, and had it ſeems been cunningly drawn in, and bound to ſecrecy by Oath, when he little thought of any ſuch Treaſon.

The Earl of Northumberland committed to the Tower, and why.

The ſeventh of November the Earl of Northumberland, upon ſuſpicion of being acquainted with the plots, was firſt commanded to his Houſe, and after a while committed to the Tower. And thus was this great Plot diſcovered, and the Plotters puniſhed; to the great rejoycing of all people: inſomuch, that even the King of Spain's and Arch-dukes Embaſſadors made Bonefires, and threw money among the people in token of joy.

A Preſent from the K. of Spain to K. James.

And at this time, on the fourth of January, the Spaniſh Embaſſadour delivered a Preſent to the K. from the King his Maſter: namely, ſix Jennets of Andaluſia, with Saddles very riches imbroydered, & Saddle-clothes of cloth of Tiſſue: One of which Jennets was ſnow-white, and had a main which reached to the ground. But this was a Preſent ſent before any knowledge had of the Powder-Treaſon: but as ſoon as that was known, there was preſently another Preſent ſent from the

Another from the Q. of Spain to the Q. of England.

Queen of Spain to the Queen of England, of purpoſe to congratulate the Kings happy deliverance from the intended Powder-Treaſon; and the Preſent was brought by Don John de Mendoſa, which was a Roab of Murrie Sattin, imbroydered all over with Amber leather; and upon the leather, in every ſeam and skirt twice imbroydered about with Gold; the fore-part whereof were ſet with eight and forty tagges three inches long of beaten Gold, hollow within, and filled with Ambet-greece; alſo two large Chains of Amber-greece; Two Carkanets of Amber-greece, a Velvet Cap with gold Buttons, curiouſly enameled, and a girdle ſutable to the Buttons; all which were preſerved together in a large Veſſel of Gold, in form of a Baſon; ſo as it ſeems there was none rejoyced more for the overthrow of this Plot for the Catholick cauſe, than the Catholick King himſelf. And now King James, not to be unmindful to the Lord Monteagle, for being the means of diſcovering this Treaſon, he gave unto him in Fee Farm of Crown-land 200 l. to him and his heirs, and 500 l. a year beſides during his life: and not to be unthankful to God for the deliverance, he cauſed the fifth of November, being the day of the diſcovery, to be kept holy, with Prayer and Thankſgiving to God, which was then ſolemnly performed, and hath been ſince, and is likely for ever to be continued.

The Lord Monteagles reward for being a means of diſcovering the Treaſon.

The fifth of November kept holy in thankfulneſs for this deliverance.

But in the midſt of this great joy, there was ſuddenly ſpread a rumour of great ſorrow, for on Saturday the two and twentieth of March, news was brought to the Court for certain, that the King was ſlain at Oking, twenty miles from London, ſtabbed with an invenomed knife; whereupon the Court gates were preſently ſhut, and double guard ſet in all places about London, and all mens minds were infinitely diſtracted; but within two hours all theſe clouds were ſlain and diſperſed, and the Sun began to ſhine out again; and it was certainly known, that the King was ſafe, and in perfect health: for which a Proclamation was preſently ſent forth to ſignifie it to the people; and that afternoon the King came himſelf to Whitehall, where thouſands of people raviſhed with joy came flocking to ſee him; and ſo general was the rejoycing, that the Spaniſh Embaſſadour gave Sir Lewis Lewknor, Maſter of the Ceremonies, a chain of Gold of good value, for bringing him the news: Though afterward it was thought by ſome, that this rumour was but politickly deviſed to make the Parliament and people more tender of the Kings ſafety, and by making them more ſenſible what a treaſure they had of his life, to make them more willing to part with their treaſure for his living, as indeed this Parliament they did, giving more Subſidies than are uſual.

A rumour ſpread, that the King was ſlain at Oking, but falſe: and the joy upon the hearing the truth.

The eight and twentieth of March following, Henry Garnet Provincial of the Engliſh Jeſuites, was arraigned in Guild-hall, for concealing the foreſaid treaſon, where he had Judgment to be hang'd, drawn and quartered, and accordingly on the third of May, was drawn from the Tower to the Weſt end of Pauls Church, & there executed. At his death, he confeſſed his fault, asked forgiveneſs, and exhorted all Catholicks never to attempt any treaſon againſt the King or State, as a courſe which God would never proſper.

Henry Garnet a Jeſuite executed, and why.

On Tueſday the twentieth of May were enſtalled at Windſor Knights of the Garter, Robert Cecill Earl of Salisbury, and Thomas Howard Viſcount Byndon; both of them honourably attended, but the Earl of Salisbury beyond ordinary proportion.

There was yet a Fag end of the late Powder-Treaſon behind to be examined: whereupon two Barons of the Realm; namely, Henry Lord Mordant, and Edward Lord Sturton, were brought from the Tower to the Star-chamber; and there, not charged indeed with any point of the treaſon, but only reflectingly, becauſe they neglected to appear at the Parliament, according to their ſummons, for which neglect only, without any further charge, they were fined to pay to the King; the Lord Mordant ten thouſand Marks, and the Lord Sturton ſix thouſand, and to be priſoners during the Kings pleaſure. But on the 27th. of June, Henry Earl of Northumberland was likewiſe brought from the Tower to the Star-chamber, and more directly charged with circumſtances concerning the Treaſon, ſpecially in regard of Thomas Percy, whom he had admitted to be one of the Kings Gentlemen Penſioners, without miniſtring unto him the Oath of Supremacy, knowing him to be a Recuſant; for which, and ſome miſpriſons, he was fined to pay to the King thirty thouſand pounds, to forfeit all his Offices, and to be kept priſoner during the Kings pleaſure, as indeed he continued many years, and at laſt releaſed, was yet confined.

Henry Lord Mordant, and Edward Lord Sturton fined, and why.

It was now the fourth year of King James his Reign, and was a time of Princely viſitation; for this Summer, the 17th. of July, Chriſtianus King of Denmark, Brother to the Queen, having been long expected, with eight ſhips came into the River of Chriſtianus, K. of Denmark the Queens Brother comes into England, and of his entertainment.

Thames, and anchored before Graves-end; to whom the next day, King James with Prince Henry, and divers of the Lords went by Barge, and conducted him to London, where he ſtayed till the twelfth of Auguſt following: in which time, he was entertained with all the Magnificence that could be deviſed; the King and he riding in great ſtate through the City; where Pageants in many places were erected; and after he had been ſhewed the chief places about London: as namely the Old Exchange, the Tower, the Monuments at Weſtminſter, and had gone up to the top of Pauls, had been feaſted by the King, by the Earl of Salisbury four days together at Theobalds, had ſeen Tilting, Fencing, Wraſtling, and many other paſtimes; on the twelfth of Auguſt, conducted by the King, the Queen and Prince, with many other great Lords, he departed to his ſhips, and in eight days arrived at home: A happy thing when Princes can converſe together like private perſons, and are not kept aſunder with jealouſies of State.

Francis Prince of Vandemount comes into England, with what great train, and of his entertainment.

After the King of Denmarks departure, on the 23d. of September arrived at London Francis Prince of Vandemount, third Son to the Duke of Lorrain, accompanied with ſeven Earls, ten Barons, forty Gentlemen of quality, and ſixſcore common perſons; who all the five and twentieth of September went by Coach to the King at Hampton-Court, where fourteen dayes together they were feaſted and royally entertained, and then returned.

An Inſurrection in Northamptonſhire and Warwickſhire about Incloſures by Captain Pouch, and how ſuppreſſed.

But theſe Feſtivals were followed with a little diſturbance; for in May, the year after, great Aſſemblies were gathered together in Northamptonſhire, Warwickſhire and Leiceſterſhire, throwing down Incloſures at firſt, without any particular head: but at laſt roſe up a baſe Fellow, called John Reynolds, whom they named Captain Pouch, becauſe he had a great leather Pouch hanging by his ſide, who affirmed to the Company, that in that Pouch he had ſufficient to defend them againſt all commers: but when he was afterward apprehended, and his Pouch ſearched, there was nothing found in it but a piece of green Cheeſe. Proclamation was made, commanding them to ſurceaſe their diſorder: But this prevailed nothing, till the King ſent Henry Earl of Huntington, Thomas Earl of Exceter, Edward Lord Zouch, and Sir Edward Cook Lord chief Juſtice of England, to ſuppreſs them by force of Arms, and to puniſh the Levellers according to the nature of their offences; ſome by death, as for Treaſon; ſome by Fines, as for Routs: but Captain Pouch was made exemplar.

The King is made free of the Cloth-workers.

On Friday the twelfth of June, his Majeſty attended with divers Lords, dined with the Lord Mayor Sir John Wats, who after dinner preſented him with a purſe full of Gold, and humbly beſought his Majeſty, that he would be pleaſed to be free of his Company the Cloth-workers: To which the King graciouſly condeſcended; and thereupon called to Sir William Stone Maſter of the Company, and ſaid, Stone give me thy hand; and now I am a Cloth-worker: And in token of my ſpecial favour to this Fraternity, I do here give to this Company a brace of Bucks yearly for ever, againſt the time of the Election of the Maſter and Wardens: at which time alſo many Lords and Gentlemen were made Free of the Cloth-workers.

The Prince is made free of the Merchant-Taylors, and a liſt of great perſonages that had been of that Company.

On Thurſday the 16th. of July, the King and Prince with many Lords dined at Merchant-Taylors Hall, where the Maſter and Warden of that Society preſented the King with a purſe of Gold, giving him humble thanks for gracing their Fraternity with his Royal Preſence; and therewithal ſhewed him a Roll, wherein were regiſtred the names of 7 Kings, 1 Queen, 17 Princes and Dukes, 2 Dutcheſſes, one Archbiſhop, one and thirty Earls, threeſcore and ſix Barons, ſeven Abbots, ſeven Priors, with a great number of Knights and Eſquires, who had been free of that Company; which His Majeſty graciouſly accepted, but told them, that he himſelf was already Free of another Company: but the Prince his Son ſhould be free of theirs, and that he would ſee the Garland put on his head: whereupon the Maſter preſented the Prince alſo with a purſe of Gold, which he graciouſly accepted, and ſaid, that not only himſelf would be free of the Merchant-Taylors, but the Lords alſo that were with him ſhould do the like, all which was performed with great ſolemnity.

Sir Tho. Knevet and Sir Jervis Clifton made Barons by calling them to the Parliament.

The fourth of July this year, Sir Thomas Knevet was called by Writ to the Parliament by the name of Baron of Eſtrick, the next day Sir Julius Cæſar, Chancellor of the Exchequer was ſworn a Privy Counſellor; and the ſixteenth of November following Sir Jervis Clifton Knight, was called to the Parliament by Writ, by the name & title of Baron of Layton Brameſwold, whoſe only Daughter and Heir, was ſoon after, married to Eyſme Steward, Baron of Aubigny in France, ſole Brother of the Duke of Lenox; whom he afterward ſucceeded in that Dignity.

The Earl of Tir-Oen flies beyond Sea, to ſollicite Princes againſt the King.

About this time, Hugh Earl of Tir-Oen, moſt ungrateful and utterly forgetful of the Kings great clemency to him, together with Tereonell, Hugh Baron of Dungannon, and divers other Iriſh Lords fled into the parts beyond Sea, with purpoſe to ſollicite forrain Princes againſt the King, and to offer the Kingdom of Ireland to the Pope, which was preſently ſignified to the Realm by Proclamation.

George Jervis a Seminary Prieſt, and Thomas Garnet a Jeſuite executed, and why.

On the eleventh of April this year, George Jervis a Seminary Prieſt, and the three and twentieth of June following, Thomas Garnet a Jeſuite, were both executed at Tyburn; Thomas Garnet having the favour offered him to be pardoned, if he would but take the Oath of Allegiance, which he refuſed.

The Earl of Dorſet Lord Treaſurer of England dies ſuddenly.

The 19th. of April at Whitehall, dyed Thomas Earl of Dorſet Lord Treaſurer, (whoſe death becauſe he dyed ſuddenly as he ſate at the Councel Table) was by ſome untowardly interpreted; but being dead, and his head opened, there were found in it certain little bags of water, which whether by the ſtraining of his ſtudy the night before, in which he ſate up till eleven a clock, or otherwiſe by their own maturity, ſuddenly breaking and falling upon his brain, cauſed his ſudden death. So certain it is, that death comes not always by determinate ſteps, but ſometimes per ſaltum, and we all carry about us the cauſes of ſudden death, though unſenſible of them till we be unſenſible. This Lord was of excellent parts, and in his place exceeding induſtrious, and I have heard many Checker men ſay, there never was a better Treaſurer, both for the Kings profit, and the good of the Subject.

The

The twentieth of May at Windſor, were made two Knights of the Garter, George Earl of Dunbar, and Philip Earl of Montgomery; but the Earl of Dunbar, within a year or two after left both his honour and his life; but not his life without honour, having been a faithful Servant, and a wiſe Counſellor to the King, and was honourably interred in the Church at Weſtminſter.

Divers Engliſh Pirats turn Turks.

About this time were many famous Engliſh Pirats that ſtuck not ſome of them to turn Turks, and lived in great ſtate at Tunis, of whom the chief were Ward, Biſhop, Sir Francis Verney, and Glanvile, whom after many depredations and outragious acts at Sea, partly the King of Spain ſuppreſſed, and partly the King of England, and 19 of their aſſociates being taken, were hanged at Wapping.

The new Exchange in the Strand builded.

Alſo at this time, in the Strand on the North ſide of Durham-houſe, where ſtood an old long ſtable: Robert Earl of Salisbury now Lord Treaſurer of England, cauſed to be erected a ſtately building; which upon Tueſday the tenth of April, in the year 1609. was begun to be richly furniſhed with Wares; and the next day after, the King, the Queen, and Prince, with many great Lords and Ladies came to ſee it: and then the King gave it the name of Britains Burſe.

Fiſhing upon the Engliſh Coaſt forbidden to ſtangers.

On the eighth of May this year, the King by Proclamation prohibited all forrain Nations, that after Auguſt they ſhould not fiſh upon any of the Coaſts of England, Scotland, or Ireland, nor the Iſles adjacent, without the ſpecial licence from the Commiſſioners in that behalf ordained.

Allum firſt made in England, and by whom.

At this time the making of Allum, which heretofore with great charges had been fetched from forrain parts, was by divers that laboured in it, and now laſtly by Sir John Bourchier brought to perfection in England, and thereupon the King prohibited upon pain of confiſcation, any Allum to be brought from beyond the Seas, and took the whole traffique thereof to himſelf.

The King hath aid of his Subjects for making Prince Henry Knight.

And now the King according to an ancient cuſtom, had aid of his Subjects through England, for making his eldeſt Son Prince Henry Knight, which yet was levyed with great moderation, and the Prince to ſhew himſelf worthy of it, performed his firſt Feats of Arms at Barriers, with wonderful skill and courage: being not yet full ſixteen years of age.

1610.

An. Reg. 8. The Prince is created Prince of Wales, and the ſolemn manner of his creating.

It was now the eighth year of King James his Reign, being the year 1610, when Prince Henry being come to the age of ſeventeen years, it was thought fit he ſhould be Initiated into Royalty: and thereupon the thirtieth of May this year, he was Created Prince of Wales in moſt ſolemn manner; which was thus, Garter King at Arms, bore the Letters Patents, the Earl of Suſſex the Robes of Purple Velvet, the Earl of Huntington the Train, the Earl of Cumberland the Sword, the Earl of Rutland the Ring, the Earl of Darby the Rod, the Earl of Shrewsbury the Cap and Coronet, the Earl of Nottingham and Northampton ſupported the Prince, being in his Surcoat only and bare-headed: and in this manner being conducted to the King, attended on by the Knights of the Bathe, five and twenty in number, all great men, and great mens ſons, the Earl of Salisbury principal Secretary, read the Letters Patents: the Prince kneeling all the while before the King: and at the words accuſtomed, the King put on him the Robe, the Sword, the Cap and the Coronet, the Rod and the Ring, and then kiſſed him on the cheek, and ſo the ſolemnity ended.

He keeps Court by himſelf, and who were his great Officers.

After this, it was thought fit, he ſhould keep his Court by himſelf: and thereupon Sir Thomas Chaloner, a learned Gentleman, who had before been his Governour, was now made his Lord Chamberlain, Sir Edward Philips his Chancellor, and all other Officers aſſigned him, belonging to a Princes Court: wherein he ſhewed himſelf ſo early ripe for Majeſty, that he ſeemed to be a King, while he was yet but Prince: and all mens eyes began to fix upon him.

King James had long ſince ſhut up the Gates of Janus, and was in peace with all Princes abroad; his onely care now was to keep peace at home; and to this end, the three firſt days of June, in his own Perſon he heard the differences between the Eccleſiaſtical and the Temporal Judges argued, touching the Protections out of the Kings Bench and Common Pleas; to this end, the eighth, ninth, and tenth of June, he heard the manifold complaints of the abuſes of the Victuallers, and other Officers of his Navy Royal; to this end, the fourth of June, 1610. he once again by Proclamation, commanded all Roman Prieſts, Seminaries and Jeſuites, as being the chief Incendiaries of troubles, to depart this Kingdom by the fifth of July next, and not to return upon pain of ſeverity of the Law: as alſo all Recuſants, to return home to their dwellings, and not to remain in London, nor to come within ten miles of the Court, without ſpecial Licenſe. After which Proclamation, the Oath of Allegeance was preſently miniſtred to all ſorts of people, and their names certified to the Lords of the Councel, that refuſed to take it; and this he the rather did out of conſideration of the bloody fact, committed lately by one Ravillack, upon the perſon of the renowned King of France, Henry the fourth: and whereas Queen Elizabeth in her 43 year, had granted her Letters Patents to continue for 15 years to the Eaſt-India Merchants; now upon their humble Petition, the King was pleaſed to enlarge their Patents, giving them a Charter to continue for ever, enabling them thereby to be a body Corporate and Politick, which ſo encouraged the Merchants, that they built a Ship of twelve hundred tun, the greateſt that was ever made in this Kingdom by Merchants; which the King and Prince honoured with going to Debtford to ſee it; and then named it, The Trades increaſe: and at this time gave to Sir Thomas Smith (Governor of that Company) a fair chain of Gold, with a Jewel, wherein was his Picture. But this great Ship having been in the Red-Sea, and returning to Bantham, was there loſt, and moſt of her men caſt away. But then the King himſelf builded the goodlieſt Ship of War that was ever built in England, being of the burthen of 1400 Tun, and carrying threeſcore and four pieces of great Ordnance, which he gave to his Son Prince Henry, who named it after his own dignity, The Prince.

Seminaries and Jeſuites commanded to avoid the Realm, and why.

The Eaſt-India Company made a Corporation, with large Priviledges.

They build a ſhip of twelve hundred tun, called The Trades increaſe, which was caſt away in the Red-Sea.

Thereupon the King builds a ſhip of 1400 tun called The Prince, and gives it to the Prince.

And now whereas a Parliament had been holden this year, and was prorogued to a certain day, the King perhaps not finding it to comply with his deſigns, or for ſome other cauſe known to himſelf on the laſt day of December, under the great Seal of England diſſolved it.

The King diſſolves a Parliament under the Great Seal of England.

Before

Sir Robert Carre comes into the Kings favour, and of the many honours heaped ſuddenly upon him.

Before this time one Sir Robert Carre, a Gentleman of Scotland, or of the Borders, at a time of Tilting before the King, chanced with a fall off his Horſe to break his Leg; upon which miſchance, he was forced for ſome dayes to keep his bed, in which time the King was ſometime pleaſed to come and viſit him: and then it was firſt perceived, that the King had begun to caſt an eye of favour upon him: and indeed from that time forward (as he was a very fine Gentleman, and very wiſe) many great favours were heaped upon him: So as on Eaſter Munday, in the year 1611, he was created Viſcount Rocheſter. On the two and twentieth of April, 1612. was ſworn a privy-Counſellor. On the fourth of November, 1613. was created Earl of Somerſet, and the tenth of July following made Lord Chamberlain.

But this Sun-ſhine of Fortune laſted not long; yet not by any inconſtancy in the King, but by the Earls own undeſerving, which thus fell out: The Right Honourable Robert Earl of Eſſex had before this time married the beautiful Lady Frances Howard, Daughter of Thomas Earl of Suffolk, who upon cauſes judicially heard, were afterward Divorced, and left free to marry any other. After which Divorce, this great Favourite (the Earl of Somerſet) takes her for wife; the King gracing their Marriage with all demonſtrations of Love and Favour; and the Lords gracing it with a ſtately Maſque that night; and a few dayes after, the Bride and Bridegroom, accompanied with moſt of the Nobility of the Kingdom, were Feaſted at Merchant-Taylors Hall by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen. But ſee how ſoon this fair weather was overcaſt: For it happened, that one Sir Thomas Overbury, a very ingenuous Gentleman, and the Earls ſpecial Friend, who had written a witty Treatiſe of a Wife: and it ſeems not thinking the Lady in all points anſwerable to his deſcription, had been an earneſt diſſwader of the Match, and to ſtrengthen his diſſwaſion, laid perhaps ſome unjuſt imputation upon the Ladies Fame, which ſo incenſed them both againſt him, that a leſſe Revenge could not give them ſatisfaction, than to take away his life: So true is that ſaying;

His falling into diſgrace, and why.

Improbe amor, quid non mortalia pectora cogis?

Upon this, they find Pretences to have the ſaid Sr Thomas committed to the Tower, and there by their Inſtruments effect their Revenge: ſome ſay by a poyſoned Tanſey ſent him to eat, Some by a poyſoned Glyſter miniſtred unto him, but howſoever effected it was, for which Fact Sir Jervis Yelvis then Lieutenant of the Tower, and three or four other of inferior condition were put to death, the Lady and Earl themſelves were arraigned and condemned: but through the Kings great clemency had their lives ſpared, but in ſuch a ſort, as was to them no leſs grievous than death it ſelf, being never after ſuffered to ſee the Kings face, nor to come near his Court.

Sir Thomas Overbury Poyſoned.

Sir Jervis Yelvis Lieutenant of the Tower executed. The Earl of Somerſet and his lady ſo convicted, but their lives ſpared.

This Favourite being thus out of Favour, there was place made for entertaining another: for indeed King James was of ſo ſociable and loving a nature, that he could not be long without an Alter idem; a boſome Friend with whom to communicate his Interiora ſenſus, and upon whoſe Shoulders he might ſometimes lay a burthen, which he was not willing to bear himſelf; and this new Friend was Mr. George Villiers, a Gentleman of a good Houſe, but a younger Brother, but of ſo delicate a compoſure of body, and withall of ſo excellent parts of mind, as if nature had framed him on purpoſe to be a Kings Favourite. And indeed never any man was partaker of the Royal influence like to him, made firſt a Knight and Gentleman of the Kings Bed-chamber, ſoon after made a Viſcount and Maſter of the Horſe; a while after created Earl of Buckingham, then Marqueſs of Buckingham, and made Lord Admiral: Laſtly, made Duke of Buckingham, the greateſt Title of Honour that a Subject is capable of, and yet this Title not greater than his Power: for all matters of Grace paſſed from the King by him, and to grace him the more, his Mother (who after his Fathers death, had married a younger Son of the Lord Comptons) was created Counteſs of Buckingham, his Siſter who had married a Gentleman of no extraordinary Family, had her Husband made Earl of Denbigh, his two Brothers were made, one of them Viſcount Purbeck, the other Earl of Angleſey; beſides many other of his Friends and Kindred highly advanced; For this Lord affected not an advancement that ſhould be onely perſonal, but rather be in common to all his Family; and was not of the diſpoſition of ſome, who like to great Oaks, love to keep all that are near them underwood; though it be in truth both againſt Nature and Policy to ſtand alone, when they would be leſſe ſubject to the violence of Winds, if more ſtood together. And though never any man had juſter cauſe to be envyed than he, yet never any man was leſs envyed; becauſe though his Honours made him great, yet they made him not ſwell, but he retained the like temper of affable carriage after his advancement, as he had done before.

Mr. George Villiers comes into the Kings favour, and of the many honours heaped ſuddenly upon him.

But before all theſe Favours were heaped upon him, many other great paſſages had intervened; for firſt, after the death of Thomas Earl of Dorſet, Robert Earl of Salisbury had been Lord Treaſurer, and after him Thomas Earl of Suffolk. But this Lord, though of a moſt noble diſpoſition, yet as having had his training up another way, ſeemed leſſe ready in diſcharging the place, and whether for this, or for his Ladies taking too much upon her by his indulgence; the ſtaffe was ſoon after taken from him; after whom there came in ſuch a ſequence of Treaſurers as no Age before had ever ſeen; all wiſe and able men indeed; but yet in whom the Office ſeemed an imployment, rather to ennoble the Officer than to enrich the King. For firſt Sir Henry Montague was taken from the Kings Bench: and on the fourth of December, 1620. made Lord Treaſurer, and preſently upon it Earl of Manchester, and before the year went about put off. After whom Sir Lyonel Cranfield, from Maſter of the Wards was made Lord Treaſurer, and ſhortly after Earl of Middleſex: and then not onely put off, but fined to pay the King fifty thouſand pounds. After him, Sir James Lee from chief Juſtice of the Kings Bench was made Lord Treaſurer, and ſoon after Earl of Marlebrough; and then having made a good return of his Place, put it off himſelf. After him Sir Richard Weſton, from Chancellor of the Exchequer was made Lord Treaſurer, and Thomas Earl of Suffolk Lord Treaſurer hath the Staffe taken from him.

Four Lord Treaſurers made in four years.

ſoon

ſoon after Earl of Portland: ſo as within the compaſſe of little more than four years, four Treaſurers in a row were made four Earls; enough to make a preſcription for all Treaſurers hereafter, to claim a right of being made Earls, which yet I ſpeak not as derogating from thoſe worthy men, whoſe memories I reverence, but as obſerving, Fataque fortunaſque Virum; ſo rare as that there was never any Precedent of the like.

1612.

The Lord Sanquer of Scotland hanged, and why.

Alſo the five and twentieth of June, 1612. the Lord Sanquer, a Nobleman of Scotland, having in a private revenge ſuborned Robert Carlile to murther John Turner a Maſter of Fence, thought by his greatneſs to have born it out; but the King reſpecting nothing ſo much as Juſtice, would not ſuffer Nobility to be a ſhelter for villany, but according to the Law, on the nine and twentieth of June, the ſaid Lord Sanquer having been arraigned and condemned by the name of Robert Creighton Eſquire; was before Weſtminſter Hall gate executed, where he dyed very penitent.

A Lottery granted for the Plantation of Virginia.

About this time, the King in ſpecial favour for the preſent Plantation of Engliſh Colonies in Virginia granted a Lottery to be held at the Weſt end of Pauls; whereof one Thomas Sharplys a Taylor of London had the chief Prize, which was four thouſand Crowns in fair Plate.

At this time alſo the Corps of Mary late Queen of Scotland, the Kings Mother, was tranſlated from Peterborough, to St. Peters Church in Weſtminſter, and from thence was carried to the Chappel-Royal there; where it was interred in a Royal Tomb, which the King had erected for her.

Sir Robert Sherley comes into England Embaſſadour from the King of Perſia.

About this time alſo Sir Robert Sherley, third Son of Sir Thomas Sherley of Suſſex Knight, who ſixteen years paſt had betaken himſelf to travell, and had ſerved divers Chriſtian Princes for the ſpace of five years; but chiefly Rodolphus the Roman Emperour; who for his Service, made him an Earl of the Empire: he afterward went into Perſia, and ſerved the Perſian ten years, who made him General of the Artillery; and held him in ſo great account, that he gave him the Lady Tereſia in marriage, whoſe Siſter was one of the Queens of Perſia, after which the Perſian imployed him to ſundry Princes of Europe; and ſent him in ſpecial Embaſſage into England to King James, to whom he delivered his Letters, and ſhewed his Commiſſion; all which ſignified the Perſians great love and affection to his Majeſty: with frank offer of free Commerce to all his Highneſſe Subjects through all the Perſians Dominions: After a years ſtay here, in which time his Lady lay in of a Son, to whom the Queen was God-mother, and Prince Henry God-father; he left the childe here in England, and then with his Lady departed into Perſia.

An. Reg. 10. Frederick Prince Palatine of the Rhyne comes into England.

It was now the year 1612, and the tenth of King James his Reign, when the Illuſtrious Prince Frederick Count Palatine of the Rhyne; with whom a Treaty of marriage had been before, with the Lady Elizabeth: on the ſixteenth of October arrived at Graveſend; to whom the Duke of Lenox and divers other Lords were ſent by the King, who conducted him to White-hall, and from thence into the great Banquetting houſe, where the King, the Queen, Prince Henry, and the Lady Elizabeth entertained him in all kind manner, and after by Barge conducted him to Eſſex Houſe, appointed for his lodging. It was many years ſince any Kings Daughter had been married in England; which now happening, and to ſo Illuſtrious a Prince, was juſt cauſe of Triumph and rejoycing; but ſee the miſery of Humane Affairs; joy can no ſooner be ſetting forth, but ſorrow will be ſure to follow her at the heels, as now indeed it happened: for on the nine and twentieth of October, the Prince Palatine, with all the great Lords of the Kingdom, in moſt jovial manner dining at Guild-hall: Prince Henry who was alſo invited and expected, could not come being newly fallen exceeding ſick of a popular malignant Feaver, which reigned that year in moſt parts of this Land: whereof on the ſixth of November, between ſeven and eight a Clock at night, at his Court of St. James's he dyed: But he being infinitely beloved of the people, and one that had given great hope of proving an Heroick Prince, it cauſed ſuſpicion in many mens heads, that death was not without violence offered to Nature; ſome ſaid, by bunches of Grapes given him to eat: ſome by Gloves of a poyſoned perfume, given him for a Preſent: but theſe were but idle rumours and conceits: It ſeems the Divine Providence had ordained it ſhould be ſaid of him; Hunc tantum terris oſtendent Fata, nec ultra eſſe ſinent: whoſe death would have given a great blow to the happineſs of this Kingdom, if there had not been another Prince left, of a milder Spirit perhaps, but ſo accompliſhed with all excellent endowments, that there could be no great want of Prince Henry, as long as there was left Prince Charles. The Corps of Prince Henry, who dyed at the age of eighteen years, eight moneths, and ſeventeen dayes, was drawn in a Chariot to the Abbey Church at Weſtminſter, and there interred in the Chappel Royal, on the ſeventh of December following.

Prince Henry falls ſick and dies.

This Accident ſomething appalled the general joy, but yet Triumphs went on. Upon Saint Thomas day, the Palſgrave and Grave Maurice were Elected Knights of the Garter; and the ſeven and twentieth of December, the Palſgrave was betroathed to the Lady Elizabeth. On Sunday the ſeventh of February, the Palſgrave in perſon was enſtalled Knight of the Garter at Windſor, and at the ſame time was Grave Maurice enſtalled by his Deputy, Count Lodowick of Naſſaw. On the fourteenth of February, being Shrove-Sunday, and Saint Valentines day, this happy marriage of the Palſgrave with the Lady Elizabeth was ſolemnized in the Chappel at White-hall: The Bride was led to Church by two Batchellors, her Brother Prince Charles, and the Earl of Northampton Lord Privy Seal: ſhe was attired all in white, having a rich Crown of Gold upon her head, her hair hanging down at length, curiouſly beſet with Pearls and precious Stones, her Train ſupported by twelve young Ladies in white Garments: The King gave her in marriage, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury married them, the Biſhop of Bathe and Wells preached the Bridal Sermon: which ended, the Bride was led home by two married men, the Duke of Lenox, and the Earl of Nottingham Lord Admiral. This marriage was ſolemnized the firſt night with a ſtately Maſque of Lords and Ladies: the ſecond night with a magnificent Maſque of the

Gentlemen

Gentlemen of the Middle-Temple, and Lincolns-Inne: The third night with a ſumptuous Maſque of the Gentlemen of the Inner-Temple, and Grayes-Inne, provided indeed then, but was not performed till Saturday night following, by reaſon the concourſe of people was ſo great, it would have hindred the Show. After this the Lord Mayor and Aldermen gave the Bride a Chain of Oriental Pearl, valued at two thouſand pounds: now when all things had been done for honouring their Marriage, which either love and obſervance could deviſe, or art and magnificence could perform; On the tenth of April the Bridegroom with his Bride took leave of the King and the Queen at Rocheſter, (who had by Barge conducted them thither) and there taking Ship on the nine and twentieth of April they arrived at Fluſhing; from whence the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Arundel, the Viſcount Liſle, and the Lord Harington waited upon them to their chief City of Heydelburgh, in all places as they paſſed, being received with all ſtate and magnificence: but then on the fourteenth of June, the Engliſh Lords returning home: the Lord Harington dyed by the way at Wormes, whoſe Corps was brought over, and buried in England. And here it will not be amiſs, to ſhew of what extent and largeneſſe the Palſgrave's Country is, becauſe of the iniquity of ſome that ſeek to diſgrace it. It is in length about two hundred Engliſh miles, taking the lower and upper Country. In the lower he hath ſix and twenty walled Towns, beſides an infinite number of fair Villages, and two and twenty houſes of reſidence. In the upper, not ſo many walled Towns, and Houſes, but thoſe that are generally fairer than in the lower, eſpecially Amberg and New-market.

They take their leave, and depart.

The extent and largeneſs of the Palſgraves Country.

But it is now time to look home; in the year 1609, the King having care for the quietneſſe of Ireland, had granted to the City of London the preſent poſſeſſion and Plantation in the Province of Ulſter: whereupon, afterward in the year 1612, they ſent thither about three hundred perſons, of all ſorts of handy-crafts men, chiefly to inhabit the two Cities of London-Derry and Colerain: where they ordained Alderman Cockain for the firſt Governour. And for their advancing of this, or the like Plantation in Ireland, King James about this time began a new Order of Knights, which are called Baronets, becauſe they take place next to Barons younger Sons; and he appointed certain Laws, to make them capable that ſhould be admitted. Firſt, that they ſhould maintain the number of thirty foot Souldiers in Ireland, for three years, after the rate of eight pence a day, and to pay the wages of one whole year, upon the paſſing of their Patent: Then that they ſhould be Gentlemen of Blood of three Deſcents; and laſtly, ſhould have land of Inheritance, in poſſeſſion or immediate Reverſion, to the value of a thouſand pounds per annum: And to keep the Order from ſwarming, he ſtinted it within the number of onely 200, and as the iſſue ſhould fail the Order to ceaſe. But he that will look how well the end of the Inſtitution, and the Laws of it have been obſerved, ſhall perhaps find it to be here, as it was in the Order of St. Michael in France, into which at firſt there were none admitted, but Princes and eminent Perſons: but afterward, all ſorts of men, without any difference, were admitted, that it came almoſt to be doubted, whether the Dignity of the Order did more grace the perſons, or the meanneſſe of the perſons diſgrace the Order: and indeed, when the Laws of an Inſtitution are not in ſome meaſure obſerved, it ſeems to make a kind of nullity in the collation.

The order of Baronets erected: and why.

About this time, on Sunday the 24th. of October, an exemplar penance was impoſed upon Sir Pecksall Brockas Knight, which was to ſtand at Pauls Croſs in a white ſheet, holding a ſtick in his hand, having been formerly convicted before the high Commiſſioners, for many notorious Adulteries with divers Women.

Sir Pecksall Brockas ſtands in a white ſheet at Pauls, and why.

This year 1614, in the moneth of July, Chriſtianus King of Denmark, (out of his love to his Siſter and King James) came the ſecond time into England; but as being now ſecure of himſelf, privately, and with a ſmall company, ſo as he came to the Queen at Somerſet houſe unexpected, and before any knowledge was had of his coming; But King James being then in progreſſe in Bedfordſhire, and hearing of it, came preſently back, and after he had entertained him here with Hunting, Hawking, running at Ring, Bear-baiting, Plays, Fire-works, and Fencing, on the firſt of Auguſt Prince Charles brought him aboard his Ship, who then took his leave, and returned home.

In October, this year was a call of Serjeants at Law, being 11 in number, namely, George Wilde, William Towes, Richard Bawtry, Henry Finch, Thomas Chamberland, Francis Moore, Thomas Attow, John Moore, Francis Harvey, Charles Chibburn, and Thomas Richardſon; and in Trinity Term before there had two other been called, namely, Sir Randall Crew of Lincolns Inne, and Sir Robert Hitchan of Grayes Inne, Knights.

A call of Serjeants at Law.

About this time an Embaſſador came from the young Emperor of Ruſſia to King James, deſiring his continual love and amity, and to be a means of making attonement between him and the King of Swethland, and withall preſented him with a rich Preſent of Furs: which was no ſmall honour to the King of Great Britain to have ſo great a Potentate as the Emperour of Ruſſia ſollicite him to be his mediator.

Though King James out of a natural goodneſſe was addicted to peace, yet out of providence he neglected not to be prepared for War, and thereupon in the year 1610, had granted priviledges to a Society called of the Military Garden; and this year 1614, cauſed a Muſter of men to be preſented before him; which was performed to his great liking, and to the great commendation of the City.

The Military Garden firſt erected.

About this time a memorable Act was performed by Mr. Hugh Middleton, Citizen and Gold-Smith of London, and born in Denbighſhire, who having an Act of Parliament for his Warrant, with infinite coſt and indefatigable labour, brought Water to the City of London, from the two great Springs of Chadwell and Amwell in Hertfordſhire, having cut a Channel from thence to a place near Iſlington, whither he conveyed it to a large Pond, and from thence in Pipes of young Elms to all places of the City, for as the Poet ſaith:

Water brought to London from Chadwell in Hertfordſhire, by Sir Hugh Middleton.

Nothing is ſo commodious for the life of man, as water.

Moore-Fields made into Walks.

Another memorable act was about this time done on the North ſide of London, called Moorfields, which being before environed with deep ſtinking ditches and noyſome common ſhoars, was now, not only made fair and ſweet, but ſo levelled into walks and ſet with trees, that it is the pleaſanteſt place of all the City.

1615.

Smithfield firſt paved all over.

The next year being 1615, another memorable act for the benefit and beauty of the City of London, was performed; for Smithfield, which was before a rude dirty place, was now paved all over, and ſtrong rails ſequeſtring the middle part of it, were ſet up to make it a fair walking place, and fit for Market or any other uſe.

The Lady Arbella ſecretly marries Mr. William Seymour.

The Lady Arbella a near Kinſwoman of the Kings, had ſometime before, without the Kings privity, ſecretly married Maſter William Seymour, younger Son of the Earl of Hertford, now Earl of Hertford himſelf; for which they were both committed to the Tower: and now this year on the ſeven and twentieth day of September ſhe ended her life there, and was buried in the Chappel Royal at Weſtminſter.

She dyes in the Tower.

This year alſo in July were enſtalled Knights of the Garter, Francis Earl of Rutland, Sir George Villers Maſter of the Horſe, and Sir Robert Sidney, Viſcount Liſle; and in another kinde of Honour the Earl of Arundel, the Lord Carews and Doctor Andrews Biſhop of Ely, were ſworn Privy Counſellours.

Prince Charles is created Prince of Wales.

Wales by the death of Prince Henry, had been a good while without a Prince, and now to ſupply that place, Prince Charles is created Prince of Wales: In joy whereof, the Town of Ludlow in Shropſhire, and the City of London, performed great Triumphs: and the more to honour his Creation, there were made five and twenty Knights of the Bath; all of them Lords or Barons ſons: and yet more to honour it, there were forty ſelected Gentlemen of the Innes of Court, that performed ſolemn Juſts at Barryers, with great magnificence.

Sir Edw. Coke, the Lord Egerton, and Sir Henry Telverton, put from their places.

This year was a Cenſure of divers great Delinquents, for firſt Sir Edward Coke, was upon diſpleaſure diſcharged from being Lord Chief Juſtice of the Kings Bench; and two days after his diſcharge, Sir Henry Montague the Kings Serjeant at Law, was placed in his room: Next to him the Lord Egerton, whether diſabled by ſickneſſe or age, to exerciſe the place, or upon diſpleaſure alſo, had the Seal taken from him, which was delivered to Sir Francis Bacon the King's Atturney; he made firſt Lord Keeper; and the Lord Egerton dying ſoon after, Lord Chancellor. Not long after him Sir Henry Yelverton the Kings Attorney, for adding new priviledges to the Londoners Charter, without the Kings privity, was in diſpleaſure put from his place; and in his room was placed Sir Thomas Coventry, the Sollicitor. But a while after, Sir Henry Yelverton, was made a puiſny Judge of the Common Pleas; having indeed the reputation of an excellent Lawyer.

And yet this work of Cenſuring ſtayed not here, for much about this time Thomas Earl of Suffolk Lord Treaſurer of England, had the ſtaffe of his Office taken from him; which was ſoon after delivered to Sir Henry Mountague, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Kings Bench. If Sir John Bennet, Judge of the Perogative Court, had made a little more haſte, he might have made one in this numbet of Delinquents: but he came ſhort three or four years, and then being charged by his own ſervant with bribery, he was put from his place, and cenſured in the Star-Chamber to pay twenty thouſand pounds: and in his room was placed William Byrde a man of more integrity.

Sir John Benet Judge of the Prerogative Court put from his place, and why.

The King makes a Journey into Scotland: where he ſtayes ſix moneths.

Though King James upon the death of Queen Elizabeth, came to reſide in England, yet he forgot not that Scotland was his native Countrey; and therefore after he had ſpent ſome years in England, to acquaint himſelf with the State of the Kingdom, in March this year one thouſand ſix hundred and ſixteenth, he made a Journey into Scotland: for though he had left very able men to ſit at the Helm there in his abſence, yet he knew that it is the Maſters Eye that makes the Horſe fat: ſo it is the Princes preſence ſometimes that keeps out many diſtempers in a State, that would otherwiſe creep in; and now, when in his ſtaying ſix Moneths there, he had ſeen all things well ſetled both in the Eccleſiaſtical State, and in the Temporal, and made it appear that he reſided not in England out of any neglect of Scotland; but to the end he might be in the place of moſt conveniency to both Kingdoms: on the fifteenth of September he returned to London, not more to the grief of the Scots to leave him, than to the joy of the Engliſh to receive him; ſo much was King James as a juſt and wiſe Prince, beloved of both the Nations.

The 15th of February 1617, in the Fifteenth year of this King, Francis Aſhley of the Middle Temple London Eſquire, where he had been Reader the year before, was by a Writ called to be Serjeant at Law, ſolus Serviens ad legem electus, and the fifth of July following was Knighted, and about that time was Steward of the Marſhalſey of the Kings houſe, and by King Charles, the fifth of May, in the firſt year of his Reign was by letters Patents made one of the Kings Serjeants at Law, and ſo continued unto his death, which happened by the will of God the 28th of November, 1635, at Serjeants Inne in Fleetſtreet: and was Recorder of Dorcheſter in Dorſetſhire, where together with his Lady in the great Church he lies Involted: leaving Dorothy his only Daughter and heir (by the Lady Anne his wife, the eldeſt Daughter and Coheir of Bernard Samrayes of Dorſetſhire Eſquire) married unto the Honourable Denzell Holles Eſquire, whoſe only iſſue is Francis Holles of Winterborn St. Martin in the County of Dorſet Eſquire.

Sir Walter Rawleigh is ſet at liberty to fetch Gold from Guyana.

Now comes to be related a matter of ſpeciall obſervation; Sir Walter Rawleigh had lived a condemned man many years in the Tower, and now his Deſtiny brought him to his end by liberty, which it could not do by impriſonment; for out of a longing for liberty, he propounded a project to the King, upon which (as he was a well ſpoken man, and of a great capacity) he ſet ſuch colours of probability; eſpecially guilding it over with the Gold he would fetch from a Mine in Guyana; and that without any wrong at all to the King of Spain (if he might be allowed to go the Journey) that the King, if he gave not credit that he could perform it, at leaſt gave way that he ſhould undertake it: and thereupon with divers Ships, accompanied with many Knights and Gentlemen of Quality, he ſet forward on the Voyage; but when after long ſearch or ſhew of ſearch, no ſuch place of Treaſure, or no ſuch Treaſure could be found, whether it were, that he thought it a ſhame, to return home with doing nothing: or that his malus Genius thruſt him upon the Deſign, he fell upon Saint Thome, a Town belonging to the King of Spain: ſacked it, pillaged it, and burnt it: and here was the firſt part of his Tragical Voyage acted, in the death of his eldeſt Son: the laſt part was acted in his own death at his return: For Gundamore the Spaniſh Lieger, did ſo aggravate this fact of his to the King, againſt him, that it ſeemed nothing would give ſatisfaction but Rawleigh's head, without which he doubted there would follow a breach of the League between the two Nations. Rawleigh excuſed it, by ſaying that he was urged to it by the Spaniards firſt aſſaulting of him; and beſides, that he could not come at the Myne, without winning this Town: but Gundamore was too ſtrong an Adverſary for him; and the King preferring the publique Peace, before the life of one man, already condemned, gave way to have the Sentence of his former Condemnation executed upon him; and thereupon, brought to the Kings-Bench Bar, he was not newly Arraigned or Indicted, as being already Mortuus in Lege, but only hath the former Sentence averred againſt him, and ſo carried to the Gate-houſe, and from thence the next morning to the Parliament Yard: a Scaffold was there erected, upon which after fourteen years reprival, his head was cut off: at which time, ſuch abundance of blood iſſued from his veins, that ſhewed he had ſtock of Nature enough left to have continued him many years in life, though now above threeſcore years old, if it had not been taken away by the hand of Violence.

He ſacks and pillageth the Town of Saint Thome.

This fact Gundamore aggravateth againſt him.

For which he is beheaded.

And this was the end of the great Sir Walter Rawleigh: great ſometimes in the favour of Queen Elizabeth, and next to Drake the great ſcourge and hate of the Spaniard, who had many things to be commended in his life; but none more, than his conſtancy at his death, which he took with ſo undanted a reſolution, that one might perceive he had a certain expectation of a better life after it: ſo far he was from holding thoſe Atheiſtical opinions; an aſperſion whereof ſome traducing perſons had caſt upon him.

The King makes a Progreſs to Cambridge; where he ſtayes three dayes.

About this time King James made a progreſſe to the Univerſity of Cambridge, where delighted with the Diſputations and other Scholaſtical exerciſes, he ſtayed three whole days, and could have been content to have ſtayed as many years: for next being a King, he was made to be a Scholar.

An. Reg. 17. Queen Anne dyes.

In the year 1619, being the ſeventeenth year of King James his reign, that knot of love which above twenty years had been tyed, between him and his Queen, was by death diſſolved; for on Tueſday this year the ſecond of March, Queen Anne dyed at Hampton Court, whoſe Corps was brought to Denmark houſe, and from thence conveyed to Weſtminſter: where in the Royal Chappel with great ſolemnity it was interred: a Princeſſe very memorable for her vertue, and not a little for her Fortune, who beſides being a Queen, was ſo happy as to be Mother of ſuch admired children, as ſhe brought into the World. But the diſſolving of this knot caſt the King into an extream ſickneſſe; and after ſome recovery, into a Relapſe: from which notwithſtanding, it pleaſed God to deliver him, as having yet ſome great work to do.

This year on Munday the third of May, one Mr. Williams a Barriſter of the Middle Temple, was arraigned at the Kings Bench, for liblelling, and for writing Books againſt the King: and upon Wedneſday following was hanged and quartred at Charing Croſſe.

But an action of another nature was performed this year, the ſeventeenth of July, not unworthy the relating, which was this; that one Bernard Calvert of Andover, rode from St. Georges Church in Southwark to Dover, from thence paſſed by Barge to Callice in France, and from thence returned back to Saint Georges Church the ſame day, ſetting out about three a clock in the morning, and returned about eight a clock in the Evening, freſh and luſty.

Bernard Calvert his ſpeedy journey from Southwark to Calice, and back again in one day.

In the year 1621, a Parliament was holden at Weſtminſter; wherein two great examples of Juſtice were ſhewed; which for future terrour are not unfit to be here related: One upon Sir Gyles Montpeſſon, a Gentleman otherwiſe of good parts; but for practiſing ſundry abuſes in erecting and ſetting up new Innes and Alehouſes, and exacting great ſums of money of people, by pretence of Letters Patents granted to him for that purpoſe, was ſentenced to be degraded, and diſabled to bear any office in the Common-wealth, though he avoided the execution by flying the land; but upon Sir Francis Michell, a Juſtice of Peace of Middleſex, and one of his chief Agents, the ſentence of Degradation was executed, and he made to ride with his face to the Horſe tail through the City of London. The other example was of Sir Francis Bacon, Viſcount St. Albans, Lord Chancellor of England, who for bribery was put from his place, and committed to the Tower: but after ſome few days enlarged, in whoſe place Doctor Williams Dean of Weſtminſter was made Lord Keeper.

Sir Gyles Montpeſſon is ſentenced to be degraded, and why.

Sir Francis Michell is degraded, and in what manner.

Sir Francis Bacon Lord Chancellor Put from his Place by Bribery.

The Count Palatine being now ſtrengthened with the allyance of the King of Great Britain, was thought a fit man to be King of Bohemia, and accordingly was elected by the States of that Kingdom; but he was no ſooner inveſted in the Crown, but the Emperor with great Forces aſſaulted him in Prague, and not only drove him with his wife and children from thence; but took from him alſo his own Patrymony the Palatinate, ſo as though now a King, he was fain to fly to the States of the Low-Countries for a place of reſidence. King James though he had never given his conſent to the Palſgraves taking upon him that Kingdom, as fore-ſeeing in his great judgement what the event would be: yet in this diſtreſſe he could not forbear to take care of his Daughter, and thereupon ſent Sir Richard Weſton, the ſame that was after Lord Treaſurer, in Embaſſage to the Emperor, to ſollicite the reſtoring of the Palatinate to the Palſegrave; but he returning without ſucceſſe, the King had then conference with Count

Gondomar

The Palſgrave is choſen King of Bohemia, but is ſoon driven out, and his Palatinate ſeized on.

The King hath Conference with Gundomar how the Palatinate might be restored.

Gundomar adviseth by making a marriage between the Prince of Wales and the Infant of Spain.

Gundomar the King of Spains Leiger in England, what course might be taken to procure the restoring it: who made him answer, There could be no better course than to make a marriage between his Son the Prince of Wales, & the Infant of Spain, which he said would easily be effected, if the Prince might have leave to make a Journey into Spain. King James though he considered the inveterate grudges between Spain and England, and how dangerous it might be to put the heir of the Kingdom into the Spaniards hands, yet grounding himself upon saying, Fidelem si putaveris, facies: and drawn on by the insiuuating speeches of Count Gundomar, not perhaps without some inclination in the Marquesse of Buckingham, was contented at last the Prince should go. And so Prince Charles sending his ships about, and taking along with him only the Marquesse of Buckingham (who in the time of his being in Spain was created Duke of Buckingham) Endimion Porter, and Mr. Francis Cottington: (two that were well acquainted with the language and affairs of Spain) he took his journey by the way of France, went to Paris, and secretly in disguise to the Court there, where he had the sight of that Lady, that might well have stayed him from going further, but yet on he went.

Hereupon the Prince is sent into Spain, and how accompanied, Gundomar gets much money of Ladies, by perswading them of the certainty of the Match.

In the mean time Gundomar a cunning man, and one that besides his Master's had ends of his own, and could play his game no lesse for his own profit than his Masters Honour, as he had perswaded the King of the facility of the Match with Spain, so he perswaded a certainty of it, especially amongst Catholick Ladies, by which means he brought no small store of Grist to his own Mill, receiving from one Lady three hundred pounds to be made Groom of the Stool, when the Spanish Princesse should come; of another a good round sum to be Mother of the Maids, and of divers other the like for other places.

The Princes entertainment in Spain.

What hindred the proceeding of the Match.

But the Prince being arrived in Spain, was received indeed with all the demonstrations of love and kindnesse that could be devised, so as the charge of his entertainment was said to stand the King of Spain in nine and forty thousand Duckats: but yet his acquaintance with the Lady was much restrained, for in all the time of his staying in Spain, (which was no lesse than eight moneths, being from February to October) he saw her but very seldom, and that at good distances, never spake with her but twice, and that before company, besides that his speeches were limited, how much and what he should say, far from any means of tying the Knot between them which was Pretended. What the cause should be was much in obscurity; some thought that a difference between the Duke of Buckingham, and the Count Olivares, the King of Spain's great Favorite, was a great hindrance of the proceeding, but other, and more likely, that the Spaniard indeed never really intended the Match at all, but had drawn the Prince into Spain for other ends: but what those ends were, was no lesse uncertain; one thought it was done to hold the prince in a Treaty of marriage with a Daughter of Spain, till the Daughters of France should be bestowed, thereby to keep him from that allyance: but others and more likely, that the King of Spain entertained this Treaty with the King of great Britain, meaning to spin it out till he had compassed some designs in the Low-Countries, and the Palatinate, at least to make King James lesse vigilant for those parts.

The King sends for the Prince to return home.

But when much time had been spent in protracting, upon pretence of difficulties in obtaining the Popes dispensation, King James partly wearied with delay, but chiefly angry with delusion, sent to the Prince, with all speed to return into England; which the Prince presently signified to the King of Spain, and had his leave to depart; but upon promise to continue the Treaty of the marriage still. Though it was said, the Prince was gone but a few days on his journey, when a Post was sent to have stayed him, if he had been overtaken. But whether it was so or no, it was Gods Providence that he came safely to his ships, and in them safely into England; arriving at Portsmouth, where he was beheld of the people, with no lesse gladnesse, than the Sun after a long Eclipse: and now his safe returning did both justifie King James his judgement in suffering him to go, and the King of Spains justice, in sufferiug him to come back: and was cause, that the people began to have a better opinion of the Spanish faith, than they had before. But now it presently breaks out, that this match with Spain could never take effect: for King James having received Declarations of the Articles touching the marriage, found many very strict and large for exercise of the Catholick Religion: but none at all for restitution of the Palatinate; which made him so much discontented, that he presently brake off all Treaty of the marriage, and signified as much, not only to the King of Spain, but to divers other Princes of Christendom: Upon which breach two great Points, were presently had in consultation: One for prepating Forces, for recovering the Palatinate by way of Arms, which could not be done by a way of friendship: and for this purpose, a Councel of war was called, and a proposition resolved on both of men and money, for undertaking the enterprise: as also a great contribution by way of benevolence was collected; towards which, the compiler of this work, gave himself fifty pounds: as many other far greater sums, though the collection went not through the whole Lend; by reason there was hope given of a peaceable reconcilement: so as many that were not over-hasty in their payment escaped without contributing at all. The other point was for providing a fit Wife for the Prince, in some other place, It was said the States of Holland offered a very great portion in marriage to the Prince, if he would match with some Lady of that Countrey, but matches are made in Heaven, and there was a young Lady of France destined to his bed: and for this purpose, the Earl of Carlile, and the Earl of Holland were sent into France, to treat of a marriage with the younger Daughter of the great Henry the fourth, King of France deceased, and Sister to the present King Lewis; which marriage afterward took effect, but was not accomplished in King James his dayes; who dyed soon after the agreement.

The King breaks off all Treaty of the Match, and why.

A Consultation had to recover the Palatinate by Arms.

A Treaty of Marriage with a younger Daughter of the King of France, which afterwards took effect.

It was now the year 1623, in which in Michaelmas Term, there was a Call of fifteen Serjeants at Law, who kept their Feast in the Middle Temple Hall.

A Call of fifteen Serjeants at Law.

Two things in this Kings days grew to loſe their Luſtre. One the exerciſe of Tilting; which in Queen Elizabeths time, was ſo much uſed, that no year paſſed without a ſpeciall ſolemnity in that kinde. The other, the Band of Gentlemen Penſioners and Yeomen of the Guard: which in her time conſiſted of the choyceſt perſons both for ſtature and other good parts throughout the Realm; and was ſo great a grace to her Court, that no Prince of Chriſtendom could ſhew the like: but King James was ſo intentive to Realties, that he little regarded ſhews: and thereby both theſe in his time came utterly to be neglected: No ſolemnity of Arms but very rare, no regard had what perſons were admitted into the other places.

We may here obſerve, how the Surname of the Kings of England, hath at ſundry times been changed. From William the Conqueror, to King Henry the ſecond, what ſurname they had or whether they had any or no, is moſt uncertain: but then King Henry the ſecond brought in the French ſurname of Plantagenet: which continued in all the ſucceeding Kings, till King Henry the ſeventh; and he brought in the Welſh ſurname of Tenther, which continued the ſurname of all the ſucceeding Princes; till King James the ſixth of Scotland: and he brought in the Scottiſh ſurname of Steward: in which it is likely to continue, (and God grant it may do ſo) to the worlds end.

Some paſſages of ſmall moment I confeſſe are omitted by me in this Reign of King James; as whereof, for want of knowing the particulars, I dare not venture upon making the Relation: which if ſome men would have done, the Truth of our Chronicles ſhould not have been mingled with ſo many falſities.

Of his Taxations.

The Cuſtoms of Merchandiſe raiſed.

IN his ſecond year, in the moneth of September, he ſent Privy Seals to the wealthieſt Citizens of London, for moneys to be borrowed of them: and in October following, the Cuſtoms of Merchandiſes, both outward and inward, were raiſed, and then were letten out to Farm. In a Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, the third year of his Reign, there were given him three entire Subſidies, and ſix Fifteens by the Temporality, and by the Clergy four entire Subſidies, This year alſo Henry Lord Mordant, convicted in the Star-chamber, for divers miſpriſions, was fined to pay ten thouſand Marks, and Edward Lord Sturton for the like offence to pay thirty thouſand Pounds, and ſome years after Sir John Bennet, Judge of the Prerogative Court was fined to pay twenty thouſand Pounds. In his fourth year he repayed threeſcore thouſand pounds to the Citizens of London, which the Londoners lent to Queen Elizabeth, three years before her death; an act by which he got more love, than he payed money. In his ſeventh year he had aid throughout England, for making his eldeſt Son Prince Henry Knight: which though they levyed with great moderation, brought him in great ſums of money. In his eighteenth year, in a Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, the Temporality gave him two Subſidies, and the Clergy three: and in another Parliament, in the year 1623, the Temporality gave him three Subſidies, and three Fifteens; the Clergy four Subſidies. Beſides theſe Subſidies he ſent abroad many Great Privy Seals, and had alſo a Benevolence throughout the Realm: not without ſome grudging, but without any juſt cauſe; for it ſhould have been remembred, that he took it not of covetouſneſſe to gather wealth, but out of very neceſſity to ſupply wants: For by his imploying many Ambaſſadors in Ordinary, many Extraordinary, by his neceſſary bounty to his followers, and by his charge of keeping ſeverall Courts; none of all which he could avoid: his Expences were far greater than any of his Predeceſſors had ever been.

Privy Seals ſent out, and alſo a Benevolence.

The cauſe of the Kings great Expences.

Of his Lawes and Ordinances.

THE day of his removing from Charter-Houſe, at his firſt coming into England, he cauſed Proclamation to be made, That all Monopolies and Protections ſhould ceaſe; as likewiſe all oppreſſions done by Salt-Peter-men, by Purveyors, and Carters. On the 26th of May following he ſet forth a Proclamation, reſtraining all perſons under great penalties from killing of Deer, or any kind of Fowl uſed for Hawking. The ſeventh of May, Proclamation was made againſt Robberies on the Borders: and on the nineteenth of May, another for uniting the people inhabiting about the Borders of England and Scotland, to live in love and quietneſs. In this firſt year, in a Parliament then holden, it was Enacted, That neither Archbiſhop, nor Biſhop ſhould Alienate, Grant, or Demiſe, or in any ſort convey, no not to the King himſelf, any of the Honors, Lands, Tenements, or Hereditaments, being parcell of the poſſeſſion of his Archbiſhop, or Biſhoprick: and if any were, it ſhould be utterly void, and of no effect, notwithſtanding any former Law, Act, or Ordinance to the contrary. He then alſo cauſed himſelf by Proclamation to be enſtiled King of Great Britain, that the diviſion of England and Scotland might be no more remembred. In his ſecond year, by his Letters Patents he incorporated the Felt-makers of London, by the name of Maſters, Wardens, and Commonalty of the Art or Myſtery of the Felt-makers, granting them divers Priviledges and Liberties, for their good Government of their Corporation. In November, of his ſecond year, were Proclaimed in London certain new pieces of Coyn, both of gold and ſilver, with the true valuation and weights of them, according to the Mint of both Nations, Engliſh and Scottiſh. In a Parliament holden the third year of his Reign, the Oath of Allegiance was deviſed and ordained, and ſoon after miniſtred to all ſorts of people.

No Biſhop to alienate any Lands, not to the King himſelf.

He is enſtyled King of Great Britain.

The Felt-makers made a Corporation.

The Oath of Allegiance firſt deviſed and ordained.

This year alſo he made Proclamation to redreſſe the miſ-imployment of Lands, or goods given to Charitable uſes. Alſo this year, he ſet forth a Proclamation for bearing of Flags in Ships to be in this manner, that from thenceforth all the Subjects of Great Britain ſhould bear in their main-top, the Red Croſſe commonly called Saint Georges Croſſe, and the White Croſſe, commonly called St. Andrews Croſs, joyned together, and the Subjects of South Britain ſhould carry in their Fore-top onely the Red Croſſe as they were wont; wont; and the Subjects of North Britain onely the White Crosse. In his fourth year on the tenth of June he set forth a Proclamation, commanding all Jesuits, Seminary Priests and Fryers to depart the Realm before the first of August following; and never to return upon pain of death, according to divers Statutes in that behalf provided. In his second year he had set forth a Proclamation against Inmates and increase of new buildings, which being little regarded, now in his fourth year he renewed the said Proclamation, adding withall, That the Fore-fronts and Windowes of all new Buildings should be either of Brick or Stone; for disobeying whereof, many were called in the Star-Chamber, and there fined. In his fifth year, he gave order for planting of Mulberry Trees, and breeding of Silk-Worms, that England might be a Countrey as well of Silk as Cloth. In his eleventh year, he instituted the Order of the Baronets, which hath much degenerated since his institution, and thereby having been devised for the benefit of Ireland, hath caused but little contentment unto England. This year also the King himself in Person came to the Star-Chamber, where he had appointed the Mint-men to meet, and there, for the better keeping of Coyns of Gold within the Realm, he raised the prices of them; ordaining the piece called the Unity, which went before but for twenty shillings, to be current now for two and twenty, the double Crown and all other Pieces to encrease in the like proportion. In his fifteenth year, he granted to the Apothecaries of London to be a Corporation for themselves, and their successors for ever; and by Letters Patents made them a Body Politick, and Corporate. In his time by his appointment a strict decree passed in the Star-Chamber against Duels and single Combats, and a strict Law was made in Parliament against stabbing with a Dagger or Knife, making it to be wilful Murther.

Inmates forbidden, and new Buildings restrained.

The Fore-fronts to be made of Brick.

An Order for planting of Mulberry Trees for encrease of Silk-worms.

Coyns of Gold raised.

The Apothecaries made a Corporation.

Duels and single Combats restrained.

Affairs of the Church in his Time.

A Conference in matters of Religion is held before the King at Hampton-Court, and how the matter proceeded.

THE King as a Religious Prince, desiring nothing so much as to settle Peace in the Church, and hearing of some dissention of his Divines in point of Religion, in the very first year of his Reign, appointed a Conference to be holden before himself at Hampton-Court, to which were called divers Bishops, Deans, and Doctors of one side; and of the other four eminent Divines; namely Doctor Reynolds, Doctor Sparks, Mr. Knewstabs, and Mr. Chadderton: who all meeting before the King the 14th day of January: the King first signified the cause of his calling them together, and then told them he was there ready to hear what they could object or say against the present Government of the Church: whereupon Dr. Reynolds being their Fore-man, reduced all matters disliked, or questioned, into these four Heads.

1. That the Doctrine of the Church might be preserved in purity, according to Gods Word.

2. That good Pastors might be planted in all Churches to preach the same.

3. That the Church Government might be sincerely administred, according to the Word of God.

4. That the Book of Common Prayer might be fitted to more encrease of Piety.

Out of these Heads, he drew and moved divers Points: One, that Confirmation might not be by Bishops only, but that every Pastor in his Parish might Confirm: But this was thought to trench too much upon the Jurisdictions of Bishops, and to be a step to bring in a Presbyterian Government, which the King much misliked; and the Bishop of Winchester challenged Dr. Reynolds with all his Learning to shew, where ever he had read, that Confirmation was at all used in ancient times, by any other than by Bishops. Another motion of Dr. Reynolds was, That there might be a new Translation of the Bible, because the present Translations were corrupt, and not answerable to the truth of the Original; whereof he alledged divers Examples; particularly that in the 105. Psal. 28. v. where it is said, They were not Obedient, when in the Original it is, They were not Disobedient: To this it was agreed, That a new Translation should be made: and accordingly soon after was performed by the most Learned Divines of the Kingdom; and is that, which is now used. After many other Points moved by Dr. Reynolds, he came at last to subscription: Intreating it might not be exacted, as heretofore; which many good men refused for these reasons: First, because the Apocryphal Books are by the Common Prayer Book appointed to be read; albeit in some of them there are manifest errors, directly repugnant to the Scriptures. To this, the King himself answered, That as he would not wish all Canonical Books to be read in the Church, unless there were one to interpret; so he would wish no Apocryphal to be read, wherein was any error: but for the other which were clear and correspondent to the Scriptures, he would have them read; seeing there was good use of them, to make up the story of the Persecution of the Jews; but withall he would have the people be taught, they were not to teach a man, either to sacrifice to the dead, or to kill himself. The next scruple against subscription was, That in the Common Prayer-Book it is twice set down, Jesus said to his Disciples, when by the Original Text it is plain, He spake to the Pharisees. To which it was answered, That for any thing could be gathered by the place, he might speak as well to the one as to the other: But the King for more plainnesse sake, willed, That the word Disciples, should be omitted, and only the words, Jesus said, to be printed in a different letter, that it might appear to be no part of the Text.

Another scruple was, concerning the Crosse in Baptism, which Doctor Reynolds confessed to have ever been used since the Apostles time, at going abroad, or entring into the Church, or at their prayers and Benedictions; but doubted of the ancient use of it in Baptism: to which the Bishop of Winchester answered, that in Constantine's time it was used in Baptism, and the Dean of Westminster shewed out of Tertullian, Cyprian, Origen, and others, that in their time it was used in Immortali lavacro: which could be nothing but Baptism: and this the King judged to be antiquity enough to warrant the continuance of it still. At last Master Knewstabs, moved how far an Ordinance of the Church was to binde them, without impeachment of their Christian liberty; At which the King seemed much moved, and told him, him he would not argue that point with him, but answer therein as Kings are wont to speak in Parliament Le Roy's aviſera; and therefore I charge you (ſaid he) never ſpeak more to that point, how far you are bound to obey, when the Church hath once ordained it. Doctor Reynolds added; that the Croſſe ſhould be abandoned, becauſe in the time of Popery it had been ſuperſtitiouſly abuſed. To which his Majeſty anſwered, That his very reaſon was an inducement to him to have it retained ſtill: For in as much as it was abuſed (ſo you ſay) to ſuperſtition in time of Popery, it doth plainly imply, that it was well uſed before Popery.

Concerning the Crosse in Baptism.

Concerning the wearing of the Surplice.

The next thing objected, was the wearing of the Surplice: to which the King anſwered, That ſeeing it appeared out of Antiquity, that in the celebration of Divine Service, a different habit appertained to the Miniſtery, and principally of white Linnen; he ſaw no reaſon, but that in this Church as it had been for comelineſs and order ſake, it might be ſtill continued.

Laſt of all, Maſter Chadderton, and Maſter Knewſtabs requeſted, That in regard of ſome tender Conſciences, the Surplice and Croſs in Baptiſm might not be urged: To which the King himſelf anſwered, If after the Goſpels preaching five and forty years amongſt you, there be any yet in theſe points unſatisfied, I doubt it proceeds rather out of ſtubborneſſe of opinion, than out of tenderneſſe of conſcience; and therefore let them conform themſelves, or elſe they ſhall hear further of it.

Concerning the Ring in marriage, and Biſhops.

It was now obſerved, that in all their Objections, there was not a word ſpoken againſt Biſhops, nor againſt the Ring in Marriage; for Dr. Reynolds himſelf confeſſed that the Ring was a very meer ceremony; and the King affirmed he ſhould not think himſelf rightly married, if he had not been married with a Ring: And as for Biſhops, he declared himſelf to be verily perſwaded, they were Divinæ Ordinationis, and moſt neceſſary to Monarchy; and would often ſay, No Biſhop, no King. Many other points were handled, as about Predeſtination, Abſolution, and Remiſſion of ſins, Baptizing by women, about the words in Marriage, With my body I thee worſhip, the Oath Ex officio, the high Commiſſion and ſome other: in all which the King gave ſo good ſatisfaction, that they all joyntly promiſed to be quiet and obedient, now they knew it to be his mind to have it ſo: and the King was ſo admired for his excellent Reſolutions and Anſwers, that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſaid, undoubtedly his Majeſty ſpake by the ſpeciall aſſiſtance of Gods Spirit. After this Conference, the King in his ſecond year ſet forth a Proclamation, to confirm the Eccleſiaſticall Goverment, and the Book of Common Prayer, in the Form and eſtate as Queen Elizabeth left them.

The Book of Common Prayer confirmed by the King.

After this he ſent divers learned Divines into Scotland, to have a Conference with the Divines there; and if it might be, to reduce the two Kingdoms to an uniformity of Religion, as he brought them to an union of Poſſeſſion. And now entring into conſideration of this Title, of being Defender of the Faith: he conceived it might extend not only to his own Dominions, but in ſome ſort to Neighbouring Countries: if not in Authority, at leaſt in care: and hereupon hearing that the States of the Low-Countries were determined to entertaine one Vorſtius to be publick Profeſſor of Divinity in Leyden, and knowing him, though otherwiſe a learned man, yet tainted with many erroneous opinions, concerning the Eſſence and Subſtance of God, making him to be Quale & quantum, changing Eternity into Eviternity: teaching Eternity to conſiſt of a number of Ages, and denying God to be Purus actus, but to have in ſome ſort aliquid Diverſitatis, & Multiplicitatis in ſeipſo; etiam Principium cujuſdam mutabilitatis; He earneſtly ſolicited the States, both by his own Letters, and by his Leiger, Sir Ralph Winwood, by no means to admit the ſaid Vorſtius into that place; leſt his doctrine having once infected their Country, might ſoon after ſpread it ſelf into his Dominions. Which requeſt of his, after much ſoliciting, the States at length granted, and expelled Vorſtius from amongſt them.

The King ſolicites the States of the Low-Countries not to admit Vorſtius, and why.

At this time a Synod was aſſembled at Dort in Holland, conſiſting of learned Divines, ſent from the Count Palatine of the Rhyne, from Haſſia, from Switzerland, from the Church of Geneva, from Bern, Embden, Holland, Zealand, Utretcht, Frizeland and other Provinces: Some alſo ſent from England, as namely, George Biſhop of Landaffe, John Davenant Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Cambridge, Samuel Ward Maſter of Sidney Colledg in Cambridge, Thomas Good Doctor of Divinity, and Walter Belcanquell, a Scotiſh-man Batchelor of Divinity: Which Synod was Aſſembled to examine and determine the Doctrine of Arminius; firſt concerning Gods Predeſtination, Election, and Reprobation; then concerning Chriſts death and Mans redemption by it; then concerning mans corruption and converſion to God; then concerning the perſeverance of the Saints, In all which points the doctrine of Arminius was rejected, as alſo of Vorſtius, and the true Doctrine by a generall conſent, together with the Approbation of the Lords the States; which yet the Papiſts made ſo little reckoning of; that one of them in ſcorn, made Echo to cenſure it in this Diſtich:

A Synod held at Dort to examine the errors of Arminius, to which Synod many Engliſh Divines went.

But who knows not, that ill will never ſpeak well, and that nothing is ſo obvious in the mouth of an adverſary, as ſcandals and invectives;

In the year 1616, Mar. Antonius de Dominis, Archbiſhop of Spalato, in the Territory of Venice, came into England, leaving his Countrey (as he affirmed) for Religion; whereof he ſet forth in writing many reaſons, and being thereupon entertained by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was afterward made Dean of Windſor, and Maſter of the Savoy; in which time he preached publickly divers times before divers Lords of the Councel, printed in London the firſt four of his Ten Books, Intituled, Of the Common-wealth of the Church: wherein with great earneſtneſs he maintained the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Proteſtants: But after all this, whether all he had done was but diſſembling from the beginning, or whether out of remorſe of conſcience he repented him of that he had done: after five years ſtaying here, he retracted all he had ſaid or written before: which ſo incenſed King James, that he commanded him (within three dayes at his peril) to depart the Realm;

Antonius de Dominis Archbiſhop of Spalato comes into England, and ſets forth Books for the Proteſtant Religion.

After five years ſtay here he retracted all, and went to Rome, but dyed there in priſon.

Realm: who thereupon went to Rome, and there inveighed as bitterly against the Proteſtants, as He had done in England againſt the Papiſts; hoping at leaſt for Pardon, if not for Preferment: but not with ſtanding his Recantation, according to the law of the Inquiſition, having once Revolted, (though now Returned) he ſuffered the death of an Heretick, though not the ſhame; had the puniſhment of a Martyr, but not the honour; and was publickly burnt at Rome, yet not burnt alive, but dying in priſon and then buried, it is ſaid, his body was afterwards taken up and burned.

In the Kings tenth year, two obſtinate Arian Hereticks, Bartholomew Legat, and Edw. Wightman, were burnt for Hereſie, Legat in Smithfield, and Wightman at Lichfield.

John Traske for holding divers Judaical Opinions is cenſured, and after three years recants.

In his ſixteenth year, one John Trask a pretended Miniſter, was Cenſured in the Star-Chamber, for depraving the Eccleſiaſtical Government, and for holding divers Judaical Opinions; as, that it was not lawfull to do any thing forbidden in the old Law, nor to keep the Chriſtian Sabbath; for which he was ſet on the Pillory at Weſtminſter, and from thence whipt to the Fleet, and there to remain priſoner: but three years after he writ a Recantation of all his former Hereſies and Schiſmatical Opinions.

George Abbot Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by misfortune killing a man, is Cenſured.

In this Kings time, George Abbot Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being a hunting in a Park, and ſhooting at a Deer; his Arrow by miſchance glaunced and kill'd a man: upon which fact it was much debated, Whether by it he were not become irregular, and ought to be deprived of his Archiepiſcopal Function, as having his hands imbrued (though againſt his will) in blood: but Andrews Biſhop of Winchester ſtanding much in his defence, as likewiſe Sir Henry Martin, the Kings advocate, gave ſuch reaſons in mitigation of the Fact, that he was cleared from all imputation of crime; and thereupon adjudged Regular, and in ſtate to continue his Archiepiſcopal charge: yet himſelf (out of a religious tenderneſſe of minde) kept the day of the year, in which the miſchance happen'd, with a ſolemn Faſt, all his life after.

Works of Piety done by this King, or by other in his time.

STructures of Piety King James made none at all, nor many of magnificence, only the great Banquetting Houſe at White-hall; a wall of Brick about his Park at Greenwich, another at Theobalds, and ſome little buildings at Royſton, and ſuch like. His greateſt charity was expreſſed by largeſſes and Penſions: as firſt where the Gentlemen of his Chappel, being 33 in number, had each of them but 30 pounds a year fee, he made it up 40. Then he enlarged the Penſions of his Alms Knights of Windſor, being 13 in number, from twelve pence a day to two ſhillings. Then as he encreaſed the number of the Yeomen of the Guard, from ſevenſcore to two hundred, ſo he encreaſed their Penſions, from two ſhillings a day, for three moneths in the Summer, to ſeven groats a day for ſix moneths in the Summer. Then, where at his coming, he found but only four Judges in the Courts of Law at Weſtminſter, he added a fifth, with the like allowance as the former had; beſides many other Penſions of like nature. But the works of Piety done by others in his time, were very many, whereof we may juſtly ſet in the firſt place, the repairing of Pauls Church, begun in his time, though not finiſhed till many years after; a work of as great coſt and labour, as the firſt founding of it: towards the furtherance whereof though many well devoted perſons contributed liberally, yet none was more induſtrious, than the Learned Doctor Laud, firſt Biſhop of London, and after Archbiſhop of Canterbury; who alſo was a bountifull Benefactor to the Colledge of Saint Johns in Oxford, where he had his Education. Next to him his Predeceſſor next before him, the worthy George Abbot, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, founded a fair Almes-houſe at Guilford in Surry where he was born, as likewiſe Robert the ſecond Earl of Dorſet, founded another in Suſſex; to the maintenance whereof, he gave Lands to the value of three hundred pounds a year. But of all the Almes-houſes that were ever founded in Chriſtendom, there is none I think can parallel that of Thomas Sutton Eſquire. This man born at Snayth in Lincolnſhire, having always lived a Batchelor, and by ſundry imployments, and parcimony, being grown to great wealth, bought of the right Honourable Thomas Earl of Suffolk, his Manſion houſe, called the Charter-houſe, near to Smithfield in London, and out of a pious minde converted it into an Almſ-houſe, by the name of Suttons Hoſpital, endowing the ſame with above three thouſand pounds of yearly rent: wherein are maintained fourſcore poor men, with convenient lodging, diet, and allowance of money for apparel: alſo forty poor children with the like proviſion, and a Grammar School, with a Maſter and Uſher to teach them: over all whom, he ordained a Learned man to be Maſter of the houſehold, and to be choſen by the Governours, whom he appointed for the preſent, by the Authority of the Kings Letters Patents, to be George Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Thomas Lord Elſemore Lord Chancellor, Robert Earl of Salisbury Lord Treaſurer, John Biſhop of London, Lancelot Biſhop of Ely, Sir Edward Cook Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, Sir Thomas Foſter, a Judge of the Common-Pleas, Sir Henry Hubbard the Kings Attorney-General, Doctor Overall Dean of Pauls, Doctor Mountain Dean of Weſtminſter, Henry Thursby Eſquire, Maſter of the Chancery, Richard Sutton Eſquire, Auditor of the Impreſts, Jeffery Nightingall Eſq; John Low Gentleman, Thomas Brown Gentleman, and Maſter of the Houſhold for the time being, to be alwayes one: and as any of theſe ſixteen Governours ſhould die, the Survivers to make preſent addition of others. Next to this was a fair Colledg in Oxford founded by Nicholas Wilbe Eſquire, and called after his name. About this time alſo Edward Allen of Dulwich in Surrey founded a fair Hoſpital at Dulwich for ſix poor men, and ſix poor women, and for twelve poor Children, from the age of four or ſix years, to be there maintained and taught till the age of fourteen or ſixteen, and to have a School-maſter with dyet, and a convenient ſtipend. This man may be an example, who having gotten his Wealth by Stage-playing, converted it to this Pious uſe, not without a kind of reputation to the Society of Players. In this Kings time alſo William Cambden King at Arms, founded an Hiſtory Profeſſor in Oxford, to which he gave the Manor of Bexley in Kent, which ſome years years expired, will be worth four hundred pounds a year. In his tenth year Sir Baptiſt Hicks, one of the Juſtices of Peace in Middleſex, who was afterward made Viſcount Cambden, built a fair Seſſions houſe of Brick and Stone in St. Johns ſtreet, which by the Juſtices was called after his name Hicks, a great convenience for the Juſtices; who ſate before in a common Inne called the Caſtle. He alſo founded a fair Hoſpital of Free ſtone, at Cambden in Glouceſterſhire, for ſix men and ſix women, allowing each of them a yearly Gown, and two ſhillings ſix pence a week, with two rooms and a Garden. In this Kings time, George Patyn Citizen and Grocer of London, gave to good uſes, three thouſand and ſix hundred pounds, whereof twelve hundred pounds to the two Univerſities, nine hundred pounds for an Alms-houſe, and a certain ſum of money to buy two Bells, and make a Chime in Bow-Church. Alſo Thomas Teaſdale of Glympton in the County of Oxford Gentleman, gave five thouſand pounds to purchaſe Lands for perpetual maintenance of ſeven Fellows, and ſix Scholars, to be placed at Baylyoll in Oxford, and to be choſen thither from time to time, out of the Free School of Abbington in Berkſhire; to which School he alſo gave Lands for the maintenance of an Uſher. In this Kings time alſo, Sir Marmaduke Darrell, being Lord of Fulmer, being a Town in Buckinghamſhire, where was an old ruinous Church, ſtanding a mile diſtant from the Town, pulled down that old Church, and at his own charge builded a fair new one in the Town, and furniſhed it with a Font, a Pulpit, and all Ornaments neceſſary. Alſo Thomas Watſon of Halſtead, in the County of Kent Eſquire, new builded a fair Chappel on the North ſide of the Pariſh Church of Halſtead, of Free-ſtone from the ground, and gave to the Church four new Bells, and two Pulpits. In his time alſo Doctor Alymer Biſhop of London, and Elizabeth Counteſs Dowager of Shrewsbury, gave certain ſums of money towards the better maintenance of Sermons at Pauls Croſs: As likewiſe Thomas Ruſſell Draper gave ten pounds a year for ever, to be given to unbeneficed Miniſters, that ſhould preach there; and to the ſame uſe, George Biſhop Stationer of London, gave ten pounds a year more. In this Kings time alſo, the Citizens of London new builded Aldgate, where pulling down the old Gate, they found many ancient Roman Coyns. John Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canterbury, founded a fair Alms-houſe in Croydon.

Hicks-Hall in St. Johns ſtreet built, and by whom.

On the fifteenth of June, 1614, dyed Henry Earl of Northampton, who built from the ground a houſe nere Charing Croſſe; and dying was buried in the ancient Chappel of Dover Caſtle, who in his life-time founded three fair Hoſpitals, and endowed them with large maintenance for ever, one at Riſing in Norfolk for twelve poor women and a Governeſſe, a ſecond at Clun in Shropſhire, for twelve poor men and a Governor: The third at Greenwich in Kent, for a Governor and twenty poor Almeſ-men. In this Kings time alſo, Maſter Robert Dows of London Merchant-Taylor, gave a competent maintenance for ever unto Sepulchers Pariſh, for the tolling of the great Bell, and for finding ſome Divine to come to the Priſon of Newgate, the midnight before Execution, and there to ring a hand Bell, and to put the priſoners in mind of their approaching death, with a Chriſtian remembrance and exhortation; and the next morning to toll the great Bell, from ſix a clock till ten, and then to ring it out when the Execution ſhould be paſt. He alſo eſtabliſhed a free ſinging School in Chriſts Hoſpital, for the better education of the poor children there: beſides many other good deeds of Alms. About the ſame time Robert Peake of London Goldſmith, gave to Sepulchers Church a Communion Table of two yards long, and three quarters and a half broad, richly guilded over, and at every corner imboſt with plates of ſilver. In this Kings fourteenth year, William Jones of London Merchant, gave about eight thouſand pounds to found a Free-School in Wales, where he was born, with Almes-houſes and Penſioners in London; and a hundred pounds a year for ever to a learned Preacher in London, ordaining all things to be ordered by the Company of Haberdaſhers, whereof himſelf was free. This year alſo the old ruinous Gate called Alderſgate, was taken quite down, and new builded from the foundation, towards the building whereof, William Parker, Merchant-Taylor of London, gave a thouſand pounds. In this Kings time alſo, was erected a Building near to Chelſey, with a purpoſe to be a Colledg for Divines to ſtudy the Controverſies of Religion, but upon ſecond thoughts, the Cage indeed ſtands finiſhed, but no Birds have ever yet been brought to ſing in it; and perhaps never will. If any other Deeds of Alms, or publick benefit were done in this Kings time, as perhaps there were many, the Reader may be pleaſed both here and in other Kings Reigns, to adde them, as he meets with them: for partly to this end, I have digeſted this Chronicle into ſuch ſeveral Heads and Chapters.

Of Caſualties happening in his time.

IN his firſt year, on the ſeven and twentieth of April, thirteen perſons were ſlain by miſ-fortune with Gun-powder, at the Gun-powder Mill in Redriffe, and much other hurt done in divers places. This year alſo, the Plague in London was ſo great, that from the three and twentieth of December 1602, to the two and twentieth of December following, there dyed in London, and the Liberties, eight and thirty thouſand, two hundred and four and forty, whereof the Plague thirty thouſand, five hundred threeſcore and eighteen, of them in one week three thouſand fourſcore and ten, where the next year after, though the City were encreaſed with great number of ſtrangers, yet there dyed that year of all diſeaſes, within London and the Liberties, but only four thouſand two hundred threeſcore and three perſons. In the ſecond year of his Reign, a ſtrange accident happened, to the terrour of all bloudy Murtherers, which was this; one Anne Waters enticed by a Lover of hers, conſented to have her huſband ſtrangled, and then buried him ſecretly under the dung-hill in a Cow-houſe; whereupon the man being miſſing by his Neighbours, and the Wife making ſhew of a wondering what was become of him; It pleaſed God, that one of the Inhabitants of the Town dreamed one night, that his 1624 his neighbour Waters was ſtrangled, and buried under the dung-hill in a Cow-houſe; and upon declaring his dream, ſearch being made by the Conſtable, the dead body was found as he had dreamed: and thereupon the wife was apprehended, and upon examination, confeſſing the fact was burned. And now what hope can murtherers have of being concealed, when they are ſubject to be diſcovered by any mans dream? The 19th of January in his third year, a great Porpus was taken at Weſtham, in a ſmall Creek, a mile and a half within the Land, and within few days after a Whale came up within eight miles of London, whoſe body was ſeen divers times above water, and judged to exceed the length of the largeſt ſhip in the River: But when ſhe taſted the freſh water, and ſcented the Land, ſhe returned into the Sea. In his fourth year, being the year 1607, a mighty Weſt winde brought in the Sea into the River of Severn, with ſuch violence, that in ſome places of Somerſetſhire and Glouceſterſhire, the Waters in divers Towns and Villages, grew higher than the tops of their houſes; ſo as (notwithſtanding all courſes that could be taken) there were drowned in Somerſetſhire 80 perſons, and damages done to the value of twenty thouſand pounds. At Coventry alſo, the ſeventh of April, ſo ſudden a floud came into the Suburbs and City, that in one hour it roſe in ſome places above three yards in height, to the great Damage and hurt of many; and that which is as much ſtrange, as it ſuddenly came, ſo it ſuddenly abated: ſo as in four hours and a half, it both came and went away. In his 6th year being 1609, a froſt began in December, which continued till April following, with ſuch violence, that not only the Thames was ſo froſen, that Carts loaden were driven over it as on dry land, but many Fowls and Birds periſhed, as alſo much herbage in gardens, eſpecially Artichocks and Roſemary were deſtroyed. This year alſo the 11th of April a Malt-houſe in the Town of St. Edmondsbury, being by chance ſet on fire, continued burning till it had conſumed 160 houſes: but by the Kings bountifulneſſe, (giving 500 loads of timber) and the City of Londons relief, the Town was forthwith new builded, in a fairer manner than it was before. In the year 1613, on the ſeventeenth of April in the pariſh of Standiſh in Lancaſhire a maiden child was born, having four legs, four arms, two bellies joyned to one back: one head with two faces, the one before, the other behinde, like the picture of Janus.

This year alſo the 26th of June, in the Pariſh of Chriſts Church in Hampſhire, one John Hitchel, a Carpenter, lying in bed with his wife and a young childe by them, was himſelf and the child both burnd to death with a ſudden lightning, no fire appearing outwardly upon him, and yet lay burning for the ſpace of almoſt three dayes, till he was quite conſumed to aſhes. This year alſo on the ſeventh of Auguſt, the Town of Dorcheſter was quite conſumed with Fire, begun in the houſe of a Tallow Chandler, deſtroying all the houſes, except a few near the Church, and all their wares and goods; to the value of two hundred thouſand pounds, yet not any man or woman periſhed. About the ſame time alſo the Play-houſe called the Globe upon the Bank-ſide near London, was quite conſumed with fire by diſcharging a piece of Ordinance and yet no man hurt: and about four years after, a new built play-houſe, near Golding-lane called the Fortune, was by negligence of a candle, clean burnt down to the ground. In the year 1614. the Town of Stratford upon Avon, was burned. And leſt the water ſhould be behinde in doing of miſchief, ſo great Inundations were at this time in Norfolk and Lincolnſhire, that the Sea entred twelve miles into the Land. In the year 1612, on the 18 of November a blazing Star began to be ſeen in the South-eaſt about five a clock in the morning, the flame or ſtream whereof, enclined towards the Weſt. This comet, in the opinion of Dr. Bembridge, the great Mathematician of Oxford, was as far above the Moon, as the Moon is above the Earth: what it portended is only known to God; but the ſequel of it was, that infinite ſlaughters and devaſtations followed upon it, both in Germany and other Countries. In the year 1623, on Fryday the 24 of Octob. a Roman Catholick Prieſt preached in the afternoon, at Hunſdon houſe in the Black-Fryers in London, in an upper chamber, where there were aſſembled above 300 men and women, when about the middle of the Sermon, a great part of the Floor brake, and fell down with ſuch violence, that it brake down the next floor under it: in the fall whereof, were ſlain the Preacher, and almoſt 100 of his Auditors, beſides as many more hurt. In this Kings time courſe paper commonly called white brown paper was firſt made in England, ſpecially in Surrey, and about Windſor.

Of his Wife and Children.

HE married Anne, the Daughter of Frederick the ſecond, King of Denmark, whoſe marriage was there ſolemnized in the year 1589. By whom he had born in Scotland, two Sons, Henry who dyed before him, and Charles who ſucceeded him in the Crown; and one Daughter named Elizabeth, married to Frederick the fift of that name, count Palatine of the Rhine, by whom ſhe had many children, both Sons and Daughters. King James had alſo by his Wife Queen Anne two other Daughters born in England, the Lady Mary, and the Lady Sophia, who both dyed young, the Lady Mary at about three years old, the Lady Sophia the next day after ſhe was born; and were both of them buried with great ſolemnity, in the Chappel Royal at Weſtminſter.

Of his Perſonage and Conditions.

HE was of Stature ſome what higher than ordinary, of a well compacted body, of an auburn hair, of a full and pleaſing viſage; in his later days inclining to be fat and burley; of bodily exerciſes, he took moſt delight in hunting; which yet (ſome thought) he uſed rather as a retiring himſelf from the importunity of State affairs, than for any great pleaſure he took in it. It is ſaid, that he had ſuch a faſhion in riding, that it could not ſo properly be ſaid he rid, as that his Horſe carried him; for he made but little uſe of his Bridle, and would ſay, a Horſe never ſtumbled, but when he was reined. He was of an ad-

1624 mirable pregnancy of wit, and that pregnancy much improved by continuall ſtudy from his childhood: by which, he had gotten ſuch a promptneſſe in expreſſing his minde, that his extemporal ſpeeches were little inferior to his premeditated writings. Many, no doubt, had read as much, and perhaps more than he; but ſcarce ever any concocted his reading into Judgement as he did: by which he became ſo judicious, that though he could not Prophecy, yet he could preſage; and his conjectures were little leſſe than Oracles. In all the Liberal Sciences, he was (we may ſay) a Maſter of Arts: but in Divinity, a Doctor, as he made appear in the Conference at Hamton Court, and is ſeen ſtill by the learned Writings he hath left behinde him. And as for that part of the Politicks, which concerns Monarchy, Regere Imperio populos, which himſelf uſed to call King-Craft: In this he excelled. He knew how to take the inclinations of the people at their firſt bound, and never ſuffer them to riſe higher, than he could well reach them: nor to grow ſtronger, than he could either alter or divert them. He would be ſure to keep his Subjects in a temper of contentment; which if he could not do by preventives, he would by lenitives. He was ſo wiſe that he could diſſemble, without ſeeming a Diſſembler: be free in opening his mind, and yet keep counſell. He was a provident Pilot, that in a calm would provide for a ſtorm: and you ſhould never find him committing the fault of Non putaram. He was both Marti & Mercurio; but not tam Marti, quam Mercurio, as being of his temper who ſaid, Cedant Arma Togæ: and indeed ſeeing Peace is the end of both, it were not wiſdom to ſeek it by Arms, if it may be had by the Gown, as it is in the Aphoriſm, Concilio omnia experiri prius, quam Armis ſapientem decet. That which was bounty in him being a King, would have been Frugality, if he had been a private perſon, there being of both one radicall reaſon. Of all the Morall vertues, he was eminent for chaſtity; in which the Poet ſeems to include all vertue: where he ſaith,

His promptneſs in expreſſing his mind.

His Learning ſpecially in Divinity.

His Wiſedom.

His Chaſtity.

Nulli fas caſto ſceleratum inſiſtere limen.

By nulli caſto, meaning no vertuous perſon; it was a manifeſt argument of his being an excellent Prince, that coming next to the admirable Queen Elizabeth, which was in a manner to compare them together, yet there appeared no inequality, that it might not untruly be ſaid, King James was but the continuation of Queen Elizabeth, the ſame vertue, though different ſexes: And now to expreſſe his Character in a Word, which worthily might be matter for many volumes: He was to his Wife a moſt loyal Husband, to his children a moſt loving Father, to his Servants a moſt bountiful Maſter, to his Subjects a moſt juſt Prince, to all Princes near him a moſt peaceable neighbour; that more juſtly it may be ſaid of him, than of whom it was ſaid; Qua te tam læta tulerunt ſæcula? a Prince after Plato's own heart, for his learning, and which is infinitely more worth, after Gods own heart, for his Religiouſneſs and Piety.

Of his Death and Buriall.

1625 OF his death were many ſcandalous rumors ſpread, and ſome were ſo impudent, as to write that he was poyſoned, as the Duke of Richmond, and the Marqueſſe Hamilton had been before: but King James being dead, and his body opened, there was found no ſign at all of poyſon, his inward parts being all ſound, but that his Spleen was a little faulty, which might be cauſe enough to caſt him into an Ague: the ordinary high way, eſpecially in old bodies, to a naturall death: of this Ague after a Moneths languiſhing, notwithſtanding all the remedies that could be applyed, he departed this life at Theobalds, on the 27th of March, in the year 1625, in the 59th of his age, when he had Reigned two and twenty years compleat; His body for the greater State, was conveyed by Torch light, from Theobalds to Denmark houſe, where having reſted from the 23d of April, to the 7th of May, it was carryed to Weſtminſter, and there interred in the Chappel Royal, with great ſolemnity, but with greater lamentation: there being ſcarce any of the infinite multitude that was preſent, of whom it might not be ſaid.

Multa gemens, largoque humectat flumine vultum.

Of Men of note in his time.

MIlitary Men of Note, in a time of Peace, as the whole Reign of King James was, we have no reaſon to expect; yet if we look amongſt the Voluntaries that went to the School of War in the Low-Countries; we ſhall finde a pair of brothers, that may ſtand in compariſon with the greateſt Souldiers in the moſt Martial times, Sr. Francis Vere, who as another Hannibal, with his one eye, could ſee more in the Martial Diſcipline, than common men can do with two; and Sr. Horatio Vere, who as another Philopæmen, contained in a very little body, a very great both skill and courage. But for men of Note in learning, as being in the time of a moſt learned Prince, there was never greater ſtore; of whom theſe for example. In Curiouſneſſe of Preaching, there was Doctor Andrews Biſhop of Wincheſter; who hath left to poſterity, a Century of ſuch golden Sermons, that ſhews, he as well deſerved the name of Chryſoſtom, as he that had it. In multiplicity of reading, there was Doctor Reinolds of Corpus Chriſti Colledge in Oxford; who ſeemed, as it were, a Living Library; and one would have thought his Memory to be a perfect Index of all the Books had ever been written. In knowledge of Law, there was Sir Edward Coke, Chief Juſtice of the Kings Bench; who hath written ſuch excellent Commentaries of the Law, that he ſeems as another Bartholus or Baldus amongſt us. In elegancy of Writing, there was Sir Francis Bacon, Viſcount St. Albans, who beſides his profounder Books of Novum Organum, hath written the Reign of King Henry the Seventh, in ſo ſweet a ſtyle, that like Manna, it pleaſeth the taſte of all palates. In the skill of Antiquities, there was William Cambden, King at Arms; who hath ſet forth the Deſcription of Britain, and the life of Queen Elizabeth in ſo lively colours, that he ſeems to have brought Britain out of darkneſs into light, and to keep Queen Elizabeth alive after death. And to ſpeak it in a word, the Trojan Horſe was not fuller of Heroick Grecians, then King James his Reign was full of men, excellent in all kindes of Learning. And here I deſire the Readers leave to remember two of my own old acquaintance, the Two eminent Souldiers, Sir Francis Vere, and Sir Horatio Vere.

Two eminent Schollars, Dr. Andrews, and Dr. Reynolds.

Two eminent Lawyers, Sir Edward Coke, and Sir Francis Bacon.

Two eminent Wits, Dr. Dunne, and Sir Henry Wotton.

the one was Mr. John Dunne, who leaving Oxford, lived at the Innes of Courts, not diſſolute, but very neat; a great Viſiter of Ladies, a great frequenter of Playes, a great Writer of conceited Verſes; untill ſuch time as King James taking notice of the pregnancy of his Wit, was a means that he betook him to the ſtudy of Divinity, and thereupon proceeding Doctor, was made Dean of Pauls; and became ſo rare a Preacher, that he was not onely commended, but even admired by all that heard him. The other was Henry Wotton, (mine old acquaintance alſo, as having been fellow pupils, and chamberfellows in Oxford divers years together.) This Gentleman was imployed by King James in Embaſſage to Venice; and indeed the Kingdom afforded not a fitter man, for matching the Capriciouſneſſe of the Italian wits: a man of ſo able dexterity with his Pen, that he hath done himſelf much wrong, and the Kingdom more, in leaving no more of his Writings behind him.

Of the Engliſh Plantations in the Indies, that were in King JAMES his time.

AND now we are come to a time, wherein we may very near ſay as much of King James as was ſaid of Auguſtus Cæſar; Super & Garamantas & Indos proferet Imperium. In this better, that where Auguſtus did it by the violent way of Arms, King James did it by the civil way of Plantations: for in his days began the great Plantation of the Engliſh in the Indies; and muſt be acknowledged the proper effect of his peaceable Government. The firſt Plantation of the Engliſh in the Indies; was that which is now called Virginia, in memory of the Virgin Queen Elizabeth: but called before Wingandacoa. It was firſt diſcovered by Sir Walter Rawleigh, in the year 1584; to whom the firſt Letters Patents were granted for making a Plantation there: but yet no Colony was ſent thither, till the year 1606. It is a Country in America, between the degrees of 34 and 45 of the North Latitude: but that part of it which is planted by the Engliſh, is under the Degrees of 37, 38, and 39. It is no Iſland, as many have imagined, but a part of the Continent adjoyning to Florida. The firſt and chief Town made here by the Engliſh, is called James Town, in honour of the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty. It is a Country abounding with all ſorts of Fiſh and Fowl; ſo fruitful, that it yields thirty, and ſometimes forty Buſhels of Corn upon an Acre; and that (which is to us more ſtrange) hath three harveſts in a year, the Corn being ſowed, ripe and reaped, in little more then two moneths. Many Plantations had been attempted here before, but came to nothing: the firſt to any purpoſe was in the year 1607, under the Conduct of Captain Goſnoll, John Smith, and Mr. Edward Maria Winkfield, who carried a Colony thither of a hundred perſons; but of theſe, many dying of ſickneſſe, or ſlain by the Savages, a new ſupply came in the year 1608. of a hundred and twenty perſons, under the conduct of Captain Nilſon. After which, was ſent another ſupply of threeſcore and ten perſons; and in the year 1609, a third ſupply came of five hundred perſons, under a Patent granted to Sir Thomas Weſt, Lord de la Ware, but conducted thither by Sir Thomas Gates, Sir George Summers, and others. In the year 1611. was a fourth ſupply of three hundred men under the conduct of Sir Thomas Gates. In the year 1612. two other ſupplies were ſent of forty men in each, and now was the Lottery ſpoken of before granted by the King, for further Supplies of this Plantation. After this Maſter Samuel Argall being appointed Governour in the year 1618. the Lord de la Ware came thither with a ſupply of two hundred people; but in his ſtay there dyed: After this in the year 1620, were ſent thither eleven Ships, with twelve hundred and ſixteen perſons, and now they founded themſelves into Corporations: In the year 1621, Sir Francis Wiat was ſent thither Governour, with thirteen hundred men, women, and children, and now they founded Schools, and Courts of Juſtice; and the Plantation was extended a hundred and forty miles up, on the River of both ſides. But now when the Engliſh were ſecure, and thought of nothing but peace, the Savages came ſuddenly upon them, and ſlew of them three hundred and ſeven and forty men, women, and children. For repairing of which loſſe, the City of London ſent preſently over a ſupply of a hundred men. This maſſacre happened, by reaſon they had built their Plantations remote from one another, in above thirty ſeveral places, which made them now upon conſultation, to reduce them all to five or ſix places, whereby they may better aſſiſt each other: ſince which time they have alwayes lived in good ſecurity. And thus much for Virginia.

Upon their ſecurity, 300 of them ſlain by the Savages.

The firſt Plantation of Virginia: and what Country it is and abounding with what Commodities.

Next was the Plantation of the Iſland called Bermudas, ſo called of a Spaniſh Ship, called Bermudas, which was there caſt away, carrying Hogs to the Weſt-Indies, that ſwam a ſhoar, and there increaſed. The firſt Engliſh man that entred this Iſle, was one Henry May in the year 1591. but in the year 1610, Sir George Somers was ſent thither, who dying there, in memory of his name, the Iſles have ever ſince been called Somers Iſles. In the year 1612, one Mr. Moor landed there with 60 perſons, and then builded the chief Town there called S. Georges, together with 8 or 9 Forts. The ſame year a ſupply of 30 more perſons was ſent thither, and the year after 60 more, under one Mr. Barlet; with a ſhew to ſurvey the Land; but with a purpoſe indeed to get from thence a great lump of Ambergreece, and no leſſe than 80 pound weight that had been found and taken up in the Iſland ſome few years before, and was ſtill retained. A while after this, came a Ship called the Bleſſing, with 100 paſſengers; and two dayes after came the Star, with 180 more; and within 14 dayes after that again came thither the Margaret and two Frigats, with 130 paſſengers: So as now they began to divide the Country into Tribes, and the Tribes into ſhares. In the year 1616, Captain Daniel Tuckard was ſent from Virginia to be Governour there, and now it began indeed to be a Plantation; for now they began to build them houſes: and now was ſent from thence into England, a Ship fraighted with 30000 weight of Tobacco, valued there but at 2 s. 6 d. the pound, though ſold here oftentimes for Verino's at great rates. In the year 1619, Captain Nathaniel

The Plantation of the Bermudas: why called Somers Iſles.

Ambergreece in great quantity found in the Iſland.

Butler was ſent Governour with new Supplies, in whoſe time they build them a Church; held Aſſizes for Criminal cauſes, twice a year, and began to have Parliaments as in England: and now in the Ship called the Magazin, came divers Gentlemen of good faſhion, with their Wives and Families: ſo as now their number was no fewer than fifteen hundred people, diſperſed twenty miles in length. In the year 1622, came Governour Mr. John Bernard, bringing with him a ſupply of 140 perſons; but he and his wife dying preſently upon their coming, Mr. John Harriſon in the year 1623. was choſen Governour. Theſe Iſles of Bermudas are in 32 degrees of Northern latitude: ſo as they are diſtant from Virginia at leaſt 500 Leagues, and from England above three thouſand three hundred. This Country is of a moſt healthful Air, abounding with all ſorts of Fowls, Birds and Fiſh; and where great pieces of Amber-greece are oftentimes found, which is valued there at no leſſe than three pounds an ounce. And thus much concerning the ſtate of Bermudas, till the year 1624.

The Plantation of New-England: and the Commodities of the Country.

Next comes the Plantation of New-England; concerning which, we muſt firſt know, that King James in the year 1606. granted two Letters Patents for Plantations in Virginia, one to the City of London; another to the Cities of Briſtow, Exceter and Plimouth; with power to plant Colonies any where between the Degrees of 38 and 44, provided there ſhould be at leaſt 100. miles diſtance between the two Colonies. So as the firſt Colony was from the City of London, and is that which is called Virginia; The ſecond Colony was from Briſtow & the other Towns, and is that which is now called New-England, and is ſituate between the degrees of 41 and 45: the very mean betwixt the North Pole and the Line. And now to ſpeak a little of the Country, there are on the Sea coſt, 25 excellent good Harbours, in ſome whereof there is Anchorage for 500 ſail of Ships of any burthen. The Earth as fruitful, and the Air as healthful as any part of the World: abounding with all ſorts of Grain, Fowls and Fiſh: Many of ſuch kinds as are to us unknown, yet excellent meat: Many Voyages had been made for the perfect diſcovery of the Country: Many attempts for ſetling a Plantation there: Many Miſcarriages and Diſaſters in making the attempts: but all at laſt came to this, that in the year 1624. (which is the limit of our Narration) there was a Plantation ſetled, though but a ſmall one: but a few years after (by the ſending forth of new Supplies) encreaſed to ſo many thouſands, that if God continue to proſper it, as he hath begun, the New-England in a few Ages may prove as populous as the Old; and the King of England likely to have as many and greater Crowns in the Indies, than he had in his Realms of Great Britain and Ireland. But ſeeing of theſe and all other Engliſh Plantations in the Indies, whereof there are many; large diſcourſes are written by divers Authors, it ſhould be more than ſuperfluous to ſpeak more of them in this place: It is ſufficient to have ſhewed that King James had the honour to have them ſetled in his time, and under the influence of his peaceable Government.

Of the Earls and Barons made by King JAMES.

IN former Kings Reigns, the making of Earls and Barons was but rare, and therefore they are fitly ſet down at the ſeveral times of their making; but in King James his Reign, there were ſo many made, that it may not be unfit to ſet them down in a Catalogue together.

In his firſt year were made four Earls and nine Barons: namely, Henry Howard younger Brother of the laſt Duke of Norfolk, was made Earl of Northampton: Thomas Sackvile Lord Buckhurſt, was made Earl of Dorſet; and and ſhortly after Charles Blunt Lord Mountjoy, was made Earl of Devonſhire, and Thomas Howard Baron of Walden, was made Earl of Suffolk: Henry Grey was made Lord Grey of Groby, (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Stanford) Henry Danvers was made Baron of Danby, (afterwards by King Charles made Earl of Danby) Sir John Peter of Eſſex, was made Baron of Writtle: Sir William Ruſſel was made Baron of Thornaugh: Sir Thomas Gerard was made Baron of Gerards Bromley in Staffordſhire: Sir Robert Spencer was made Baron of Wormelayton in the County of Warwick: Sir Thomas Egerton was made Baron of Eſſemere: Sir Robert Cecill was created Baron of Henden in Rutlandſhire; and Sir John Harington was made Baron of Exton.

In his ſecond year on the 20th. of May were made four Barons and one Viſcount: Sir Robert Sidney was made Baron of Penhurſt: Sir William Knowles, Baron of Grayes: Sir Edward Wotton Baron of Marley: and Mildmay Fane Lord de Spencer; and in Auguſt the ſame year, Sir Robert Cecill Baron of Eſſenden, was created Viſcount Cranburn.

In his third year, on the 4th. of May, were created three Earls, and one Viſcount, and four Barons; namely, Sir Robert Cicill Viſcount Cranburn, was created Earl of Saliſbury: Sir Thomas Cecill his elder Brother Lord Burghley, was created Earl of Exceter; and Sir Philip Herbert younger Brother to the Earl of Pembroke, was created Earl of Montgomery: Robert Sidney Baron of Penhurſt, was created Viſcount of Liſle; Sir John Stanhope was made Baron of Harington; Sir George Carew Baron of Clopton; Mr. Thomas Arundell of Devonſhire, Baron of Warder; and Mr. William Cavendiſh Baron of Hardwick.

In his fourth year, on the fourth of July, Sir Thomas Knevet was called by Writ to the Parliament, by the name of Baron of Eſtrick, and was thereby Baron of that Title; and on the ſeventh of September, Sir Jervis Cliſton was likewiſe called by Writ to the Parliament, by the name of Baron of Layton Bromſewold, and was thereby Baron of that Title.

In his ninth year, upon Eaſter Munday, Sir Robert Carre was created Viſcount Rocheſter; and

In his tenth year, on the fourth of November, was created Earl of Somerſet.

In

In his eleventh year, Lewis Steward Duke of Lenox was made Earl of Richmond, and after Duke of Richmond.

In his thirteenth year, on the 29th. of June, Sir James Hay of Scotland was created Baron of Sawley, and about three years after, was made Viſcount Doncaſter, and Sir Robert Dormer was created Baron of Wyng, (afterward by King Charles was made Earl of Carnarvan.)

In his fourteenth year, on the 9th. of July, Sir John Hollys Knight was created Baron Haughton of Haughton in the County of Nottingham, and Sir John Roper of Kent, was made Baron of Tenham: and on the 17th. of Auguſt, Sir George Villiers was created Baron of Whadden, and Viſcount Villiers; and on the 7th. of November, Thomas Egerton Lord Elſemere was created Viſcount Brackley, and he dying ſoon after, his Son John was created Earl of Bridgewater; William Lord Knowles was created Viſcount Wallingford; and Sir Philip Stanhope was created Baron of Shelford: On the 5th. of January, the Viſcount Villiers was created Earl of Buckingham, and on the third of March, Sir Edward Noell of Rutlandſhire, was made Baron of Ryddington.

In his fifteenth year, on New-years day, Sir George Villiers Earl of Buckingham, was created Marqueſſe of Buckingham; and on the 12th. of July, Sir Francis Bacon Lord Chancellor of England, was created Baron of Verulam, and not long after Viſcount Saint Albans. Alſo in the Summer of this year, the King created four Earls and one Counteſſe: namely, the Viſcount Liſle was made Earl of Leiceſter, the Lord Compton was made Earl of Northampton, the Lord Rich was made Earl of Warwick, the Lord Cavendiſh was made Earl of Devonſhire, and the Lady Compton wife to Sir Thomas Compton, and mother of the Marqueſſe of Buckingham was created Counteſſe of Buckingham.

In his ſixteenth year, on the 25th. of November, Sir John Digby Vicechamberlain to the King, was created Baron of Sherbourn, by Patent to him and his heirs Males.

In his ſeventeenth year, in the moneth of June, Eſme Steward Lord d' Aubigny, younger Brother to the Duke of Lenox, was created Earl of March, James Marqueſs Hamilton was created Earl of Cambridge, and Sir John Villiers Brother to the Marqueſſe of Buckingham was created Baron of Stock and Viſcount Purbeck.

In his eighteenth year, William Cavendiſh was created Viſcount Mansfield; (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Newcaſtle) and on Munday the fourth of December, Sir Henry Mountague, being firſt made Lord Treaſurer, was created Baron of Kimbolton, and Viſcount Mandeville, and not long after Earl of Manchester, and Sir John Ramſey Viſcount Haddington of Scotland was created Earl of Holderneſſe, and William Fielding was created Baron of Newnham, and Viſcount Fielding.

In his nineteenth year, Henry Cary was made Lord Cary of Leppington, (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Monmouth) Sir Edward Mountague elder Brother to the Viſcount Mandeville was made Baron of Boulton, the Lord Darcy of Eſſex, was created Viſcount Colcheſter (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Rivers) the Lord Hunſdon was created Viſcount Rochford, (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Dover) Sir Lyonel Cranfield, Maſter of the Wards, was created Baron Cranfield in Bedfordſhire; and Sir Thomas Howard ſecond ſon to Thomas Earl of Suffolk, was created Baron of Charleton, and Viſcount Andover, (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Berkſhire.)

In his twentieth year, in the moneth of September, the Viſcount Doncaſter was created Earl of Carlile, the Viſcount Fielding was created Earl of Denbigh, the Lord Digby was made Earl of Briſtow, the Lord Cranfield was created Earl of Middleſex, and Sir Henry Rich was made Baron of Kenſington.

In his one and twentieth year, the Marqueſſe of Buckingham being then in Spain with Prince Charles, had his Patent ſent him to be Duke of Buckingham; William Grey was created Baron of Wark, Elizabeth the widow of Sir Moyle Finch of Kent, was created Viſcounteſs Maidſtone, (afterward by King Charles made Counteſs of Winchelſey.)

In his two and twentieth year, the Earl of Clanriccard of Ireland, was created Viſcount Tunbridge in Kent (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Saint Albans.) Sir John Hollys Knight, Baron Haughton of Haughton was created Earl of Clare, Sir Henry Rich Baron of Kenſington was created Earl of Holland, the Lord Fines, Baron of Say and Seale, was made Viſcount Say and Seale: Sir Francis Fane was created Earl of Weſtmerland, Oliver Lord St. John of Bletſho was made Earl of Bullinbrook, Sir Chriſtopher Villiers Brother to the Duke of Buckingham, was made Earl of Angleſey, and Sir James Ley was made Lord Ley (afterward by King Charles made Earl of Marlborough.) Alſo this year, Sir Francis Leak was made Baron of Deincourt, and Sir Richard Roberts was made Lord Roberts of Truro in Cornwall.

And this was the number of all the Earls and Barons made by King James; but in his time alſo began another ſort of Nobility to be made in England, which had none of the priviledges of Engliſh Barons, but had onely Title to be called Lords of ſome place either in England or Ireland, although they poſſeſſed not a foot of Land in either: Of which ſort, the number being great; I forbear to rehearſe them, leſt I ſhould be tedious, or otherwiſe be thought to encroach too much upon the Heralds Office. It is ſufficient to have ſhewed, that King James advanced ſo many in honour, that in a kind it might be ſaid of him, as was ſaid of Auguſtus Cæſar, That he left Rome of Marble, which he found but of Brick.

THE REIGN OF King Charles the First.

1625

KIng James being deceaſed on the 27th of March in the forenoon, the ſame day, in the afternoon, Charles Prince of Wales, his only Son, then living, was proclaimed King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, with the general Acclamation of all ſorts of people, as being a Prince of admirable endowments both of Mind and Body. He was now about the age of 25 years, whereof the moſt part of one he had ſpent in Spain; where, although he was fruſtrated of the end for which he went, yet it gave him a tincture of Travel and Experience, more worth, perhaps, then that he went for.

King Charles proclaimed.

The Funerals of the deceaſed King were celebrated on the ſeventh of May, his body being brought from Somerſet-Houſe to Weſtminſter, where in St. Peter's Church, he was with great magnificence interr'd, the King himſelf being principal Mourner; which, though it was contrary to the cuſtom of his Predeceſſors, yet he choſe rather to expreſs his Piety, in attending the Body of his Father at his Funeral, than to ſtand upon any old niceties and points of State.

The celebration of the Funeral of K. James.

The firſt thing he did after the celebration of the Funeral, was to haſten the coming over of the Queen, to whom on Sunday the firſt of May, he was by his Proxie, the Duke of Cheverenx, eſpouſed at our Ladies Church in Paris; where the Eſpouſals were performed by the Cardinal of Richlieu.

The King and Queens eſpouſals at Paris.

A while after the Queen began her journey towards England, accompanied to Amiens, with the Queen her Mother, the Duke of Orleans her Brother, and the Duke and Dutcheſs of Chevereux, with others of the Nobility of France, and ſhe was attended by the Duke of Buckingham, and the Earls of Carliſle, Holland, and Montgomery, and many of the Engliſh Gentry, who were ſent over for that purpoſe.

The Queen ſtaid a fortnight at Amiens, and there ſhe parted with her Mother; from thence ſhe went to Boloigne, where a Fleet of one and twenty of the Kings Ships attended her, with the Counteſs of Buckingham, and a Noble Train of Ladies.

On Trinity Sunday, late at night, ſhe arrived at Dover, which being ſignified to the King (then at Canterbury) he went to her early the next morning, and received her with the greateſt demonſtrations of affection; and the ſame day they came to Canterbury, where their Nuptials were with all poſſible magnificence compleated, and the Duke of Cheverenx ſurrendred his Royal Charge to the King. On Wedneſday the fifteenth of June, they went by Coach to Graveſend, and the next day they came from thence to Somerſet-Houſe in their Royal Barges, attended with a very numerous Train of Lords and Ladies, and welcomed as they paſſed, by the great Ordnance from ſeveral Ships in the River, and the Tower of London, and accompanied or met by moſt of the Barges and Boats which could be found on the River of Thames.

The Queen arrives at Dover.

The King and Queen come to Somerſet-Houſe.

The third day after their arrival, their marriage was declared at White-hall, with great acclamations of joy, the King and Queen preſenting themſelves in that Ceremony, on Royal Thrones before the Nobility: but the Peſtilence began to rage in London at this time, which abated much of the Pomp of the Solemnity; though neither that, nor any thing elſe did divert the King from the conſideration of the other concernments of the Kingdom; for, having ſummon'd a Parliament to meet on the eighteenth of June: at the firſt aſſembling thereof he ſpake to them in theſe words.

The Kings marriage declared.

My Lords and Gentlemen:

"YOu are not ignorant, that at your earneſt "intreaty, March 23. 1623. my Father "(of happy memory) firſt took up Arms for the "recovery of the Palatinate; for which purpoſe,

"by 1625 "by your assistance, he began to form a conside"rable Army, and to prepare a goodly Armado

"and Navie-Royal. But Death intervening
"between him and the Atchievement, the War
"with the Crown is devolved upon me; to
"the prosecution whereof, as I am obliged both
"in Nature and Honour, so I question not, but
"the same necessity continuing, you will che"rish the Action with the like affection, and "further it with a ready contribution. True it "is, you furnished My Father with affectionate
"Supplyes, but they held no Symmetry or Pro"portion with the Charge of so great an Enter"prise. For those your Donatives are all dis-
"burst to a peny; and I am enforced to summon
"you hither, to tell you, That neither can the "Army advance, nor the Fleet set forth, with"out further aid. Consider, I pray you, that "the eyes of all Europe are fixt upon me, to "whom I shall appear ridiculous, as though I
"were unable to outgo Muster and Ostentati-
"on, if you now desert me. Consider it is my "first attempt, wherein if I sustain a foile, it
"will blemish all my future Honour. If Mine
"cannot, let your reputation move you, deliver
"and expedite me fairly out of this War, where-
"with you have encombred Me. (Let it never "be said whereinto you have betrayed Me.) I "desire therefore your speedy supply. The Sun,
"you know, is entring into his declining point,
"so it will be soon too late to set forth, when it
"will be rather not too soon to return. Again,
"I must mind you of the Mortality regnant in "this City, which should it (as so it may, and "no breach of Priviledge neither) Arrest any "one Member of either House, it would soon
"put a period, both to the Consultation and
"Session, so that your own Periclitation neces"sitates an early resolution. In summe, Three "of the best Rhetoricians, Honour, Opportunity,
"and Safety, are all of a Plot, and plead, you
"see, for Expedition. Perhaps it may be ex"pected I should say something in way of ac"count of My Religion, as also of the temper
"and tenure of my future Government. But,
"as I hope, I have not been guilty of any thing
"which may justly start the least question in ei"ther, so I desire you would repose in this as"surance, that I will in neither vary from those "Principles, wherein I have been instituted at
"the feet of that eminent Gamaliel My late
"Father.

This Speech was very well receiv'd, and though it did not produce so great a Supply, as the exigence of Affairs required, yet the Commons gave two Subsidies without any Condition, and the Clergy three; and in the Grant of the Layety, the Papists were to pay double.

The King very gratiously accepted the gift, as an earnest of the good affections of his people, in reference to greater summs which he expected to follow: but the Plague encreasing in London, the Parliament, on the eleventh of July, was adjourned to Oxford, to be held there on the first of August. The Commons had sent up a Bill for Tonnage and Poundage to the Lords before the Adjournment; but because it was limited to a year, they thought it unfit to pass; for that most of the former Grants to the Kings Predecessors were for term of life. The cause of this restraint was, because the Customs had been raised by King James, by advice of his Council, in the eighteenth year of his Reign, and the Commons had a purpose to reduce them to the rate setled in Queen Maries time. 1625

The Kings Speech to the Parliament.

August the first, the Parliament assembled at Oxford, and in the fourth of the same Moneth, both Houses, by the Kings appointment, attended him at Christ-Church-hall, where he briefly acquainted them with his wants for setting out the Fleet; adding, that the eyes of the Confederates were fixt upon it.

The Commons upon their return from the King to their House, had several long Debates upon the substance of his Speech, and the present Condition of the Kingdom, all tending to an Arraignment of the Government. Some urged that our Necessities arose by improvidence; That the Kings designs were guided by evil Counsels, and, that though a former Parliament engaged the King in a War; yet if things were managed by contrary designs, and the Treasure mis-imployed, this Parliament was not bound to be carried blindfold in designs not guided by sound Counsel; and that it was unusual to grant Subsidies upon Subsidies, before Grievances were redress'd, and before they would agree to any answer to what the King proposed, (upon some jealousies that the Popish Religion was too much countenanced) they framed a Petition against Popish Recusants, which was presented to him by their Speaker, attended by all the House of Commons. The King seemed not displeased at this delay, and the Parliament received from him a very gratious and satisfactory answer to their Petition; nevertheless this kindness did not produce answerable effects: For, when the matters of supply came to be again debated by the Commons, great division arose, some would give, and others would not, and the majority were prevailed on by many passionate instances of mis-government, to insist on redress of Grievances before Supply, and to have a Remonstrance thereof drawn up, and presented to the King, inveighing in their Speeches against the Duke of Buckingham, as the chief occasion of all miscarriages in Government. Nothing more then this could shew the mutability of humane Affairs, and how little dependance is to be laid on the affections of the people; for in the last Parliament of King James, this Duke of Buckingham, against whom they now exclaimed, was extolled for the great Ornament and Honour of the English Nation, and the chief preserver of the Kingdom from the Spanish practises; nay, no Honour was thought large enough to requite his Merits. The King, from those of his Council in the House of Commons, had advice from time to time of the matter of this Remonstrance, in the debates of it, which tended chiefly to discredit the Duke, and remove him from his Counsels and Affection; but the expressions were so sharp, and the style so unusual from Subjects to their Prince, that the King determined rather to dissolve the Parliament, than admit of it; and thereupon he came to the Lords House, to put an end to it. The House of Commons were Resolved into a Grand Committee, when the Usher of the Black Rod came to

1625 to call them up to the Lords Houſe, in order to a Diſſolution, but before they would admit the Speaker to reſume the Chair, to ſit as a Houſe, one Glanvil ſtood up and declared the ſenſe of the Houſe in theſe words;

Firſt, to give His Majeſtie thanks for His Gracious Anſwer to our Petition for Religion.

Next, for His care of our Health, in giving us leave to depart this dangerous time.

Laſtly, a dutiful declaration of our Affection and Loyalty, and purpoſe to ſupply His Majeſty in a Parliamentary way, in a fitting and convenient time.

Glanvill declares in the Neam of the Houſe of Commons.

This being done, the Uſher was called in, and declared his Meſſage, and the diſſolution of the Parliament immediately enſued.

Soon after this, a Proclamation was ſet out, to put the Laws in execution againſt Popiſh Recuſants, commanding the return, by a prefixed time, of children of Noblemen and others, ſent to be educated in Popiſh Schools, or Seminaries abroad; and all of the Kings Subjects under the pay of the Emperour, the King of Spain, and the Arch-Dutchies who then governed the Spaniſh Netherlands, were ſpeedily enjoyned to return to their Native Countries, to be employed in the Kings Service.

Terme kept at Reading

The Term, becauſe of the Plague in London, was kept at Reading, and ſpecial Inſtructions were given to the Judges, to put the Laws in execution againſt Recuſants.

And now the War with Spain, for the recovery of the Palatinate, which was reſolved on in the laſt year of his Fathers Reign, was vigorouſly proſecuted; and the Duke of Buckingham and the Earl of Holland were ſent Embaſſadours to the United Provinces, where they met at the Hague the Embaſſadours of France and Denmark, and concluded a League with them and the States, for reſtoring the Liberties of Germany. The King of Denmark, in conformity with the League, took up Arms, but was unfortunate therein, which he imputed to the Kings not performance of what was promiſed on his part, and that was occaſioned by the Parliaments failer of ſupplyes of money. And for the ſame reaſon the Fleet, which ſhould have been ſet out in the beginning of Summer, to attempt ſomething on the coaſt of Spain, were not out till October following. In which Expedition the Viſcount Wimbleton was General of the Land Forces, and the Earl of Eſſex Vice-Admiral of the Navie.

The Fleet, with the addition of ſome Dutch Veſſels, conſiſted of Eighty good Ships; at their firſt ſetting forth, they were encountred with ſo violent a Storm, that the greateſt part of them were diſperſed and ſcattered for ſeven days together, and a gallant Ship, called the Long Robert of Ipſwich, with an hundred and ſeventy perſons in it, were loſt. After this Tempeſt, the Fleet met at the Southern Cape, where they entered into Conſultation, what they ſhould attempt; the Earl of Eſſex, out of a great deſire to equal the glory of his Father gotten at Cadiz, propoſed the aſſailing of the Spaniſh Fleet, which then lay in that Harbour, but there were ſo many difficulties in the Enterprize, and ſo long time ſpent in the debate of it, that the whole Coaſt of Spain was thereby alarm'd, and the Spaniards had opportunity to prepare for their defence: 1625 ſo that when it was concluded, that they ſhould ſail to Cadiz, they landed their men there with great danger and oppoſition. The firſt place they attempted was Puntol Caſtle, under the ſhelter whereof the Spaniſh Ships rode; for the taking of which, twenty Engliſh and five Dutch Ships were ordered; but they, after the ſpending of two thouſand great Shot againſt it to little purpoſe, came off again. This not ſucceeding, Wimbleton ſent Sir John Burroughs, with a ſelect Regiment of Foot, to attaque the Fort on the land ſide, but theſe at, their firſt appearance, were encountered by ſome Spaniſh Forces, which were drawn together for the defence of the Country, and after a ſharp Engagement, they worſted the Spaniards in ſight of the Caſtle; whereupon the Commander within it, hung out a white Flag, and after a ſhort Parley, ſurrendred the place, with fifteen Barrels of Powder, and eight pieces of Ordnance; whileſt this was doing, the Spaniard haled moſt of their beſt Ships, under the Port-Royal, ſo that Sir Samuel Argale, who was ſent to fire the Ships was diſappointed of his purpoſe. But that which might have been very fatal herein, was the miſgovernment of the Souldiers, who by the avarice, or negligence of their Commanders, were permitted to fill themſelves ſo much with the Wine they found in the Cellars, and other places where they plundred, that they were more like to beaſts than men, and if the Spaniards had had good intelligence, they might have been all cut off; for by this means they were ſo ungovernable, that the General fearing the conſequence thereof, ſpeedily cauſed them to be embarqued and left behind him the hopes only of Renown and Victory. From thence they ſailed to the Southern Cape, where they ſtaid twenty days, in expectation of the Plate Fleet, but by the inclemency of the Air, and the intemperance of the Souldiers and Mariners, ſo great a Contagion happened in the Fleet, that they wanted men to manage the Shiles; and where ſome Ships had a greater number of infected perſons then others, to remedy this, a moſt pernicious courſe was taken; for eve-Ship was ordered by lot, to take in two ſick in exchange for ſo many ſound men, which propagated the Peſtilence, and forced the General to an untimely return, four days before the Plate Fleet came. 1625

The unproſperous ſucceſs of this Fleet diſpleathe King very much, and Wimbleton was ſometime prohibited his preſence, but he excuſed himſelf, laying a great part of the miſcarriage on the ſtubbornneſs of the Earl of Eſſex. Yet, though all were blamed, none were puniſhed for the ill managery and conduct of the Expedition.

Money borrowed by letters of privy Seal.

The War became now very chargeable, and ſince the King could not be ſupplyed in a Parliamentary way, he was adviſed by his Council, to uſe other means, and it was reſolved to borrow what money could be got by Letters of Privie Seals, ſent to ſeveral of the ableſt perſons in all parts of the Kingdom; in each of which Letters, the King promiſed in the name of himſelf, and his Succeſſors, to repay the money in eighteen moneths after the payment thereof to

To be repayd in 18 Monoths.

1627 the Collector, and the Collectors of this loan were ordered to pay the sums received into the Exchequer, and to return the names of such as went about to delay, or excuse the payment of the money required of them.

This manner of proceeding was thought very improper, unless it had been resolved not to call a Parliament so soon after; for if the King in that conjuncture had clapt up a peace with Spain (which the Spaniard had as much reason to accept, as he to offer) he might have freed himself from the necessity of calling Parliaments; (till by the goodness of his Government he had no necessity for a Parliament to work upon) and likewise prevented a following unluckie rupture betwixt him and France. The King, however, was resolved to try his fortune in another Parliament, which was summoned to meet at Westminster on the sixth of February; but first the Solemnities of the Coronation were to be performed, which was celebrated on the second of February (commonly called Candlemass day.) In the external pomp whereof, the King omitted his triumphant riding through the City, from the Tower to White-hall, partly to save the Charges thereof, and partly to prevent the danger of popular concourse; for the Plague was not quite decreased, but some dregs remained of it. In the Sacred part there was a clause added, which had been pretermitted in the time of King Henry the Sixth, which is this that followeth, viz. "Let him ob- "tain favour of the people, like Aaron in the "Tabernacle, Elisha in the Waters, Zachari- "as in the Temple; Give him Peters Key of "Discipline, and Pauls Doctrine. Which clause had been omitted in time of Popery, as intimating more Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction to be given to our Kings then the Popes allowed of.

A Parliament summoned to meet Feb 6.

The Kings Coronation.

The Coronation Oath, though the contrary was suggested, was the same which had been taken by his Predecessors, as appears by the Records of the Exchequer.

The Solemnity being over, he began his second Parliament on the sixth of February, in which he had no better success than in his first. Sir Henage Finch was chosen Speaker by the Commons, and approved by the King, a person of great prudence and moderation. The House of Commons began where they left at Oxford, with matters of Religion and publick Grievances; they made strict enquiry into what abuses had been of the Kings Grace since that time, and who were the Authors and Abettors thereof; for they had been informed of many Pardons and Reprieves to Jesuites and Priests, and their grievances were stated under four Heads.

Grievances stated.

1. The state of the King in the constant Revenue of the Crown.

2. The condition of the Subject in his Freedome.

3. The cause of the Nations good success in former times.

4. The present condition of the Kingdom.

Under the first head was considered the great dispositions of Lands and Pensions mero motu, and other exorbitant expences; In the second, the bringing in of new Impositions, the multiplying of Monopolies, and the levying of Tonnage and Poundage without an Act of Parliament. Under the third, they ascribed the great renown and reputation of our Nation in former times, to the wisdom and gravity of the Counsellors, when nothing was ordered but by publick debate; and whence arose a readiness in the Subject to assist their Soveraign in purse and person. In the fourth was represented the loss of the Nations wonted Reputation in the Expedition of Cadiz, and others; which was imputed to the want of such Counsels as were heretofore used. Forasmuch as men through difference in success were backward to adventure either their persons or their purses. 1627

The Earl of Arundel committed by the King.

Whilest these debates were agitated by the Commons, the Earl of Arundel was by the King committed to the Tower, because of a Marriage consummate betwixt the Lord Maltravers his Eldest Son, and the eldest Sister of the Duke of Lenox, one near allyed in blood to the King; for the King had designed to marry her to the Lord of Lorne, eldest Son to the Earl of Argyle, a man of great power in Scotland, meditating thereby to reconcile those two Families, who had been antiently in feuds.

The Earl besought the Kings pardon, and protested his innocency, as no way privie to the business, being contrived by the Dutchess Dowager, and his Countess, without his knowledge; but the King would not hear him.

This commitment of the Earl was resented by the House of Peers, who petitioned the King, That it is their undoubted Right, that no Peer sitting in Parliament is to be imprisoned, without Order from the House of Peers, unless it be for Treason, Felony, or refusing to give security for the Peace. And they insisted the more on this Priviledge at this time, because the Earl had six Proxies deputed to him which would be of no validity during his restraint.

Upon this Petition many debates passed in the House of Lords upon several Messages of the King about this Priviledge, which lasted from the fourteenth of March, to the eighth of June, ere he was satisfied with the Reasons of the Peers; and then the Earl was released from his imprisonment.

Whilest these matters were agitated at home, to make the difference greater between the Dutch and the Spaniard, and for further promoting that War, the King of France did conclude a Little Treaty in the Hague, by the Baron of Coupet, concerning the equipping of a Fleet of twenty Ships under the Admiral Hautain, upon a design to strengthen Genua by Water, whilest the Constable des Deguieres should be able to do the same by Land; and the English Embassador then Resident at London, had obtained of the King the Vantguard, one of the Navie-Ships, and six Merchant Ships to be employed in the same Expedition; but shortly after these English Ships were received into the pay of France, Monsieur de Soubize, taking advantage of the French Armies advance towards Italy, incited those of Rochel to stir against the King, and he with some Ships he had got together, seized on the Isle of Rhe, and some of the King of France his Ships in the Harbour. At this the King was so incensed, that he turn'd his design for Italy upon Rochel; and that occasioned another Treaty at the Hague, with the Hollanders, 1625 landers betwixt d'Espesses the French Embassadour and them, which was concluded the twelfth of April, New Style; whereby the twenty Ships under Hantain, were agreed to be employed against Soubise, and against Rochel. In the mean time many of the French Protestants took great offence at his assistance from Holland against Rochel, but their Alliance with France, and interest of State prevailed above all other considerations. Memerancy the French Admiral being thus strengthened with the Dutch Fleet, and the seven English Ships, quickly chased Soubise into the Isle of Oleron, and reprized most of the Ships he had taken, and streightned Rochel by Sea, whilest the French Army was marching to block it up by Land. The King was much offended, that the English Ships were employed in this Action, having not consented they should be used in any other Expedition, then against Genua; and thereupon he sent an expostulatory Message to the King of France, to have a reason thereof, and to demand restitution of the Ships; and when satisfaction was not given herein, the King caused a rich French Ship of New Haven to be seized on. This occasioned great clamour in France, and the French by way of Retaliation arrested the English Merchants Ships and Goods in their Harbours; but after a while a reconciliation was made, The King had his Ships again, and their Ship restored, and the English Ships and Goods were delivered back: and thus all was calm for the present, but it continued not long so, as shall be shewen hereafter.

The Traverses in the House of Peers about the Earl of Arundel, rather heightned, then allayed their intention towards the Duke of Buckingham, and encouragement is given to all that would to inform against him. One Doctor Turner a Physitian proposed six Queries in the House of Commons, touching his ill Conduct in affairs, which reflected much upon the Kings Government, and was so resented by him.

Dr. Turners Queries.

1. Whether the King hath not lost the Regality of the Narrow Seas, since the Duke became Admiral?

2. Whether his not going as Admiral in this last Fleet, was not the cause of the ill success?

3. Whether the Kings Revenue hath not been impaired through his immense Liberality?

4. Whether he hath not engrossed all Offices, and preferred his kindred to unfit places?

5. Whether he hath not made sale of places of Judicature?

6. Whether Recusants have not dependance upon his Mother and Father-in-law?

Neither was this the only thing which displeased the King, at this Time in the proceedings of the Commons. They had sent Committees to the Signet-Office, to search for Originals of his Letters for reprieving some Priests condemned at York, and when Sir Richard Weston Chancellour of the Exchequer, brought a Message to them from him for supply, acquainting them, that the Fleet was returned, Victuals spent, and the men in great necessity, and ready to mutiny for want of pay, and that a Fleet of 40 Ships which were ready to go out, could not move without money, and that the Army on the Sea Coasts, was in want both of Victuals and Cloaths. They were not prevailed on, but one Mr. Clement Cook amongst other Invectives, said, It was better to die by a foreign Enemy, then to be destroyed at home.

Sir Richard Westons message for money.

This high temper of the Commons House, was a Subject of much discourse at this time; it was said, The Parliament is a very excellent constitution, but is not without its inconveniences, as all others are; and amongst these, the great license of Speech in the House of Commons is not the least; for though it be even necessary, that they should not be debarred of Liberty, yet, that in the intention seems not to be boundless; for at all times the Zeal for Reformation of abuses in that House, being very great, those amongst them that have a facility of eloquent Speaking, may do great hurt, if they be not well inclin'd to the Government. But, those that thought the Court, by long plenty and ease, somewhat too exorbitant, believ'd this freedom of Speech very necessary.

And at this time whether it were out of a general envy against the Duke, because of his suddain exaltation to Greatness, or a particular disgust of some that thought they merited (as well as he) a greater share then they had in the Kings favour; the Tide against him in both the Houses (but especially in the House of Commons) ran so high, that nothing would be granted to the King at a lower rate than his ruine. In the mean time the King manifested a great displeasure at those proceedings, and sent Sir Richard Weston to demand satisfaction; in which they not answering his expectation by so sudden an inquisition as he required, he called the Lords and them together, and by the Lord Keeper Coventry (who lately had the Seal given to him, upon the disgrace of Williams Bishop of Lincoln who was displaced) he acquainted them with his mind.

Lord Keepers Speech.

"MY Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of the House of "Commons, His Majesties Command hath summoned you hither, and the same Command "hath put me upon the service of signifying his "will to you. His will was, that both Houses "should be called together; You, my Lords, as "Witnesses of the Justice of his resolutions, and "of his address to the House of Commons. His "Majesty would have you know, there never was "King, who better loved his people, or was "more sincerely affected towards the right use "of Parliaments, or more ready to redress what "shall be represented to him, in the quality of "Grievances (provided it be in a regular and "decent way,) then Himself: but he would "also have you know, That, as He loves His "People, so he regards His Honour; and if He "be sensible of His Subjects Grievances, of His "own He is much more, especially when they "flow from offences of such a nature, as not only "blast His Reputation, but impede the progress "of His Weighty Affairs.

"To come to Particulars, His Majesty saith, "That whereas Doctor Turner, and Mr. Cook "spake very SEDITIOUS WORDS in "your House, they were so far from being 1625 "questioned or censur'd for them by you, that "others were animated to the like rudenes by "their impunity. And though Dr. Turners Articles "were pretended against the Duke, it was in truth "a libelling his Majesties Government. And "when his Majesty did not onely by Sr. Richard "Weston, but in his owne person declare his "just displeasure, and demanded Justice against "those exorbitants, yet have you not onely halled "in your obedience to him, but have followed the "very steps of this Doctor, and upon false-bot-"tom'd suggestions endeavourd to staine his owne "and his fathers honour.

"He also complaineth that you have taken "upon you to search his signet Office, and to "examine the letters of his Secretary of State, "leaving him nothing free from their Discovery: "a thing not formerly practised.

"As concerning the Duke, whom you seem "to persecute with such asperity of disgust, I "am also commanded to tell you, that his Ma-"jesty knows (none better) he acted nothing of "publick employment, without his speciall War-"rant; that he hath discharged his trust with a-"bundance of both care and fidelity; that he "merited that trust, both from his now Majesty "and his late Father, by his personal hazard, both "at home and abroad; and that since his return "from Spain, he hath been sedulous in promo-"ting the Service and contentment of your "House. It is therefore his expres command, "that you absolutely desist from such un-Parlia-"mentary disquisitions, and resigne the reforma-"tion of what is amiss to his Majesties Care, Wis-"dome, and Justice.

"I am also to speak about the business of sup-"ply, you have been made acquainted with the "posture of his Majesties affairs, both forreign & "domestique, and with his necessitous condition; "the charge of all martiall preparations, both by "Sea and Land, hath been calculated to you, "and you promised a Supply both speedy & sui-"table to his occasions, but his Majesty complai-"neth that as yet, you have performed neither, "failing both in the measure, and in the manner. "In the measure by granting onely three Subsi-"dies, and three fifteens, a proportion vastly "short of what is requisite. In the manner being "both dilatory, and dishonorable to the King, "as arguing a distrust of him, for you have or-"der'd a Bill not to be brought into the House, "untill your grievances be both heard and an-"swered: which is such a tacite condition, as his "Majesty will not admit of.

"Therefore his Majesty commands you, to take "it into your speedy consideration, and to re-"turne your final answer by Saturday next, what "further addition you will make; and if your "Supplies commensurate & equall the demandes "of the cause, he promiseth to continue this Ses-"sions to your just content, else he must, and "will entertaine thoughts of your dismission.

"Lastly, I am commanded to tell you, that "his Majesty doth not charge the distempers up-"on the whole body, and assembly of the House; "but as he is confident, the greater Numbers are "persons of a quiet dispose, so he hopeth their in-"fluence, and this his Majesties admonition will "prevent the like for the time to come.

This speech caused great emotion in the House of Commons, and produced a Remonstrance, to this effect. (viz.) 1626

A Remonstrance.

That with extreme joy & comfort they acknowledg the favour of his Majesties most gratious expression of affection to his People, & this present Parliament. That concerning Mr. Cooke, true it is, he let fall some few words, that might admit an ill construction, and that the House was displeased therewith, as they declared by a generall Check at the very time he spoke them; and though Mr. Cookes explanation of his mind more clearly, did somewhat abate the offence of the House, yet were they resolved to take it into further consideration, and so have done, the effect whereof had appeard ere this, had they not been interrupted by this his Majesties message, and the like interruption befell them also in the business of Doctor Turner.

As concerning the examination of the Letters of his Secretary of State, as also of his Majesties owne, and searching the Signet Office, and other records; they had done nothing therein, not warranted by the precedents of former Parliaments upon the like occasions.

That concerning the Duke, they did humbly beseech his Majesty to be informed, that it hath been the constant and undoubted usage of Parliaments, to question, and complain of any person of what degree soever; and what they should do in relation to him, they little doubted but it should redound to the honour of the Crowne, and safety of the Kingdom.

Lastly, as to the matter of Supply; That if addition may be made of other things, importing his Service then in consultation amongst them, they were resolved so to supply him, as might evidence the truth of their intentions, might make him safe at home, and formidable abroad.

The Kings answer.

To this the King answered briefly; That he would have them in the first place consulte about matters of the greatest importance, and that they should have time enongh for other matters afterward. But this staid not their progress against the Duke, to which the Earl of Bristol also contributed in the Lords House.

This Earl had been secluded from the presence of both King James, and King Charles, ever since his returne from his Embassy in Spain; and taking advantage of the time, he petitioned the Peers. That whereas being a Peer of the Realm, he had not received a writ of Summons to the Parliament, he prayed, he might enjoy the Liberty of a Subject, and the Benefit of Peerage, after two years restraint, without being brought to Tryall, and if any charge where brought in against him, he might be tryed in Parliament. Upon the reading this Petition the Lords referred it to their Committees of Priviledge; from whence, after due considerations thereof, a Report was made to the House by the Earle of Hertford.

The Earl of Hertfords report to the Peers from the Committee of Priviledges, concerning the Earl of Bristols Petition.

That it was the opinion of the Committees, that his Majesty should be moved to grant a writ of Summons to the Earl, which was agreed to by the House. And upon Request, made to the King, a writ was issued accordingly, but accompanied 1626 companied with a Letter from the Lord Keeper to him, that though his Majeſty had given way to the awarding of the writ, yet notwithſtanding his pleaſure was, that his Lordſhip ſhould continue ſtill under the ſame reſtraint, as he did before, and that his perſonall attendance was to be forborn.

The Earl ſends this letter to the Houſe of Lords, and a ſecond Petition with it, offering to them, how much this might trench upon the Liberty and Safety of the Peers, to be in this ſort diſcharged by a Letter miſſive of any Subject, without the Kings hand, beſeeching them he might be heard, both as to his wrongfull reſtraint, and what he hath to ſay againſt the Duke.

E. of Briſtol Summond to the Lords bar as a delinquent.

This alarm'd the Duke to begin firſt with him, and by his perſwaſion the King commands the Atturney Generall to ſummon the Earl to the Lords Barr as a Delinquent, Briſtol appearing May the firſt, the Atturney acquainted the Peers, that he came to accuſe him of high Treaſon, and exhibited eleven Articles againſt him. But before they were read, the Earl ſaid: My Lords, I am a free-man, and a Peer of the Realm unattainted, I have ſome-what to ſay of high conſequence for his Majeſties Service, and I beſeech your Lordſhips give me leave to ſpeake.

E. of Briſtol accuſes the D. of Buckingham of high treaſon.

The Lords upon this, bid him go on. Then ſaid he, I accuſe that man the Duke of Buckingham of high Treaſon, and immediately he preſented 12 articles againſt him.

The Houſe after having read theſe Articles, committed the Earl of Briſtol to the Cuſtody of the Uſher of the Blackrod, and order'd that the Kings charge againſt the Earl, ſhould be firſt proceeded on, before that of the Earl againſt the Duke; which the King took very well.

The Articles on both ſides concurred in one deſigne, which was to render each other ſuſpected in matters of Loyalty and Religion; though by ſo doing they made good ſport to their enemies, and the world beſides, but in neither of them was any fact that amounted to treaſon, and becauſe no proceeding was made on them, it is not very requiſite to deſcribe them at large. But there being an endeavour to take the Earls cauſe out of the Houſe of Lords, & to proceed by way of indictment thereon in the Kings Bench, the Lords reſented this, and gave five reaſons why they could not give way to that manner of proceeding; which were theſe following, (viz.)

The Lords reaſons why the Earl of Briſtols cauſe ſhould not be taken out of their houſe.

1. He could have no Connſell.
2. He could uſe no Witneſs againſt the King.
3. He could not know what the evidence againſt him would be in a convenient time, to prepare for his defence.
4. The Liberties of the Houſe would thereby be infringed.
5. This Earl being indicted, it would not be in their Power to keep him from arraignment, & ſo he might be diſabled to make good his charge againſt the Duke; and therefore it was judg'd the moſt proper, and moſt legall way of proceeding; Firſt to have the charge delivered into the Houſe of Peers in Writing, and the Earl to ſet down his anſwer to it in Writing, and that the Witneſſes might be examined, and evidences on both ſides heard; and if upon full hearing, the Houſe ſhould find it to be treaſon, then to proceed by way of Indictment, if doubtfull in point of Law, to have the opinion of the Judges to clear it; if doubtfull in matter of fact, then to referr it to Regall ſait

The Commons to load heavier upon the Duke did alſo, about this time, ſend up ſome of their Members, (viz.) Sr. Dudley Diggs, Sr. John Elyot, Mr. Selden, Mr. Glanvill, Mr. Pym, Mr. Wansfort, Mr. Herbert, and Mr. Sherland with 13 Articles of high offences, and miſdemeanours againſt him, conteining ſeverall encroachments on the Royall favour, and ſome miſcarriages, which at another time, and in another man might have been connived at. Nevertheleſs he put in his anſwer to them, which was inlayed with ſo much modeſtie and humility, that many who expected a more diſdainfull defence, were converted to a good opinion of him, and in regard there was nothing conſiderable in them, but what was acted and happned in the time of King James, and not legally cognoſcible at this time, he claimd the benefit of Pardon in the 21th of King James, and the preſent Kings Coronation Pardon. But this being contrary to the expectation of the Commons, upon the 14th of June they had drawn up a Declaration of the ſame mould of their impeachment, which was not without difficulty preferr'd before a Bill of Subſidie, then ready to be read; at which the King was ſo diſſatisfied, that the next day, by a Commiſſion under the great Seal, directed to certain Lords, He diſſolved the Parliament. No ſooner was he freed from this, but the neceſſity of his affairs involved him in another imbroylment. The French Prieſts and Domeſtiques of that Nation, which came into England, with the Queen, were grown ſo inſolent, and put ſo many affronts upon the King, that he was forced to ſend them home; in which he did no more than what the French King had done before him, in ſending back all the Spaniſh Courtiers, which his Queen brought with her. But that King not looking on his own Example, and knowing on what ill terms the King ſtood, both at home and abroad, firſt, ſeiſed on all the merchants ſhips, which lay on the River of Burdeaux, and then the Peace lately patcht up, was turned into an open Warr, ſo that the King was fain to make uſe of thoſe forces againſt the French, which were deſigned to have been uſed againſt the Spanyard, and to comply with the deſires of the Rochellers, who humbly ſued to him at this time, for his protection and defence. But the fleet, which he deſigned for their aſſiſtance, , not going out till after Michaelmas, found greater oppoſition at the Sea, then they feared from the land, being encountred with ſtrong tempeſts, and thereby neceſſitated to return, without doing any thing, but onely ſhewing the Kings good will, and readineſs to help them.

The Commons prepare a declaration of the matter of their impeachment againſt the Duke.

The Fleet deſigned to relieve Rochell is diſtreſſed by Tempeſt.

Whileſt this diſpute betwixt the two Kings continued, very ſad news came hither from Germany, That the King of Denmark, who had armed (as was before mentioned) on behalf of the Elector Palatine, and the Proteſtant Princes of

Germany

1626 Germany, notwithstanding the late Aid sent from England, of six thousand men, under the Conduct of Sir Charles Morgan, had on the seventeenth of August received a total overthrow by Tilly, and was reduced to such distress, that if present succour came not, he was ruined for ever; That the Sound was like to be lost, the English Garrison at Stoad, straightly besiged, and our East-land Trade and Staple at Hambrough almost given up for gone.

Sad news from Germany.

The King was much perplext at this, and the more because of his inability in the condition he was to send further Succours to him.

That which chiefly was wanting, was Treasure, and the present use of it could not admit of so much delay, as to call a Parliament, which is the ordinary means of supply. The King was therefore in this straight advised by his Council, That forasmuch as the Commons in Parliament, at their late Sitting, had passed a Bill of Subsidies, and that the Parliament was dissolved before the Bill passed into an Act, he might require these Subsidies of the Subject, which the House of Commons, in their names had assented to, and yet not by the name of Subsidies, but in the way of Loan, till the next Parliament should enable him to make payment of it, or to confirm the levying thereof, by a subsequent Act. In pursuance of this advice, Commissions were issued out under the Great Seal to divers Commissioners in all parts, for the levying these moneys, who had the Instructions following, to direct them in the execution thereof.

A Commission is passed for a Loan.

Instructions to the Commissioners.

1. That for a good example to others, they should themselves lend His Majesty the several sums required.

2. To go according to the Rates at which people were assessed in the Book of the last Subsidie.

3. To stir up every man to a chearful lending, by declaring the unavoidable necessity of taking this course, and using other the most prevalent Arguments they could devise; as the honour of the Nation, the defence of true Religion, the safety of Prince and People.

4. That they appoint the days of Payment to be within fourteen days.

5. That they treat with every one apart, and not in the hearing of others.

6. That they begin with such as are like to shew best examples.

7. That they endeavour to discover, whether any by underhand perswasions, or otherwise, go about to hinder the good intentions of others, and if any such be found, to certifie their names, qualities, and habitations to the Council.

8. That they signifie His Majesties pleasure to remit, upon the lending of these sums, whatsoever hath been desired upon the late Benevolence, or Privie Seals.

9. That they admit of no suit to be made, or reasons to be given, for the abating of any sum.

10. That upon their Faith, and Allegiance to his Majesty they keep these Instructions secret to themselves, and not discover them to any others.

And besides these private Instructions, they were to represent to the people the deplorable estate of Rochel, then closely besieged by the Duke of Guise; which, if not speedily relieved, would fall into the hands of the Enemies of the Protestant Religion. But though these Commissioners brought in good sums of money, yet many, and some of good quality refused, and were therefore committed to several prisons. 1626

This year died two of the most eminent men for Learning, that ever the Nation had, Doctor Andrews Bishop of Winchester, and Sir Francis Bacon, Viscount St. Albans.

1627 It was now the third year of His Majesties Reign, when Rhe Action was agreed on: and though money came not so plentifully as was hoped, yet the Duke of Buckingham High Admiral of England, desirous to wipe away the imputation of Negligence, in relation to his Admiralship, had, with much ado, compleated his Naval Forces, consisting of six thousand Horse and Foot in ten Ships-Royal, and ninty Merchant-men; with which he sets Sail from Portsmouth the 27*th* of June, and published his Manifesto the twenty first of July following, declaring at large the Kings Affection to the Reformed Churches in France, and his displeasure at the last mis-imploying of his Ships against the Rochellers. The first design of this Fleet was intended against Fort Lewis, wherein being prevented by the Duke of Angoulesme, they resolved upon the Isle of Rhe; twelve Ships therefore were sent to guard the entry of Port Breton, the rest sailed on to a Fort of the Isle of Rhe, called De la Price, making their approaches with their Canon so near, that Monsieur Toiras, Governour of the Citadel of St. Martin, perceiving their intention, sent out his Forces, to the number of one thousand, in seven partitions, Horse and Foot, to impede their coming on shore: These were encountred by twelve hundred English, whom Sir John Burrough, Sir Alexander Brett, Sir Edward Conway, and Sir Charls Rich, had landed by the advantage of their great Ordnance. The fight was sharp and quick, wherein many brave Gentlemen lost their lives on both sides; of the French Monsieur Restringler, Brother to Toiras, Chascalois, Canses, Naval, Tatlian, Mountain, Hensteby, Beisoneer, and Candamine. Of the English, Sir Thomas York, Sir William Hegden, Sir Thomas Thornay, Sir George Blundel, Courtney, Glin, Whaley, Powel, Woodhouse, Goring, &c. and a Kinsman of Sir George Blundels, with Monsieur de Blancart Agent for the Duke of Roan, and the Protestants. And of the wounded were, Rich, Conway, Hawle, Greenvile, Abraham Rainford, Wellome, Thorp, Maryles, and Bennet: The Victory uncertain. The English General removed his Camp, and intrenching, dispatched Sonbize, and Sir William Beecher to Rochel, who returned with five hundred Foot, and found the Duke before St. Martins Castle (the chief strength of the Island) notwithstanding the disswasion of his Council, who advised him first to attempt the other Castle, called the Mede, which they might in all likelihood have carried, and would have proved an handsome, and safe place of retreat in their future necessity. Buckingham falls to circumvallation, ordring the Ships to encompass the Island without, to hinder all provision and supply from Toiras; by which means the besieged were for the space of two moneths greatly distressed, in which time there hapned a hot conflict between both Parties, and that with equal success; and by a Letter of 1627 The Duke of Buckinghams expedition to the Isle of Rhe.

Toiras

1626 Toiras to Monſieur Bellamonnt, their extremity appeared to be ſuch, that (as he there ſaid) the Mills could not long ſtand, all their Corn was ſpent, which enforced their Souldiers to feed on their Store of Bisket, not laſting above ten days: hereupon the Duke of Buckingham ſummons Toiras, who refuſing to falſifie his Truſt, the Engliſh now ſtrengthened with freſh Auxiliaries from England and Ireland, under the Command of Sir Ralph Binghes, and Sir Pierce Crosby, ſet themſelves to invent new ſorts of Engines to batter the Citadel; all which were rendred fruitleſs by Wind and Waves. And one Abbot Marſcilane procured Monſieur Valin to undertake the conveying of twelve Pinnaces laden with proviſion, to the relief of Toiras and his Souldiers, which he proſperouſly atchieved, and at his return carried back with him their ſick and wounded.

In the mean time ſcarcity afflicts the Engliſh Camp, and Sir John Burroughs viewing the Works, was ſhot through, whereof he ſhortly died. The French King came from Court to the Camp, and thrice in ten days attempted to ſend over ſome Aids to the Caſtle, but the Engliſh Ships repelled them, and three days after another Brother of Toiras was ſlain, and his Squadron put to flight. And now the Souldiers of the Caſtle were reduced to greater hardſhip then before, not being furniſhed with Bread for above four dayes; wherefore having no other way left, Toiras reſolved to win time by treating with the Duke of Buckingham about ſurrender, hoping in the interim to have ſome better news from his Aſſociates, which accordingly fell out; for Monſieur Manpaile, who with other Pilots, heretofore had ſounded the Shelves, and deſigned the Station for ſome Ships, for the relief of the Iſland, contrived a way to bring them, in deſpight of the Engliſh: It was now the Winter, and the nights long and dark, by which advantage he had opportunity to paſs by them with a Fleet of 35 Sail, 150 Mariners, 300 Souldiers, 160 of the chief Nobility, and many Noble Commanders, with great ſtore of all ſorts of Proviſion, having before ſent ſome diſſembling Renegadoes, to tell the Engliſh that he paſſed a contrary way: ſo that when the Duke of Buckingham expected a ſurrender, they boldly ſhewed him their Rundlets of Wine, and Turkies and Capons upon the points of their Pikes and Spears.

The Duke hereat diſmayed, ſpends the night in Council, and determines with all ſpeed to raiſe the ſiege, and be gone; but the Rochellers intreaties, and Dolbiers arrival from England, with aſſurance of Auxiliaries, unhappily prevailed with him for a longer ſtay, during which, the fame of freſh Supplies to the beſiegers publiſhed over all France, to be coming, under the Command of the Earl of Holland, haſtned the French to ſend forth another Fleet, conſiſting of fifteen good Ships, and other ſmaller Boats, part to St. Martins, and the reſt to the Meadow Caſtle, beſides ſeven others which got to the Meadow Fort, under Bellamounts command. And now the French King reſolved to diſlodge the Engliſh, and diſpatched over for the Service, an Army of four thouſand Foot, and two hundred Horſe, beſides Volunteers, under the Command of the Marſhal of Schomberg: with Marylane his Lieutenant General, to whom came all the beſieged, and greateſt part of the Iſlanders, being in all above eleven thouſand men; after which, another party under Command of Baſſompiere and Haliere, conſiſting of eight hundred of their Kings Life-guard, an hundred and fifty of the Country thereabout, 30 of the Kings Horſe, and 3 great Braſs Pieces, landed at the Meadow Caſtle. Againſt theſe laſt, the Duke of Buckingham marched with 500 Foot, and 40 Horſe, and forced them to retreat to the Caſtle, but returning to his Camp, he finds the Trenches poſſeſſed by another party of the French Army; Stanley is ordered to beat them out again, which he doth by main force, though not without loſs; and the Lord Montjoy ſeized a ſmall Troop of French: him they endeavoured to ſurprize with ſix Horſe in ſhew; whom he chaſed ſo far, that he had almoſt come in danger of their Ambuſcade. One dark night a party of the Engliſh fell upon a party of the French, and not well diſcovering one another, ſo mingled, that by miſtake, the Engliſh falling into the French Camp, became a prey to them. 1626

Nor did War only afflict the Engliſh, but alſo Sickneſs and Want, whereby their Souldiers and Seamen were generally enfeebled, which put the Duke upon his final reſolution of taking his farewell of the Iſland, with one more Aſſault to Saint Martins Caſtle. Toiras had intelligence of it, & therefore he managed his buſineſs accordingly, and gave them ſo hot a welcome, as, being oppreſſed and fell'd to the ground with ſhot, they dropt in heaps: ſo that after a great loſs received, the Duke commanded a retreat to be ſounded, and ſoon after demoliſhed his Works, filled his Ditches, and levelled his Trenches, in order to his departure. Schomberg and Marylane purſued, hollowing to them in a Bravado, and brandiſhing their Swords. The Engliſh thinking the Enemy would then have charged them, drew up in Battalia; but they knowing what advantage the way would ſhortly give them, made a halt, whereupon the Duke marched on in Military Order, until he came to the Village Curda, where they made another ſtand, and by an Ambuſcade of Muſqueteers placed behind the old Walls, Walks, Hedges, and Ditches, compelled the French to retreat; but the whole Army coming up, followed them ſlowly for 3 miles, till they came to Anſerine Cauſway, which was ſo narrow, that they could only march ſix abreſt, with Ditches on either ſide, moſtly ending in Saltpits: and now Schomberg eſpying his expected opportunity, poured forth a great volley of ſhot againſt them, and then the Engliſh began to march as faſt as poſſibly; but the Lord Montjoy's Troops unable to endure the charge of the French Horſe, turned tail, and riding in amongſt the other Ranks, put them into ſuch a diſorder, as inabled the French eaſily to break in upon them and rout them, with no ſmall ſlaughter, overthrowing ſome into the Ditches and Saltpits, and piercing others as they lay in the dirt. Nor was flight any whit more auſpicious to them for thoſe who confuſedly ran away, and caſting away their Arms, leaped into the Water, were alſo cut off. Cunninghams Horſe fought it out nobly unto the laſt man. The Lord Monjoy was taken Priſoner, and civilly uſed. Some Re-

1627 Reformadoes, by uneven, and turning paths, made their way to the further bridg, with much danger, where joyning with Conway, Crosby, Fryar, and Hacksvil, and their forces, they made good that Pass by the repulse of the enemy, and leaving a guard of Musqueteers there all day, set the Bridge on fire, and lodged that night straglingly up and down. The next day the Duke demanded, and obtained the dead bodys, and went on board. Great was this days loss, viz about fifty Officers, among whom where Sr. William Cunningham, Sr. Charles Rich, and Sr. Alexander Brett, and near two thousand common Souldiers were slain, thirty prisoners of note, and fourty four Colours were taken: of the French not above three hundred were lost. The Duke hoised Sail, and met the Earl of Holland, with his unseasonable Recruits, near the Western Coast of England; and at his return finding a favorable reception at the Kings hands, he layd the loss of the designe upon the Earls not timely seconding the Expedition. But at Sea, things went somewhat better, where Captain Trettor, in his return from Hambrough, seized by command a great French ship at the Texel in Holland, named the Saint Esprit, with twenty brass Culverines, two brass Semi-culverins, two other brass Guns, sixteen large Iron Guns & two lesser, & in the hold for ballast twelve great Guns, and Arms for eleven hundred Souldiers, and eighteen Barrels of Powder. And Sr. John Pennington, Vice-Admirall took thirty four of their rich merchant men, homewards bound, all which were safely brought into England, to sweeten, though not countervail the loss received at Rochell. The ill Success of this Enterprise did much incense the People against the Duke of Buckingham, but the King did not discover any discontent towards him; onely he told him, that Sr. Sackville Crow had written to him of a farr greater loss, then he acknowledged. During this expedition, Abbot, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, by letters Patents of the 9th of October, was suspended from all his Metropolitan Jurisdiction, and confined to his House at Ford in Kent, and the exercise thereof was committed to the Bishops of London, Durham, Rochester, Oxford, and Bath and Wells, or to any four, three, or two, of them. The occasion of this Commission was not discover'd otherwise then by what was expres's'd in the Commission it self, (viz) That the said Arch-Bishop could not at that present, in his owne person attend those Services, which were otherwise Proper for his cognisance and Jurisdiction, and which as Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, he might and ought in his own person have performed, and executed. But the true reason was for that the King was perswaded, the non-conformists to the Discipline of the Church, too much increased by the remisnes of his Government.

He returns unsuccessfull.

The Arch-Bishop of Canterbury is suspended & confined to his house

This Michaelmas Terme there was a great debate in the Kings-bench, concerning some of those imprison'd, for refusing the Loan, who moved for an Habeas Corpus, and had it. The Atturney Generall, Sr. Robert Heath, upon their appearance alledged, they were not baileable, and their Counsell the contrary, and the Court agreed with the Atturney, so that they were continued in Prison, till an order Pass'd in Councell, for a generall release, which was shortly after.

1627 The French King, encouraged by the Success he had against our forces, resolv'd upon a more formidable siege against Rochell, and having made a Line about it on the Lands-side, with three forts, by the advice of Cardinal Richlieu, and the loan of many Merchants ships, belonging to the Subjects of the United Netherlands, he attempted a Barracade, fourteen hundred yards in length, cross the Channel, to hinder all relief by Sea; whereby the Rochellers expected nothing but ruine, unless they could prevent it, so that they with great haste sent Monsieur Soubize and their Deputies to England, to sollicite the King for Supplys, before the work should be compleated, who was so affected with their miseries, that he promised them all the assistance he could; and to enable him thereunto, he borrowed an hundred and twenty thousand Pound of the City of London, for which and other Debts, they had lands, to the valew of one and twenty thousand Pounds a year assured to them. He also borrowed of the East-India Compania thirty thousand pounds, and what money else he could get by privy Seals. Moreover it was resolved to levy money by Excise, and a Commission, under the great Seal, was passd on the third of February to authorize it; but the execution thereof was suspended by the King, who never was guilty of any irregular action, by the impulse of his owne nature, nor perswaded by others but by extream necessity, & at this time, in compliance with his own good inclinations, he chose rather to call a Parliament, which was summond to meet on the 17th of March, then proceed in extraordinary wayes, for he was much troubled at the generall discontent of the People, and he hoped by their counsels to beget a good understanding betwixt himself and them.

A Barracado to be made cross the Channel leading to Rochel.

On the 17th of March, the Parliament assembled at Westminster, and the King having sent for the Commons to the Lords-house expressed himself in these words to both Houses.

The Kings speech to both Houses of Parliament.

My Lords and Gentlemen.

THese times are for action, for action, I say, not for words; therfore I shall use but a few; and (as Kings are said to be exemplary to their Subjects, so) I wish you would imitate me in this, and use as few, falling upon speedy consultation. No man is, I conceive, such a stranger to the common necessity, as to expostulate the cause of this meeting, and not to think supply to be the end of it; and as this necessity is the product and consequent of your advice, so the true Religion, the Laws and Liberties of this State, and just defence of your Friends and Allies, being so considerably concernd, will be, I hope arguments enough to perswade Supply; for if it be (as most true it is) both my duty, and yours, to preserve this Church and Commonwealth, this exigent of time certainly requires it.

In this time of common danger, I have taken the most ancient, speedy, and best way, for supply, by calling you together. If (which God forbid) you do not your duty, in contributing what may answer the quality of my occasions, it shall suffice, I have done mine; In the Conscience where-1627 whereof I ſhall reſt content, and take ſome other courſe, for which God hath empowered me, to ſave that, which the folly of particular men might hazard to loſe.

I take not this as a menace (for I ſcorn to threaten my inferiours) but as an admonition from him who is tyed, both by nature and duty, to provide for your preſervations; and I hope, though I thus ſpeak, your demeanors will be ſuch, as ſhall oblige me in thankefulnes to meet you oftner, then which nothing ſhall be more pleaſing to me. Remembring the diſtractions of our laſt meeting, you may ſuppoſe I have no confidence of good ſucceſs at this time, but be aſſured I ſhall freely forget and forgive what is paſſ'd, hoping you will follow that ſacred advice, lately incu cated, To maintain the Unity of the Spirit in the bond of Peace.

The Parliament ſeemd very much affected with what the King ſaid, and the Commons freely voted, to grant him five Subſidies, whereof when Secretary Cook info med the King, he asked him, by how many voices it was carried, who replyed by one, at which perceiving the Kings countenance to change; S. ſaid he, your Majeſty hath the greater cauſe to rejoyce, for the Houſe was ſo unanimous therein, as they made but one voice. At which the King was exceedingly pleaſed, and bid the Secretary tell them, he would deny them nothing of their Liberties, which any of his predeceſſors had granted. But whilſt a Bill was in preparation for theſe Subſidies, they conſider'd of the publique grievances of the Kingdom.

1628 The Kings extraordinary wants put him, as you have heard, upon ſome unuſuall courſes for levying of Money, not very warrantable by our ancient Lawes, and ſome that were unwilling to countenance ſuch courſes, Or otherwiſe diſaffected to the Government, upon refuſal were impriſoned; and becauſe no legal cauſe could be aſſigned for ſuch reſtraint, the Warrants, whereby they were impriſond, had no cauſe ſpecified in them, which was exclaimd againſt, as not legal, and a great Grievance. There is ſcarce any thing leſſer then death, more grievous then impriſonment, and though by our Lawes no man can be impriſon'd without a legal cauſe expreſſed; yet thoſe that are in the exerciſe of power, in tumultuous times, upon extraordinary emergencies, are conſtraind to paſs over thoſe bounds; for no ſuch proviſion hath yet, or can be made, to exclude all manner of arbitrary exerciſe of Government: but whoever they be, that exceed in this tender point, it will become their prudence to do it with extraordinary caption.

Warrants of impriſonment without ſpecification of the cauſe illegall.

Upon the returne of the Fleet after the late actions at Sea, the Souldiers, for want of pay, were billeted in private houſes, which was alledged to be againſt the Law, and to aggravate this, the rudeneſs of their perſons, and their country (being Scotch and Iriſh) did much contribute. Nevertheleſs though their actions were bad, and their perſons worſe, the Commons liked not that they ſhould be puniſhed by Law Martiall. For there being a Commiſſion iſſued to trie offences of the Soldiers by Martiall Law, they exclaimed at it, and it was urg'd as a grievance, yet till that time the Kings Prerogative, in making and eſtabliſhing Martiall Laws, was never queſtioned, though ſince the petition of Right, there is doubt of it. Magna Charta and ſix others Statutes explanatory of it, were expreſs againſt illegall levies of Money, and impriſonments, and though thoſe Statutes were in force, whether the Parliament thought them antiquated, and therefore leſs regarded, or for what other reaſon it is not ſaid, To provide againſt the Grievances complain'd, &c., They drew up that memorable Law, called The Petition of Right, and preſented it to the King, to which he gave the Royall Aſſent in full Parliament, to the very great liking of the people. And it was now thought there was ſo ſweet an Harmony betwixt the King and the Parliament, that nothing could hinder the Nation of as much happineſs, as it could be capable of; but this conceſſion inflam'd the zeal of many of the Houſe of Commons, to preſs a little further, and they immediately framed a Remonſtrance of ſeverall late miſcarriages in Government, in the concluſion whereof, they ſaid, The exceſſive power of the Duke of Buckingham, and the abuſe of that power is the principall cauſe of all the evills and dangers, therein mentioned; and therefore they humbly ſubmit it to his Majeſties Wiſdom, whether it can be ſafe for himſelf, or for his Kingdom, that ſo great power, both by Sea and Land, as reſt in him, ſhould be truſted in the hands of any one Subject whatſoever.

Martial law complaind of by the Commons,

Concluſion of the Remonſtance againſt the D. of Buckingham.

1628 On the 17th of June, this Remonſtrance was preſented to the King, with the Bill of Subſidies, in the Banquetting-Houſe at Whitehall, who when he had heard it read, told them he little expected ſuch a Remonſtrance, after he had ſo graciouſly paſs'd the petition of Right, and for the Grievances, ſpecified therein, he would conſider of them, as they ſhould deſerve.

The King had levyed the dutyes of Tonnage and Poundage, ever ſince the firſt of his Reign, which the Houſe of Commons alleadged he ought not to have done, or at leaſt that they could not now be taken, ſince the paſſing of the late Petition of Right; and they prepared a Remonſtrance againſt it; but the King unwilling to hear of any more Remonſtrances of ſuch a ſtreine, reſolved to fruſtrate it, by proroguing the Parliament, from the 26th of June, to the 20th of October, and calling both Houſes together to that end, he delivered his mind as followeth.

My Lords and Gentlemen.

"IT may ſeem ſtrange, that I come ſo ſud-
"dainly to end this Seſſion, therefore be"fore I give my aſſent to the Bills, I will tell "you the cauſe; (though I muſt avow, I owe
"an account of my actions to none, but God
"alone.) It is known to every one, that a while "ago, the Houſe of Commons gave me a Re-
"monſtrance, how acceptable, every man may "judge, and for the merit of it, I will not call
"that in queſtion, for I am ſure, no wiſe man
"can juſtifie it. Now ſince I am certainly in"formed, that a ſecond Remonſtrance is preparing for me, to take away my profit of Tonnage
"and Poundage (one of the chief maintenances
"of the Crowne) by alledging, that I have

The Kings ſpeech.

1628 "given away my Right thereof, by my answer to "your Petition.

"This is so prejudiciall to me, as I am forced "to end this Session, some few houres before I "meant it; being willing not to receive any "more Remonstrances, to which I must give "an harsh answer.

"And since I see, that even the House of "Commons begins already to make false Con-"structions of what I granted in your Petition, "lest it be worse interpreted in the Country, I "now make a declaration, concerning the true "intent thereof.

"The profession of both Houses, in the time "of hammering this Petition, was, no wayes to "trench upon my Prerogative, saying, they "had neither intention, nor Power, to hurt it.

"Therefore it must needs be conceived, that "I have granted no new, but onely confirmed "the ancient Liberties of my Subjects. Yet to "shew the clearness of my intentions, that I "neither repent nor mean to recede from any "thing, that I have promised you, I do here de-"clare, that those things, which have been done, "whereby men had cause to suspect the Liberty "of the Subject to be trenched upon (which in-"deed was the true and first ground of the Pe-"tition) shall not hereafter be drawn into ex-"ample for your prejudice; And in time to "come (on the word of a King) you shall not "have the like cause to complain.

"But as for Tonnage and Poundage, it is a "thing I cannot want, and was never intended "by you to aske, never meant (I am sure) by "me to grant. To conclude, I command you "all that are here, to take notice of what I "have spoken at this time, to be the true intent & "meaning of what I granted you in your Peti-"tion; but especially you, My Lords the Judges, "for to you onely under me belongs the inter-"pretation of the Lawes, for none of the Houses "of Parliament, joint or separate, (what new "doctrine soever may be raisd) have any power "either to make or declare a Law, without my "consent.

During this Sessions, the Duke was not dis-couraged by the former Remonstrance, as to hinder his activity, in preparing a new, for the relief of Rochell, both by Sea and Land; but being ready to set sail, he was suddenly cut off, being slain at Portsmouth, in the 36th year of his age, by the hand of one John Felton, a dis-contented Officer of the last yeares Army.

The D. of Buckingham slain at Portsmouth.

The first News of this fact came to the King (then about four miles distant) at his publick devotion, whose intentions were so steady upon that sacred duty, that he received it without the least emotion of Spirit, or discomposure of Countenance. He sent Dr. Hutchinson (one of his Chaplains in ordinary, & then in the course of his attendance) to trye, if he could learn out of him, by what inducement he committed that horrible murder; who told him, his onely motive was, That the Duke had been declared an enemy to the Commonwealth in the late Remon-strance, tendred to the King by the Parliament, and afterwards said the same again, and again, both at the time of his examination before the Lords of the Councell, and at his execution. Ne-vertheless, when he was made sensible of the foulness of the Act, he manifested great sorrow and contrition for it. But that, which excited this miserable man to so great a mischief, had likewise influenced the people in generall, who rejoyced at his death, as one of the greatest ene-mies of their Country. 1628

But those that knew him, and observed his actions, deliver him to posterity as one of the most generous and accomplished persons of that time. "His outward forme was a great master-"piece of Nature, exact in every part, nor was "his mind without his ornaments, being of a very "affable & courteous disposition, and though ad-"vanced to as great dignity as a subject could be "capable of, he did not leave those qualities. He "was said to be addicted more, then was fit, to the "love of women, but it is not said, that his pas-"sion that way, reached to the ruine, or publick "defamation of any particular person, or family. "He had lesse studied books then men, and if he "had lived a few more years, to have seen through "the temptations of greatness, he might have pro-"ved as great a Pillar of this State, as any that "went before him. He was very bountifull to his "kindred and servants, most of which he ad-"vanced to honour and wealth; and to all to "whom he professed friendship. He was constant "in it, in so much, that there rarely pass'd a "day in Court whilst he was there, wherein he "did not some good Office to one or other; and "as I have heard from one neer him, every mor-"ning, before he went to the King, he collected "in paper, what publick matters he had to ac-"quaint him with, and the suites he had to make "in behalfe of those that sollicited him. But "as he was kind to his friends and dependents, so "he was formidable to his enemies, especially "to such as deceived him under a guise of "friendship. His courage was very great, and "did too much transport him, for if he had a "little yielded to the times, and with drawn "from those stormes, he could neither prevent "nor allay, he might perhaps have found a mil-"der fate.

His Cha-racter.

His bowels were interr'd in Portsmouth, and his body was brought to York-house, from whence after some time it was entomb'd at Westminster in St. Edwards Chappell, and a stately Monument was erected over it by his Executors. And Fel-ton being arraigned, & found guilty at the Kings-bench-barr at Westminster, was hanged at Ty-burn, and afterwards his body was sent to Ports-mouth, where without the Towne it was hanged in chaines, till it was consumed.

The Dukes body en-tomb'd at Westminster, at St. Ed-wards Chap-pell.

The sad accident of the Dukes death made little or no stop in the proceedings of the Fleet, which at the last set forward, under the Earl of Lyndsey; but before he could get to Rochell, the haven was so barr'd, that it was impossible for his ships to force their way (though it was gallantly often attempted) so that the Rochellers seeing this hope to fail, sent out some of the principall of the Town, to make their submission to the King, and set open the gates, to receive him.

The time now drawing neer for the meeting of the Parliament, the King for many weighty reasons, put of their Assembling to the 20th of January, and in the mean time Arch-bishop

Abbot

1628 Archbiſhop Abbot reſtored to favour.

Abbot was admitted to kiſs his hands, and commanded not to fail of his attendance at the Councel-table: which was done at this conjuncture, to moderate the heats of certain Eccleſiaſticks: who made great diſturbance in the Church, by ſome Scholaſticall controverſies, in the points of Predeſtination, grace and perſeverance. Both parties were abetted by ſeverall Biſhops, and each of them would pretend the opinions they held, to be the Doctrine of the Church, when in truth they were but the opinions of private men (for nothing can be called the doctrine of the Church, that is not ſo declar'd by the whole Clergy, lawfully aſſembled in Convocation). Theſe were diſtinguiſhed by the names of Calviniſts and Arminians. The firſt countenanced by the Commons in Parliament, and ſome few of the Biſhops; the later juſtified by moſt of the Biſhops, and not diſcountenanced by the King. The firſt of theſe were likewiſe ſomewhat remiſs in exacting a rigid conformity to the Ceremonies; the later perhaps more earneſt then was needfull therein at this time, but withall they were great Aſſertors of the Prerogative Royall. The King was very intent for the Peace of the whole, and cauſed the nine and thirty Articles of the Church to be publiſhed, with a declaration to reſtrain all diſputes, in the points controverted; and now alſo a book, writ by one Montagne (in King James his time of theſe controverſies, called Apello Cæſarem, was called in, and Dr. Potter a Calviniſt, is made Biſhop of Carliſle, but theſe Acts did not mollifie the minds of thoſe, for whome they were intended, for a while after (viz.) the

The Parliament is aſſembled.

20th of January the Parliament aſſembled, and the grand Committees, which are uſually the firſt things, ſetled at the opening of that Aſſembly, were very buſy and active, That of Religion made great complaints of the invaſions upon Religion, which they pretended was much endangered, by the encreaſe of Popery and Arminianiſme, and many inſtances were made to heighten the apprehenſions of the people therein; whilſt the Houſe was not leſs active in their inquiſitions into the miſcarriages in civil affaires, concerning which diverſe Petitions were preſented, importing that many merchants had their goods ſeized, and informations preferr'd againſt them in the Star-chamber, for refuſing to pay the cuſtome of Tonnage and Poundage againſt the tenour of the petition of Right; and one of theſe merchants, named Rolls, being a member of the Houſe of Commons, what was done towards him, was judged a breach of Priviledge, for which the Cuſtomers were ſummond to the Houſe, to anſwer their miſdemeanour therein: The King interpoſed in this matter, and enformed the Houſe, that what they did, was done, as by men addicted to his command, adding, he did not commiſſionate them, to take it as of Right belonging to him, but out of a firme preſumption, that the Houſe of Commons, ſuitable to their large profeſſions, would grant it him by Bill, which he deſired they would diſpatch to put an end to the diſpute. This gave no Satisfaction, but debates in the Houſe ran very high, and they reſolved to proceed to a remonſtrance againſt the levying the ſubſidies of Tonnage and Poundage, not being granted by Act of Parliament. In which point they were ſo earneſt on the ſecond of March, that fearing they ſhould be diſſolved, before they had vented their paſſion in it, they locked the dores of the Houſe, and gave the key to Sr Miles Hobbard, one of their Members, to keep; and refuſed to admit the Uſher of the Blackrod, whom the King had ſent with a Meſſage to them; whereat he was ſo offended, that he ſent for the Captain of the Penſioners, and the Guards, to force an entrance, and in the mean time the heads of a Remonſtrance were offer'd to Sr John Fynch the Speaker, to be put to the queſtion, which he refuſing, becauſe the King had given order to adjourne to the tenth of March, and to put no queſtion, nor admit of any debate, Mr. Denzill Hollis, and Sr. Peter Hayman held him in the chair, till by one of them the Proteſtation was read, and then they roſe before the Penſioners and Guards came, and the Houſe was adjourned to the tenth of March.

The Commons lock the dores of their houſe, and refuſe to admit the Uſher of the Blackrod.

Grand committees ſetled and very active.

The Proteſtation of the Commons.

1. Whoſoever ſhall bring in an Innovation of Religion; or by favour ſeek to introduce Popery, or Arminianiſme, or other opinions, diſagreeing from the true and Orthodox Church, ſhall be reputed a Capitall enemy to the Kingdom and Common-wealth.

2. Whoſoever ſhall counſell, or adviſe the taking or levying of the Subſidies of Tonnage, and Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, or ſhall be an Actor or Inſtrument therein, ſhall be likewiſe reputed a Capitall enemy to this Common-wealth.

3. If any man ſhall voluntarily yeild or pay the ſaid Subſidies of Tonnage or Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, he ſhall be reputed a Betrayer of the Liberties of England, and an Enemy to this Common-wealth.

Two dayes after a Proclamation was iſſued to declare the Parliament diſſolved, though the diſſolution was not formally executed, till the tenth of March, at which time the King came to the Lords-Houſe, and being ſet on his Throne, with his Crown on his head, and in his Robes, and the Lords in their Robes alſo, he beſpoke them thus.

My Lords.

I Never came here upon ſo unpleaſant an occaſion, it being the diſſolution of a Parliament; therefore men may have ſome cauſe to wonder, why I ſhould not rather chuſe to do this by Commiſſion, it being a generall Maxim of Kings, to leave harſh Commands to their Miniſters, themſelves onely executing pleaſing Commands, yet conſidering that Juſtice as well conſiſts in the reward and praiſe of vertue, as puniſhing of vice, I thought it neceſſary to come here to day, to declare to you, and all the world, that it was meerly the undutifull, and ſeditious Cariage of the Lower-Houſe, that hath made the diſſolution of the Parliament. And you My Lords are ſo far from being cauſes of it, that I take as much comfort in your dutyfull demeanours, as I am juſtly diſtaſted with their proceedings.

1628 "dings. Yet to avoyd mistakings, let me tell you, "that it is so far from me, to adjudge all that house "guilty, that I know there are as dutyfull Sub- "jects, as any in the World; it being but some "few vipers amongst them, that did cast this "mist of undutifulnes before their eyes; yet to "say truth, there was a good number there, that "would not be infected by this Contagion, in "so much that some did expres their duties in "speaking, which was the generall fault of the "House the last day. To conclude, as these Vi- "pers must look for their reward of Punishment, "so you, My Lords, must justly expect from me "that favour and protection, that a good King "oweth to his loving and dutifull Nobility.

The King was highly provoked, as is evident by this speech, at the disorder and tumultuous carriage of many of the Members of the Commons-House of Parliament, who streind all things beyond their naturall length, a little moderation and obsequiousnes might have obteind of him, whatsoever was desired; and if he had not had better intentions towards his Subjects, then some of those dissontented Spirits would have made the world beleive he had, the dissolution of this might have been the end of all Parliaments, and we might have been deprived of that Spring, from whence the blessings of Peace, and happines, have formerly been derived on this Church and State. And this there wanted not some, to infuse into him, by the example of the King of France then reigning. For whereas in an assembly of the three Estates (which is in the nature of our Parliament) some years before this time, the Commons (being their third Estate) entrenched too busily upon the Liberties of the Clergy, and some Priviledges, which the Nobility enjoyed, by the favour of the former Kings; it gave the King so great offence, that he dissolved them, and their constitution together, and ordained another kind of Assembly in place thereof, which He called L' Assemble des Notables, That is to say, The Assembly of principal Persons, which are composed of select persons out of all orders of Estates of the Kings nomination, to which is added a Counsellor out of every Court of Parliament in France, and the Acts of this Assembly are no less obliging to the People, than the others were. The King would receive no impressions of this nature, but yet he was very earnest to vindicate his Authority, and Commandment, which in his proclamation, before mentioned, He alleadged to have been so contemned, as his Kingly Office could not bear, nor any former age paralell. He had on the fourth of March, six days before his coming to the Lords (by the advice of his privy Councel, and by their warrant) sent for severall Members of the Commons-House to appear the next day at the Councel-table, (viz.) Denzill Hollis, Esquire: Sr. John Elliot, Sr. Peter Hayman, Sr. Miles Hubbart, John Selden, William Coriton, Benjamin Valentine, William Stroud, and Walter Long, Esquires, who were the principall authors of the late Disorders, at which time Hollis, Elliot, Coriton, and Valentine appearing, and refusing to answer out of Parliament, what was said and done in Parliament, they were committed to the Tower; The rest not then appearing, were afterward apprehended, and committed to severall other prisons.

But least, those distempered Spirits, that had by imprudence caused so much disquiet at Westminster, should to excuse themselves, disperse abroad in their Countries, some of their malignities, to asperse the Government, and alienate the hearts of the good Subjects from the King, he published a Delaration, setting forth his Reasons and Motives for dissolving the Parliament, with breviates of all transactions, in this and the former Session, the heads whereof, we think it not improper to insert in this place;

The Substance of the Kings declaration.

"He professed therein, To maintaine the true "Religion, & doctrine, established in the Church "of England, without admitting or conniving at "any Back-sliding, either to Popery or Schisme, "having been ever desirous, to be found worthy "of that title, which he accounted the most glo- "rious in his Crowne, DEFENDER OF "THE FAITH, nor would he ever give "way to the authorising of any thing, whereby "any Innovation might creep into the Church, "but to preserve that unity of Doctrine & Disci- "pline, established in the time of Queen Eli- "sabeth, wherein the Church had stood, and "flourished ever since. He shewed also how "care-full he had been to command the execu- "tion of the Lawes against Popish Priests, and "Popish recusants, and if his Commands were "not duly executed, the fault ought to be laid on "the remisnes of the Officers and Ministers, to "whome it belongd, for it was his part to direct, "and order well, but the part of others to per- "forme the ministeriall Offices.

"Next to Religion, his care of setling the "Rights and Liberties of the People, was ma- "nifested in his answer to the Petition of Right, "which, since that time had not been infringed.

"Nor was he less carefull in the provident "ordering of the Supplyes, given to him the last "Session, wherein no part had been put to any "other use then to what it was granted.

"But he could not but take notice of some "glances in the House, and rumors abroad, as if "his answer to the petition of Right, had not "onely given away his imposition upon goods "exported and imported, but the Tonnage and "Poundage also, whereas in the debate thereof "there was no mention in either House, concer- "ning those Duties, but concerning Taxes, and "other charges within the land; for though in "the matter of Tonnage and Poundage, his ne- "cessities pleaded strongly for him, he was re- "solved, to guide himself, by the practise of "his Noblest Predecessors, and therefore he "caused records to be search'd, where it was "found, that the Subsidy of Tonnage and Poun- "dage was not granted to King Edward the 4th, "till the third year of his Reign, yet he received "it the first day of his accession to the Crowne, "untill it was granted by Parliament, and in the "succeeding times of Richard the third, King "Henry the Seventh, King Henry the Eight, "King Edward the Sixth, Queen Mary and "Queen Elisabeth, the Subsidy of Tonnage "and Pondage was not onely enjoyed by every "one of those Kings and Queens, from the death "of each of them deceasing, untill it was granted by 1628 "by Parliament unto the Succeſſor; but in all

"thoſe times, the Parliament did moſt readily
"and chearfully, in the beginning of every of
"thoſe Reigns grant the ſame, as a thing moſt
"neceſſary for the guarding of the Seas, ſafety
"and Defence of the Realm, and ſupportation
"of the Royall dignity. And in the time of his
"Royall Father, of Bleſſed Memory, he en"joyed the ſame a full year, wanting very few "days, before his Parliament began; and above
"a yeare, before the Act of Parliament, for the
"the grant of it was paſſed; and yet when the "Parliament was aſſembled, it was granted with"out difficulty. And in his own time he quietly
"received the ſame three years, and more,
"expecting with patience in Severall Parlia-
"ments, the grant thereof, as had been "made to many of his Predeceſſors, the Houſe
"of Commons ſtill profeſſing that multitude of "other Buſineſſes, and not want of Willing-
"neſs on their part had cauſed the ſetling thereof
"to be ſo long deferred.

"And when the grant of an Act came to be "treated of, all expreſs'd a great Willingneſs to "grant it, but a new ſtraine was found out to "puzzle the buſineſs, that it could not be done
"without perill to the Right of the ſubject, unleſs
"he would diſclaime his Right therein, and put "himſelf out of the Poſſeſſion thereof; whereas "it was evident, all the Kings before named,
"did receive that duty, and were in actuall poſ-
"ſeſſion of it before, and at the very time, when "it was granted to them by Parliament. Ne-
"vertheleſs he did declare, that it was his "meaning by the gift of the people to en"joy it, and that he did not challenge it of "Right, but took it De bene eſſe, wherein he
"ſaid he deſcended, for their ſatisfaction, far
"beneath himſelf, being confident never any of "his Predeceſſors did the like, nor was the "like required of them, but yet for all this
"the bill was laid aſide. Whilſt the Duke
"of Buckingham lived, he was intitled to all
"the ill events of Parliament, but now he is "dead, no alteration was found amongſt
"thoſe envenomed Spirits, which troubled the "Harmony betwixt him, and his Subjects,
"and continue ſtill to trouble it; So that the "Duke was not the Mark they ſhot at, but as "a more Miniſter of his, taken up in their "paſſage to more ſecret deſignes, to caſt his "affairs into a deſperate condition, to abate
"the Power of the Crown, and to bring the Go-
"vernement into obloquy, that in the end
"all things might be overwhelm'd with Anar"chy and confuſion. And then concludes,

On the Seaventh of May, the Attorney Generall preferr'd an Information in the Star- 1628 chamber, againſt Sr. John Elliot, and the reſt of the impriſon'd Members, and they iſſued a proceſs againſt them, to anſwer his allegations in that Court; To which they demurr'd, and the King had ſeverall Communications with the Judges about it, but they moved for writs of Habeas Corpus, and had them granted but had no returns to them as was deſired, till the King had received the Reſolution of the Judges in the Matter, which he did the 30th of September, at Hampton-court; where 1629 the King calling them aſide (after he had pro-poſed ſeverall matters to them, by way of advice, and had heard the anſwer, which was: That their offences were not capitall, and that by the Law they ought to be bayled, giving ſecurity for their good behaviour;) he told them, he purpoſed, to proceed againſt them, by the Common Law in the Kings Bench, and to decline his proceeding in the Star-chamber, and was contented they ſhould be bayled, notwithſtanding their obſtinacy, that they had not given him a Petition to expreſs their ſorrow for offending him, adding, that he was pleaſed with them for dealing plainly with him, or words to that effect.

Information in the Star-chamber againſt Sr John Elliot, , and the impriſon'd Members.

In purſuance of this advice, as ſoon as Michael-maſs terme began, the Court of Kings-bench was moved, to bail the priſoners, to which the Judges with one voyce ſaid, they were content, they ſhould be bailed, but that they ought to find Sureties for their good Behaviour, to which Selden anſwerd (and all the reſt agreed to it) that they had Sureties ready for the Bayl, but not for the good Behaviour, for that was a point of diſcretion merely, and they could not aſcend to it, without great offence to the Parliament, where the matters ſurmiſed were acted. To this the Judges re-plyed to this effect, That the returne did not mention any thing done in Parliament, and the ſurety of good Behaviour is a prevention of Damages to the Common-wealth, and an Act of Government and Juriſdiction, and not of Law, and would be no inconvenience to the priſoners, for the ſame Bayl ſhould ſuffice, and all ſhould be written in one piece of Parchement. But they refuſed, and were remanded, and the ſame terme an Information was exhibited by the At-turney Generall in the Kings-bench, againſt
Elliot, Hollis, and Valentine, for words ſpoken by them in the foregoing Parliament, ſaid to be *falſo, malitioſe, & ſeditioſe, as well verſus Regem, Magnates, Prælatos, Proceres et Juſtitiarios ſuos, quam Magnates, Proceres &
Juſtitiarios, & reliquos Regis Subditos, &
totaliter deprivare & avertere Regimen, &
Gubernationem Regni Angliæ, tam in Domino
Rege, quam in Conſiliariis, & Miniſtris ſuis, cujuſcunque generis, & inducere tu-multum et confuſionem, in all Eſtates and partes, et ad intentionem, that all the Kings ſubjects ſhould withdraw their affections from the King.*

A motion in the Kings-bench to Bail the Priſoners.

Information in the Kings bench againſt them

Then the words were expreſſed at large, and at the end of the information it was urged, that Sr. John Finch the Speaker endeavouring to go out of the chair according to the Kings Command

mand, to adjourn the Houſe, they aſſaulted and evill intreated him violenter, manu forti, & illicita, and being out of the Chair they aſſaulted him in the Houſe, & violenter, manu forti, & illicita, drew him to the Chair, and thruſt him into it, &c.

The defendants demur to the juriſdiction of the Court The demur is over ruled, and a day aſſigned

To this Information, the Gentlemen put in a Plea; Forasmuch as theſe Offences are ſuppoſed to have been done in Parliament, they ought not to be puniſhed in this Court or any other unleſſe in Parliament. Upon this the Court gave a day to joyn in demurrer that Term, and on the firſt day of the next Term the Record to be read, and within a day after argued at the Bar.

Information in the Star-chamber againſt Mr. Long.

Againſt Mr. Long particularly, an information was prefered in the Star-Chamber, which was agreed the firſt day of Hilary Term; It was not for any thing ſaid in Parliament, but to this effect following, (viz.) "For that he being high "Sheriff of the County of Wilts, had the charge "and Cuſtody thereof committed to him, and "had taken his Oath according to the Law to "abide within his Bailywick all that time of his "Sheriffwick, and his truſt and imployment re-"quiring his perſonal attendance therein, did "contrary thereunto ſuffer himſelf to be choſen "a Citizen for the City of Bath, to ſerve in the "laſt Parliament, and did attend at Weſtminſter "in Parliament without his Majeſties Licence; "He being Sheriff at the time, which was done "in contempt of his Majeſties pleaſure ſignified "to him under his great Seal, when he granted "him the Office of Sheriffwick: And after hearing his Counſell upon his demurrer, and plea, and other arguments and reaſons uſed in that behalf by his Counſel, the whole Court agreed in a ſentence againſt him in theſe or the like words: For the forementioned offences in breach of his oath, neglect of his truſt, and contempt of his Majeſty, it is decreed and adjudged, that he ſhall be committed to the Tower during his Majeſties pleaſure, and pay a fine of two thouſand Marks to his Majeſty, and make a ſubmiſſion and acknowledgement of his offence in the Court of Star-Chamber, and to his Majeſty before his enlargement.

Sentence in the Star-chamber againſt Mr. Long.

The ſame Term, the Counſel of Sir John Elliot, and the other Gentlemen (inform'd againſt in the Kings-bench) argued alſo againſt the information, and the juriſdiction of the Court; but the Judges hearing both parties for and againſt it, unanimouſly agreed, "That the Court as the "Caſe is, ſhall have juriſdiction, although theſe "offences were committed in Parliament, and "and that the impriſoned members ought to an-"ſwer, and that they were by the Court rul'd "to plead further, but they not putting in any "plea; the laſt day of the Term judgement was "granted againſt them upon a Nihil dicit, and "they were ſentenced by the Court,

The opinion of the Court of Kings-Bench.

1. To be impriſon'd during the Kings pleaſure.

2. None of them to be delivered out of priſon untill ſecurity given in Court for the good behaviour, and ſubmiſſion, and acknowledgment made of the Offence.

3. Sir Iohn Eliot fin'd to pay to the King, two thouſand pounds, being the greateſt offender; Mr. Hollis a thouſand Markes, and Mr. Valentine five hundred pounds, and in like manner the reſt were proceeded againſt, and ſeveral Fines were accordingly impoſed upon them, moſt of which were paid, and the gentlemen afterwards releaſed from their impriſonments. If any of them did refuſe to pay ſuch fines, as were ſet upon them, they were men either of decayed or of ſmall eſtates, and ſo not able to make payment of the fines impoſed.

Heylins obſervations in the hiſtory of the reign of K. Charles.

Many weighty and learned arguments were made in the Caſe of theſe gentlemen, before the judgement given, both by the Kings learned Counſel and their Counſel alſo, who objected all that could be thought of in the matter, ſome of which we ſhall mention for the better underſtanding of the matter in Queſtion.

That this was a priviledge of Parliament, whereof the Court were not competent Judges. Obj. 1.

To which was anſwered, in 8 Eliz. it was the opinion of Dyer, Catlin, Welſh, Brown and Southcot, Juſtices, that Offences committed in Parliament are puniſhable out of Parliament, and Plowden, in the time of Queen Mary, was fined for words ſpoken in Parliament againſt the dignity of the Queen, and in 6 H.6. a judgement given in a Writ of Annuity in Ireland, the ſaid judgement was reverſed in Parliament there. Upon which Writ of Errour was brought in this Court and the judgement reverſed. Anſw.

This is an inferiour Court to Parliament, and cannot meddle with matter done in it. Obj. 2.

To which was anſwered, the Court Queſtions not the judgement of Parliaments, for what is done in Parliament by conſent of all the Houſe ſhall not be queſtioned elſewhere, but the particular offences criminally committed there, are puniſhable here, for if particular members of a ſuperior Court offend, they are puniſhable in an inferiour. As if a Judge ſhall commit a Capital offence in this Court, he may be atraigned thereof at New-gate. Anſw.

The Parliament Law differs from the Law, by which this Court judgeth in ſundry Caſes, as for inſtance, by the Statute none ought to be choſen Burgeſſe for a Town in which he doth not inhabi, but in that the uſage of Parliament is contrary. Obj. 3.

The reply to this was, That they are the judges of Acts of Parliament, and if information be brought upon the ſaid Statute againſt ſuch a Burgeſſe, the Statute is a good Warrant for the Court to give judgement againſt him. Anſw.

The Queen miſcarried of a Son.

In the ſpring of this year the Queen being affrighted, aborted of a Son, which added ſomething to the Kings troubles at home; though abroad matters ſucceeded well, for the King of France being in a Tranſalpine expedition at Suſa, for the relief of Caſall, was ſo intent on that War, that he was very inclinable to peace with us, and by the intervention of the States of Venice, a peace was concluded upon the enſuing Articles.

The King of France deſirous of peace.

The State of Venice mediate the peace with France.

1. That the two Kings ſhall accord to renew the former Alliance between the two Crownes, and to preſerve it inviolable with free Commerce, and in reference to the ſaid comerce, liberty is given, that ſuch things be propoſed as either part ſhall judge convenient either to add or diminiſh.

2. That

1629 Articles of the peace with France.

2. That conſidering it is very difficult to make reſtitution of what hath been taken as prize, as well on one ſide, as the other, during the late Wars: It is agreed between the two Crownes, that for what is paſſed no ſatisfaction ſhall be demanded on either ſide.

3. As to the Articles and contract of marriage of the Queen of Great Britain, they ſhall be confirmed, and for what concerneth her domeſticks it ſhall be lawful to propoſe what ſhall be thought expedient to be either added or diminiſhed.

4. All former Alliances ſhall ſtand good between the two Crownes, ſaving wherein they ſhall be changed by this preſent Treaty.

5. The two Kings being by this preſent Treaty remitted to the affection they formerly had, ſhall reſpectively imploy this correſpondence toward the aſſiſtance of their Allies (ſo far as the reſtitution of Affairs, and the general good will permit) for the procuring repoſe of the troubles of Chriſtendom.

6. The premiſes being eſtabliſhed on both ſides, perſons of eminency ſhall be reciprocally diſpatched as Embaſſadors on either part for ratification of the accord, and for nomination of Agents ordinarily reſident at either Court, for the better preſerving this Union.

7. And becauſe many Ships are now at Sea, with letters of Marque, who cannot ſuddenly take cogniſance of this peace; it is agreed that what ſhall occurre in the nature of Hoſtility for the ſpace of two moneths on either ſide, ſhall not prejudice or derogate from this agreement. Provided notwithſtanding that what ſhall be made prize of within the ſpace of two months, after ſignature ſhall be reſolved on either ſide.

8. Laſtly, The two Kings ſhall reſpectively ſign the preſent Articles the 14. of this preſent month of April, and at the ſame time they ſhall be conſigned into the hands of the Lords Embaſſadors of Venice, to deliver reciprocally to the two Kings at a day prefixt. And from the day of ſigning, all Acts of Hoſtility ſhall ceaſe, to which end proclamation ſhall be iſſued out in both Kingdomes the 20. day of May.

And for a confirmation of this League in September following the Marqueſs of Caſteau Neuf, was ſent in Embaſſy from France, and Sir Thomas Edmonds was ſent thither from hence.

About the month of July, there hapned a great fray in Fleet-ſtreet, upon the reſcue of one Captain Bellingham (an officer in the late expedition to the Iſle of Rhe) which was attempted by ſome ſtudents in the Temple, wherein ſome were hurt and carried to priſon. But this drew together many of the Gentlemen to reſcue the priſoner, who made a Barracade againſt St. Dunſtans Church, and beat back the Sheriffs Officers, and releaſed their friends; of which the Lord Mayor being inform'd, he and the Sheriffs with a band of trained Souldiers came down to keep the Peace, and diſperſe them; who were now encreaſed to the number of five hundred, and armed with ſwords and piſtols: The Lord Mayor made Proclamation that on pain of rebellion they ſhould diſſolve themſelves, but prevail'd not, he then tryed other means, and the ſouldiers fired their Muskets on them charg'd with powder only; but the gentlemen provokt at this, ſhot bullets, and very fiercely attaqued the Train-bands, kill'd five out right, and wounded near a hundred; yet the City ſouldiers were ſo reinforced, that in the end the gentlemen, were ſubdued, and one Aſhburſt and Stamford two Captains, with ſome others were taken and committed. The King was much offended at the uproar, and immediately ſent for the Lord Chief Juſtice, by whoſe advice a ſpecial commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer was iſſued out, and about a fortnight after the malefactors were arraign'd in the Guild-Hall of London, and Aſhburſt and Stamford being found guilty of murder, were condemned and executed at Tyburn. Stamford was a relation and ſervant to the laſt Duke of Buckingham, and much interceſſion was made for him: but the King would not pardon him, but ſaid he had murdered a watch-man before and was pardon'd, and hath now kill'd another, and he would take order he ſhould not kill a third. 1629

A great Fray in Fleetſtreet

In the month of January, Don Carlos de Colomas, ſent Embaſſador from Spain arrived at London, and had audience ſix daies after; his buſineſs was to treat of a Peace, betwixt the two Crownes, which was a while after concluded, all things being left on both ſides in the ſame condition in which they were before the War, and the Spaniard did engage that he would make uſe of all his intereſt with the Emperor for reſtoring the Prince Elector Palatine to his loſt eſtate.

This Peace, and that with France brought a great encreaſe of Trade to us, the Spaniards ſent hither yearly in Engliſh Bottoms, no leſſe then 600000. Crowns in Bullion, for the uſe of the army in the Netherlands, redounding very much to the Kings benefit in the Coinage, and no leſs to the profit of the Merchants alſo, moſt of the money being return'd into Flanders in Leather, Cloth, Lead, Tin, and other the Commodities of this Kingdom. The Dutch, and Eaſterlings being great Traders, lookt upon London as the ſafeſt bank not only to lodge, but increaſe their treaſure; ſo that in a ſhort time, the greateſt part of the Trade of Chriſtendom was driven upon the Thames.

1630. On the tenth of April, this Year William Earl of Pembroke, Lord Steward of the Kings Houſehold died ſuddenly of an Apoplexy, he was the Son of Henry Earl of Pembroke, Son of William Herbert created Earl of Pembroke, and Lord Herbert of Cardiffe in the fifth year of King Edward the ſixth, whoſe great Grandfather was William Earl of Pembroke taken priſoner in the Battle of Banbury in the year 1467. in the quarel of the Houſe of Lancaſter, and beheaded in the ninth year of King Edward the fourth.

He was a comely Perſon, of a very generous mind, and one that in all his actions, appeared to be of the true antient ſtock of Engliſh Nobility; He was competently learned, and a great lover of his Prince and Country without flattery or faction, which made him be ever eſteem'd by the firſt, and loved and reſpected by the later: He married Mary, the eldeſt Daughter, and Coheire of Gilbert Talbot, Earle of Shrewsbury, by whom he had not iſſue. The King was ſomewhat touched at the death of ſo good a Counſellor. But to qualifie that loſs, God bleſt him with with a Son, the Heire of his Dominions, on the twenty ninth of May, who on the twenty seventh of Iune following was with great solemnity baptized, and named CHARLES, the Godfathers were the King of France, and the Prince Elector, represented by the Duke of Lenox, and the Marquess of Hamilton; the Godmother was the Queen of France, whose Substitute was the Duchess of Richmond. After this joyfull Ceremony was perform'd, the King was intent on the Business of the Prince Elector, and having intelligence of a Dyet to be kept this Summer at Ratisbone, he sent Sr Robert Anstruther, his Ambassadour to the Emperour, taking that opportunity, when the Estates of the Empire were assembled, to treat of his brothers restitution to the Palatinate. Sr. Robert went in very noble Equipage, and was very well receiv'd, when he came thither, and at his first audience he deliver'd his Message to this effect.

The birth of Prince Charles.

Sr. Rob. Anstruther sent Ambassador to the Emperour.

His Speech to the Emperour.

"That nothing did affect his Master, the "King of Great Brittaine, more, then the day-"ly Calamities, undergone by his Brother the "Prince Elector, his Wife and Children: that "he deem'd no place more convenient, where "to treat of their Reconciliation, and reestablish-"ment, then in this Dyet, therefore he made "it his most ardent Request to his most Imperial "Majesty, that having Regard to the many In-"tercessions of his late Father, and other Kings "and Princes, he would remit the displeasure "conceiv'd against his Brother, and recall the "proscription issued out against him; true it is, "his Brother had offended, and was inexcusa-"bly guilty (unlesse the Rashnesse and precipi-"tation of youth may somewhat pleade for him) "But others had been as culpable as he, whom "yet his Imperiall Majesty receiv'd into Grace "and favour, and would he be pleased to ex-"tend to him the same clemency, it would ob-"lige his Master to demonstrations of greatest "gratitude, and raise a glorious imitation in "others to imitate so Majestique a Pattern. That "the Palsgrave would entertaine this favour "with an heart so firmely devoted to his ser-"vice, as all the intention of his Spirit should "be disposed to compensation and reparation of "his by-past miscarriages. That his Master held "nothing so deare, as the affection of his Impe-"rial Majesty, and establishment of a durable "peace between them, and as upon all occasions "he hath been forward to represent himself soli-"citous of it, so at this time he is ready to give "more ample testimony, If his Imperiall Ma-"jesty be pleased to incline to a treaty.

The Emperour and Estates did not answer the Kings expectation, for besides the Complements which the Ambassadour receiv'd, all the answer to this Business was. That the present affaires of Germany, which call'd them thither, were of that important concernment, as would not admit of any forein debate. But when leisure served, his Master should have such satisfaction, as they hoped would give content. The Emperour was the colder in this matter, because he had some intimation of the Kings Correspondence with the King of Sweden, who was at this time ready to enter into Germany with an Army. And he was not much deceiv'd in his intelligence, for ever since the King of Denmarke was by Count Tylly driven out of Germany, The eyes of all this part of the World were upon Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden; as the fittest person, to cheque the greatness of the House of Austria. Him therefore, two years ago, the King elected into the Noble Order of the Garter, wherewith he was solemnly invested in the midst of his Army, at the Siege of Darjaw, a Town of Pomerella, belonging to the Crowne of Poland, and then the grounds were laid, which (being seconded by the French, the States of the United Provinces, and the distressed Princes of the Empire) brought that King into Germany. For which Expedition on the thirteenth of June, he imbarqued himself, and all his Army, in seaventy men of Warr, and two hundred lesser Barques. He had made great preparations the year before for this designe, and had entertain'd many Scotish and English Commanders and Souldiers, lately in the Service of the King of Denmark, (after the Peace at Angle in Holstein, made the year before with that Crown) and had dispatch'd some of them to raise Recruits, to compleate their Regiments in Scotland and England, and likewise he entertained Germanes, who had return'd from the Cesarean Army, and from that Army that was sent to assist the King of Poland, under the conduct of Harven, and from those who had been disobliged by Wallestein, the Emperours Generall; he receiv'd good intelligence of the State of the Empire, and gave them Commissions to raise forces with all speed, So that with some of these & the remainder of the Army, which was brought from the warrs of Livonia, he had gott together above Twelve thousand horse and foote of old Souldiers; But time was very favourable to the Enterprise, for the Princes of Germany had been much oppressed by the late Military Government, which Wallesteyne had introduced amongst them. Who had under his command a hundred thousand foote, and 30000 horse of diverse Nations, dispersed over all Germany, whereby the Princes of Germany were not treated as free Princes, but Subjects. Whereupon for that the excessive Authority of private men, and over-greatness of Neighbouring Potentates is never lik'd by great ones, The Electors, which pretend to keep the Imperiall condition within its limits, could not suffer either the burthen they lay under upon this former occasion, nor that so many Souldiers should be maintain'd in Germany, in the time of Peace, to the peoples so great Grievances, nor that the Throne of Cæsar should be raised so high. They therefore privately sought out all opportune meanes, how they might unarme him, and take from the Empire such a support; To which the Spanish Ministers of Vienna willingly concur'd, to moderate the greatness of Wallesteine, and prevailed with the Emperour to the disbanding of the supernumerary Forces, to please the Electors, and to oblige them thereby, to adhere to favour the King of Hungary, at Election of the King of the Romans. Wallestein was hereupon immediately laid aside which made him exclaim that the Emperour was betraid, and certainly there was some grounds for it. But if he had been more complacent complacent in his behaviour, his authority had not been so easily taken away, nor so many of the forces disbanded, which whilst they were kept together made the Emperour so powerful, that the King of Sweden could never have made that impression he did into his Dominions. Waldestein thus removed retired into Bohemia, and lived there till he was call'd again to imployment.

Thus Germany became weakned, being not onely divided by the dissonancy of Religion, but exasperated by the late pressures upon them, whereby the King of Sweden had a very easie entrance into Pomerania, for in a very little time he had taken the Islands of Rugue, and Ussedon, and all the Forts therin, and Wolghast and the strong Town of Stettin in Pomerania, and restored Bogislaus Duke of Pomerania, to his authority.

His success.

The news of this success of the King of Sweden, made our King very willing to send aids to him, and the Marques of Hamilton had Commissions to levy six thousand men, for the service against the next spring, which were most of them to be of the Scottish Nation: For the encouragement of the Marques in this expedition, the King gave him the impost of wines in Scotland, which amounted to twenty thousand pounds Sterling a year: but for the raising of those men, and an intended supply of moneys to the King of Sweden greater sums were required, and therefore the King by advice of his Attorney General and other his Counsel, learned in the Law, was forced to use all wayes by the Law allowable to furnish himself.

Marques of Hamilton has commission to raise 6000 men to assist the King of Sweden.

By the Common Law every man of full age that could dispend a Knights fee, was compellable by the Kings writ to take the Order of Knighthood, or else to make fine for the discharge or respit of the same, but because of the uncertainty of the quantity of lands thrt made a Knight fee; King Edward the second in the first year of his Reign granted a writ in the time of Parliament and caused it to be there entred of record, (which is therefore stiled by some a statute) wherein no man was thereafter to be distreined for Knighthood, that had not twenty pounds a year in Fee Simple or Fee tayle, or for term of life, which Sir Edward Coke explains to be tenant by curtesie; and almost in every Kings Reign till the time of Edward the 4th. men were summon'd by proclamation to take the order of Knighthood, but the valew of land was seldome limited so low as twenty pounds a year, for in the 18th. of King Henry the 6th. which perhaps is the last time before this wherein proclamations of this kinde were issued, the same was express'd to be 40. l. a year. The King having this warrantable way to supply his necessities, did cause several writs to be issued out of the Chancery for Proclamations to be made in every County, to summon all persons of full age, and not Knights, being seized of lands or rents of the yearly valew of 40 l. or more, to appear in the Kings presence at a certain day therein limitted, to take upon them the Order of Knighthood, upon return of which writs and transmitting the same with their returnes into the Exchequer, and upon other writs for enquiring of the names of such as did not appear, process by Distringas was made against them, and they were fined for the same, which brought a hundred thousand pounds or more, into the Exchequer.

But this money would not answer the Kings occasions, wherefore Mr. Walter Montague was sent over to Negotiate the payment of the moyety of the Queens portion (being four hundred Thousand Crowns) behinde, and to require satisfaction for two rich Ships, taken from us by the French, since the last peace concluded; and with him Phillip Burlamach a Merchant, was sent to receive the money, and make it over by Exchange or otherwise. The french King received the message with kindness enough, but complain'd that one Captain Kirk had two years before, taken the fort of Kelech in Canada, which was in possession of the French, and put an English garrison into it, this after a little consideration was found so equitable that the King gave order to have the Fort deliver'd, and thereupon his full and just demands were satisfied. During the sitting of the last Parliament, one Leighton a Scotchman, writ a Book called Zions Plea, which he presented to them; it was of a very fiery nature, exciting the Parliament and people to kill all the Bishops, and to smite them under the fifth Rib, bitterly enveighing against the Queen, calling her a Daughter of Heth, a Cananite, and Idolatresse, for which he was this year sentenc'd in the Star-Chamber, to be whipt and stigmatiz'd, to have his ears cropt, and nose slit, but betwixt the pronouncing and inflicting of this censure, he made his escape into Bedfordshire, but by the diligence of the Warden of the Fleet, he was quickly recover'd, and the punishment to which he was sentenc'd inflicted upon him. The Romish recusants were about this time very active in England, and their Religion begun to encrease by the industry of their Priests, who needed not now to fetch their Ordination from abroad, by reason that the Pope had sent hither Docter Smith, the Titular Bishop of Calcedon to ordain Priests, who took also upon him to approve of such regular Priests as were to be standing Confessors, which the General of the Jesuites thought an usurpation upon his Jurisdiction, and that order by their insinuation being more powerful in England, prevail'd with many of the most eminent of their Religion, to remonstrate against his authority asserting all sufficient power in the Regulars to what ever was pretended by the Bishop, and the no necessity of having a Bishop in England; The Spanish Ambassadour favoured the Jesuites in this contest, to which the Kings Proclamation for the Bishops banishment concurring, he was frighted into France, nor were this sort of men insolent in Engand only, but in Ireland also, for at Dublin whilst the Lords Justices were hearing divine service in Christs Church, they had as publique resort to mass as is sometimes in London, to the houses of Ambassadours of that Religion which the Lords Justices taking notice of, they sent the Arch-bish. p, the Mayor, Sheriff, and Recorder of the City to apprehend them, which they did, taking away their Crucifixes, chalices, and copes, and delivering the Fryers and Priests into the hands of the Pursivants, whom the people threw stones at, and had rescued them, but that a guard was sent to defend them, nevertheleſs the Juſtices were ſo carefull to prevent the like diſorders that moſt of their houſes of Religion were immediately ſeized into the Kings hands, and ſuch Inquiſition after the reſt, that two Prieſts hang'd themſelves at the apprehenſion of this (as they then cal'd it) perſecution.

Leighton a Scotchman for writing a seditious book called Zions plea.

Tumuls in Dublin about restraining the liberty of the Catholicks.

The Marqueſs of Hamilton was at this time under ſome umbrage at Court, though his power with the King quickly broke through it, The occaſion thereof was this; He had ſent a creature of his owne David Ramſey into Germany, on pretence to notifie his coming thither to the King of Sweden, and to inform himſelf of the condition of the Scots then in that Service, but by what appear'd after, it was ſuſpected he had another intention then the King of Swedens aſſiſtance, There were at this time eight and twenty Colonels of the Scotch nation in the Swediſh ſervice, amongſt which, there were four of the name of Hamilton, with whom Ramſey had made a near acquaintance, for he lived at a great expence; he had alſo indeer'd himſelf to Colonel Alexander Ramſey Governour of Creutzenach, a perſon of good eſteeme and intereſt both with the Swedes and thoſe of his own nation; Amongſt theſe Officers, there was the Lord of Rhees Mackey, who commanded a Brigade of Scots, a perſon of great honour and reputation, who having diſcover'd by ſome expreſſion of Ramſey, that the Marqueſs had a deeper deſign then the preſent expedition to Germany, he inſinuating into him to find out the bottome of it, and was told by him in much ſecrecy, That the Marqueſs would convert thoſe Forces which he was by the Kings authority to raiſe in Scotland for foreign Service againſt England, That their Friends had provided armes and ammunition, and more were expected from Sweden and other parts, and he and Colonel Alexander Hamilton ſolicited him to be of their party; to this the Lord of Rhees made a cold anſwer, but thought himſelf bound in duty to come into England and make it known to the King, which he did the rather becauſe Ramſey was then return'd alſo; but he upon this accuſation denyed the whole matter, and the Lord having no proof thereof (as in ſuch ſecret practiſes it could hardly be) more then a confident aſpertions and the engagement of his honour, The King thought good to referre the controverſie to the tryal of the Conſtable and Marſhal with the aſſiſtance of other Lords in Commiſſion with them according to the antient law of the Land. The Earle of Lindſey being made Conſtable to that end and purpoſe: many days were ſpent accordingly in purſuance of it. But when moſt men expected that the matter would be tryed by Combat, as had been accuſtomed in ſuch caſes, the buſineſs was huſh'd up at Court, The Lord Rhees diſmiſ'd to his [illegible]ment in the war, and the Marqueſs did not only continue in the Kings great favour, but Ramſey was permitted to hold the place of a Gentleman of the privy chamber which had formerly been procured for him.

The Marqueſs of Hamilton ſuſpected of a deſign to convert his forces raiſed for forreign ſervice againſt England.

On the 25 of April this year, Mervin Touchet Lord Audley was indicted and arraigned of Rape and Sodomy before his Peers in Weſtminſter-Hall, Thomas Lord Coventry Lord-keeper of the great Seal, was for that day conſtituted Lord High Steward of England, and the Peers joyned with him were; The Earle of Portland Lord Treaſurer, The Earle of Mancheſter Lord Privy Seal, The Earle of Arundell Lord Marſhall, and the Earle of Pembroke, Kent, Worceſter, Bedford, Eſſex, Dorſet, Saliſbury, Leiceſter, Warwick, Carliſle, Holland, Barkſhire, and Denbigh, The Viſcounts Wimbleton, Conway, Dorcheſter, Wentworth, The Barons Percy, Strange, Clifford, Peters, North, Goring, where divers unnatural and beſtial actions being prov'd againſt him, he had ſentence to be hang'd; but by the clemency of the King to him that ſentence was chang'd to a beheading, which was executed on him at Tower-Hill on the 14 of May; and in the ſame Month of May Sir Giles Allington of Cambridgſhire, married his own Neece the Daughter of one Mr. Dalton, for which he was queſtioned in the high Commiſſion Court, but he declined the Juriſdiction, and moved the Court of Common Pleas therein from whence he obtain'd two rules; one requiring the Commiſſioners to ſhew cauſe why a prohibition ſhould not be granted; The other, That if they proceeded further before cauſe ſhewn, a prohibition ſhould be awarded; This gave great offence to the Biſhop of London, who complained to the King thereof, and he by my Lord Keeper ſignified his diſpleaſure to the Judges for their proceeding herein, whereat they deſiſted, and the Court conſiſting of eight Biſhops, and four other Commiſſioners gave the ſentence following, againſt him to be Fined to the the King twelve thouſand pound; to ſtand obliged in the penalty of twenty thouſand pound, never to cohabit or come near his Neice any more: and to be committed to Priſon, or put in ſufficient bayl, till both he and his Neice ſhall have done penance at Pauls-Croſs and at great St. Maries at Cambridge at a day appointed by the Court. Never was delinquent cenſured there, by a more ſolemner and venerable Conſiſtory: many ſpake excellent well, but Sir Henry Martyn, whoſe cuſtome it was before to out-go others, did then ſurpaſs himſelf.

About the midſt of July the Marqueſs of Hamilton arrived in the Oder with ſix thouſand foot, well arraied and furniſhed of Artillery for the Service of the King of Sweden and with three hundred thouſand Dollers in money, he himſelf came to the King at his Leaguer at Werben on the Elve; The King received him very reſpectfully, and ſhewed him all the fortifications, and the preparations he had made againſt the Count de Tilly, who was marched as farr as Wolmeſtat towards him; ſo that he had no leiſure to entertaine him as he would, but after he had form'd his inſtructions he was diſmiſ'd, and his forces were appointed to Joyne with General Bavier; he told him he was very ſorry his Army arrived in ſuch parts of the Country that were ruined, in that both the Armies had lyn there above a year before, but within a while, he ſaid, they ſhould have better quarters, but the men were almoſt all loſt whilſt they were there finding not only famine to conſume them, but the Plague alſo, which did ſo rage that two hundred a week of them dyed, and they were much weakened, but thoſe that ſurvived did good ſervice, and their coming at this time was great furtherance of the King of Swedens cauſe, for thereby a good part of the Enemies forces, were for feare of them diverted 1631 diverted towards Silesia, and this diversion aided much to the Coniunction of the Kings Army with that of the Duke of Saxony, and consequently of his further advance into Germany and his victory obtained at Leipsigh on the seventeenth of September following, likewise the reputation of this supply, and the King of Englands friendship and concordance brought in the Landgrave of Hessen and Duke Barnard Weymer to offer their service to the King, and most part of the Townes of the upper Cyrcle of the Empire were desirous to Joyne in Confederacy with him.

Sr Henry Vane sent Ambassador to the King of Sweden.

Our King immediately after the dispatching the Marquess Hamilton sent Sir Henry Vane his Ambassador to the King of Sweden, who arrived at Wertzburg on the Main, a fortnight after the Battel of Leipsigh, about which time Magdeburgh was block'd up by the Forces under the Command of Marquis Hamilton and General Bannier, who had a little before took in the Town of Vausleber in Pomerania, the Embassador after some refreshment, went to the King of Sweden at Franckford on the Main which had open'd his Gates to him; on the 17 th. of November, hither also came the Marquis of Hamilton with a very Magnificent Train, and the French Embassador and a little before them the Palsgrave arrived, and the Queen of Sweden also came thither attended by the Rix Chancellor Excestine and Sir Patrick Ruthen the eldest Colonel of the Scotish Nation; here the King gave audience to our Ambassadour, and many treaties were in agitation both for the prosecution of the Warr, the next year, and the restitution of the Palatinate, but the shortness of the Kings Stay hindred the bringing of any Counsels to Maturity, for he was not here a week when upon advice that divers troops of Spaniards and Flemings raised in Luxemberg were marching towards the Palatinate recruite the Garrisons of Mentz, Wormes, Franckendal, Heidleberg and other townes in those parts, he broke of the negotiations for that time, and hasten'd to his Army, with a purpose to pass over the Rhine, in order whereunto he first lay down before a Sconce lying on the Rhine over against Appenheine: it was a place very well fortified with deep and broad Fosses full of water, with a draw bridge over, and well provided of Victuals and Amunition and it was so Scituated that the men had free passage to the towne and back againe without any danger; after the Batteries were made the King left the old Scotish Brigade Commanded by Colonel Hepburne, and the blew Regiment Commanded by Colonel Winckles before it, and he gave order to have some Boats that the Spaniards had sunk taken up and emptied of water, by which meanes he passed over two thousand Scots of the Lord Rhees Regiment, Sir James Ramseys Regiment, and old Spense his Regiment, and with these he secured the landing place, till he had passed over a good part of his Army, and unexpectedly came before Appenheine; and the next day these in the sconce (hearing the King had pass'd the Rhine,) capitulated and surrendred the place to Colonel Hepburne; Oppenheime was also after a while surrendred to the King of Sweden, and from thence he made a farther impression on the Palatinate with so great success that he quickly took in all the Cityes and Townes thereof except Heidleburg and Franckendal, where we shall leave him victorious and returne to Domestique affaires. 1631

About five years since certain Feoffees were intrusted to purchase in impropriations with their own and the money of other well disposed persons, and with the profit thereof to set up and maintain preaching Ministers in places of greatest need, where preaching was much wanting, whereupon in a short while many great sumes were advanc'd. There are in England Nine thousand two hundred and eighty four Parish Churches endowed with Glebe and Tyth, but of these when these trustees entred on their work three thousand eight hundred forty and five, were either appropriated to Bishops, Cathedrals, and Colledges or impropriated as lay fees to private persons, as formerly belonging to Abbies, to purchase which last sort they had made such progress that it was beleived in fifty years rather purchasers then money would have been wanting to them. The King was perswaded that this project would prove dangerous to the Church, and Noy the Attorney General at the later end of the year exhibited a Bill in the Exchequer Chamber against the Feoffees. 1632

The proceedings of the Feoffees for impropriations condemned as dangerous to the Church and State.

It was charged against them that they diverted the charity wherewith they were intrusted, for being by their Feoffment directed to setle preaching Ministers in distant obscure places where preaching was most wanting; they first setled a morning Lecture at St. Antholines in London: To this they answer'd, that London being the chiefest place from whence their charity derived, it was fit they should have some benefit of their own bounty, and that they were not so confined to the uses in their Feoffment, but that in their choyce they might reflect as well on the eminency as necessity of the place, that they expended much of their own as well as other mens charity, and hoped they might do with their own as they pleased: it was urged against them that they generally perferr'd Non-Conformists to the Lectures of their erection: to which they said none were placed therein, but such whose sufficiency and conformity was approved by the ordinary, and moreover that one of the Feoffees acquainted the Bishop of London at his house at Fulham, that if he either disliked the persons who managed, or the order they took in the work he would submit the alteration to his discretion, In conclusion the Court condemned their proceedings as dangerous to the Church and State, pronouncing the gifts and Feoffments to be illegall and so dissolved the same, confiscating the money to the Kings use; their criminal part was refer'd to the Star-Chamber but never prosecuted, because rous many discreet and devout men were rather desi- of the regulation then ruine of so pious adesigne.

Duke Hamilton returnes inglorious from Germany.

Duke Hamilton in September this year came from Germany, his men being by Famine, Plague and the accidents of Warr drawn to so small a number that they were not fit for his care, The King of Sweden had many communications with the Palsgrave and our Ambassador about the affaires of the Palatinate, in which the French Ambassador, and de Pauch the Ambassador of the United Provinces, did mediate so as matters

1632 were near drawn to a good Concluſion, when all was again made deſperate by the death of the King of Sweden, which hapned at that memorable battel of Lutzen on the ſixth of November old Stile the Palſgrave was in hopes of recovery, when news came to him of the death of the King of Sweden, which reſented him with ſo intenſe a paſſion that he dyed on the 29 of the ſame Moneth, nor could the rendition of Franckendall then ready to be ſurrendred to the Engliſh Officers then before it any whit moderate his grief; the Earl of Leiceſter was now ſent Ambaſſador to the King of Denmark to condole the death of our Kings Grand-Mother Sophia Queen Dowager of Denmark, and to demand the dividend of a ſixth part of what ſhe left as due to him and the Queen of Bohemia in right of Queen Anne their Mother, which ſixth part amounted to a hundred and fifty thouſand pound Sterling; The King of Denmark told the Ambaſſador when the accompt was ſtated of what was due to him in arreare of thirty thouſand pound a moneth from the Crown of England upon the contract made in the year 1625. towards the ſupport of his Army, he would make up the reſt, ſo that the Earl was faine to returne re infecta. The King having had great experience of the ability and faithfulneſs of the Lord Viſcount Wentworth (whom he had lately raiſed to that honour and made him Lord Preſident of the North) made him Deputy and chief Governour of the Realm of Ireland, where affairs were in much diſorder by the inſolence of the Romiſh Catholiques who did not uſe moderately the Kings clemency to them in relaxation of the Rigor of ſome penall Statutes; they are indeed a people that cannot bear any indulgence towards them with temperance but are too apt to be alienated in the apprehenſion of favour to their own detriment and the ſcandall of the Kings proteſtant Subjects. On the ſecond of December this year the King fell ſick of the ſmall Pox, but there was ſo little malignity in the diſtemper that he ſoon recover'd; The ſame moneth the Earl of Arundell was ſent to the Hague in Holland to the Queen of Bohemia, to condole the death of her husband and ſolicite her and her Children's Journey into England, which at this time ſhe refuſed becauſe of the griefe ſhe lay under, and an indiſpoſition of health that made her unfit in the Winter ſeaſon to take ſuch a Journey.

The King had this yeare a great check to the proſperity of his Government, which firſt appeared in Scotland, where ſome factious and ſeditious male-contents beganne to ſow ſome ſeeds of diſcontent, which afterwards encreaſed to that degree, as well neare deſtroyed the proſperity and happineſſe of three flouriſhing Kingdomes, on this occaſion.

In the minority of King James, the Lands of Cathedrall Curches, and religious Houſes, which had been ſettled on the Crowne, by Act of Parliament, were ſhared among the Lords and great men of that Kingdome (by the Connivence of the Earle of Murray, and ſome other of the Regents) in the minority of King James, to make them ſure unto their ſide. And they being thus poſſeſt of the ſaid Lands, with the regalities and tythes belonging to theſe Eccleſiaſticall Corporations, lorded it with pride & inſolence enough in their ſeverall territories, holding, the Clergy to ſmall ſtipends, and the poor peſant under a miſerable Vaſſalage and ſubjection to them. 1632

The King of Swedens death.

The Earl of Leiceſter ſent Ambaſſadour to the King of Denmark.

Viſcount Wentworth made Lord Deputy of Ireland.

The firſt occaſion of the diſcontents in Scotland.

King CHARLES, ingaged in War at his firſt coming to the Crowne, and having little aid from thence for the maintenance of it, by the advice of his Counſell of that Kingdom, was put upon a courſe of reſuming thoſe lands, Tythes, ad Regalities into his owne hands, to which the preſent poſſeſſors could pretend no other Tytle, then the unjuſt uſurpation of their Anceſtors. This he endeavoured firſt by an Act of Renovation, but that courſe not being like to ſpeed, he followed in the way of a legall proceſs, which drew on a Commiſſion for ſurrendriug of Superiorities and Tythes, to be retaken from the King on ſuch conditions, as might bring ſome profit to the Crowne, ſome augmentation to the Clergy, and far more eaſe and benefit to the Common people. But theſe occupants choſe rather to expoſe their Countrey to the danger of a publick ruine, then to part with any of that power, which they had exerciſed on their vaſſals (as they commonly called their tenants;) and thereupon conſpired together, to oppoſe the King in any thing, that ſhould be offer'd in the following Parliament, which had Relation to the Church or to church-affaires.

But becauſe Religion and the care thereof is commonly the beſt bait, to catch the vulgar they muſt finde out ſome other meanes, to divert the King from the proſecuting of that Commiſſion, then the conſideration of their owne perſonall and private Intereſt, and they found meanes to do it on another occaſion, which was briefly this.

King JAMES, from his firſt coming to the Crowne, had a deſigne, to bring the Kirk of Scotland to an Uniformity with the Church of England, both in Government and form of worſhip. And he proceeded ſo far as to ſettle Epiſcopacy amongſt them, naming thirteen new Biſhops for ſo many Epiſcopall Sees, as had been anciently in that Church; three of which received conſecration from the Biſhops of England, and conferred it on the reſt of their Brethren at their coming home: which Biſhops he arm'd alſo with a power of high Commiſſion, the better to keep downe the inſolent and domineering Spirit of the Presbiterians. In order to the other he procured an Act, to be paſſed in the Aſſembly at Aberdeen, Anno 1616. for compoſing a Liturgy, and extracting a new Booke of Cannons out of the ſcattered Acts of their old Aſſemblies, and at an Aſſembly, held at Perth, Anno 1618. he obtained an order for receiving the Communion kneeling, for adminiſtring Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper in private houſes in caſes of extreme neceſſity, for Epiſcopall confirmation; and finally, for the celebrating the Anniverſary of our Saviours Birth, his Paſſion, Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion, and the coming down of the Holy Ghoſt. All which he got to be confirm'd in Parliament.

So far that wiſe King had advanced the work of Uniformity before his engaging in the cauſe of the Palatinate; his breach with Spaine, and the war, which did iſſue upon it, had took of his thoughts from proſecuting that deſigne, which his Son being more intangled in wars abroad, and diſtempers at home, had no time to finiſh till he had had setled his affaires, and attain'd to some measure both of power and glory, but being it was a business, which was to be acted leasurely, and by degrees he deferred the execution of his purpose, till he came into Scotland, towards which he went this yeare about the middle of May, and arrived at Edenburg the tenth of June, and on the eighteenth following, his Coronation was celebrated with great solemnity; he had before summoned a Parliament, to meet at Edenburgh, which assembled a while after the Coronation, and he caused an Act of Ratification of all that had been done by his Father, to be proposed to them, determining, as soon as that was passed, to go in hand with introducing a publique Liturgie, in the effecting whereof he found a stronger opposition in the Parliament, then he had reason to expect, but carried it at last by a far major part of that assembly.

The King takes a Journey into Scotland to be crowned there.

This gave him the first taste of their disaffection to his person and Government, but he went forward notwithstanding, in pursuite of those purposes, which he brought thither with him, for not long after his returne into England, he gave order to the Deane of his Chappell Royall in Edenburg, for Prayers to be reade therein, according to the English Liturgie, a Communion to be had every Month, and all Communicants to receive the Sacrament on their knees; that he who officiated it, if he were a Bishop, should performe it in his Rochett, and other Episcopall Robes, and in his Surplice if a common Presbyter: And that not onely the Lords of his Counsell, but the Lords of the Session, and as many of the principall Magistrates of that City as could conveniently, should not faile of their attending the divine Service there, on Sundays and Holydays, for by this meanes he gave himself no improbable hopes, that the English Liturgie passing a probationership in the Chappell Royall, might finde a plausible entertainment in the Churches of Edenburg, and be reteined by degrees in all the rest of the Kingdom.

The King commands that the English Liturgie, with its usuall Ceremonies, should be used in his Royall Chappell at Edenburg.

But the Presbyterian Scots, not ignorant of the Kings intentions, insinuated into the mindes of the common people, that this was a design onely to subject that Kirk to the Rights and Ceremonies of the Church of England, which they said was superstitious, and therefore that it did behove them to stand together, as one man, to oppose their entrance.

The Presbyterians beget a dislike of it in the minds of the Vulgar.

The Lords and Gentry of that Realme, who feared nothing so much as the Commission of Surrenders, before mentioned, laid hold of this occasion also, and they being seconded by male-contented Spirits, who had not found the King to be as prodigall of his favour to them, as his Father hath been before, endeavoured to possesse them with feare and Jealousies, that Scotland was to be reduced to the forme of a Province, and governed by a Deputy or Lord Lieutenant, as Ireland was, the like was done also by some Lords of Secret Councell, who before had governed, as they listed, and thought their power now diminished, and their persons under some neglect, by the placing of a Lord President over them to direct in chiefe.

Which is further promoted by the insinuations of the Lords and Gentry

So that the People generally being fool'd into this opinion, that both their Christian and Civill Liberties were in no small danger, became capable of any impression, which the Presbyterian faction could imprint upon them, which visibly appeared by a virulent and seditious Libell, published in the yeare 1634. wherein the King not onely was charged with altering the Government of that Kingdom, but traduced for very strong inclinations to the Religion of the Church of Rome, the chiefe abettor whereof (for the Author was not to be found) was the Lord Palmerino, for which he was legally committed and condemned of Treason, but pardoned by the Kings great Goodnes, though by his following actions he deserved not that favour. The Fire thus breaking out in Scotland, it was no Marvel, if it had laid hold on England also, the discontented of both Nations working themselves about this time into a body, and from henceforth communicating their counsells, and designs unto one another. As will hereafter appeare.

And occasions the like stirs in England.

This yeare ended with some stirs in Somersetshire, where some of the Justices were much offended, at the keeping of wakes, Church-ales, and Bride-ales on the Lords day, which occasioned many disorders and misdemeanors to be committed: and therefore they moved the Lord Chief-Justice Richardson, and Baron Denham, then in their Circuit in the Lent Vacation to make some Order therein; these in complyance with their desire, make an order on the 19th of May, (founded on former presidents signed by the Chief Justice Popham, in the later end of Queen Elizabeths Reigne) therein suppressing such Revels, in regard of the infinite number of inconveniences, dayly arising by meanes thereof, injoyning the Constables to deliver a Copy thereof to the Minister of every Parish, who on the first Sunday in February, and likewise the two first Sundayes before Easter, was to publish the same every yeare; This was look'd on by the Bishops, as an usurpation of Ecclesiasticall Jurisdiction, and they therefore procured a Commission, directed to the Bishop of Bath, and other Divines, to enquire into the manner of publishing this order, and the carriage of the Judges in the Business; Nothwithstanding which the Chiefe-Justice, at the next Assizes, gave strict charge against these Revells, and required an account of the publication and execution of the former order, punishing some persons for the breach thereof; after whose returne the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury sent for him, and told him it was the Kings pleasure, he should revoke his order, as he would answer it at his perill; which he did at the next Assizes, (but with this Limitation, as much as in him lay,) but this ended not here, for the Justices of that County hearing of this dealing with the Chiefe-Justice, made an humble Supplication to the King, for suppressing the aforesaid Assemblies, which induced the King to renew his Fathers Declaration, about lawfull sports, on the Lords-day published in the 16th yeare of his Reigne; hoping thereby, by the restriction therein directed, to hinder the abuse of those Recreations, and to free the Consciences of his Subjects from those servile yokes, which some Divines about that time endeavoured to introduce, maintaining the indispensible morality of the fourth Commandment, and consequently the necessary observation of the Jewish Sabbath, for it was in the declaration prescribed,

The King published a declaration for lawfull sports on the Lords-day.

1. That

1. That these pastimes should be no impediment, or lett to the publique duty of the day.

2. That no recusants should be capable of the benefit of them.

3. That none should use them, that were not diligently present at all divine offices, which the day required. And

4. That the Benefit should redound to pone, but such as kept themselves in their owne Parishes.

The Publication of this, however piously intended, gave great offence and the rather, because, though there was nothing expresse in the declaration, that the Minister of the Parish should be pressed to the publishing, yet some Ministers, for refusing the reading thereof, were some suspended ab Officio & Beneficio, some deprived, and more molested in the High-commission; the truth is the ill reception it had among the people, in the former Publication of it, in the time of the Kings Father, might have deterred the like at this time, for that the first observation of the Lords day was much increased since that time, though it was not known in England till the yeare 1595. when Dr. Bond first published it in his Book of Sabbath Doctrines; nor in Ireland, till just twenty years after, when it was inserted in the Articles of Religion, there established, nor in Scotland till above twenty years after that, and at this day in Geneva, shooting in long bowes, tennis, bowling, and other sports of that kinde are used, and the like in all foreigne places, where the Protestant Religion is professed, but it was generally disliked, here many complaining that mans badnesse tooke occasion to be worse, under the protection of those sports, permitted to them: for though liberty on the Lords-day may be so limited in the Notions of learned men, as to make it lawfull, it is very difficult so to confine it to the actions of the people, but that they will degenerate into licentiousnes, so that the declaration after a while dyed of it self, and it was wished by many prudent men of that time, it had never lived.

Ministers suspended and deprived for refusing to publish the Declaration.

The Merchants of London, and other parts made great complaints at the end of the last year, of the obstructions of Trade, for want of good Convoyes, to secure them against the Turks and other Pyrats, that infested our Coast, which made the King very earnest in making preparations, to make himself strong at Sea, to which he was the more inclined for the vindication of his Just Authority of the Soveraignty of the British seas, which was not onely actualy usurp'd by the Hollanders, but the right it self disputed by a tract, written by Hugh Grotius, a learned man of that time, called Mare liberum, but whilst the King by his power omitted not to maintaine his right, our learned Selden, by his pen encountred Grotius, in a learned book called Mare clausum, wherein he did not onely assert the Soveraignty or Dominion of the Brittish seas to the Crowne of England, but clearely proved by constant and continual practise, that the Kings of England used to levy money from the Subjects, for the providing of Ships andother ne cessaries, to maintaine that Soveraignty which did of right belong unto them, butbefore the writing of this tract, The King had well advised how to enable himself with Treasure, to support his authority, and defend the Kingdomes by the industry of Noy, his Attorney-Generall, a most indefatigable Inquisitor in our antient records, who had found many presidents for levying a Naval aide upon the Subjects by the sole Authority of the King, whensoever the safety and preservation of the Kingdome did require it of him, and that such aid had been heretofore levyed in the same yeare in which the Kings that took it, had received subsidies in the way of Parliament, for which he gave this reason; when a King of England wants money to support his own expences, or for the enlarging his Dominions in foreign Conquests, or otherwise to advance his honour in the eye of the world, he ought to be beholding to his Subjects for it by aid in Parliament; but when the Kingdome is in danger, and the safety of the Subject concern'd therein, he may by our lands raise such sums of money as he thinkes expedient for the preventing of the danger, and providing for the publique safety of himself and his; And thereupon by this advice, writts were issued and directed to all the Port Townes and maritine Counties of the Kingdome to set out a certaine number of Ships furnisht with mariners, ammunition, victuals and all other necessaries for defence of the Realme, whereby the King had quickly equipped a very good fleet, though not great enough for the end intended, which occasioned the like writs to be issued out to all the counties in the Kingdome, in the yeare 1636. of which more hereafter.

This year was unfortunate to the Swedes in Germany, were General Arnheim was constrained to retire out of Bohemia into Saxony: The City of Ratisbone, was regained by the Imperialists, General Alldringer slain at Lansbut, and the whole Army totally routed by the King of Hungary, and the Cardinal Jusaule at the battail of Norlington, after which ensued the surrender of that Town, and the conquest of the Dukedome of Wittemburge, whose Duke fled to Strasburgh, but though this gave a great stop to the Swedish greatnes, yet it brought a little repose to Germany, for shortly after this succes, a peace was concluded though it lasted not long.

The Swedish succes declining in Germany.

A peace concluded between the Swedes and the Emperor.

In Ireland the Lord Deputy Wentworth, was very busie in setling the quiet of that Nation and becaus popery was chiefly encreased for want of able Ministers, and that occasion'd by the poor maintenance they had in most places, he procured of the King by the mediation of Archbishop Laud that all the impropriations then in the Crown should be restored to the Church, to a great diminution of the Royal Revenue, though the King was never sensible of any loss to himself, if thereby gaine might redound to God in his Ministers.

On Candlemas night, the Gentlemen of the four Inns of Court, presented a Masque to the King and Queen at whitehall, riding in Stately Chariots from the Temple thither, it was indeed a Pompous and Magnificent shew, but made more glorious, by a long train of Christian Captives, who having been many years inslaved in the chains of bondage, were sent for a present to the King, by the Heriffe or Emperour of Maroco in testimony of the assistance received from our King, whose fleete assisted in the taking of Sallee then in Rebellion against him, and in enmity to all the world, it being a nest of Pyrats, by whose destruction

The death of the Earl of Portland Lord high Treasurer of England.

This year dyed Sir Richard Weston, Earl of Portland, Lord high Treasurer of England, a great states man, but suspected to be too much a favourer of the Religion of Rome, in which he was reputed to have dyed, and some of his Children were educated therein, his place for the present was intrusted to Commissioners, till a fit person could be found on whom to bestow it.

His place given to Commissioners.

It was now the year 1635. when a gallant fleet was set out by the aid of Ship money, under the Earl of Lindsey Admiral, and the Earl of Essex Vice Admiral; whereby our trade was not onely made secure by scowring the Seas of pyrats, but the King became very formidable to all his

1635

Neighbours, and by his interposition this summer Flanders was preserved, which had else probably been swallowed up by the French and Hollanders, for the King of Spain could not bring 8000 men into the field and leave his Garrisons provided, and the French King and they were in confederacy for that purpose, by which it was agreed that he should invest Dunkirk with an Army, whilst the Hollanders did block it up with their Navy, that so all passages into the Country being secured, they might the more easily subdue the inward parts; which design had taken effect, if the English fleet had not dislodged the Hollanders from before the Town and releiv'd it, and the French by their insolencies at Diet and Tellemont inflamed and incouraged the peoples heats against them, for before they had been so practis'd on by the Holland faction that few or none would arme to repulse their enemies.

A fleet set out under the Earl of Lindsey to scour the seas.

September the 29th. the Earl of Arundel brought up to London out of Shropshire, one Thomas Parr, as the wonder of the time for the proxevity of his age, he had almost reach'd to the hundred and sixtieth year, and in all likelihood had out lived that time some years, had not so tedious a Journey and the over violent agitation of his body together with the change of his wonted course of dyet, accelerated his end.

Thomas Par brought up to the Court by the Earl of Arundel.

Charles Prince Elector Palatine came into England at this time to visit his Uncle, & to consult with him for his restitution to the Palatinat, and a while after his arrivall, his brother Prince Rupert came also.

Charles Prince Elector with his Brother Prince Rupert come into England

The Kings reputation was very high, and the Hollanders a wise and industrious people took all occasions to endeare themselves to him, at this time they sent an Ambassadour over to congratulate with the King and Queen, for the birth of their second Daughter the Princess Elizabeth, and to ingratiate themselves the more, they sent by him a very rich present, a massie peice of Amber-greece, two huge basons of China, a noble Clock, the workmanship of Rodulphus the Emperour, and some exquisite peices of painting, of Titian and Tintaret, which were well accepted.

The King finding some inconvenience in the managing of his Treasure by Commissioners gave the office to the Bishop of London, which was a very good choice, for whereas most of the Treasurers of these later times, had rather served themselves in that Office then the King, raising themselves to great Estates and dignities thereby, he thought fit to choose this Church man, who having nor Family to raise, nor wife and Children to provide for, might better manage the incomes of the Treasury to his advantage, then they had been formerly; and so it proved, for by his care of the revenue, the King began to be rich and he was of so well temper'd a disposition, that he gave exceeding great content to all the people.

The Bishop of London made Lord high Treasurer.

The Kings Naval preparations were very great this yeare; The Fleet consisting of sixty good Ships, under the Command of the Earle of Northumberland now made Lord high Admirall of England, who sayling Northward and finding a great number of Dutch Busses fishing on our coast, he seized on many of them and dispers'd the rest. This made a great consternation amongst the people of the United Provinces, many of whose subsistance depended on this fishing, wherefore upon a supplication from the States to the King, they had permission granted by him, for he was more displeased at their presumption in doing it as in their own right and in contempt of his authority in the Dominion of these Seas, then at the thing done; As the Navy was greater this year then before, So the charge of it was much augmented, wherefore, whereas the last year the Ship writs had been sent only to the maritime Counties, they were now issued to all the Counties in England, and the people generally paid what rates and assessements were set upon them in pursuance thereof, but some few refused, and many of the Clergy complain'd that they were unreasonably rated by their neighbours some of them at a sixth, and others at a fourth part of the tax of the parish; for satisfaction of the refusers, The King writ to the Judges for their opinion, who are by their oaths his proper Counsellors in all difficulties concerning the law, and to ease the Clergy; he writ to all the Sheriffs of England, requiring that the Clergy possessd of Parsonages, should not be assess'd above a tenth part of the land rate of their severall parishes and that consideration should be had for vicars accordingly.

Another fleet set out under the command of the Earl of Northumberland.

The King refers the case of ship money to the Judges.

His letter to them requiring their opinions.

The Letter to the Judges was.

To our trusty and well-beloved. Sr. John Bramston Knight, chief Justice of our Bench; Sr. John Finch Knight, Chief Justice of our Court of Common Pleas; Sr. Humphrey Davenport Knight, Chiefe Baron of our Court of Exchequer; And to the rest of the Judges of our Court of Kings Bench, Common Pleas, and the Barons of our Court of Exchequer.

CHARLES REX.

TRusty and well beloved we greet you well; Taking into our Princely consideration that the honour and safety of this our Realm of England, the preservation whereof is onely entrusted to our care, was and is more dearely concern'd then in late or former times; as well by divers Counsels and attempts to take from us the Dominion of the seas, of which we are sole Lord, and right owner, or Proprietor, and the Losse whereof would be of greatest danger and peril to this Kingdom, and other our Dominions, and many other wayes:

Wee

1636 Wee for the avoiding of these and the like dangers: well weighing with our Self, that where the good and safety of the Kingdime in generall is concern'd and the whole Kingdome in danger, there the charge and defence ought to be borne by all the Realme in general; did for the preventing so publick a mischief, resolve with our self to have a Royal Navy prepared, that might be of force and power (with Almighty Gods blessing and assistance) to protect and defend this our Realme, and our Subjects therein, from all such perills and dangers, and for that purpose wee issued forth writts under our great Seal of England, directed to all our Sheriffs of our several Counties of England and Wales, Commanding thereby all our said subjects, in every City, Town, and Village, to provide such a number of Ships, well furnisht, as might serve for this Royal purpose, and which might be done with the greatest equality that could be. In performance whereof, though generally throughout all the Counties of this our Realme, we have found in our Subjects, great chearfulness and alacity, which wee gratiously interperet as a testimony, as well of their dutifull affection to us, and our service, as of the respect they have to the Publick, which well becometh every good Subject; Nevertheless, finding that some few, happily out of ignorance what the Laws and customes of this Realm are, or out of a desire to be eased in their particulars, how generall soever their charge be, or ought to be, have not yet paid and contributed to their severall rates and assessments that were set upon them. And foreseeing in our Princely wisdome, diverse suits and Actions, are not unlike to be commenced, and prosecuted in our several Courts at Westminster; Wee desirous to avoid such inconveniences, and out of our Princely love and affection to all our people, being willing to prevent such errours as any of our loving subjects may happen to run into, have thought fit in a case of this nature to advise with you, Our Judges, who wee doubt not are well studied and informed in the Rights of our Soveraignty, and because the tryals in our several Courts, by the formalities in pleading, will require a long protraction, Wee have thought fitt by this letter directed to you all, to require your Judgements in the Case, as it is set downe in the inclosed paper, which will not onely gaine time, but also be of more authority to over rule any prejudicate opinions of others in the point. Given under our signet, at our Court of Whitehall, the 2d. of February, in the 12th. yeare of our Reign. 1636.

CHARLES REX.

The State of the case propounded.

WHen the good and safety of the Kingdom in generall is concern'd, and the whole Kingdome in danger; whether may not the King by writ under the great seal of England, command all the Subjects in his Kingdom at their charge, to provide and furnish such number of Ships with men, victuals, and munition, and for such time as he shall think fit for the defence and safeguard of the Kingdom, from such danger and perill, and by law compel the doing thereof, in case of refusal or refractorines: and whether in such case is not the King the sole Judge, both of the danger and when, and how the same is to be prevented and avoided.

To which, the Judges delivered their opinions as followeth. 1636

The Judges opinions about it.

MAy it please your most excellent Majesty, Wee have according to your Majestyes „ command severally and every man by himself, „ and all of us together, taken into serious consi- „ deration, the case and questions signed by your „ Majesty, and inclosed in your letter. And „ we are of opinion, that when the good and „ safety of the Kingdom in generall is concerned, „ and the whole Kingdom in danger, your Ma- „ jesty may by writ, under your great seal of „ England, command all the Subjects of this your „ Kingdom at their charge to provide and furnish „ such number of Ships with men, victual, muni- „ tion, and for such time as your Majesty shall „ think fit, for the defence and safeguard of the „ Kingdom from such perill and danger. And „ that by Law your Majesty may compell the „ doing thereof, in case of refusal or refractori- „ ness. And we are also of opinion that in such „ case your Majesty is the sole Judge both of the „ danger, and when, and how the same is to be „ prevented and avoided.

These opinions being subscribed by all the Judges, were enrolled in all the Courts of Westminster Hall, and the King thought he had now warrant sufficient to proceed against the defaulters, the chiefest whereof, was one Mr. Hambden a Gentleman of Buckinghamshire, who being summoned by proces appeared and required Oyer of the Ship-writs, which being read, he demur'd in law thereunto, and demanded the opinion of all the Judges upon the Legall sufficiency thereof. This great case came to be argued in the Exchequer chamber, and the major part of the Judges delivered their opinions in favour of the writts, and accordingly the Barons gave Judgement against Mr. Hambden; yet did not the question altogether so repose, but Master Hambden observing that two of the Judges viz. Crooke and Hutton, were of a contrary sense, held up the contest still though all in vain, all his inquietude not gaining him the least acquittal, untill an higher power interposed.

The Earl of Arundel sent Ambassador to Ferdinand the third about the restitution of the Prince Palatine.

There was an Imperial dyet held this year, for the electing of a King of the Romans, and the King sent thither the Earl of Arundel his Ambassador to treat with the Emperour and the Princes for the restitution of the Palatinate to the Palsgrave. But that Embassy could effect nothing, for the Duke of Bavaria, who had in his possession the upper Palatinate, and the electorall dignity would by no means heare of any Propositions to part with either, But the lower Palatinate he might have had upon some tearms which the Emperour proposed: but our Ambassador was not instructed to accept of any thing in diminution 1637 diminution of the Electors Right: ſo that the Palsgrave had no fruit of this Embaſſy, yet were his hopes a little raiſ'd by an overture of marriage made at this time betwixt the King of Poland, and one of his Siſters, which was almoſt effected by the legation of Prince Radzovill here in England. But the Emperour privately obſtructed it, and by the inſinuation of the Jeſuites, ſo inſtigated the Clergy of Poland againſt it, becauſe of her Religion, that the Treaty was broken of, and the King afterwards married the Lady Cecilia, ſecond Siſter to the Emperour.

On the 14th of January Mr William Pryn an Utter barriſter of Lincolnes Inne, Doctor John Baſtwick, Dr of Phyſicke, and Henry Burton a Miniſter, were cenſured in the Starr-chamber: The offence of Pryn was for writing & diſperſing Libels againſt the eſtabliſhed Diſcipline of the Church of England: That of Baſtwicke for inveying againſt the proceeding of the High Commiſſion againſt him, before which he had beene accuſed for writing a Booke, called Flagellum Pontificis & Epiſcoporum Latialium, and committed to the Gatehouſe, in which time beſides his arraigning the high Commiſſion Court, he publiſhed a Latine Apologie (called by the Court a Libell) ad Præſules Anglicanos, and a Letany very virulent againſt them. That of Mr Burton was, for publiſhing a Sermon, which he preached on the fifth of November before, wherein the Prelates were charged for introducing ſeverall innovations into Divine worſhip, which was deemed a Libell: For theſe offences, the judgement of the Court was; That they ſhould looſe their Eares in the Palace-yard at Weſtminſter; be each of them fined five thouſand pounds to the King, and impriſoned during life in three remote places. Finch, the chief Juſtice, moved the Court, that it might be added to Mr Pryns cenſure, to be branded in each Cheeke with S. L. for ſlanderous Libeller, which was conſented to, for they were the more ſevere againſt him, becauſe he had been an Offendor before in the like kinde, having been three years before cenſured to looſe his Eares on the Pillory, for writing a Book, called Hiſtrio-maſtix, or the Whip of Stage-players, wherein ſome indecent reflections were taken to be on the Queen her ſelf, as too much delighted in Maſques.

Dr Baſtwick Mr Pryn & Mr Burton cenſured.

The Prince Elector, and his Brother Prince Rupert went to Holland about this time in order to a deſigne, which was put in practiſe the next year, to attempt ſome thing with an Army in the Palatinate; The Aſſiſtance and credit of the Kings Purſe, did ſo prevaile under hand with the Prince of Orange and the States of the United Provinces, that a ſmall beginning of an Army was rayſed, with which they advanced into Weſtphalia, and beſeiged Lemmingen: But Hatsfeild one of the Emperours Generalls came ſo ſoone upon them, that they effected nothing, but were forced to fight to great diſadvantage, having had 2000 men ſlaine, and moſt of the reſt diſperſed, and many Priſoners taken, amongſt which were Prince Rupert and the Lord Craven, the Prince Elector himſelf eſcaped by flight, and retired to the Hague.

The Biſhop of Lincolne fined and impriſoned for certain miſdemeanors

Williams, Biſhop of Lincolne, was on the 11th of July cenſured in the Starr-chamber, for tampering to ſuborne witneſſes, to be fined 10000 l. to the King, and impriſoned during the Kings pleaſure, being referred to the high Commiſſion for a further cenſure: The occaſion whereof we ſhall briefly relate: 1637

This Biſhop, after the great Seale ſome ten yeares ſince had been taken from him, retired to Bugden in Huntington-ſhire, where he lived very hoſpitably, and had great concourſe; Amongſt others Sr. John Lambe, Doctor Sibthorp, with Allen and Burden, two Proctors, came to viſit him, and being at Dinner with him, there was much diſcourſe about Non-Conformiſts, and the Biſhop knowing theſe to be buſy men in the proſecution of ſuch, adviſed them to take off their heavy hand from them, informing them, that the King intended to uſe them hereafter with more mildneſs, as a conſiderable party, having great influence on the Parliament, without whoſe concurrence he could not ſupply his neceſſities, adding that he had communicated this unto him by his owne mouth.

A few years after, Lambe, upon ſome difference with the Biſhop, informed againſt him for revealing the Kings Secrets, whereupon an Information was put in againſt him in the Starr-chamber: To which he put in an eſpecial anſwer, declaring how all was contrived by a conſpiracy and combination of *Lamb*e, Sybthorpe, Allen and Burden, out of an intent to advance themſelves and hatred to him, for not permitting them to Poll and Pill the Kings Subjects in Leiceſter-ſhire in their Eccleſiaſticall courts, by haling them into their Nets, Ex officio mero, without any previous Complaint under an imaginary color of Puritaniſme. To this anſwer the Kings Attorney rejoyned in Iſſue, admitting the Biſhop to prove his ſpeciall matters, who proceeded to the examination of his witneſſes therein: but after a while the Attorney being ſomewhat remiſs in the proſecution: one Richard Kilvert was entertained to be the Biſhops Proſecutor, who had found out, that one John Prigion a Regiſter of Lincolne and Leiceſter, was a moſt materiall witneſſe in the Biſhops defence: And the credit of this Teſtimony he deſigned to invalidate, by charging him with getting a Baſtard, on one Eliz. Hodſon: The Biſhop thought it behoved him to ſupport the Reputation of Prigion, and engaged himſelf more zealouſly therein, than was conceived conſiſtent with the gravity of ſo great a Prelate, to ſuch who knew not that he and one Doctor Morriſon were the only perſons of note preſent at his table, where the diſcourſe above mentioned paſſed between him and Sr. John Lambe. This Baſtard was by the Seſſions at Lincolne ordered to be kept by Prigion, as the reputed father thereof, but at a Seſſions following, that order was reverſed, and the childe fathered upon one Borne, and Prigion acquitted; in the doing whereof, it is ſayd Powel and Owen, two Agents of the Biſhop, did menace and tamper with the witneſſes: But at a third Seſſion, Prigion was again charged and Borne freed: yet this laſt order, being upon a Certiorari brought to the Kings-Bench, was there quaſhed as inſufficient, and Prigion was after cleered from the childe: Kilvert nevertheleſs in the traverſe of this affaire, let fall the firſt information in the Starr-chamber, and proceeded upon that, whereon the Sentence before named was grounded, viz. 1637

1637 for Subornation, aud therein he ſucceeded: This dealing with the Biſhop was very rigorous, and the rigor of it imputed to Laud, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, who thought him one that too much oppoſed his intentions, iu reducing the Clergy to an exact and ſtrict conformity to the orders of the Church, in point of Ceremony, and therefore unfit to have any Government in it, for after that part of his ſentence came to be executed, which was referred to the High-Commiſſion, he was by that ſuſperded ab Officio & Beneficio, and all his preferments in the Church ſequeſtred to the uſe of the King: And the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, as Arch-biſhop of the Province, exerciſed all kind of Eccleſiaſticall Juriſdiction throughout the Dioceſe of Lincolne, not not onely as Ordinary of that Dioceſe, but as Viſitor of all thoſe Colledges, which had any dependances on that See.

New broiles and commotions in Scotland about reading the common prayer.

On the 23th day of July, being the day before this laſt part of the ſentence againſt the Biſhop of Lincolne was executed, there was a very great commotion in Edenburgh, about reading a Booke of Common-prayer, ſome time before ſent thither, and becauſe it was an action that drew after it great miſery and confuſion to the King, and all his Kingdome, we ſhall be a little more particular in the narration of it, and the conſequences thereof, then is ſuitable to the brevity herein uſed in other transactions of leſſer moment.

In the year 1616, as has beene related, King James obtained an Act of the generall Aſſembly at Aberdeen, for the compiling a Liturgy or Common-prayer, which was to be firſt preſented to the King, and after his approbation univerſally received throughout the Kingdome; this book in purſuance thereof was framed, and ſent up to the King, who himſelfe peruſed, and conſiderably reviſed it, and referred it alſo to the conſideration of others, in whom he repoſed much truſt, and after all his own and their obſervations, additions, expunctions, mutations and accommodations, he returned it to Scotland, to be commended to that Church, but before a period and conſummation was put to that Buſineſs, the King dyed. This pious intention of King James, for an Unity and Uniformity in the publique prayer, Liturgy, and Service of the Church of Scotland, was ſo farr intended by the King, that ſhortly after his returne from that Kingdome, he did not onely enjoyne a ſtricter celebration of the Engliſh Liturgy in his own chappel at Edenburgh, then had been formerly, but frequently conſulted how to have it univerſally uſed through the whole Kingdome, but the Scots-Biſhops, being jealous that this might be an argument of their dependance on the church of England, rather deſired that the Liturgy framed in Scotland, in King James his time might be received, wherein the new Tranſlation authorized by that King in the Pſalmes, Epiſtles, Goſpels, Hymnes and Sentences in ſteed of the old tranſlation was received; and (except on All-Saints day, when Wiſedom the 3d. and Eccleſiaſticus the 14th are appointed to be read, for morning and evening prayer) no Apocrypha chapters were directed to be read therein: though above 60 chapters are read in the Engliſh Liturgy, for the firſt leſſons from the 28th of September to the 24th of November. To this propoſition the King agreed, and the book ſent by King James formerly into Scotland, was remitted to England, and after many ſerious conſultations and ſome alterations, made by advice of diverſe of the Biſhops, and Clergy of Scotland, then here it was perfited, printed and publiſhed and ſent into Scotland: The Biſhops and Noblemen of the Kings Councell, then preſent at Edenburgh, reſolved, That the book ſhould be firſt read in the great Church, on the before mentioned 23d. of July, and on the Sunday before notice thereof was publikely given in the Church: There were preſent both the Arch-Biſhops, many of the Privy Councell, and others of the beſt Quality in Edenburgh, beſides a great concourſe of ordinary people: Amongſt this multitude, there appeared no ſigne of trouble, but no ſooner was the book opened by the Deane of Edenburgh, but a Number of the meaner ſort with clapping their hands, and outcryes, made a great uproare and one of them, called Jane or Janot Gaddis, (yet living at the writing of this relation) flung a little folding-ſtool, whereon ſhe ſate, at the Deanes head, ſaying, Out thou falſe Thief, duſt thou ſay the Maſs at my Lug? which was followed with ſo great noyſe and confuſion, that not any one could either heare or be heard; whereupon the Biſhop of Edenburgh ſtept into the Pulpit, and hoping to appeaſe them by putting them in mind, that the place, in which they were, was holy ground, and by intreating them to deſiſt from the profanation of it, they were the more enraged, throwing at him cudgells, ſtooles, and what elſe was in the way, even to the endangering of his life: Upon this the Arch-Biſhop of St. Andrews Lord Chancellor, called downe the Provoſt and Bayliffs of the city from their Seates to their aſſiſtance, who (not without ſome difficulty) put the unruly people out of the Church, and made faſt the doores: This done, the Deane proceeded in reading the booke, the multitude in the meane while rapping and pelting the windows with ſtones, to diſturbe the exerciſe, but notwithſtanding all their clamor, the Service was ended, but not the peoples rage, who wayting the Biſhops retiring to his Lodging, ſo aſſaulted him, as (had he not been reſcued by a ſtrong hand) he had probably periſhed by their violence. 1637

The ſame morning the Service Book was read in the next Church to St. Gyles, though not without noyſe and tumult, yet not ſo great as in the other: In the Gray-Friers Church Mr. Ramſey refuſed to read it, and was afterwards ſuſpended for the ſame, but the Elect Biſhop of Argyle, his Collegue began to read it, but was ſo menaced, curſed and exclaimed againſt, that he was forced to give over; In the Colledg Church Rollock one of the Preachers, who the Sunday before at the intimation of the reading had much commended the Booke, and undertaken this day to read it, upon notice, how it was received in the Church of St. Gyles, broke the promiſe he made to read it, thinking it the ſafer courſe, to leave himſelfe to the Cenſure of all men for his levity, then offend the multitude, whoſe favour he ſought; but he was ſuſpended alſo.

The morning thus paſt, the Councill aſſembled at the Lord Chancellors Lodging, and ſent for 1637 for the Provoſt and Bayliffs, to adviſe with them how to prevent the like tumults in the afternoon, which they promiſed to endeavor, and it was ſo effected, That the booke was read in the Church of St Gyles, and ſome other Churches that afternoone, without any ſuch diſturbance as it had in the morning: onely the Biſhop of Edenburg in his returne to his lodging was rudely treated by the people, both by execrations and otherwayes.

All this time the Magiſtrates and Counſell of the City ſeemed ſo to diſlike thoſe tumultuous proceedings, that when their Miniſters craved a diſpenſation from reading the Book, untill ſecurity were given for the Safeguard of their perſons, They drew up an obligatory Act, both for indemnity of their perſons, and alſo for their ſetled maintenance; and whilſt this was doing, to expreſs their zeale herein, they ſent two particular letters to the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, into England, in which they deſired him "To "recommend to the King their fidelity to his "Service, and to undertake for them, their zeale "and forwardneſs for ſetling the peaceable prac-"tice of the Service-book; This undertaking of the Magiſtrates of Edenburg, made the King remit much of his intended Rigor againſt the offenders in the firſt uproare, hoping by that his Clemency to oblige them the more in their duty towards him: And now the Councell were in conſultation for appoynting a new day, for renewing the exerciſe of the Service-Book, to which the Biſhops, Miniſters, and Magiſtrates agreed; But before the time came, The Magiſtrates and people were ſo practiſed on by the ſuſpended Miniſters Rollock and Ramſey, and one Henderſon a ſilenced Reader, that thy began to relent of their former promiſes, and preſented to the Councell a Petition, requeſting that the Service-book might not be impoſed upon them, untill the Kings Pleaſure ſhould be further known; which petition they alleadged, they were neceſſitated to preſent by the Example and incouragement of all rankes from all parts of this Kingdome; And the miniſters alſo petitioned, that the orders, whereby they were enjoyned to receive the Booke might be ſuſpended: There was nothing elſe of publike note done from Lammas (which is the day on which the Long Vacation there begins,) till the firſt of October, for the time of Harveſt drew all ſorts of people (ſave the Citizens) into the Country. But ſo ſoone as Harveſt was done, the Deſigners of the following diſorders had ſo correſponded, That the conflux of Nobility, Gentry, Miniſters and Burgeſſes, from all parts came, to be very numerous at Edenburg, in expectation of ſome great matters of Religion to be treated on in Councell, at their firſt appoynted day of ſitting, and they were ſo tumultuous in their behaviour, that a preſent inſurrection was feared, which forced the Councell, on the 27th of October, the firſt appoynted day of aſſembling, to make three Proclamations: The firſt intimating That nothing ſhould be treated, concerning Church Buſineſs, till the times and meetings of the people ſhould be more quiet, and peaceable, and therefore all that come thither about any ſuch matters, were required to repayre home in 24 houres, under the paine of Rebellion.

3 Proclamations for appeaſing the tumults in Edenburg.

The ſecond for removing the Seſſion (which is with us called the Terme) from Edenburg to Lithgow, and the third for calling in, and burning a ſeditious booke, entituled A Diſpute againſt the Engliſh Popiſh Ceremonies, obtruded upon the Kirke of Scotland. 1637

Theſe Proclamations rather fomented then extinguiſhed the flame then begun, for the next day the Biſhop of Galloway being to ſit with the Chief Juſtice upon ſome ſpeciall Buſineſs in the Councell Houſe, he was purſued with vehement raylings all along the ſtreet to the Councell-door, where he was no ſooner got, but they ſurrounded the houſe, and demanded the delivery of him to them; The Lord Treaſurer advertiſed of the Biſhops danger, came to his releife, but being got in, he was in no better plight then the Biſhop, for the fury of the people ſtill increaſed, hereupon the Provoſt and Councell of the City were called, to ſuppreſs the tumult, but their condition was the ſame as the others, for they were incompaſſed by the people, and threatned with fear of their lives to ſigne a paper, Firſt, That they ſhould adhere to them in oppoſition of the Service-book; Secondly, Reſtore to their places Rollock, Ramſey and Henderſon; Upon notice of this, the Treaſurer and the Earle of Wigſton went in perſon to the towne Councell-houſe, where they find the heate ſome-what abated, becauſe the Magiſtrates had ſigned the Paper, and they were going back in hopes, that the diſorders would be ſo farr quieted upon this Condeſcention, that they might ſet the Biſhop free: but no ſooner had they appeared in the ſtreet, but they were aſſaulted, and the Treaſurer had his white ſtaff, hat and Cloak taken from him, and hardly got into the Councell-houſe: In this great hazard, The Lords ſent to ſome of the Popular Noblemen, and Gentry in the Town, diſaffected to the Service-Book, to come to their ayd, who readily came, as was deſired, and they peaceably guarded the Lords to Hally-rood-houſe, and the Biſhop to his Lodgings.

Outrages committed by the rabble upon the Biſhop of Galloway and the Lord Treaſurer with others.

The Lords of the Councell, after the tumults were diſſolved, that very afternoone commanded Proclamation to be made at the Croſſe at Edenburg, for the repreſſing ſuch diſorders for the time to come, but to this litle obedience was yielded, for whereas the firſt tumults had been acted by the ſcum and baſeſt of the people, and was decryed by all the better ſort: This ſecond was the fact of the moſt ſubſtantiall Citizens (except the Magiſtrates) who were now growne ſo inſolent, that they ſent Commiſſioners to the Councell-table, to require, that their ſilenced Miniſters and Reader might be reſtored, and have aſſurance for the performance of what was promiſed to them by the Magiſtrates at the laſt inſurrection; and a while after, there were preſented to the Lord Chancellor and Councell two Petitions; The firſt in the name of the Men, women, children and Servants of Edenburg, againſt the Service-book; but the Second in the Name of divers Noblemen, Gentry, Miniſters and Burgeſſes, againſt the Service-book, and Book of Canons, as impoſed contrary to Law (becauſe not allowed by a generall Aſſembly), by the procurement of the Prelates, and therefore they decline theyr authority, and crave they may not any of them ſit in councell, being partyes

Another Proclamation for repreſſing diſorders in Edenburg.

Two petitions preſented to the Lord Chancellor and Councell in Edenburg againſt the Servicebook

1638 till their complaynts be tryed: This laſt petition was by the Councell ſent to the King, who was ſo much diſpleaſed therewith, that he delayed to give any anſwer to it, but gave order to the Councell, to ſignify to all his good Subjects his averſneſs from Popery, and deteſtation of Superſtition, the contrary whereof the heads of the commotions had abuſed them with. The Councell alſo finding Edenburg at this time a Seat of ſedition, and diſobedience to the Kings authority, cauſed the Seſſion to be adjourned from Lithgoe (which was ſomewhat too neere) to Sterlin, about 24 miles diſtant, that ſo the diſorderly multitude, there met together, might be diſperſed by the neceſſary attendance of ſuch as had any law buſineſs, where by the Kings Command, The Lords of the Councell publiſhed a Proclamation, for diſperſing the great and dangerous multitude, yet together, and aſſuring the people of the Kingsſincerity towards the Religion eſtabliſhed in that Kingdom, upon the publication whereof, both at Sterling, Lithgoe, and Edenburg, it was received, whilſt it was reading, with jeering, and after it was ended with a proteſtation againſt it by many Earles, Lords, Miniſters, and Burgeſſes, and a conflux of all other ſorts of people; And in purſuance of this Violation of the Kings authority, They began to inveſt themſelves with the Markes and Majeſty of Soveraignty, erecting in Edenburgh four principall Tables or Councels, one of the Nobility, another of the Gentry, a third of the Burgeſſes, and a fourth of the Miniſtry, out out of which there was a generall Table of ſeverall Commiſſioners, choſen from the other four, who conſulted of what was propoſed to them by the other Tables, and what they did, was put in practice with ſtrict obedience over all the Kingdome.

Many of the Nobility Miniſters and Burgeſſes proteſt againſt it.

Four Tables or Councels erected in Edenburgh.

The firſt Act of this General Table, was the the Renewing of a Confeſſion of faith Subſcribed by King James and his houſhold, in the year 1580, taken after by all perſons 1581. by Ordinance of the Lords of the Privy councel and Act of the General aſſembly, and ſubſcribed agayne 1590. by a new ordinance of councell at the deſire of the generall Aſſembly, with a generall Band for mayntenance of the true Religion, and the Kings perſon; This confeſſion was called the negative confeſſion, wherein the authority of the Pope, Tranſubſtantiation, images, relikes, opus operatum, merits, auricular confeſſion, prayer for the dead, and all the corruptions of the Church of Rome, as well in Doctrine, as outward rites are enumerated at large and particularly abjured and a clauſe is inſerted by which the Subſcribers did call God to witneſs, that in their mindes and hearts they did fully agree to the ſaid confeſſion, and did not feign and diſſemble in any Sort.

The Negative Confeſſion renewed without the authority of the King.

The occaſion of the firſt taking thereof, we ſhall make a little digreſſion to relate, for the better underſtanding theſe proceedings.

The Earl of Lenox being neer of blood to King James, alwayes bred in France, in the year 1580. came from thence to viſit him, and by his curteous and modeſt behaviour, grew ſo much into his favour, that he would not let him returne thither, but gave him many preferments in Scotland. This gave a great diſtaſt to ſome about the Court, and becauſe he was of the Roman confeſſion, the miniſters exclaimed much againſt him as ſent from France to pervert the King in his Religion: The King to ſtay their declaymings called the miniſters to Edenburgh together and acquainted them that he had taken great pains to convert his coſen, and had obteyned his conſent to take a miniſter into his houſe, which would ſerve to debarre Jeſuites and Romiſh Prieſts from him and win him by conference to a great liking of the Truth; Mr. David Lindſey a Miniſter of Leith, was held the fitteſt for this ſervice, as well for his Skill in the French tongue, as for his moderation otherwiſe; by whoſe labours, the Earle was quickly brought to joyne himſelfe to the Church, and openly at St. Gyles to renounce the Errors wherein he had been educated, yet did not this remove the jealouſies of the people, which were incenſed by the intercepting of certaine diſpenſations ſent from Rome, whereby the Romane Catholikes, were permitted to promiſe, Sweare, ſubſcribe and do what elſe ſhould be required of them, ſo as in minde they continued firme, and did uſe their diligence to advance the Romane faith. 1638

Theſe diſpenſations being communicated to the King, he cauſed his Chaplayne Mr. John Craig, to form the confeſſion of faith aforementioned, which he himſelfe for example to others, did publickly ſwear to and ſubſcribe, and the like was done by the Earle and the whole Councel and Court at that time, and it was afterward renued at the times before expreſſed.

This confeſſion, was not the National confeſſion of the Church of Scotland, for that was penned twenty years before, and containing the poſitive grounds of Divinity was ratifyed by Act of Parliament, in the year 1567. and regiſtred in the body thereof, and confirmed by a number of Succeding Parliaments: but this Negative confeſſion, hath little more then the mandate of King James in his Minority (being but 15 years of age on the occaſion before recited, to which he himſelf afterwards manifeſted his diſlike at the conference at Hampton Court ſaying, Mr. Craig the compiler thereof, with his I Renounce, and I Deteſt, did multiply ſo many particulars, that Simple people were not able to conceive them, and ſo being amazed did either fall back to Popery, or remain ſtill in their ignorance, If I (ſaid he) ſhould hold my ſelf to that forme, the confeſſion of my Faith muſt be in my table-book and not in my head: but that which was an aggravation in the renewing of this confeſſion, by theſe confederates was not onely the doing it without the authority of the King or his Councell, but adding a Band or Covenant to it, farre different from the Band in the year 1590. wherein they make an intepretation of the confeſſion, contrary to the ſence and true meaning of it, for the better carrying on of their intended reformation. The firſt Band was for maintenance of the Kings perſon and authority with their lives and fortunes in defence of the Goſpel of Chriſt, and libertyes of the Kingdom, but in this Covenant they Sweare to the mutual defence and aſſiſtance one of another, with their beſt councel, bodies, means, and whole power againſt all perſons whatſoever, wherein the King was not excepted.

This Confeſſion and Covenant was firſt taken by the Tables, and afterwards impoſed on all ſorts of people, wherein great violence and menaces were uſed in many places with beating, tearing of clothes, drawing blood, and expoſing to thouſands of injuries and reproaches, at Edenburgh, St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Glaſcow, Lanerick, and many places more; all thoſe Profeſſors in Colledges, and Miniſters, who out of conſcience towards God, and loyalty to the King, did either diſſwade others, or could not by their intreaties or threatnings be perſwaded to it themſelves; The Laws were poſitive againſt this manner of Leaguing, it being expreſly declared in two Acts of Parliament, 10 Jac. 6 Act. 12. and Parliamento. nono Reg. Mariæ. Act. 75. That all Leagues of ſubjects amongſt themſelves without the privity and approbation of the King to be Sedition, and the Authors & abetters of them to be puniſhed as movers of Sedition: but ſo great was the tranſportation of Zeal in the people inflamed by the inſinuations of the chiefs of the confederates, that the Law could take no place, All profeſſors in colledges, and Miniſters that refuſed to ſubſcribe their Covenant were removed, for many good men that diſliked the tumultuary way of offering it, were alſo ſcandaliſed, at the interpretation by the Tables put upon it, for they declared, That this Confeſſion was to be interpreted and ought to be underſtood of all the pretended Novations, no leſſer then if every one of them had been expreſſed in the ſaid Confeſſion: by which, the five articles of Perth before ſpoken of paſſed in the year 1618. concerning kneeling at the ſacrament, private communion to the Sick, private baptiſm, confirmation of children and Obſervation of Feſtivals, as alſo the Service book, the book of Canons, the High-Commiſſion, things which Mr. Craig never heard of (nor perhaps imagined are ſworne againſt, ſo that they made the living ſwear what was the minde of the dead, for in that confeſſion, theſe Romiſh corruptions were only abjured which in that time had infected the Church: Theſe Zealots nevertheleſs when ſome eminent Miniſters (who at their admiſſion had ſworne obedience to and practice of theſe points (when they diſputed this interpretation, and offered ſome qualification to it, they aſſured them they might ſweare, with a reſervation of not abjuring Epiſcopacy, the Articles of Perth, or any thing by Parliament or generall Aſſembly eſtabliſhed; urging that it would breed great diviſion, if any alteration of the words wherein the Covenant was conceived, ſhould be admitted.

Violences uſed to thoſe that refuſed this Confeſſion.

Profeſſors of Colledges and Miniſters removed upon the ſame account.

The King being much diſpleaſed with theſe indignities upon his Royal Authority, and their refuſal of that ſatisfaction which he offered to redreſs their complaints, intended to do that by power which perſwaſion could not effect; but the Marqueſs of Hamilton then very prevalent with him, diverted that courſe, offering his ſervice to compoſe the differences: The King being in his nature alwaies prone to lenity, was quickly induced to condeſcend to this motion, and ſent him down in the quality of High Commiſſioner, authorizing him with large power to ſettle the peace of that Kingdom. The Marqueſs at his firſt arrival finding the City of Edenburgh filled with extraordinary numbers of perſons from ſeveral parts of the Kingdom, becauſe of the ſitting of the Tables, went to a place called Dalkeyth, about four miles from thence where he aſſembled the Council to conſider of the beſt waies and means of ſerving the King in the proſecution of the truſt committed to him; but whilſt he was in theſe conſultations, the Magiſtrates of Edenburgh preſented an humble ſupplication to him to repair to the Kings Palace at Edenburgh, where (as they pretended) they might more conveniently give demonſtration of their affection to the Kings ſervice; the Marqueſs conſidering what great influence the City had over all the reſt of the Cities and Burghs of of Scotland, was willing to gratifie them in their requeſt, and told them, that if they would undertake that their Citizens ſhould behave themſelves as dutiful Subjects, and take order that the multitudes now preſent there, (who call themſelves Covenanters) and the Guards which the Tables had lately ſet about the Caſtle of Edenburgh ſhould be diſmiſſed, he would repair to the City, or otherwiſe not; The Magiſtrates undertook to perform all that the Marqueſs propoſed, adding that they feared ſome aſperſions might be laid upon them of diſloyalty to the King, from which they doubted not to clear themſelves, when he ſhould pleaſe to hear and examine their proceedings: The Marqueſs upon this their undertaking, went the next day to Edenburgh to the King's Palace at Haly-rood Houſe, where after he was a while ſetled, he fell preſently upon the main buſineſs with the Confederates, to whom he made two Propoſitions.

His two Propoſitions.

Firſt, what they expected from him for ſatisfaction to their Complaints; and next, what might be expected from them for returning to their former obedience, eſpecially in renouncing and delivering up their late Covenant: To which after ſome time, they made anſwer, That they requeſted a General Aſſembly of the Church, and then a Parliament, in which two Judicatures they would repreſent and diſcuſs their Grievances: To the ſecond, They ſaid, they could not acknowledge that they had ever parted from their obedience, and for their Covenant, they would rather renounce their Baptiſme, than abate one word or ſyllable thereof; And preſently after they had given their anſwers, they poſſeſſed the people with many miſreports, and the Sermons of the Preachers of Edenburgh were filled with admonitions, that they ſhould take heed of crafty compoſitions, or yielding in the leaſt point of their intended reformation.

The Marqueſs ſeem'd much troubled at theſe actions, and thought the beſt expedient he could uſe to reclaim the People, was to publiſh a Proclamation, which he had brought with him from the King of his Grace and Favour towards them, for releiving their Grievances, and ſatisfying them with his forwardneſs for the maintenance of the true Religion, and his averſeneſs from Popery; but before he did this, by advice of the Privy Council he writ a Letter to the King, to deſire him to ſweeten it with a favour of reſtoring to the City of Edenburgh the Sitting of the Seſſion, and all Courts of Juſtice as a thing very acceptable to the Judges, Advocates, and all Dependents upon the Law, and to all others which had buſineſs depending in the Courts, but chiefly to the City of Edenburgh, which complained much of being impo-

The Marqueſs comes into Scotland to compoſe the differences.

The Marqueſs obtains of the King for the reſtoring of the ſitting of the Seſſions, and all Courts of Juſtice.

1638 impoveriſh'd by their abſence: To this the King returned a very Gratious Anſwer, conſenting that the Courts of Juſtice ſhould preſently begin again to ſit at Edenburgh, and in purſuance thereof Proclamation was made for the firſt ſitting down of the Seſſion on the third day of July, which was receiv'd with great joy by the Judges, Advocates, and the Magiſtrates and Citizens of Edenburgh, ſo that the Marqueſs and the Council did then hope the peoples mindes began to be prepared to receive the Declaration of the King's grace and favour which was to be publiſh'd in the next Proclamation: but upon the news of this, ſome of the Confederates pretending to know the ſubſtance of it, were ſo bold as to tell the Marqueſs, It would give no ſatisfaction to the people, and if they publiſht it, they would make proteſtation againſt it, but not prevailing in this, they perceiving the bringing back of the Courts of Juſtice to Edenburgh had wrought very much upon many of their party, to a good reſentment of the Kings kindneſs towards them, caſt about how to pervert them; In order whereunto they ſent ſome of their number to the Marqueſs, to deſire that Sir Robert Spotswood Preſident of the Seſſion, and Sir John Hay Clerk, Regiſter or Maſter of the Rolles might be removed from their places, ſaying they would prove bribery and corruptions againſt them: To which the Marqueſs replyed, That upon the proof thereof, they ſhould be ſubjected to tryal, but he thought it not fit they ſhould be puniſhed for any crime before they were legally convicted of it, but this ſatisfied them not, nor did they expect to be gratified in ſo unreaſonable a requeſt, but they thought his denyal would give them occaſion to irritate the people to a diſguſt of the Kings favour intended towards them; for they preſently upon this poſſeſs'd their party that thoſe Judges were Enemies to their Covenant, affected to Epiſcopal Government, and Procurers and Abettors of the late Innovations, giving out that that they would publiſh a Proteſtation, that whatſoever Act, Decree or Order ſhould be made where any of theſe Judges were preſent, ſhould be null and void in Law, but notwithſtanding all this their threatning talk, they never proceeded in any proceſs againſt them, or made any ſuch proteſtation, though they were often told by the Marqueſs, it would be a very good ſervice to the King, if they could prove their allegations, of which if they were found guilty, they ſhould not only be diſplaced, but receive ſuch puniſhment as the Law had provided for ſuch Notorious criminals; but they perceiving their way of calumniation did not ſucceed, deſiſted from further dealing therein, which they would not have done, if the Judges had been guilty of what they alledged againſt them. And now the Seſſion being ſetled, the Marqueſs cauſed the Kings Proclamation to be pronounced at the Croſs at Edenburgh, wherein the King took notice that many diſorders had lately happened upon the Introduction of the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and High Commiſſion, many thereby fearing Innovation of Religion and Laws, wherefore He aſſured his good Subjects, that he was reſolved to maintain the true Proteſtant Religion, and not thereafter preſs the practice of the Canons and Service-Book, nor any thing of that nature, but in ſuch a fair and legal way as ſhall manifeſt he never intends Innovations in Religions nor Laws; That he will reform the High Commiſſion, ſo as it ſhall not be grievous to the people, and what is further fitting to be done, ſhall be agitated in a General Aſſembly and Parliament which ſhould be indicted in convenient time, concluding that he would not have them miſled by any diſaffected perſons, who under pretext of Religion would draw them to Diſobedience to his grief and their ruine. This Proclamation was no ſooner read, but the confederates arraigned it in a Proteſtation, which they cauſed to be publickly read, importing, that they never doubted the ſincerity of the King in defence of the Proteſtant Religion. That what he granted them, was not a ſufficient remedy for their grievances, in that he did not wholy aboliſh the Service-Book, nor the High Commiſſion, which was impoſed upon them contrary to the Laws of the Land. That no Proclamation can ſecure them from the re-entry of the Innovations which this ſeemed to diſcharge, and that an Aſſembly and Parliament are the only remedies of their evils, and means to prevent the like, and that their proceeding ought not to be interpreted a drawing to diſobedience under pretext of Religion, and running headlong into ruine.

A Proclamation made for the firſt Sitting.

The Proclamation arraign'd in a Proteſtation of the Confederates.

The Kings Proclamation pronounced at the Croſs at Edenburgh.

The Marqueſs found by this their manner of proceeding, he was not likely to reduce them to obedience; and the moſt they could be brought to, was an Explication of their Covenant, wherein they pretended to expreſs great demonſtrations of affection to the King, but when it was preſented and read, little more was in it then a Juſtification of the Confeſſion and their Covenant, proteſting they never had any intention to withdraw themſelves from their dutiful ſubjection and obedience to the Kings Government: But whereas it was expected that to theſe words of their Covenant, whereby they bind themſelves to mutual maintenance againſt all perſons whatſoever, ſhould have been added, except the King and his Succeſſors, that was refuſed.

The Marqueſs was not ſatisfied herewith, but he told them he had ſpent all his Inſtructions, and could treat no further with them, till he had been with the King to acquaint him with his proceedings, and receive his further Orders, but he promiſed to return ſpeedily to them with the Kings final anſwer to their demands, which he would ſhew to him, exhorting them in the mean time to break up their meeting, and contein themſelves in quietneſs and peace: This they promiſed to do, but added, if he did not return by the 5 th. of Auguſt with ſuch an anſwer as they expected, that then they would hold themſelves free, and proceed in the courſes they had reſolved on.

The Marqueſs comes to the King at Greenwich, and acquaints him with the affairs.

The Marqueſs went immediately to the King, whom he found at Greennich, and to him he related the particular of all tranſactions; The King was offended at the inſolencies of the Confederates, but was perſwaded to try a little further if he could reduce them by Gentle means: wherefore he diſpatched the Marqueſs with new Inſtructions, and gaue him order to call a General Aſſembly, and after that a Parliament, but ſo as he ſhould be firſt ſatisfied, by all Informations he could conveniently receive of the conſtitution of a General Aſſembly, none having been kept for divers years.

He is ſent back with new inſtructions, and an order to call a General Aſſembly, and after a Parliament.

As ſoon as he came into Scotland, he deputed ſome of the Lords of the Councel to confer with ſome

1638 some of the chiefs of the confederates of all Orders concerning some necessary propositions fit to be resolved on before the calling of the Assembly, both concerning the members of which it was to be constituted, and concerning the matters to be treated of; (two consultations usually previous to that meeting; for the omission whereof, in an Assembly of later times, they had so grievously complained, that in a Petition exhibited by the Ministers of their side it was alledged for a Nullity of that Assembly) but this was rejected as a limitation of the Assembly: The Marquess then told them he could not call the Assembly till he had once again attended the King: Upon this they caused rumors to be spread, that the Marquess neither had power from the King, nor any intention from himself to give them satisfaction; Wherefore the Marquess to disabuse the people in this matter, reduced what he at first propounded to two heads, which he tendered to them in these words;

The Marquesses propoſals in order to an Assembly and Parliament.

1. If the Lords and the rest will undertake for themselves and the rest, that no Laicks shall have voices in choosing the Ministers to be sent from the several Presbyteries to the General Assembly, nor none else but the Ministers of the same Presbytery.

2. If they will undertake that at the Assembly, they shall not go about to determine of things established by Act of Parliament, otherwise than by Remonstrance or Petition to the Parliament, leaving the determining of things Ecclesiastical to the General Assembly, & things setled by Act of Parliament to the Parliament.

Then I will presently Indict a General Assembly, and promise upon My Honour, immediately after the Assembly to Indict a Parliament which shall Cognosce of all their Complaints.

They dislike the propoſals, and inveſt themſelves with a power of convoking an Assembly.

This would not be condescended unto, but they told the Marquess, if he did not return from the King by the 21*th.* of September, to Indict a General Assembly by the Kings authority, they would themselves call one: for they had about this time published a Book, wherein amongst other things it was asserted, that the power of Convoking an Assembly, in case the Prince was an Enemie of the Truth, or negligent in advancing the good of the Church, was in the Church it self.

The Marquess hastened with all diligence to the King, and informed him of all occurrences that passed, which occasioned many debates of the way to be used to bring that Kingdom to peace and quietness.

The Scots about the King advised that he should not have any recourse to Arms, but in an unavoidable extremity, the Lords of the Privy Councel in Scotland were many of them in private League with the Confederates, so that nothing could be relyed on from them; And therefore that which was thought the best expedient, was to take an exact view of all the Petitions, Remonstrances and Protestations of the Confederates which they had since the beginning of the troubles exhibited either to the King, or the Marquess, or Privy Counsel, and to Grant them all: And besides all these, because the heads of the Confederates had made it a principal motive to alienate the minds of the people from the King, that he was inclined to Popery, and had an aversion to the Reformed Religion, It was adjudged 1638 and consented to by the King, to command and urge the renewing of that Confession and Covenant by his authority, which they had taken without it, by which Legitimation, to save the people who were to swear it from incurring the danger of those Laws, which made it very criminal to enter into any Covenant without his Authority: And insteed of that unjust band of confederacy, which they added to the confession to bind themselves to mutual maintenance and defence against all persons whatsoever: The King caused the General Band for maintenance of the true Religion, and the Kings person to be added in the same words as it was expressed, and taken in the year 1590. by an Ordinance of the Privy Counsel at the desire of the General Assembly.

With these concessions all drawn up in a Proclamation, the Marquess returned into Scotland within eight daies after his first coming to Oatelands to the King, and arrived there before the time limited for his return: The Confederates had made many resolutions in his absence, and though they promised no election of Commissioners for the Assembly should be made before the 21 of September, the day agreed upon for his return, they gave order that the Election should be made the two and twentyth being the next day after, according to which order, Commissioners for the Assembly were elected in many Presbyteries before the Kings answer could be known, or before the Assembly was indicted, which was not till some daies after these elections, and although they would admit of no conference with the Marquess, for debating of what members the Assembly was to be constituted, and the manner thereof, which they said, would be a pre-limitation of it, they sent out to every Presbyterie several Articles, wherein many Qualifications were made limiting both the matter and manner thereof, with a form of Commission to be given to the Commissioners from every Presbyterie, requiring that the persons elected should repair to Edenburgh after their Election, to consult before hand of what was to be said or done at the Assembly.

Notwithstanding all these disorders, the Marquess assembled the Councel at Holy-Rood house, and communicated to them the particulars of the Kings grace and favour for the appeasing of the troubles of the Kingdom, which they received with excessive joy, believing that malice it self could not invent a pretence of keeping the people from being fully satisfied: The news of this made the heads of the Confederates bestir themselves, fearing their reign was towards an end, and some of them came to the Marquess sitting in Councel, and moved him to delay the Publishing of the Proclamation till the Munday following, for the next day being Sunday, they intended their Ministers should in their Pulpits cast such aspersions on it as might not easily be removed, but the Marquess would not be prevailed with, and the Proclamation was that day published at the Market-Cross; which was to this effect: That the King did annull and rescinde all Acts and Proclamations that had been made concerning the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and High Commission, and the practise of them: he also dispensed with the

The Lords of the Councell approve the kings proclamation, and subscribe and swear to the confession & band authorised by the King.

All the Lords of the Counsell did seem very well to approve of this Proclamation, highly extolling the Goodness and piety of the King, for having offered so just a meanes for the conservation of the purity of Religion, and the peace of the Kingdom; and in a letter, which they sent to him upon this Subject, they offered to defend his person and Royall Authority, in the profession of that confession, now by him authorised, which they all solemnely subscribed after the Marqueſſe, who represented the Kings person, and appointed Commissioners for all Countryes, and places, to have it sworn to, and subscribed by all the people, throughout the Realme; many of the more moderate, both Magistrates, Ministers, and others in severall Townes and places, that had taken the Covenant injoyned by the Confederates, were very well satisfied, with the expressions of the Kings condescentions, mentioned in the Proclamation, and did swear and subscribe to the confession and Band, by the King directed, which began now to be called the Kings Covenant: But the Lords, Ministers, and others of the Tables, and their Confederates did not acquiesce therein, alledging that this Proclamation did in many parts of it tacitely condemne the precedent actions, and restrayne the Liberty of the Intended Generall Assembly, and to shew their dislike, they framed a long Protestation against it, a copy whereof they tendred to the Kings Herald, at the same time the Proclamation was proclaymed, which was to this effect.

A Protestation of the confederates against the Kings Proclamation.

That what the King granted in this Proclamation, did not free them from theyr just feares and apprehensions, and was not sufficient to cure the woundes of the Church and State; That the King ascribed the last Troubles to their feare of the innovation of Religion and Law, and not to the Innovations themselves, as if the cause were rather in apprehension, then in reality and substance. That the King having extolled the present Government of the Church, according to the late innovated formes of service therein, they could not be secured with a bare suspension of their Usage; if they were not formally taken away. That the Generall Assembly would be deprived of its just liberty, both in the Election of its Members, and the matters to be therein discussed, because the King appointed Bishops in the Indiction of the Assembly, to be there present, though they ought not so to be unlesse deputed by the Presbyteries.

1638 That the King declared, his intentions not to innovate any thing in Religion, whereas it depends on the generall Assembly, to abolish all such Ecclesiasticke constitutions, which appeare to them to be hurtfull to the Church.

That seeing all persons Ecclesiasticall and civill are lyable to the Tryall and censure, as in the Proclamation mentioned and expressed, They protested that the Arch-Bishops and Bishops be not present, as having voyce at the Assembly, but as persons guilty to appeare, to undergo censure, for the complaints made, and to be made against them, and that the warning by this Protestation, and the Kings Proclamation should be a sufficient citation for theyr Tryall in Life, office, and benefice.

That they cannot subscribe this confession, and Band by the King appointed: because it will tend to a division of them, in regard that they had already sworne, not directly or indirectly to suffer themselves to be divided from this conjunction, which consisted not in the generall confession (which they agree to be the same) but also in the explanation and application thereof; and moreover by this new subscription they should both condemne their former subscription, and preclude the like laudable course in the like necessity to be taken by posterity.

That if they should sweare the confession, they should be obliged to mainteine the Articles of Perth and Episcopacy, for an Oath is to be taken according to the intention of the person that commends it, and this being now appointed by the Kings Mandate of the 9th of September last, It is plaine, that the Kings minde and intention is, That this confession be sworne for the maintenance of Religion, as it is now professed, including the Innovations, and Episcopacy, which under that name were ratified by the Kings first Parliament: And if it be objected, that the Marques and the Counsell do by their Act urge the confession as it was professed in the yeare 1580. It is answered that no such Act is yet publisht by Proclamation: By approving the Proclamation concerning the Ministers Oath according to Act of Parliament, (which is to swear simple obedience to the Diocesan Bishop) we should, say they, seeme to determine that the confession of fayth in 1580 doth consist with Episcopacy, whereas that Question is referred, as other of the like kind, to the Assembly.

And they conclude, with an appeale from the Lords of the councell to the next generall Assembly, exhorting all to subscribe the confession and Covenant, as by them explained and applyed, and hold backe their hands from all other Covenants, till the Assembly be convened and determine the present divisions and differences.

The Marqueſſe, and the Lords of the councell perceived by this protestation, that the confederates endeavoured all they could to blast the Kings intentions, and they wondred much at their appeal from the Councell to the Assembly, which was by an Act of the eighth Parliament of King James made High Treason: They saw also, by what the Confederates did, that like good was to be expected from the approaching assembly (which was summoned to appear at the time expressed by the Kings Proclamation) for they had used great Industry, that all that should

shoulde be choſen thereunto, ſhould be of the moſt rigid and moſt affectionate to their Covenant, and to exclude the Biſhops from having any place there, they publiſhed, that any perſons, cited as criminalls before the Aſſembly, could have no voyce there, and in purſuance thereof they drew up a Libell againſt the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, which they exhibited on the 24th of October, to the Presbytery of Edenburgh, who proceeded thereon, as if all the Biſhops had been ſubject to their authority, and after ſome ſhort conſideration of the Libell, which was full of ſcandall and reproaches of the Biſhops, they ordered, that it ſhould be referred to the next aſſembly, and that the Libell and their Order of Reference ſhould be read in all Churches with a publike warning and citation to the Biſhops, to be preſent at the Aſſembly, to anſwer to the complaynts againſt them.

A Libel drawn up againſt the Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops, who by this means being made criminals, are excluded from having any place in their Aſſembly.

Many judged this proceeding ſo contrary to all the legall formes of Juſtice, was done on no other deſigne, but to render the Biſhops odious to the people, For the Aſſembly when they came to conſider of this matter, enter'd not into the examination of the perſonall vices, with which the Libell or Bill of Complaynt was filled, but upon the aboliſhing of Epiſcopacy it ſelf, though it is evident, that if they had had proofes, they would not have ſpared the Biſhops, whom the confederates had repreſented ſo criminous to the people.

The day of the Aſſembly being come, the Marqueſs his Commiſſion was read, and nothing elſe done conſiderable that day: The next day a Declinator was preſented to the Commiſſioner in the name of the Arch-biſhops and Biſhops againſt the Aſſembly, and conteyning a nullity of it, but this was not read without great difficulty, nor was this Declinator of the Biſhops the onely objection againſt this Aſſembly, for the Presbytery of Glaſcow, and many other places proteſted againſt the legality thereof, becauſe of the admiſſion of Lay-Elders, a thing ſcarce before heard of in that Church: But they made very much Scrutinye in the debate of their owne conſtitution, for by one meanes or other they excluded every Commiſſioner, that was not cleerly agreable to the mindes of the Confederates. The Declinator of the Biſhops they would by no meanes allow of, but put it to the queſtion, whether the Aſſembly, notwithſtanding the Biſhops reaſons againſt it, were not lawfull, and a competent Judge of the Complaints againſt them, and it was agreed in the affirmative. The Marqueſs admired at this carriage, ſince the chiefes of the confederates, who ſo lately proteſted againſt the ſitting of the Biſhops in Counſell, as partyes to their Complaints, and made a Declinator of the Councells authority, and invalidated all their acts, made while they were ſitting, could now oppoſe the like, though with more reaſon offered in this caſe: for moſt or all of the members of the Aſſembly having bound themſelves by Oathes, Covenants, Combinations and aſſociations againſt the Biſhops, and Epiſcopacy, which being analogicall to judiciall Acts) had barred themſelves from being Judges, either of the perſons or calling of theſe Biſhops: But the Marqueſſe had yet a deeper reſentment of their behaviour, for an other cauſe, for the King having nominated ſix Lords of the privy Counſell, to be aſſeſſors to him his Commiſſioner in that Aſſembly, they abſolutely refuſed to enterteine them, or allow their ſuffrage, affirming that were the King himſelf preſent, he ſhould have but one voyce, and that no negative one neither.

A Declinator of the Biſhops againſt the Aſſembly.

Lay Elders admitted into their Aſſembly.

The Biſhops Declinator rejected.

Six Lords of the Privy Councel nominated by the King Aſſeſſors to the Marqueſs refuſed and denyed their Suffrage.

The Marqueſſe concluding from theſe actions, that no good was like to be done by continuing the Aſſembly longer, November the 28th conſulted with the Councell, about its diſſolution, and it being agreed in the Affirmative, he went to the Aſſembly, and ſayd to them.

You are now about to ſettle the Lawfulneſs of this Judicature, and the competency of it againſt Biſhops, neither of which I can allow; I am glad I have ſeene this Aſſembly met, a thing which was ſuppoſed his Majeſty never intended, and for the further cleering the integrity of his Intentions, let this paper, which I deliver to the Clerke, to be read, beare witneſs.

The Marqueſs his Speech to the Aſſembly.

The Paper being read by the Clerke, was a Declaration the ſame in every ſubſtantiall poynt with the Proclamation, diſcharging the Service-book, Book of Canons &c. This Declaration ſoone after the reading, was ſigned by the Commiſſioner, & required to be entred into the Books of the Aſſembly; Provided that this act of Regiſtring this declaration, ſhould be no approbation of the Lawfulneſs of this Aſſembly, to the diſſolution whereof he was next to proceed, and therefore proteſted, that whatſoever ſhould be done or ſaid in it, ſhould not be obligatory, or be reputed an Act of a generall Aſſembly: The very night of the intended diſſolution of this Aſſembly, the Marqueſs aſſembled the Councell to draw up a Proclamation for diſſolving it, which being reſolved upon was ſubſcribed by all, but the Earle of Argyle, who began now to ſhew himſelve for the Confederates.

A Proclamation for the diſſolution of the Aſſembly.

The Proclamation being formed, and publiſhed November 29th, was encountred with a Proteſtation of the Confederates, That it is Lawfull for them to ſit ſtill, and continue the aſſembly, and that they would ſtill adhere to all their former proteſtations, and accordingly purſuing the tenor of their Proteſtations, preſently declared ſix former Generall Aſſemblies (which they thought would diſcerne them) to be null, and deprived all the Biſhops, and ſome they excommunicated, and ſoon after aboliſhed Epiſcopacy it ſelfe as inconſiſtent with the Laws of that Church.

Encountred with a Proteſtation of the Confederates.

Epiſcopacy aboliſhed by the Aſſembly.

The Marqueſs ſeeing all things tending to a preſent rupture, ſent to deſire leave of the King to returne into England, which he obteined, but before he went, he ſaw an end of the Aſſembly, which made many Acts, not neceſſary here to be related, and by theyr owne Authority ordained annuall aſſemblies, the firſt whereof was aſſigned to meet at Edenburgh, the firſt of July, 1639.

Annual Aſſemblies ordained.

As ſoone as the Marqueſs was gone, the Confederates drew up a Declaration, addreſſed to all good Chriſtians of England, to juſtifie their intentions and actions, which had ſo many undutyfull reflections in it of the Government, that it was ſuppreſſed by the Kings Authority, and he publiſhed a declaration, to ſatisfy all his faithfull

Their declaration to juſtifie their actions ſuppreſſed by the Kings authority.

Subjects of the seditious practises of those in Scotland, who had, under Pretext of Religion, designed the subversion of his Royall Authority, which was commanded to be read in all Churches.

Mary de Medicis the Queens Mother comes into England.

On the last of October this year, Marie de Medicis, the Widow of Harry the 4th, King of France, and Mother to the Queene, came into England, and was very honourably entertained: whilst she staid here, she was lodged at the Kings Palace at St James, but she finding the King likely to be involved in troubles, to reduce his Subjects of Scotland to obedience, after some moneths stay returned into Holland.

The Scots prepare for War, invite home their Commandersa broad, seize on divers Castles, and the Kings Arms, and ammunition.

The Scots having made all things desperate to accommodation, made vigourous preparations for warre, and sent for succors to such of the neighbor Princes and States, from whom they could expect any assistance: They also invited home many eminent Commanders of their Nation, from Sweden and Holland, to take imployment in their Armyes, many of which were at the beginning of the yeare come to them. They seized on the Castles of Edenburgh and Dunbarton, and all other places of strength in the Kingdom, and tooke out of Dalkeyth all the Kings Armes, and Ammunition, laid there the year before by the Marquess of Hamilton, next they chose Alexander Lesly, an old experienced Officer, to be Captayne Generall of their Armyes, to whom all the chiefes of the confederates (who tooke armes) solemnely swore obedience in all orders of Warr, and he swore in like manner, faithfully to exercise his charge.

Alexander Lesly made their Captain General.

The Marquess of Argile was sent to take care of those places frontier of Ireland, and the Earle of Mountrosse had the charge of Aberdeen, and the more Northerne parts, and Collonell Monroe was sent towards the borders of England, to keep all things quiet till the levyes were perfected.

The Earl of Arundel Generall of the Kings Army.

The King in that meane time was not idle, but made very great levyes in all places, and having got his Army together, he gave the command thereof in chief to the Earle of Arundell, as Generall, under whom the Earle of Essex was Lieutenant Generall, and the Earl of Holland Generall of the Horse, the rest of the Officers were many of them persons of the best quality, And the Army in Generall consisted of the Flower of the Nobility, Gentry and Commonalty of the Nation: With this Army the King sets out on the 27th of March, and comes by easy marches, within two miles of Berwick, on the 28th of May, where he incamped, and Generall Lesly about the same time, marched with the Scotch Army to the borders towards England, and incamped at Dunce, within 4 miles of Berwick.

The Marquess of Hamilton sent with a Fleet to Leyth.

The King when he begun his March, had sent the Marquess of Hamilton, with a Fleet of ships well furnisht with Souldiers: to Leyth to attempt that place, and make what impression he could in those parts to hinder any new levyes, and reduce Edenburgh, Leyth, and what other forts and strengths he could to obedience: He arrived in the moneth of May with his Fleet in the road before the towne called the Fryth, where after some stay, he landed some of his men in a little Island, to give them breath and some refreshments, and there he received a visit from his Mother, a most rigid Covenanter, which made many of the Kings Friends suspect his integrity; and the Scots upon the shore that saw this, were heard to say, They knew the Son of such a Mother would not do them hurt.

The Army under Lesly, was but ill armed, for they had not three thousand Muskets amongst them, so that though they put a good face on the Business, they were better prepared for a treaty then a battell, nevertheless those of that Nation about the King were not wanting on their part, to make the preparations of theyr Countrymen very terrible, and the Earles of Trequayr and Roxborough, and other Noblemen of Scotland, who had permission to repayre to York to the King, as he was in his March, for mediating an attonement, did so practise upon the English Lords by their insinuations, that they mitigated much the displeasure of some, and quite tooke of the edge of others, so that after the King had been a while in his Leaguer neere Berwick, he was easily disposed to receive Overtures from them, to be received into his grace and favor, which they made with great protestations of theyr Resolution upon his gratious assurance of the preservation of their Religion and Lawes, to give example to others of all civill and temporal obedience, which could be required or expected from his loving subjects: This produced a Treaty, for which on the Kings part were appoynted, The Earles of Pembrook, Salisbury Berkeshire, Sr. Henry Vane, and Secretary Cook: and for the Scots the Earles of Rothes and Dumfermling, the Lord London, the Lord Douglas Alexander Henderson and Archibald Johnstoun: These having had severall debates, at length, June the 17th concluded upon a Pacification, which on the Kings part was expressed by a Declaration of that date: so much whereof as is pertinent for the better understanding of these transactions is here inserted.

A pacification made by the King and the Scots.

We are pleased to confirm and make good whatsoever the Marquess of Hamilton our Commissioner hath granted; And that all matters Ecclesiastical shall be determined by the Assemblies of the Kirk, and matters Civil by the Parliament, and other inferior Judicatories established by Law, which Assembly shall be kept once a year, or as shall be agreed upon by the General Assembly, and our Commissioner for the time being.

That a free and General Assembly be kept at Edenburgh the sixth of August next, where we intend (God willing) to be personally present, and thereafter a Parliament the 20th. of August, and there an Act of Oblivion to be passed; And that upon their disarming and disbanding of their forces, dissolving and discharging all their pretended Tables and Conventicles, and restoring to the King all his Castles, Forts and Ammunition, as also his Royal Honours, and to every one of his Good Subjects, their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods and Means whatsoever taken and deteined since the late pretended General Assembly, The King will presently thereafter recall his Fleet, and retire his Forces, and cause restitution of their Ships and goods taken since the aforesaid time.

The

The Articles of Pacification were these, the 17 th. of June, 1639.

Articles of Pacification.

1. THe Forces of Scotland to be disbanded and dissolved within 24 hours after the agreement of the Kings Declaration.

2. The Kings Castles, Forts and Ammunition to be delivered after the said Publication, so soon as he should send to receive them.

3. His Ships to depart presently after the Delivery of the Castles, and in the mean time no interruption of Trade.

4. All Persons, Goods and Ships detained by the King since the first of November to be restored.

5. No Meetings, Treatings, Consultations or Convocations of any of the Scots, but such as are warranted by Act of Parliament.

6. All Fortifications to desist and to be remitted to the Kings pleasure.

7. To restore to every one their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods and Means whatsoever taken and detained from them by whatsoever means since the first of November last.

The King signed the Declaration on the 18 th. of June, and the same day the Commissioners on each party signed the Articles, and the Scots Commissioners subscribed a short Declarative submission in these words.

A declarative submission subscribed by the Scots Commissioners.

In Obedience to His Majesties Royal Commands, We shall upon Thursday next the 20 th. of June dismiss our Forces, and immediately thereafter deliver his Majesties Castles, &c. And shall ever in all things carry our selves like humble and Loyal Subjects.

Rothes. Dumfirmlin. London. Dowglas. Henderson. Johnston.

The Pacification being thus agreed, the King sent for some of the Scotch Lords, and informed them that he had given Orders to the Marques of Hamilton to draw off the Fleet, and did intend to have been at Edenburgh at the opening of the Assembly, but that he had received letters from the Queen, which intimated a necessity of his presence at London about some pressing affairs, but he would depute the Earl of Traquayr with full power and authority as his High Commissioner to hold the Assembly and the Parliament.

The Earl of Traquayr deputed the Kings Commissioner.

Most men thought these graces of the King to his Scotch Subjects, would have obliged them to an intire submission to his authority, but the Confederates had some further designs of trouble: For no sooner was the Kings Declaration published, but at that instant they incountred it with a Protestation of several heads. First, of adhering to the late General Assembly at Glascow as a Free and General Assembly of the Church, and to all proceedings there, especially to the sentences of Deprivation and Excommunication of the Bishops: Secondly, of adhering to their Solemn Covenant and declaration of the Assembly, whereby the Office of Bishops is abjured. Thirdly, in regard many of the Gentry and the Ministers, who had long attended at Edenburgh during the discussion of the Pacification and the preparatives to it, were to repair to their own homes, whereby such of them as had Suits depending at Law, could not stay at Edenburgh to attend them; they Declared, that if any members of the Colledge of Justice should attend the Session or Tearm, all their Acts and Sentences of Judgements should be void and ineffectual.

The Scots Protestation against the Kings declaration.

The King could not but resent this Ingratitude, but was forced to temporise, in hopes that at the meeting of the Parliament, some moderate Councels might temper the minds of the people: he had been so just to those conditions of peace which he granted them, that he immediately discharged his Army, which if he had kept together, or any considerable part of them, until he had seen their Souldiers disbanded, their Officers casheired, their Forts and Castles delivered up to him, and some good issue of the Assembly and Parliament to be held at Edenburgh, he had preserved his Honour among Forein Princes, and crush'd those practises at home which afterwards undermined his peace, and destroyed his glories.

The Scots did not punctually perform any one Article, the Castle of Edenburgh was indeed put under the command of Sir Patrick Ruthen by the Kings Orders, but they did not slight their Fortifications at Leyth, they still kept their Officers in pay, and continued their meetings and consultations, disquieting, molesting and frighting all of different inclinations, and the more to stir up the people, they dispersed a Scandalous Libell Entituled, Some Conditions of His Majesties Treaty with the Subjects of Scotland before the English Nobility are set down here for a Remembrance.

The Scots breach of Articles.

This Paper consisted of eight heads which were pretended to be drawn out of Notes taken upon the several Discourses with the King about the matter of his Declaration: This was put into the hands of the Earl of Pembrook at his coming from Berwick, who pretended not to have read it, but seal'd it up till he presented it to the King; The matter of it was very scandalous, and derogatory to the Kings honour; for all the substance of the Declaration was so qualified thereby, that the whole sense and intention of it was perverted: The King therefore summoned all the English Lords that were privy to these transactions, to meet in Councel, who disavowed any such consent of his Majesty as in that Paper was expressed, and therefore both they and all the rest of the Councel became Petitioners to the King that it might be burnt by the common Hangman, as a false and scandalous paper, which was done accordingly.

Upon the 6 th. of August (old stile) The General Assembly conven'd at Edenburgh according to the Kings Indiction, and sate till the 24 th. the chief matters passed were, the Confirmation of the Act of the Assembly at Glascow, the abolishing Episcopacy, the five Articles of Perth, the High Commission, the Liturgie, and the Book of Cannons, and ended with rendring thanks to the King for his Indulgence towards them, in the assent of his Commissionet to their Acts, and assigned another to meet at Aberdeen the next year in the moneth of July.

duced a high debate about setling their constitution to determine what estate should supply that of the Bishops now aboliſh'd, which being at last agreed, they fell upon other matters concerning Rescissory Acts of Former Parliaments, and several consultations tending rather totally to eclipse the Kings Regal power, and to new model his Government, than to reform abuses: so that he sent an expres to the Earl of Trequayr to prorogue the Parliament again till the second of June following.

To this Prorogation they very unwillingly submitted, declaring that the King had no power to prorogue them without their consent, and they appointed some of every of the three estates to continue in Edenburgh till they had made a remonstrance thereof to the King, which before the separation they perfected, and the Earl of Dumfermelin and the Lord Lowdon were sent to present it to him: These coming to the Court without warrant from the Kings Commissioner, were sent back again without audience, and after a while the Commissioner himself comes up to inform the King of the present condition of Scotland, which being reported to the Councel, it was resolved, That the Disobedience of that Nation was not reducible but by force. And thus matters stood between the King and them about the beginning of December, which for the better connexion of the Relations of that affair we have drawn thus far in time, but we must now look a little back to the affairs of England.

The Lords Dumfermelin and Lowdon presenting a remonstrance to the King without warrant from his Commissioner, are sent back without audience.

The Prince Elector comes to England.

The Prince Elector in July this year arrived at the Court of England in prosecution of a design he had to get the command of the Army of Duke Bernard, Saxon Weymar lately dead, which consisted of a gallant number of Swedes, Germans, and other Nations: The King did like very well of the business, and proposed it to the French Embassador, offering that the Prince should joyn in a perpetual League with France, and that he would contribute what he could to his assistance. The Embassador seemed to be very well pleased with the offer, and told the King that he doubted not but his Master would approve of it, and that Cardinal Richlieu the chief Minister of that State would be willing to serve the King and the Prince therein, and thereupon he dispatched a messenger to Paris, to acquaint the French King with the matter, but in the mean while, it was suggested to the King, that Richlieu under-hand fomented the troubles of Scotland, whereby the confederate Covenanters had been encouraged to write a letter to that King for assistance, so that the reality of Richlieu was so much suspected, that the Prince was advised to go privately through France to Duke Bernard's Army, of which it was believ'd he might by his appearance easily get the Command. The Prince therefore in November passed over to Rullen, and from thence endeavoured to pass by disguise through France, but at Lyons he was discovered, and taken Prisoner: And the King of France interpreted this action of the Prince of no fair intentions towards him, because it was done in a time of treaty, so that he was kept under a strict guard.

A Sea-fight between the Spaniards & Hollanders.

The great businesses of this Summer was a Sea-Fight betwixt the two Navies of Spain and Holland in the Downes, which we shall here insert in the words of Sir John Pennington, the King's Vice-admiral, who made this following Narration thereof.

The Spanish Fleet consisting of near seventy Sail, bound and designed for Dunkirk in Flanders, with a recruit both of men and money, met with the Vice-Admiral of the Holland Fleet, having in his company seventeen tall Ships, Septemb. the 7 th. and entred into a very fierce dispute with them, untill the Hollander perceiving himself too weak, got to the windward, saying along towards Dunkirk, and continually firing their Ordnance to give warning to their Admiral, who lay before that Town with the residue of the Fleet: in the first Encounter the Hollanders had two Ships sunk, and the next morning by two of the clock the Admiral came up, and joyning with the Vice-Admiral between Dover and Calais, they set upon the Spaniard, and continued a very sharp fight till past Noon, wherein they had much the better, having taken two Gallions, sunk another, and much shattered the rest, though they were but 25 Sail to the Spaniards 60 and upwards, and at length forced them upon the English Coast near Dover, where they left them, and bare off for the Coast of France, not willing to attempt any thing against them within the King of England's liberties.

The Spaniards being now got as they thought under the Lee of England's protection, began to plot how to get rid of their bad Neighbours; and the Spanish Resident importuned the King, that he would keep the Hollander in subjection two Tydes, that in the interim they might have the opportunity for shipping away for Spain; but the King being in amity with them both, was resolved to stand newter, and whereas the Spaniards had hired some English Ships to transport their Souldiers to Dunkirk, the King upon complaint of the Dutch Embassador, strictly commanded, that none should take in any Spaniards, nor pass beyond Gravesend without Licence, but the Spaniards and the Hollanders plotting a great while counter the one to the other, the Spaniard at length somewhat outwitted his Enemie, and by a stratagem in the night conveyed away 14 Dunkirk Ships, and in them four thousand men.

In the beginning of October the King sent the Earl of Arundel to the Admiral of Spain, Don Antonio, D' Oquendo desiring him to retreat upon the first fair wind, because he would not they should engage within his Seas, but the wind continued Eastwardly so long (a thing not usual in that Season) as the Hollanders got daily fresh supply from Zealand, so that at length their Fleet was compleated to an hundred Ships, wherewith they encompassed their Enemies within Pistoll-shot for four daies: But that which was so long an enterview of these two Fleets, at last turned to an ingagement.

On the eleventh of the same moneth, Van Trump the Dutch Admiral charged the Spaniards with Cannon and Fire-ships so furiously, as made them all cut their Cables, and being 53 in number, 23 ran on shore, and stranded in the Downes, whereof three were burnt, two sunk, and two perished on the shore. One of these was a great Gallion, the Vice-Admiral of Gallicia commanded by Don Antonio de Castro, which had 52 brass braſs pieces of Ordnance: the remainder of the 23 ſtranded and deſerted by the Spaniards, were man'd by the Engliſh, to ſave them from the Dutch: The other 30 Spaniſh Ships under the command of the Admirals Don Antonio D'Oquendo, and Lopez Admiral of Portugal went to Sea, and kept in cloſe Order until a great fogg fell upon them, when the Dutch taking the advantage thereof, interpoſed betwixt the Admirals and their Fleet, and fought them valiantly till the fog cleared up, when the Admiral of Portugal began to flame, being fired with two Holland Fire-ſhips, which D'Oquendo perceiving, he preſently took his courſe towards Dunkirk, with the Admiral of that place, and ſome few Ships more, for moſt of the reſt were taken. Of theſe thirty, eleven were ſent into Holland, three periſh'd upon the coaſt of France, one neer Dover, five ſunk in the Fight, and only ten eſcaped.

Theſe two potent Enemies being both friends to England, the Britiſh Seas ought by rule of State to have been an harbour of retreat to ſecure the weaker from the ſtronger, not the ſcene of their hoſtile engagement, and had this preſumptuous attempt of the Hollander been made in times of another temper it would not, it's like, have been ſo ſilently connived at; and their victory might have coſt them the loſs of England's correſpondence: But ſelf-denyal is a Chriſtian, not a Martial vertue, and who is able to reſiſt the temptation of an advantage, whereby he may deſtroy his foe upon the nicety of exceeding his juſt limits? Beſides, The King, the Dutch well knew, was of a Genious as not querulous, ſo if provoked very placable, and the diſpoſition of his affairs as well as of his mind diſſwaded him at this conjuncture from expoſtulating the matter with them.

The walls of the Caſtle of Edenburgh not ſuffered to be repaired by the Covenanters.

About the 19th of Novemb. being the Anniverſary night of the Kings Birth day, a great part of the walls of the Caſtle of Edenburg fell down, and the King having given order for the repayr thereof, the Confederate Covenanters would not permit any materialls to be carryed in for that uſe, which added much to thoſe reſentments, which the King had conceived againſt them, ſo that preparations of warr went on againſt them, but the Kings treaſure being exhauſted by the laſt ſummers expedition, he conſulted with the Lords of the Counſell of his meanes of Supply, who conſidering the preſent exigent of Affaires, adviſed the calling of a Parliament, as the beſt expedient to aſſiſt and ſtrengthen him, both with money, and counſell, to this the King readily agreed, being ever (till diverted by the practiſe of intemperate men) a great lover of Parliaments, and in complyance with this advice, a Parliament was intimated to be aſſembled on the 13 of Aprill. This reſolution was taken the 5th of December, and the notice given ſo long before, for two reaſons, firſt that the Lord Wentworth, Deputy of Ireland (being lately ſent for hither on the occaſion of theſe troubles) might in the meane time hold a Parliament in that Kingdom, which he did and managed ſo much to the Kings advantage, that an Army of 8000 horſe and foot, were ſpeedily rayſed, and money granted by the Parliament there, to keep them in pay, and furniſh them with Ammunition and Armes, and all other neceſſaries: Secondly, That by the reputation of a following Parliament he might borrow money, for the carrying on of the Warr, which could not admit of ſo much delay, as is commonly uſed in thoſe great Counſels, in the granting of ſubſidies, which laſt being repreſented to the Lords of the Counſell, many of them ſubſcribed to a Loane of great ſummes of money for the Kings aſſiſtance: The Deputy of Ireland being about to returne to Irelande, on the errant before expreſſed, to give good example here, firſt ſubſcribed 20000 l. The Duke of Richmond as much, and moſt of the Lords (except the Marqueſs of Hamilton) and likewiſe the Biſhops, and the Judges and Officers, and dependants of Courts of Judicature, both of the Common and Civill Law, and generally the greateſt part of the Gentry, even the Recuſants contributed according to their abilities.

A Loan for the Kings Aſſiſtance againſt the Scots ſubſcribed to by many of the Lords of the Councel and Biſhops, &c.

The King thus buſy in providing againſt the Scots, they endeavoured to remove the ſtorme hanging over them, by an humble addreſſe to him, craving Leave to repreſent to him the State of all their tranſactions, The King ſaid, He was accoſtable by any ſubject he had, and would not therefore deny that, which was pretended to be from a whole Kingdom, which he never refuſed from a private man.

This anſwer being ſent, The Earle of Dumfermelin, Lord Lowdon, Sr William Dowglas, and Mr Robert Barkely, attended the King as Commiſſioners from Scotland, who being admitted, and their Commiſſion examined, it was found, that the two laſt were not named in, nor impowered by it, but the King hoping to gaine upon them by lenity, inſiſted not thereon.

Commiſſioners from Scotland to the King.

The King appointed a Select Committee of the Councell, to heare the allegations of the Commiſſioners, as alſo what could be ſayd by the Earl of Trequayre, touching thoſe matters, where things were handled with ſo much acrimony, that no good underſtanding could be arrived at, And at this very time of their addreſſes to the King by Supplication, the Confederates in Scotland acted very different from peaceable men, for they ſecured many of the Nobility, and Gentry of that Nation, who ſtood firme to the King, and now again as they had done the laſt yeare, invited and procured to their ſervice many Commanders from Holland, and other places, but that which manifeſted moſt their bad intentions to the King, was a Letter written by the Lord Lowdon, ſubſcribed by himſelf, and ſeverall others of the chief confederates, to the French King, to favor their proceedings, and grant them his aſſiſtance, of the which the Originall came to the Kings hands, and being known, to be Lowdons Character, he was therefore committed to the Tower.

The King calls a Parliament in Scotland.

Lord Lowdon committed to the Tower for a letter to the French King.

Cardinall Richlieu was no ſmall incendiary in this difference betwixt the King and Scots, for the King making it alwayes a great Maſterpiece, to keepe the ballance even betwixt France and Spain, that neither of them being too ſtrong for the other, the affairs of Chriſtendom might be the evener poyſed, he knew the French deſign of driving the Spaniard out of Flanders, and the reſt of the Netherlands, could not be effected, unleſs the King were imbroyled at home, So that he he ſent his Chaplin and Almoner, Mr. Thomas Chamberlayn a Scotchman, to aſſiſt the Confederates in advancing the buſineſs, and to attempt all wayes of exaſperation, and not to depart from them, till he might returne with good News, in this Project; Con alſo the Popes Agent to the Queen, a Scot by Nation, and one Reed of the ſame Country were very active, and many Scotch Jeſuites, at this time in England, were not idle, and Hamiltons Chaplyn had often ſecret communication with Con; all which practiſes were diſcovered in a great part by one Andreas Habernsfeild, a Nobleman of Bohemia, then become Phyſitian to the Kings Siſter, the Palsgraves Relict, who made it alſo apparent that many of the Nobility of England, and the chief favourites at Court (among whom the Earle and Counteſſe of Arundell, Secretary Windebanke, and Endymion Porter) were named to be acquainted, and conſenting with their tranſactions. To this the King, out of the bounty of his nature, gave not ſo much credit as he ought, for in caſe of general diſturbance nothing is more familiar, then for ſeverall factions, and of ſeverall and ſometimes contrary inclinations, to drive on one and the ſame deſigne.

The death of Arch-Biſhop Spotswood.

About the later end of his yeare, John Spotswood, Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, Primate and Chancellor of Scotland, dyed at London, he was one that by his juſt deſert arrived to thoſe high dignities; in whom there alwayes appeared great prudence in conduct, clearneſſe of Spirit, and ſolidity of Judgment, he left this world very aged, and it was his happineſs, to do it without ſeeing that deſolation, which after happened to his Country, and to be interr'd, neere his beloved Maſter King James, in the Abbey church of Weſtminſter, then which none perhaps contaynes more magnificent Trophyes of death: Neere the ſame time alſo dyed, that Grave and learned Judge, Sr. Thomas Coventry, Privy Counſellor to the King, and Lord Keeper of the great Seale of England fifteen years, one that was a truly loyall Subject, and a good Patriot, and in the adminiſtration of Juſtice ſo incorrupt, that malice it ſelf ſtands mute in the blemiſh of his fame: Sr. John Finch, the chief Juſtice of the Common-pleas, ſucceeded him in the Office of Keeper of the Great Seale.

The Heere of Somerdick, Ambaſſador from the States of the United Provinces, in the Moneth of January, had audience of the King, he had with him Count William of Naſſaw, and the Rhine-Grave, and a very ſplendid trayne, his buſineſs was to give him ſatisfaction concerning the late attaque, made upon the Spanjards by the Dutch Fleet in the Downes, and the Embaſſy was ſweetned by ſome overture of a marriage betwixt the yong Prince of Orange, and the Kings eldeſt Daughter, of which more hereafter.

The Parliament ſits in England.

On the 13 of April the Parliament ſate, and the Deputy of Ireland, being not long before created Earle of Strafford and made Lord Lieutenant of that Realm, was led into the upper houſe by two Noblemen, where he gave an account of his ſervice in Ireland, where he had obtained the grant of four Subſidies for the maintenance of an Army, as before was hinted; Mr. John Glanvil was choſen Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, and generally the choice of members to that houſe was ſo good, that great probabilities were given of a happy Union betwixt the King and this Parliament, but in the midſt of this expectation ſome ill inſtruments at Court by their factious contrivances undermined all, and amongſt theſe, the chiefeſt imputation was laid on Sir Henry Vane then principal Secretary of State, who bore a grudge to the Earl of Strafford, for that he had cauſed himſelf to be made Baron of Raby, to which he aſpired, it being a mannor granted to him together with Barny Caſtle from the Crown: and becauſe he ſaw the Earl very earneſt to incline the King to endeavour by all fair means to gain the affections of the Commons, out of a deſire to ſee a good iſſue of this Parliament, to the calling whereof it was generally believed none had more contributed than he had done; He reſolved to endeavour that the Parliament ſhould rather be abruptly diſſolved, than any good ſucceſs be produced by the Earls counſels, to effect which, on the one ſide inſinuations were made to ſome, of the dangers to be feared by the Army raiſed in Ireland in order to Religion, and to others of the juſtneſs of the pretences of the Scots, and the good that might be obtained by favouring them in this conjuncture; and on the other ſide every thing was repreſented to the King in the worſt ſenſe, and that ſo ſlily, as no indirect intentions could be perceived; The matter of ſupply gave a fit occaſion to heighten diſcontents: For the King being intent to vindicate his Honour, which he thought to be trampled on by the inſolencies of the Scots, was very earneſt in preparing for the War againſt them, and to enable him therein, he preſſed hard for ſupplies, and offered to the Commons in recompence of their aſſiſtance to him, to quit for ever his claim of Ship-money, which at that time being warranted by a Judgement of all the Judges in the Exchequer Chamber, had as good an eſtabliſhment as our Laws could give it: The Commons were ſomewhat deliberate in this affair of money, and firſt they deſired ſecurity from the King for redreſs of grievances in three particulars.

The Commons deſire redreſs of grievances.

First, for clearing the Subjects property.
Secondly, for eſtabliſhment of Religion.
Thirdly, for the Priviledges of Parliament.

The Lords ſeemed ſomewhat more ſenſible of the King's Propoſition for ſupply, and after many conferences with the Commons, did at laſt diſpoſe them to a complyance, but the Queſtion, being in that houſe asked how much would ſerve to anſwer the preſent expectation; Secretary Vane demanded twelve Subſidies, which drew them into ſuch high debates, that all things became deſperate, ſo that on the 4*th.* of May by a unanimous conſent of the Kings Councel, he was adviſed to their diſſolution, and the Parliament was the next day diſſolved.

The Parliament is diſſolved.

It is ſaid this fatal action was precipitated upon ſome intelligence, that the houſe of Commons meant to vote againſt the War with Scotland, which was ſuggeſted, for that the day before in the debates for money, ſome glances had been made at an inquiſition into the cauſes of the War, which were improved to draw on that fatal councel, and it was likewiſe reported, that the Marqueſs of Hamilton was a great Stickler in this matter,

Mr. Glanvil choſen Speaker.

matter and that he had privately prevailed with the King to dissolve the Parliament before it was proposed in Councel, thereby to imbroyle his Majesties affairs the more, that he might confirm the Scots and distract the English, to work his owne advantages on both.

The Convocation of the Clergy grant the King a benevolence of 4 s. per pound for 6 years together.

The convocation of the Clergy was continued to the 29th of May, and they granted the King a benevolence of four shillings in the pound, for all their ecclesiasticall promotions, to be payd six years together then next ensueing, but this their continuance, and the Acts then made by them were censured and condemned in the following Parliament.

The dissolution of this Parliament was by some ill disposed people wrongfully ascribed to the advice of the Archbishop of Canterbury, so that on the ninth of May a paper was posted upon the old Exchange by one John Lilburne, exciting the apprentices to rise, and rifle his house at Lambeth on Munday following, of which he having notice, made provision of some quantity of armes and ammunition for his defence, and in the dead of the night of the day appoynted, five hundred of the rabble beset his house, and strove to force an entrance, but were repulsed, and made to depart without doeing much more mischief, then asserting their anger in Seditious Language against him and breaking the windows of the house, the next day many of them upon enquiry were apprehended and imprisoned in the white Lyon prison in Southwark, but within three dayes after some of their Complices got together and came to the prison and brake it open and set them free, nevertheless one of the chief imprisoned ringleaders was retaken, arraigned, condemned, hanged, drawne and quartered on the 21 of May.

Arch-Bishop Laud beset by the rabble in his house at Lambeth.

The King being disappointed of supply by the breaking up of the Parliament was very industrious to get money otherwayes to go on in the war, to which end the City of London were sent to for a loan, and all Knights and Gentlemen, who held Lands in Capite of the King, were summoned to send men, horses and armes, according to their abilities. The Citizens pleaded poverty by want of trade and refused to lend, though the City was scarce at any time richer and the trade greater, They were luxuriant in wealth and ease by a forty years peace, and that made them wanton, and apt to take any impressions, but that which was supposed at this time to be the reason of their backwardness, was a sentence in the Star-chamber against the city of London-Derry in, Ireland, which belonged to the City of London, whereby for some misdemeanours, Their Charter for that Plantation was declared forfeited to the King and many fines were imposed upon the inhabitants planted there; But though the City refused, the Gentry generally afforded their help to supply the King, and by that assistance and other before-mentioned aids, the King had quickly raised a very good Army, whereof the Earl of Northumberland was appointed General, The Earl of Strafford Lieutenant General, and the Lord Conwey General of the Horse: Northumberland was sick, and could not go, but the King went himself in person, so soon as the Queen then great with Child was delivered of her Son Henry who was born at Oatlands on the 20th. of July, but in the mean time the Army was on their march Northward, and my Lord Conwey marched with the Van some dayes before the rest could come up, and as he was marching, news was brought that the Scotch Army was march'd to Dunce, which was their old Quarter the last year not far from Berwick: upon this advice he was ordered to hast forwards towards Newcastle, but e're he got thither, fresh intelligence came, That the Scotch Army was march'd into England on the 20th. of August: The King met this advice in his way to York, and dispatched orders to Conwey to do what he could to impede their advance, till the Army could come up, upon this advice Conwey calling his Officers together, the result was, that they should keep the pass at Newborne upon Tine to hinder their possessing of Newcastle, where Sir Jacob Astley had newly entered with his Regiment, but had not time to make any fortifications: The King made all the haste he could, but by that time he reached North-allerton, about two daies march on this side of Newcastle, : The Lord Conwey sent to him an account of a defeat of the Forces under his command, which they had received at Newborne; The substance of which action was as followeth.

The City refuse to send the King money.

The Earl of Northumberland appointed General of the Kings Army, but falling sick, the King goes himself in person.

August the 27th. the Lord Conwey upon information of the march of the Scotch Army, and their design upon Newcastle, drew up three thousand Foot, and about twelve hundred Horse to secure the pass at Newborne: The Foot he lodged behind a Brest-work newly cast up for that purpose and placed the Horse in convenient posts to be ready to receive the Enemy if they came on. General Lesly marched the greatest part of his Army that night to the Rivers side, and before morning planted there nine pieces of Ordnance, which he covered with bushes, that they might not be seen by the English; the next morning he sent a Trumpeter with a Letter to the Lord Conwey, desiring leave therein to pass towards the King with their Petition, to which he returned answer, he would let a few pass, but not an Army: Lesly then commanded three hundred horse to advance into the River, whom the Musketeres from behind the Works so galled, as they were enforced to retire; Lesly then discharged his Cannon upon the English foot, which so terrified them, that they quickly left their station, and threw down their arms, and fled: The Scots horse encouraged with this success, plunged into the River, and passed over, and were gallantly received by some of the English Troops commanded by Commissary General Wilmot, Sir John Digby, Captain Nevil, and Captain Daniel O Neale, but they were so over-powered with numbers, that they were forced to retreat in disorder, three hundred of the English being killed and taken in the encounter; Conwey then deserted the pass, and lets the Scotch Army without any further interruption possess Newcastle, which was a little before quitted by Sir Jacob Astley, as not at that time tenible, but he first sunk his Cannon in the River, Conwey retreated with his Troops towards York, to which place the King and the Earl of Strafford with the rest of the Army were marched before, and there by the Lieutenant General he was accused of not doing his duty at Newborne, which he as well as he could excuſed, but acquitted not himſelf thereby (in the opinions of many men either) of Cowardiſe or Treachery, though matters proceeded not ſo far as to a publick cenſure Judicially upon him.

Whil'ſt the Scoth Army were on their march towards Newcaſtle, a party from Berwick marched to Dunce, and drew of ſome Ordnance which General Leſly had left there, but the Earl of Haddington, who had ſome Troops neer to Guard the Borders, came in ſo ſoon upon them, that they were forced to leave them, and retreat haſtily to Berwick: The Earl a while after with two of his Brothers was ſmothered in the Ruines of the Caſtle of Dunglaſs, which was blown up by an accident of Fire, that blew up the Magazine, which was done as the Scotch Writers ſay, either by accident, or the malice of One of the Earls Pages.

The Earl of Haddington kill'd by the accidental firing of the Caſtle of Dunglaſs.

The Scots at their being in England had ſo formed a way of intelligence with ſome of the Engliſh Nobility and Gentry, that nothing ſucceeded well in the Counſels or actions of the King againſt them, and by this means they took courage to invade the Kingdom, which otherwiſe they durſt not have done, and this treachery was afterwards in the Uſurpation of Cromwell boaſted to the writer of theſe Papers by Archibald Johnſton then Laird of Warriſton, who valued himſelf to have been the chief contriver in it, as that which thereby gave the occaſion of ruine to the Royal Family of the STUARTS. Mr. Froſt of Cambridge, afterwards Clerke of the Counſel of State in the year 1648, after the murder of this King was often imployed to Scotland in that correſpondence, and he carried his letters in a hollow ſtaff to prevent diſcovery, and many others that were in thoſe intrigues, who are yet alive, and we have charity to believe, never intended to ſee ſuch ſad effects of their Counſels as afterwards inſued to the ſubverſion of our Government, and the deſolation of one of the moſt flouriſhing Kingdoms of Europe.

The Scots find their friends and favourers in England.

The Scots confederates in purſuance of what their friends in England had agreed, declared in a Pamphlet, publiſhed at the head of their Army, (which was diſperſed in London, and many other places) not to lay down Arms till the reformed Religion were ſetled in both Nations upon ſure grounds, and the cauſers and Abetters of their preſent troubles brought to publick Juſtice in Parliament, and theſe Abettors they declared to be the Prelates and their adherents, but more particularly the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, and the Earl of Strafford: They pretended upon their march into England to take nothing from any of the Engliſh, but for ready money or bonds, but they were no ſooner ſeated in New-Caſtle, but they ſeized on four ſhips laden with corn, and impoſed a tax of 350 l. per diem on the Biſhoprick of Durham, and 300 l. per diem upon Northumberland, which was more than their whole Kingdome could provide for ſome years after, when an Engliſh Army had the power of Scotland, though their trade was free and greater than it had been many years before, and when much money was monethly brought in by the Engliſh in Specie, yet could not more than 6000 l. a moneth be rais'd in the whole Kingdom, and that not without extremeſt rigour.

The Scots publiſh a Pamphlet not to lay down their arms till the reformed Religion were ſetled in both Nations, and the oppoſers of it brought to puniſhment.

The King having loſt the occaſion of getting a reputation in arms by being perſwaded to the laſt years treaty at Berwick, and being now in great perplexity by the unfaithfulneſs of many of thoſe about him, could think of no expedient ſo good as to call together the great councel of his Peers to adviſe with them, and therefore Writs were iſſued to them to aſſemble at York on the 24 th. of September, but this was not very well liked by thoſe who favoured the Scots, whoſe chief deſign aim'd at the calling of a Parliament, which they feared the meeting of the Peers might prevent; wherefore the Earls of Bedford, Hertford, Eſſex, Warwick, Mouldgrave, Bullingbrook and Briſtoll, and the Lords Say, Brook, Paget, Mandevile, and the Lord Edward Howard preſented a Petition to the King, repreſenting many great diſtempers and dangers, threatning the Church and State, and his Royal Perſon, under ſeven heads.

The Favourers of the Scottiſh Faction put up a Petition to the King to hinder the meeting of the Peers, and to cauſe the calling of a Parliament.

1. The Danger and hazard to which he is expoſed in the War, the waſte of his Revenue thereby, and the diſcontents occaſioned by the diſorders of the Souldiers.

2. Sundry Innovations in matters of Religion.

3. Increaſe of Popery by imploying thoſe of that Religion in places of truſt, in commanding men and arms in the Field, they being not permitted by Law to have any arms in their Houſes.

4. The great miſchiefs that may enſue, if the Forces raiſed in Ireland ſhould be brought into England.

5. The urging of Ship-money.

6. The heavy charge upon Merchandiſe, to the diſcouragement of Trade, and the multitude of Monopolies whereby the Manufactors of the Kingdom are burdened.

A Petition fram'd in the name of the Citizens of London tending to the ſame end.

Many of the Citizens of London who were in combination with ſome of theſe Lords and the Scots, did ſo influence the Common Councel, that a Petition was framed in the name of all the Citizens of London, alſo to the ſame purpoſe as this of the Lords.

The King ſaw by theſe applications, what endeavours were uſed to weaken him in the opinions of his people, and was forced to comply to the neceſſity of the time; wherefore he acquainted the Lords, that before the receipt of their Petition, foreſeeing the danger that threatned himſelf and the Crown, he had ſummoned the Peers to conſult with them what was fit to be done for his own honour and ſafety of the Kingdom, where they with the reſt might offer any thing conduceable to thoſe ends.

The

The Scots joyn also in a petition for calling a Parliament.

The Scots proceeded hand in hand with their friends in England in the ſubſtance of a Petition to the King about this time preſented, requeſting that a Parliament might be called in England for ſetling a Peace between the two Nations, they ſent the Petition to the Lord Lenerick Secretary of State for Scotland, who delivered it to the King, but an anſwer thereunto was reſpited to the meeting of the Peers.

The Peers Aſſemble at York.

On the 24 th. of September, the Peers aſſembled at York, and the King at the opening of the Aſſembly ſpake to them to this effect, That an Army of Rebells being within the Kingdom, he thought it adviſeable according to the Practiſe of his Predeceſſors in like caſes to call them together, that with their advice and aſſiſtance, he and they might proceed joyntly to the chaſtiſement of their inſolencies, and ſecure him and his good Subjects from their malice: He ſaid, He had of himſelf reſolved to call a Parliament to meet on the third of November next, and in the mean time he deſired their advice on two poynts. Firſt, what anſwer to give to the Petition of the Rebells (for ſo he now on all occaſions termed the Scots) and in what manner to treat with them; Secondly, how the Engliſh Army ſhould be maintained till ſupplies from the Parliament might be had.

The ſubſtance of the King's Speech.

The Lords entered into Conſultations of theſe matters, and for their better information, the King cauſed a true relation to be given to them of the ſtate of the whole buſineſs, and upon what reaſons and advices, the unanimous conſent of the Privy Counſel for this War was guided: After many debates, To the firſt point, they adviſed the King to a treaty with the Scots; and to the ſecond, they uſed their mediation with the City of London for a Loan to the King for the preſent ſupport of his Army: A meſſage was hereupon ſent to the Scots to intimate his Majeſties conſent that a treaty ſhould be had at York betwixt him and them, The Scots replyed, They held that no place of ſecurity for their Commiſſioners, conſidering that the Lieutenant of Ireland, who had his reſidence there, commanded his Majeſties Army, and who proclaimed them Traytors in Ireland before the King had done it in England, and againſt whom as a chief Incendiary they intended to complain; hereupon it was concluded that the treaty ſhould be at Rippon, and the King appointed ſix Earls, and as many Barons to be Commiſſioners on his part, and the Scots nominated as many Noblemen on theirs; and for the better underſtanding of the ſtate of the Affair, the Earl of Trequayr, the Kings late Commiſſioner in Scotland, was ordered to be preſent, to give account as occaſion offered of what had paſſed in Scotland from the beginning of the troubles; the Earl of Briſtol managed the Treaty for the Engliſh, and the Lord Lowdon for the Scots, the greateſt part of the demands of each ſide were accorded without great difficulty, That which ſeemed hardeſt to the Engliſh, was to conſent to the rayſing of moneys in England for the Scots, having an Army of their own at the ſame time in being: For the Scots notwithſtanding their pretences of coming into England without a charge to the Nation, had by this time increaſed their levies to the the ſum of eight hundred and fifty pounds a day: Nevertheleſs, the Engliſh Lords willing on any condition to make peace, agreed with the Scots in the enſuing Articles; Which on the 26 th. of October were ſigned by the Commiſſioners, and afterwards by the King, but there were many other demands of the Scots referred to a further treaty, which the King conſented to be afterwards holden at London. The Articles agreed at Rippon, were theſe following.

A Treaty with the Scots at Rippon.

The Articles of Agreement ſigned by the Commiſſioners at Rippon.

1. That there be a ceſſation of Arms both by Sea and Land from this preſent.

2. That all acts of Hoſtility do henceforth ceaſe.

3. That both parties ſhall peaceably retain during the treaty whatſoever they poſſeſs at the time of the ceſſation.

4. That all ſuch perſons who lived in any of his Majeſties Forts beyond the River of Tees, ſhall not exempt their lands which lye within the Counties of Northumberland and the Biſhoprick of Durham from ſuch contributions as ſhall be laid upon them for the payment of eight hundred and fifty pounds per diem.

5. That none of the Kings Forces upon the other ſide of Tees ſhall give any impediment to ſuch contributions as are already allowed for the maintenance of the Scottiſh Army, and ſhall fetch no Victuals nor forrage out of their bounds, except that which the Inhabitants and owners thereof ſhall bring voluntarily unto them, and that any reſtraints or detention of Victuals, Cattel or forrage which ſhall be made by the Scots within thoſe bounds for their maintenance, ſhall be no breach.

6. That no recruit ſhall be brought into either Armies from the time of the Ceſſation, and during the Treaty.

7. That the contribution of eight hundred and fifty pounds per diem, ſhall be only raiſed out of the Counties of Northumberland, Biſhoprick, Town of Newcaſtle, Cumberland and Weſtmerland: and that the not payment thereof ſhall be no breach of the Treaty, but the Countreys and Towns ſhall be left to the Scots power to raiſe the ſame, but not to exceed the ſum agreed upon, unleſs it be for charges of driving to be ſet by a Priſer of the Forrage.

8. That the River of Tees ſhall be the bounds of both Armies (excepting alwaies the Town and Caſtle of Stockton, and the Village of Egliſſiff) and the Countreys of Northumberland and Biſhoprick, be the limits within which the Scottiſh Army is to reſide, having liberty for them to ſend ſuch Convoys as ſhall be neceſſary for the gathering up only of the contribution, which ſhall be unpaid by the Counties of Northumb. and Cumberl.

9. That if any perſon commit any private inſolence, it ſhall be no breach of the Treaty, if upon complaint made by either parties, reparation and puniſhment be granted.

10. If no Victuals be delivered upon the prices which ſhall be agreed upon, and ready money offered for the ſame & refuſed, it ſhall be no breach of the Ceſſation to take ſuch Victuals, paying ſuch prices.

11. No new Fortifications to be made during the Treaty againſt either parties.

12. That the Subjects of both Kingdoms may in their trade of Commerce freely paſs to and fro, without any ſtay at all, but it is particularly provided that no member of either Army, paſs without a formal paſs, under the hands of the General, or of him that commands in chief.

The Earl of Mountroſs having long adhered to the Confederates after ſome time diſcovered, that notwithſtanding their fair pretences, they had no good intentions to the King, and was therefore willing to leave their party; he had in the Army two Regiments of Foot, and one of Horſe, and there were five or ſix Regiments amongſt his Friends: the firſt diſtaſte he took, was a little time after the Pacification, when he perceived the Confederates to make no further uſe of it than to gain time of greater ſtrength, to ſet up thereby a kind of arbitrary Deſpotical Government, but finding the people ſo infatuated by the ſpecious-neſs of their pretences, he was forced to continue his former vigor in acting with them, that they might have no jealouſie of him, and upon the advance of the Scotch Army to invade England, he was the firſt that march'd out of the Kingdom at the head of his own Regiment, but during the Treaty at Rippon, he found means to write a letter to the King, wherein he aſſured him of his fidelity, and a moſt ready obedience to him; this letter was by ſome of the Scotch of the Kings Bed-chamber ſecretly taken out of his pocket, and a copy thereof ſent to General Leſly: he preſently ſends for the Earl to him, and told him he had managed a Correſpondence with their Enemies, and that he had known the heads of Princes toſt off for leſſer matters: The Earl required an inſtance, and thereupon Leſly produced a copy of his Letter to the King, to which he boldly anſwered, That he underſtood not that writing to the King was to hold intelligence with an Enemie, but rather what became the duty of a Loyal Subject to his Soveraign; this anſwer did ſo amuſe the General, that he thought it not at that time convenient to purſue the buſineſs farther for fear of a revolt in the Army, wherein Montroſs had a great party.

The time now approach'd for the meeting of the Parliament, and great endeavours were uſed in many parts of the Kingdom, to have ſuch perſons choſen as ſhewed their diſlike of the Government of the Church, or had been earneſt pretenders for reformation in former Parliaments.

On the third of November, being the day preſixt, the Parliament aſſembled, and the King expreſs'd himſelf to this purpoſe, He declared his earneſt deſire for the happineſs and proſperity of the Kingdom, deſiring them as he promiſed he would, to lay aſide all prejudice, and he would now clearly and freely put himſelf upon the Love and Affection of his Engliſh Subjects; willing them to conſider the beſt way for the ſafety and ſecurity of the Kingdom of England, and in order to it, firſt to think of the chaſing out of the Rebells (for ſo he termed the Scots) and next for ſatisfaction of their juſt grievances, wherein he would heartily concurr; that the World might ſee his intentions were to make this a glorious and flouriſhing Kingdom; freely leaving it to them where to begin, and adding that it ſhould not be his fault if this were not a good and a happy Parliament, and in the concluſion he told them, for their better underſtanding the ſtate of all affairs, he had commanded my Lord Keeper to give them a ſhort and free account of all matters.

The Parliament aſſembled.

The Kings Speech.

The King having ended, the Lord Keeper gave them a ſummary relation of all things relating to the Scotch invaſion, we will not ſay Rebellion, for it was ill reſented by ſome conſiderable perſons, that the King in his Speech had preſented them under that character, whereof he having notice, told them two daies after, he muſt needs call them Rebells who had invaded England with an Armie.

Great was the expectation of all people concerning the ſucceſs of this Parliament, which was much raiſed, upon the Kings declared reſolution at the opening of it to concurr with them in ſatiſfying all their juſt Grievances.

The long intermiſſion of Parliaments had produced many miſchiefs and inconveniences in the Government by the remiſſneſſe of ſome, and the rigor of others in Church and State, which inflamed the zeal of many good men of both houſes at this their meeting to be very earneſt in their endeavours for the redreſs of Grievances, wherein they were very much heightened by ſome others of the Lords and Commons Houſe, who were in confederacy with the Scots; and in a kind of Combination to alter the Government of the Church, and therewith to have ſo much influence of that of the State alſo, as to gain to themſelves honours and advancement into places of power and truſt: The purſuit of theſe things made them exceed the method and pathes of their Predeceſſors, and by fomenting Jealouſies, countenancing and procuring tumultuous Petitions and Aſſemblyes by menaces and force, they often obtained the accompliſhment of their purpoſes, contriving without doors in private meetings, what they deſigned to proſecute in their Aſſemblies. Rayſing of money by extraordinary means, when neceſſity was the beſt argument for ſo doing, Billeting of Souldiers, innovations in matters of Religion and illegal Impriſonments, were the great grievances of the ſubject how to be redreſs'd: but the means uſed to remove theſe, engaged the reformers in proceſs of time in a bloody War to act over all the ſame things with greater exceſs, demonſtrating thereby the extreme hazard of intemperate counſels.

Succeſs in this War enlarged their deſires, and extended their ambition, it bred thoughts in them they never thought before, and this was that which drew on the ruine of the King, and with him for ſome time the ſubverſion of our Monarchy, for many of thoſe that were in the beginning moſt active for reformation, had not in their proſpect the calamity that enſued, and too late repented the errors of their former actings, when they could not ſtem the violence of that tyde, their impetuoſity had ſwell'd to too great a height. Theſe matters will appear more plainly by what follows in the courſe of the Hiſtory, whereof the greateſt part as to this Kings Reign will be taken up in the proceedings of this Parliament.

The firſt weeks buſineſs was in ſetling the five ſtanding Committees, For Grievances, Religion, Courts of Juſtice, Trade and Priviledges in Elections, & in ſeveral declamatory ſpeeches againſt the exorbitances of Government both in Church and State. A great part whereof were aſcribed to the Councels of the Earl of Strafford and the Lord Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury.

Five ſtanding Committees ſetled.

The Scottiſh Commiſſioners were now come to London in order to the concluſion of ſome things undetermined at Rippon: Theſe had many private Conferences with their friends of the houſe of Commons, And it was agreed by them, That the Earl ſhould be immediately impeached

at

The Scottish Commissioners agree with their friends of the house of Commons to impeach the Earl of Strafford of High-Treason.

at his first coming to the House of Peers, for he was not yet come from York, and this they resolved on to prevent, and be before hand with him in an Impeachment he had ready against Mr. Pym, and some of the Leading Members of both Houses for holding intelligence with the Scots, which he intended to have offered in the House of Peers as soon as he had taken his place amongst them: Wherefore those in the Commons house that were concerned, were very industrious in their designs, and the house had not sate many daies before he was therein declared to be guilty of High-Treason, and a secret Committee of five were nominated to collect matter for an impeachment against him: This was like to take up more time than the Prosecutors could with convenience to themselves allow of, so that the house were prevailed with upon assertions of particular persons to vote that a General Impeachment of High-Treason should be made against him to the Lords, to endeavour thereby to have him sequestred from that House. And on the 11 th. of November Mr. Pym was sent from the Commons to the Lords with a Message, which he delivered in these words.

Mr. Pyms message from the Commons to the Lords

My Lords,

"The Knights, Citizens and Burgesses now "assembled for the Commons in Parliament, have "received information of divers traiterous de- "signs and practises of a great Peer of this house: "And by vertue of a Command from them, I "do here in the name of the Commons now as- "sembled in Parliament, and in the name of all "the Commons of England, accuse Thomas Earl "of Strafford, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland of "High-Treason; and they have commanded me "further to desire your Lordships, that he may "be sequestred from Parliament, and forthwith "committed to Prison; They have further com- "manded me to let you know, that they will "within a very few daies resort to your Lord- "ships with the Particular Articles and Grounds "of this accusation.

The Earl being required to withdraw, it was much debated by the Peers, whether he should be imprisoned on a General accusation without any particular Act of Treason charged against him, but upon the Question it was carried in the affirmative: and he being called in, kneel'd at the Barr, And after standing up, The Lord Keeper spake to him as followeth.

The Lord Keepers Speech to the Earl of Stafford upon his Impeachment.

My Lord of Strafford,

"The House of Commons in their own name, "and in the name of the whole Commons of "England, have this day accused your Lordship "to the Lords of the higher House of Parlia- "ment, of High-Treason, The Articles they "will in a very few daies produce, in the mean "time they have desired of my Lords, and my "Lords have accordingly Resolved, That your "Lordship shall be committed to safe custody to "the Gentleman Usher, and be sequestred from "the House till your Lordship shall clear your "self of the accusations that shall be laid against "you: And hereupon he was immediately taken "into Custody.

The next day the Commons considering the great Pressures of the Northern Counties by the two Armies that lay upon them, resolved that a hundred thousand pound should be forthwith raysed for their maintenance, and till it could be regularly levied, a hundred thousand pound was borrowed in the City upon the Credit of some of the Members of the House of Commons: Many Petitions from all parts were brought to them for redress of Grievances,, and to be relieved against Orders and Decrees of the Councel Table, Starr-Chamber, and High Commission Court, which were referred to several Committees, and diverse were ordered to be inlarged out of Prison upon these Petitions, especially Pryn, Burton and Bastwick, who seemed more eminent than the rest of the Sufferers, and a while after by the intercession of the Lords with the King, The Bishop of Lincoln also was freed from his imprisonment in the Tower.

A hundred thousand pounds borrowed of the City to maintain the army in the North.

Pryn, Burton, Bastwick, and the Bishop of Lincoln enlarged.

The King willing to be rid of the Scotch Army, hastened the Commission to the Lords who were imployed in the Treaty at Rippon, or any ten of them to treat with the Scottish Commissioners, or any seven of them, being the Earls of Rothess and Dumfermlin, John Lord Lowden, Sir Patrick Hepburne, Sir William Douglas, William Drummond, John Smyth Bayliff of Edenburgh, Alexander Wedderburn, Hugh Kennedy, Alexander Henderson and Archibald Johnston to take into consideration their demands, and compose all differences arising thereupon, which commission was passed under the Great Seal of England on the 25 th. of November, and in a while after the Scots presented their demands, which were eight in number, and afterwards they put in seventeen heads, wherein One, (and that not the least considerable) was, That some Scottish men of respect might be in places of trust about the King, Queen, and Prince: This was that which all their Pretences aimed at notwithstanding their Zeal to reformation of Religion, and though all they desired else was granted, they never attained their ends in this, for the troubles which they raysed, did not not only bring after them a misery to this Nation, but theirs also, and the ring-leaders of them wanted not their part thereof.

Lords appointed to treat with the Scots Commissioners in order to a full pacification.

The Scots present eight demands.

Sir Francis Windebanke Secretary of State was aimed at as one of the great Delinquents in the opinion of the Parliament, Being one suspected in his Religion, a great favourer of Priests of the Romish Church; for whom he had obtained many Reprieves, and was thought to be guilty of misdemeanors of a higher nature: But he thinking himself not sufficiently provided to ride out the approaching storm, made his escape into France, where he dyed a Roman Catholick.

Secretary Windebank foreseeing a storm, makes his escape into France.

In the consideration of grievances, the charge imposed upon the Subject for providing and furnishing of Ships, and the Assessments for raysing money for that purpose, commonly called Ship-money, are voted by both Houses to be against the Laws of the Realm, and all proceedings in the case both at the Councel Table, Starr-Chamber, and Courts of Justice declared null and void. This was thought a strange way of proceeding; First, because all the Judges had subscribed unanimously to the Lawfulness of it in time of danger, of which danger the King was declared to be judge: Secondly, because being brought to a publick test after it had been argued by Councel on both sides in the Courts of Justice, and by all the Judges in the Exchequer Chamber, They passed a definitive sentence for it on the behalf of the King: Thirdly, because the votes of the Houses of Parliament were passed without hearing the Kings Councel, or calling the Judges to shew the reasons of their opinions; And fourthly, because the arguments of Justice Crook and Justice Hatton for the illegality thereof were ordered to be put in print, and those of the other Judges for the Legality of it suppressed: But those Votes were not by the makers of them deemed a sufficient security against imposing the like charge for the future, but they took in the King's aid to an Act of Parliament for the confirmation of them. And they now began to consider of a charge of High Treason against the Lord Keeper, Finch, and the Judges: In the first whereof they made some expedition, but more deliberate in that of the Judges being willing to keep a rod over them that nothing should be declared for Law against their intentions: This Debate of the Ship-money led them to consider of the first occasion of the raising of it, which was because the Parliament immediately preceding the last was dissolved without those supplyes the King expected from them; and from hence they were led into an Enquiry of several violations of the Priviledges of Parliament by the commitment of divers members, and a Judgement against them in the Kings Bench: And then all the Inconveniences were summ'd up that hapned by the Long intermission of Parliaments, to provide against which, they resolved of a Bill for a tryennial Parliament. These debates took up many daies: but in the mean time, whilst these consultations were had for a reformation of the civil state, the Scottish Commissioners and their friends were not idle in their endeavours to reform or alter the Ecclesiastical State: In Order whereunto many Petitions from all places were delivered to the House of Commons against Ecclesiastical discipline; The Ceremonies of the Church, and the Government of it by Bishops, amongst which one was presented by Alderman Pennington, subscribed by fifteen hundred Citizens of London.

The Citizens present a Petition against Church-Ceremonies.

This Petition was very surprising to many sober men in the house of Commons, who were not unwilling to have the abuses in the Government of the Church reformed, but could not approve of the alteration of the Government it self, so that after some debate, the Petition was transmitted to another time, but those that favoured the business, though they were not succesful in it, fell a while after upon another argument more plausible, which was an inspection into the legality of the late convocation,, which produced this resolution of the Commons.

The illegality of the late Convocation resolved upon, and their Canons and Constitutions voted down.

That the Clergie in a Synod or Convocation, hath no power to make Canons, Constitutions or Laws Ecclesiastical to bind either Laity or Clergie without a Parliament: And that the Canons are against the Fundamental Laws of this Realm, against the Kings Prerogative, Property of the Subjects, the Right of Parliaments, and do tend to Faction and Sedition.

The Clergie of this Convocation thought themselves hardly used in these Votes, who thought to have been called by themselves or their Councel to have justified their proceedings, alledging that it was never known before, that the Convocation had dependance upon the Parliament, either in the calling or dissolving of it, nor in the confirmation and authorising of the Acts thereof, but only on the King himself, as appears by the Statute made in the 26 th. of Henry the Eighth, and the constant practise ever since, and it is certain that before the Canons were subscribed, they were imparted to the King, and by him communicated to the Lords of the Privy Councel, the Judges and the Kings Councel learned in the Laws of this Realm, being then attending; In the hearing of all which they were read, and by all approved, which had been strange if any thing tending to faction and sedition, or to the diminution of the Subjects property and the Kings Prerogative, or otherwise against the known Laws of the Land had been found in them: but the Reputation of the Commons was at this time so great, it was not safe for any to dispute their actions: The very same day that the Canons were thus voted down, the Scots Commissioners had presented a Paper to the Parliament, wherein they named the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury an Incendiary, and promised to bring in a complaint against him the morrow after, this produced an Order in the House of Commons for a Committee to draw up a charge against him, but the Scots fayling to bring in their Complaint, the next day, Mr. Hollis the day after was sent up to the Lords from the Commons with a General Impeachment of High Treason against him, praying that he might be sequestred from Parliament, and in a few daies they would resort to them, with the particular ground of their accusation; immediately upon this the Scots Commissioners sent in their charge, upon the reading whereof he was committed to the custody of the Usher of the Black Rod, where he continued ten weeks before any particular charge was brought against him: The Lord Keeper Finch was the next great Delinquent against whom the Commons designed to proceed, whereof he having gained intelligence, he moved by his friends in that House, that he might be permitted to clear himself before them of several imputations that lay upon him, which the Commons agreed to, and on the 21 th. of December he made an Elegant and Queynt Oration, tending to the Vindication of himself in every particular, but notwithstanding all that he could say, they voted him that very day a Traytor, upon these considerations.

The Arch-Bishop of Canterbury being impeached of High Treason, is committed to the Black Rod.

Lord Keeper Finch voted a Traytor.

1. For refusing to read the Remonstrance against the Lord Treasurer Weston, 4 Caroli when the Parliament desired it.

2. For soliciting, perswading, and threatning the Judges to deliver their Opinion for the levying of Ship-money.

3. For several illegal actions in Forrest matters.

4. For ill offices done in moving the King to dissolve the last Parliament, and causing his Majesties Declaration thereupon to be put forth.

He flyes over into Holland, sir Edward Littleton succeeds in his place.

The next day he was accus'd before the Lords, but he wisely withdrew himself into Holland, and thereby escaped the danger that threatned him, and and a while after Sir Edward Littleton was made Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England in his place.

The King having been ſometime in treaty with the Dutch Embaſſador for a match betwixt the young Prince of Orange and the Lady Mary his daughter, before he would make any concluſion therein, thought fit to communicate the ſame to the Lords in Parliament, which he did on the tenth of February; the conſideration that induced to this treaty, he ſaid were three; Firſt, the matter of Religion, wherein there needed no diſpenſation, nor fear that his daughters conſcience ſhould be any way perverted.

A Match propoſed between the Prince of Orange and the Lady Mary, approved by the Parliament.

Secondly, he eſteemed a ſtrict allyance and confederacy with the States, as uſeful to the Kingdom as that of any of his neighbours, eſpecially conſidering their affinity, neighbourhood, and way of ſtrength; And laſtly, the uſe he might make of this allyance towards the eſtabliſhing of his Siſter and Nephews; he told them, the articles of Marriage were in a manner concluded, but not to be ratified till that allyance ſhould be ended and agreed, which he ſaid he thought not fit to enter upon without their aſſiſtance, he then delivered to them, the propoſitions offered by him to the States Embaſſador, which he left to their conſideration and free debate, deſiring them to make as much expedition in their Counſels as ſo great a buſineſs ſhould require: The Lords communicated this favourable Propoſition of the King to the Commons who reſented it very well, and indeed nothing from the King ſince the firſt ſitting of this Parliament was ſo acceptable to both Houſes, which was a wonder, conſidering the jealouſies of the times. About this time, or a few daies before the particular charge againſt the Earl of Strafford was brought up to the Lords by Mr. Pym under 28 Articles; They had a little while before exhibited ſome General Articles, to which he could not be forced to anſwer, but upon this further impeachment, the Lords required him to anſwer to the whole, and though the charge was very long, yet were the Commons ſo preſſing for his anſwer, that by the 24*th.* of Febrnary he delivered it to the Lords, and it was read in the Houſe, the King being preſent.

A particular charge brought by Mr. Pym againſt the Earl of Strafford, whereupon he is committed to the Tower.

Upon the carrying up of this Impeachment, he was taken out of the cuſtody of the Uſher of the Black Rod, and committed to the Tower, he moved the Lords to have Councel allowed him, which was much oppoſed by the Commons, but his accuſation having much in it of matter of Law, he had permiſſion to have Counſel: The Articles as they conſiſted firſt of Generals, and as they were after diſtributed into particulars, we ſhall inſert when we come to the relation of his Tryal.

The King gives his aſſent to the Bill for a Tryennial Parliament.

The Bill for Triennial Parliaments having paſſed both Houſes, was on the 16*th.* of Febrnary offered to the King, it was entituled An Act for the preventing inconveniences happening by the Long intermiſſion of Parliaments: and at the ſame time the Commons preſented an Act for the relief of his Majeſties Army, and the Northern parts of the Kingdom, which was a Grant of four intire Subſidies: to both which the King gave his Royal aſſent.

The Bill for Triennial Parliaments was an Act of as great Favour to the Subject as ever paſs'd in Parliament, for if the King ſhould refuſe to ſummon a Parliament at the time therein limited, the Chancellor or Keeper might iſſue out Writs to ſummon the Peers, and for election of the Commons: and if the Chancellor or Keeper ſhould not do it, any twelve of the Peers might ſummon the Parliament, and if the Peers ſhould omit the iſſuing out of ſummons, the Sheriffs in Counties, and other Magiſtrates reſpectively might cauſe Elections to be made, and if the Sheriffs ſhould refuſe, the Freeholders in Counties, and all other perſons that have right of chooſing, might make Election of Members: And the Members ſo choſen, were under great penalties obliged to attend: with many other clauſes to accompliſh the end deſigned by the Act, which alſo had in it ſeveral expreſſions too reflecting on the Prerogative: but the King really believing moſt of the miſchiefs then complained of, proceeded from the too long intermiſſion of Parliaments, and being reſolved for the future to communicate freely and frequently that way with his Subjects, he conſented to it: And this Act of his Grace and Favour was ſo pleaſing to the Parliament, that upon a conference with both Houſes it was unanimouſly agreed to wait upon the King at White-Hall, and return him their humble thanks, and that night Bone-fires and other tokens of joy were made in the City by Order of Parliament.

On the ſame day the charge againſt the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury was carried from the Commons to the Lords by Sir Henry Vane the younger, whereupon he was ordered to the Tower, but upon his humble Suit to the Lords, his commitment was reſpited till the firſt of March.

The Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury ordered to the Tower.

The Scots Commiſſioners laboured very much under-hand to introduce their Presbyterian diſcipline into the Church of England, and by their confederates had made an active party in the Houſe of Commons, who took frequent occaſion of aſperſing the Biſhops, and in theſe debates they ſpared not Epiſcopacy: alſo the debate of the forementioned City Petition was now reſumed, and many members ſpake for the eradication of the Epiſcopal Hierarchy, amongſt which Nathaniel Fiennes the younger Son of the Lord Say was moſt vehement, but the Lord Faulkland, the Lord Digby, and many others of great Learning and Integrity, did by the weight of reaſon ſo far prevail, that the Order of Epiſcopacy was yet preſerved, though their power was much leſſened by a vote paſſed in the Houſe of Commons preparatory to a Bill, viz. that no Biſhop ſhall have any vote in Parliament, nor any Judicial power in the Starr-Chamber, nor bear any ſway in temporal affairs, and that no Clergie-man ſhall be in Commiſſion of the Peace: The next thing of note was the Tryal of the Earl of Strafford, which began on the 22*th.* of March, and was ſo remarkable in the circumſtances of it, that we ſhall be very particular in the relation thereof.

The Biſhops Votes in Parliament voted down.

The Earl of Strafford brought to his Tryal.

He came from the Tower about ſeven of the clock in the morning, accompanied with ſix Barges, wherein were 100 Souldiers of the Tower all with Partiſans for his Guard, and 50 pair of Oares: at his landing at Weſtminſter he was attended with 200 of the Trained Bands, and was Guarded by them into the Hall: The King, Queen and Prince came about 9 a clock, but kept themſelves private within their cloſets, ſo that the King ſaw and heard all that paſſed, but was ſeen of none: When the Earl entred the Hall, the Porter asked the Uſher of the Black Rod, whether the Axe ſhould be carried before him or no, who anſwered that the King had expreſly forbidden it, nor was it the cuſtome of England to uſe that Ceremony, but only when the party accuſed was to be put upon his Jury, Thoſe of the Upper houſe ſate with their heads covered, thoſe of the Lower houſe that were preſent (for they ſate not there as a houſe) were all uncovered. The Biſhops upon the Saturday before did voluntarily decline the giving of their Suffrages in matters criminal, and of that nature, according to the proviſion of the Cannon Law and practiſe of the Kingdom to this day, and therefore would not be preſent, yet withal they gave in a Proteſtation that their abſence ſhould not prejudice them of that or any other Priviledge competent to them, as the Lords ſpiritual in Parliament, which was accepted.

The Biſhops decline the giving of their ſuffrages in the matter.

The Earl of Arundel ſate as Lord high Steward of England, and at the Earls appearing commanded the Proſecutors to proceed. Mr. Pym being Speaker of the Committee of the Commons that were appointed to proſecute, gave in the Articles of Impeachment, which we ſhall here inſert as they were read in Court.

The Articles of Impeachment,

1. That he the ſaid Thomas Earl of Strafford hath trayterouſly endeavoured to ſubvert the fundamental Laws and Government of the Realms of England and Ireland, and inſteed thereof to introduce an arbitrary and tyrannical Government by Law, which he hath declared by trayterous words, Counſels and Actions, and by giving his Majeſty advice by force of Arms to compell his loyal Subjects to ſubmit thereunto.

2. That he hath trayterouſly aſſumed to himſelf Regal power over the lives, liberties, perſons, lands and goods of his Majeſties ſubjects in England and Ireland, and hath exerciſed the ſame tyrannically to the ſubverſion of many both of Peers and others of his Majeſties Leige people.

3. That the better to inrich and enable himſelf to go through with his trayterous deſigns, he hath detained a great part of his Majeſties Revenew, without giving legal account, and hath taken great ſums out of the Exchequer, converting them to his own uſe, when his Majeſty was neceſſitated for his own urgent occaſions, and his Army had been a long time unpaid.

4. That he hath trayterouſly abuſed the power and authority of his Government, to the increaſing, countenancing, and incouraging of Papiſts, that ſo he might ſettle a mutual dependance and confidence betwixt himſelf and that party, and by their help proſecute and accompliſh his malitious and tyrannical deſigns.

5. That he hath malitiouſly endeavoured to ſtirr up enmity and hoſtility between his Majeſties Subjects of England, and thoſe of Scotland.

6. That he hath trayterouſly broken the great truſt repoſed in him by his Majeſty of Lieutenant General of his Army, by wilfully betraying divers of his Majeſties Subjects to death, his Army to a diſhonourable retreat by the Scots at Newborn, and the Town of Newcaſtle into their hands, to the end that by the effuſion of blood, by diſhonour, and ſo great a loſs of Newcaſtle, his Majeſties Realm of England might be engaged in a National and irreconcilable Quarrel with the Scots.

7. That to preſerve himſelf from being queſtioned for theſe and other his trayterous courſes, he laboured to ſubvert the rights of Parliaments, and the antient courſe of Parliamentary proceedings, & by falſe and malitious ſlanders to incenſe his Majeſty againſt Parliaments. By which words, councels and actions he hath trayterouſly, and contrary to his allegiance laboured to alienate the hearts of the Kings liege people from his Majeſty, to ſet a diviſion between them, and to ruine and deſtroy his Majeſties Kingdoms, for which they impeach him of High Treaſon againſt our Soveraign Lord the King his Crown and dignity.

8. And he the ſaid Earl of Strafford was Lord Deputy of Ireland, and Lieutenant General of the Army there, (viz.) of his moſt Excellent Majeſty for his Kingdoms both of England and Ireland, and Lord Preſident of the North, during the time that all and every of the crimes and offences before ſet forth were done and committed: And he the ſaid Earl was Lieutenant Genetal of all his Majeſties Army in the Notth parts of England during the time that the crimes and offences in the 5 and 6 Articles ſet forth were done and committed.

The further Impeachment which was more particular, was thus expreſs'd.

1. That he the ſaid Earl of Strafford the 21 th. day of March in the eighth year of his now Majeſties Reign, was Preſident of the Kings Councel in the Northern parts of England.

That he the ſaid Earl being Preſident of the ſaid Councel, on the 21 th. day of March, a Commiſſion under the Great Seal of England with ſchedules of inſtruction thereto annexed was directed to the ſaid Earl and others the Commiſſioners therein named, whereby amongſt other things, power and authority is limited to the ſaid Earl and others the Commiſſioners therein named, to hear and determine all offences and miſdemeanors, ſuits, debates, controverſies and demands, cauſes, things and matters whatſoever therein contained, and within certain precincts in the ſaid Northern parts therein ſpecified, and in ſuch manner as by the ſaid ſchedule is limited and appointed.

That amongſt other things in the ſaid Inſtructions, it is directed that the ſaid Preſident and others therein appointed ſhall hear and determine according to the courſe of proceedings in the Court of Star-Chamber, diverſe offences, deceits and falſities therein mentioned, whether the ſame be provided for by the Acts of Parliament or not, ſo that the fines impoſed be not leſs than by Act or Acts of Parliament provided for by thoſe offences is appointed.

That alſo amongſt other things in the ſaid Inſtructions, it is directed that the ſaid Preſident and others therein appointed, have power to examine, amine, hear, and determine, according to the courſe of proceedings in the Court of Chancery all manner of complaints for any matter within the ſaid Precincts, as well concerning Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, either Freehold, Cuſtomary or Copy-hold, as Leaſes and other things therein mentioned, and to ſtay proceedings in the Court of Common Law by injunction or otherwiſe by all waies and means as is uſed in the Court of Chancery.

And although the former Preſidents of the ſaid Councel had never put in practiſe ſuch inſtructions, nor had they any ſuch inſtructions, yet the ſaid Earl in the moneth of May in the ſaid 8 th. year, and divers years following, did put in practiſe, exerciſe and uſe, and cauſed to be uſed and put in practiſe the ſaid Commiſſion and inſtructions, and did direct and exerciſe an exorbitant and unlawful power and juriſdiction on the perſons and eſtates of his Majeſties Subjects in thoſe parts, and did diſinherit divers of his Majeſties Subjects in thoſe parts of their inheritances, ſequeſtred their poſſeſſion, and did fine, ranſome, puniſh and impriſon them, and cauſed them to be fined, ranſomed, puniſhed and impriſoned, to their ruine and deſtruction, and namely Sir Conyers Darcy, Sir John Bourcher, and divers others againſt the Laws, and in ſubverſion of the ſame: And the ſaid Commiſſion and inſtructions were procured and iſſued by advice of the ſaid Earl.

And he the ſaid Earl to the intent that ſuch illegal and unjuſt power might be exerciſed with the greater licenſe and will, did adviſe, counſel and procure further directions, in and by the ſaid inſtructions to be given, that no Prohibition be granted at all, but in caſes where the ſaid Councel ſhall exceed the limits of the ſaid Inſtructions: And that if any writ of Habeas Corpus be granted, the party be not diſcharged till the party perform the Decree and Order of the ſaid Councel.

And the ſaid Earl in the 13 th. year of his now Majeſties Reign, did procure a new Commiſſion to himſelf and others therein appointed with the ſaid inſtructions and other unlawful additions.

That the ſaid Commiſſion and Inſtructions were procured by the ſollicitation and advice of the ſaid Earl of Strafford.

2. That ſhortly after the obtaining of the ſaid Commiſſion dated the 21 th. of March in the 8 th. year of his now Majeſties Reign, (to wit) the laſt day of Auguſt then next following, he the ſaid Earl, (to bring his Majeſties Liege people into a diſlike of his Majeſty and of his Government, and to terrifie the Juſtices of the Peace from executing of the Laws; he the ſaid Earl being then Preſident as aforeſaid, and a Juſtice of the Peace) did publickly at the Aſſizes held for the County of York in the City of York in and upon the ſaid laſt day of Auguſt, declare and publiſh before the people there attending for the adminiſtration of Juſtice according to the Law, and in the preſence of the Juſtices ſitting, that ſome of the Juſtices were all for Law, but they ſhould finde that the Kings little finger ſhould be heavier than the Loynes of the Law.

3. That the Realm of Ireland having been time out of mind annexed to the Imperial Crown of this his Majeſties Realm of England, and governed by the ſame Laws: the ſaid Earl being Lord Deputy of that Realm, to bring his Majeſties Liege people of that Kingdom likewiſe into diſlike of his Majeſties Government, and intending the ſubverſion of the fundamental Laws and ſetled government of that Realm, and the deſtruction of his Majeſties liege people there, did upon the 30 th. day of September in the ninth year of his now Majeſties Reign, in the City of Dublin (the chief City of that Kingdom, where his Majeſties Privy Counſel and Courts of Juſtice do ordinarily reſide, and whither the Nobility and Gentry of that Realm do uſually reſort for Juſtice) in a publick ſpeech before divers of the Nobility and Gentry, and before the Mayor, Aldermen and Recorder, and many Citizens of Dublin and other his Majeſties liege people, declare and publiſh that Ireland was a conquered Nation, and that the King might do with them what he pleaſed, and ſpeaking of the charters of the former Kings of England made to that City, he further ſaid, that their Charters were nothing worth, and did bind the King no further than he pleaſed.

4. That Richard Earl of Corke having ſued out Proceſs in courſe of Law for recovery of his poſſeſſion, from which he was put by colour of an Order made by the ſaid Earl of Strafford and the Councel Table of the ſaid Realm of Ireland. The ſaid Earl of Strafford upon a paper Petition without legal proceedings did the 20 th. day of February in the 11 th. year of his now Majeſties Reign, threaten the ſaid Earl of Corke (being then a Peer of the ſaid Realm) to impriſon him, unleſs he would ſurceaſe his ſuit, and ſaid, he would neither have Law nor Lawyers diſpute or queſtion any of his Orders: And the 20 th. day of March in the ſaid 11 th year, the ſaid Earl of Strafford ſpeaking of an Order of the ſaid Councel Table of that Realm made in the time of King James, which concerned a Leaſe, which the ſaid Earl of Cork claimed in certain Rectories or Tythes which the ſaid Earl of Cork alledged to be of no force, ſaid, that he would make the ſaid Earl and all Ireland know, ſo long as he had the Government there, any Act of State there made or to be made, ſhould be as binding to the Subjects of that Kingdome as an Act of Parliament, And did queſtion the ſaid Earl of Cork in the Caſtle Chamber upon pretence of breach of the ſaid Order of the Councel Table, and did ſundry other times, and upon ſundry other occaſions by his words and ſpeeches arrogate to himſelf a power above the fundamental Laws and eſtabliſhed Government of that Kingdom, and ſcorned the ſaid Laws and eſtabliſhed Government.

The Caſtle-Chamber is the ſame with the Star-Chamber in England.

5. That according to ſuch his Declarations and Speeches, the ſaid Earl of Strafford did uſe and exerciſe a power above and againſt, and to the ſubverſion of the ſaid fundamental Laws and eſtabliſhed Government of the ſaid Realm of Ireland extending ſuch his power to the Goods, Freeholds, Inheritances, Liberties and Lives of his Majeſties Subjects of the ſaid Realm, viz. the ſaid Earl of Strafford, the 12 th. day of December, An. Dom. 1635. in the time of full peace, did in the ſaid Realm of Ireland give and procure to be given againſt the Lord Mount-Norris, (then and yet a Peer of Ireland, and then Vice-Treaſurer and Receiver General of the Realm of Ireland, and one of the Principal Secretaries of State, and Keeper of the Privy Signet of the ſaid Kingdome) a ſentence of death by a Councel of War called together by the ſaid Earl of Strafford, without any warrant or authority of Law or offence deſerving any ſuch puniſhment: And he the ſaid Earl did alſo at Dublin within the ſaid Realm of Ireland in the moneth of March in the 14*th.* year of his Majeſties Reign without any legal or due proceedings or Tryal give or cauſe to be given a ſentence of death againſt one other of his Majeſties Subjects, whoſe name is yet unknown, and cauſed him to be put to death in execution of the ſaid ſentence.

to

6. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford without any legal proceedings, and upon a paper Petition of Richard Ralſtone, did cauſe the ſaid Lord Mount-Norris to be diſſeized and put out of his Freehold and Inheritance of his Manor of Tymore in the County of Armagh, in the Kingdome of Ireland, the ſaid Lord Mount-Norris having been two years before in quiet poſſeſſion thereof.

7. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford in the Holy Trinity in the 13*th.* year of his now Majeſties Reign, did cauſe a caſe commonly called The caſe of Tenures upon defective Titles to be made or drawn up without any Jury or Tryal, or other legal Proceſs, and without the conſent of Parties, and did then procure the Judges of the ſaid Realm of England to deliver their opinions and reſolutions to that caſe, and by colour of ſuch opinions and reſolutions, did without any legal proceeding cauſe Thomas Lord Dillon a Peer of the ſaid Realm of Ireland, to be put out of poſſeſſion of divers Lands and tenements, being his freehold in the County of Mayo and Roſecomen, in the ſaid Kingdom, and divers other of his Majeſties Subjects to be alſo put out of poſſeſſion, and diſſeized of their freehold by colour of the ſame reſolutions, without legal proceedings, whereby many hundreds of his Majeſties Subjects were undone, and their Families utterly ruined.

8. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford upon a Petition of Sir John Gifford Knight, the firſt day of February in the ſaid 13*th.* year of his Majeſties Reign, without any legal proceſs made a Decree or order againſt Adam Viſcount Loftus of Elye a Peer of the ſaid Realm of Ireland, and Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and did cauſe the ſaid Viſcount to be impriſoned, and kept cloſe Priſoner on pretence of diſobedience to the ſaid Decree or Order.

And the ſaid Earl without any authority, and contrary to his Commiſſion required and commanded the ſaid Lord Viſcount to yield unto him the Great Seal of the Realm of Ireland, which was then in his Cuſtody, by his Majeſties command, and impriſoned the ſaid Chancellor for not obeying ſuch his command.

And without any legal proceedings did in the ſame 13*th.* year impriſon George Earl of Kildare a Peer of Ireland againſt Law, thereby to enforce him to ſubmit his title to the Manor and Lordſhip of Caſtle-Leigh in the Queens County (being of great yearly value) to the ſaid Earl of Straffords will and pleaſure, and kept him a year priſoner for the ſaid cauſe, two moneths whereof he kept him cloſe Priſoner, and refuſed to enlarge him, notwithſtanding his Majeſties letters for his enlargement to the ſaid Earl of Strafford directed.

And upon a Petition exhibited in October 1635. by Thomas Hibbots againſt Dame Mary Hibbots Widow, to him the ſaid Earl of Strafford, the ſaid Earl of Strafford recommended the ſaid Petition to the Councel Table of Ireland, where the moſt part of the Councel gave their vote and opinion for the ſaid Lady, but the ſaid Earl finding fault herewith, cauſed an Order to be entred againſt the ſaid Lady, and threatned her, that if ſhe refuſed to ſubmit thereunto, he would impriſon her and fine her 500*l.* that if ſhe continued obſtinate, he would continue her impriſonment, & double her fine every moneth by moneth: Wherefore ſhe was enforced to relinquiſh her eſtate in the land queſtioned in the ſaid Petition, which ſhortly after was conveyed to Sir Robert Meredith to the uſe of the ſaid Earl of Strafford.

And the ſaid Earl in like manner did impriſon divers other of his Majeſties Subjects upon pretence of diſobedience to his Orders and Decrees, and other illegal commands by him made for pretended debts, titles of lands, and other cauſes in an arbitrary and extrajudicial courſe, upon paper Petitions to him preferred, and no other cauſe legally depending.

9. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford the 16*th.* day of February in the 12*th.* year of his now Majeſties Reign, aſſuming to himſelf a power above and againſt law, took upon him by a General warrant under his hand to give power to the Lord Biſhop of Downe and Connor, his Chancellor or Chancellors, and their ſeveral Officers thereto to be appointed to attach and arreſt the bodies of all ſuch of the meaner and poorer ſort, who after citation ſhould either refuſe to appear before them, or appearing, ſhould omit or deny to perform or undergo all lawful decrees, ſentences and orders iſſued out againſt them, and them to commit and keep in the next Gaol untill they ſhould either perform ſuch ſentences, or put in ſufficient Bail to ſhew ſome reaſon before the Councel Table, of ſuch their contempt and neglect; and the ſaid Earl the day and year laſt mentioned ſigned and iſſued a warrant to that effect, and made the like warrant to all other Biſhops and their Chancellors in the ſaid Realm of Ireland to the ſame effect.

10. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford being Lord Lieutenant, or Lord Deputy of Ireland, procured the cuſtoms of the Merchandiſe exported out and imported into that Realm to be farmed to his own uſe.

And in the ninth year of his now Majeſties Reign, he having then intereſt in the ſaid Cuſtoms (to advance his own gain and lucre) did cauſe and procure the native commodities of Ireland to be rated in the book of Rates for the Cuſtoms (according to which the cuſtomes were uſually gathered) at far greater values and prices than in truth they were worth: That is to ſay, Every Hide at 20*s.* which in truth is worth but five ſhillings, Every ſtone of Wooll at thirteen ſhillings

ſhillings four pence, though the ſame ordinarily were worh but five ſhillings at the utmoſt, by which means the cuſtome which was before but a twentyth part of the true value of the commodities, was inhanced ſometimes to a 5 th. part, and ſometimes to a 4 th. and ſometimes to a 3 d. part of the true value, to the great oppreſſion of the Subjects, and decay of Merchandiſe.

11. That the ſaid Earl in the 9 th. year of his now Majeſties Reign, did by his own will and pleaſure, and for his own lucre reſtrain the exportation of the commodities of that Kingdom without his licenſe, as namely Pipe-ſtaves and other commodities, and then raiſed great ſums of money for licenſing of exportation of thoſe Commodities, and diſpenſation of the ſaid reſtraint impoſed on them, by which means the Pipe-ſtaves were raiſed from 4 l. 10 s. or 5 l. per thouſand to 10 l. and ſometimes 11 l. per thouſand, and other Commodities were inhanced in the like proportion, and by the ſame means by him the ſaid Earl.

12. That the ſaid Earl being Lord Deputy of Ireland on the 9 th. of January in the 13 th. year of his Majeſties Reign, did then under colour to regulate the importation of Tobacco into the ſaid Realm of Ireland, iſſue a Proclamation in his Majeſties name, prohibiting the importation of Tobacco without licenſe of him and the Councel there, from and after the firſt day of May 1638, after which reſtraint the ſaid Earl notwithſtanding the ſaid reſtraint, cauſed divers great quantities of Tobacco to be imported to his own uſe, and fraighted divers Ships with Tobacco, which he imported to his own uſe; And that if any Ship brought Tobacco into any Port there, the ſaid Earl and his Agents uſed to buy the ſame to his own uſe at their own price: And if that the owner refuſed to let him have the ſame at under-values, then they were not permitted to vent the ſame, by which undue means, the ſaid Earl having gotten the whole trade of Tobacco into his own hands, he ſold it at great and exceſſive prices (ſuch as he liſt to impoſe) for his own profit.

And the more to aſſure the ſaid Monopoly of Tobacco, he the ſaid Earl on the 23 th. day of February in the 13 th. year aforeſaid, did iſſue another Proclamation commanding that none ſhould put to ſale any Tobacco by whole-ſale from and after the laſt day of May then next following: but what ſhould be made up into Rolls, and the ſame ſealed with two Seals by himſelf appointed, one at each end of the Roll: And ſuch as was not ſo ſealed to be ſeized, appointing 6 d. the pound for a reward to ſuch perſons as ſhould ſeize the ſame; And the perſons in whoſe cuſtody the unſealed Tobacco ſhould be found, to be committed to Gaol, which laſt Proclamation was covered by a pretence of the reſtraining the ſale of unwholſome Tobacco, but it was truly to advance the ſaid Monopoly.

Which proclamation the ſaid Earl did rigorouſly put in Execution by ſeizing the goods, fining, impriſoning, whipping, and putting the offenders againſt the ſame Proclamation on the Pillory, as namely Barnaby Hubbard, Edward Cavenah, and John Tumen, and divers others; and made the Officers of State and Juſtices of Peace and other Officers, to ſerve him in compaſſing and executing theſe unjuſt and undue courſes, by which Cruelties and unjuſt Monopolies, the ſaid Earl raiſed an hundred thouſand pounds per ann. gain to himſelf: And yet the ſaid Earl though he inhanced the cuſtoms where it concerned the Merchants in General, yet drew down the impoſt formerly taken on Tobacco from 6 d. the pound to 3 d. the pound, it being for his own profit ſo to do. And the ſaid Earl by the ſame and other rigorous and undue means, raiſed ſeveral other Monopolies and unlawful exactions for his own gain, viz. on Starch, Iron-pots, Glaſſes, Tobacco-pipes, and ſeveral other commodities.

13. That Flax being one of the principal and Native Commodities of that Kingdom of Ireland, the ſaid Earl having got great quantities thereof into his hands, and growing on his own lands, did iſſue out ſeveral Proclamations, viz. One dated the 21 th. day of May in the 11 th. year of his Majeſties Reign, and the other dated the one and thirtyth of January in the ſame year, thereby preſcribing and injoyning the working of Flax into yarn and threed, and the ordering of the ſame in ſuch waies, wherein the Natives of that Kingdom were unpractiſed and unskilful: which Proclamations ſo iſſued were by his commands & Warrants to his Majeſties Juſtices of Peace and other Officers, and by other rigorous means put in execution, and the flax wrought or ordered in other manner than as the Proclamation preſcribed, was ſeized and imployed to the uſe of him and his Agents, and thereby the ſaid Earl endeavoured to gain, and did gain in effect the ſole ſale of that native Commodity.

14. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford by Proclamation dated the 16 th. day of October in the 14 th. year of his Majeſties Reign, did impoſe upon the Owners, Maſters, Purſers and Boatſwains of every Ship, a new and unlawful Oath, viz. that they (two or more of them) immediately after the arrival of any Ship within any Port or Creek in the ſaid Kingdom of Ireland, ſhould give in a true invoyce of the outward bulk of wares and merchandiſes, and number of goods, and the qualities and conditions of the ſaid Goods as far as to them ſhould be known, and the names of the ſeveral Merchants proprietors of the ſaid Goods, and the places from whence they were fraighted and whither they were bound to diſcharge, which Proclamation was accordingly put in Execution, and ſundry perſons enforced to take the ſaid unlawful Oath.

15. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford trayterouſly and wickedly deviſed and contrived by force of arms in a war-like manner to ſubdue the ſubjects of the ſaid Realm of Ireland, to bring them under his tyrannical power and will, and in purſuance of his wicked and trayterous purpoſes aforeſaid, the ſaid Earl of Strafford in the 8 th. year of his Majeſties Reign, did by his own authority without any warrant or colour of Law, tax and impoſe great ſums of money upon the Towns of Baltemore, Baudenbridge, Talowe, and divers other Towns and places in the ſaid Realm of Ireland, and did cauſe the ſame to be levied upon the Inhabitants of thoſe Towns by Troops of Souldiers with force and arms in a war-like manner: And on the 9 th. day of March in the 12 th.

year of his now Majeſties Reign, trayterouſly did give authority unto Robert Savile a Sergeant at Arms, and to the Captains of Companies of Souldiers in ſeveral Parts of the Realm, to ſend ſuch numbers of Souldiers to lye on the lands and houſes of ſuch as would not conform to his orders, until they ſhould render obedience to his ſaid orders and warrants, and after ſuch ſubmiſſion (and not before) the ſaid Souldiers to return to their Garriſons: And did alſo iſſue the like warrants unto divers others, which warrants were in war-like manner with force and arms put in execution accordingly, and by ſuch war-like means he did force divers of his Majeſties Subjects of that Realm to ſubmit themſelves to his unlawful commands.

And in the ſaid 12 th. year of his Majeſties Reign, the ſaid Earl of Strafford did trayterouſly cauſe certain Troops of Horſe and Foot armed in war-like manner, and in war-like array with force and arms to expel Richard Butler from the poſſeſſion of Caſtle Cumber in the territory of Idough in the ſaid Realm of Ireland, and did likewiſe, and in the like war-like manner expel divers of his Majeſties Subjects from their Houſes, Families and Poſſeſſions, as namely Edward Brewman, Owen Oberman, Patrick Oberman, and Sir Cyprian Horſefeilde, and divers others, to the number of about a hundred Families, and took and impriſoned them and their wives, and carried them priſoners to Dublin, and there detained them till they did yield up, ſurrender or releaſe their reſpective eſtates and rights.

And the ſaid Earl in like war-like manner hath during his Government of the ſaid Kingdom of Ireland, ſubdued divers others of his Majeſties ſubjects to his will, and thereby, and by the means aforeſaid, hath levied war within the ſaid Realm againſt his Majeſty and his liege people of that Kingdom.

16. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford the 22 th. of Feb. in the 7 th. year of his now Majeſties Reign, intending to oppreſs the ſaid Subjects of Ireland, did make a propoſition, and obtained from his Majeſty an allowance, that no complaint of injuſtice or oppreſſion done in Ireland, ſhould be received in England againſt any, unleſs it firſt appeared that the party made firſt his addreſs to him in Ireland: And he reſtored divers Fryeries and Maſs-houſes (which had been formerly ſuppreſſed by the precedent Deputies of that Kingdom, two of which houſes were in the City of Dublin, and had been aſſigned to the uſe of the Univerſity there) to the pretended owners thereof, who have ſince imployed the ſame to the exerciſe of the Popiſh Religion.

17. And in the moneth of May and June laſt, the ſaid Earl did raiſe an Army in the ſaid Realm of Ireland conſiſting of eight thouſand Foot, all of which except one thouſand or thereabouts, were Papiſts, and the ſaid 1000 were drawn out of the old Army there conſiſting of 2000 Foot, and in their places there were 1000 Papiſts put into the Army by the ſaid Earl. And the more to ingage and tye the new Army of Papiſts to himſelf, and to encourage them, and to diſcourage and wear out the old Army, the ſaid Earl did ſo provide, that the ſaid New Army of Papiſts were duly paid, and had all neceſſaries provided for them, and permitted the exerciſe of their Religion, but the ſaid old Army were for the ſpace of one whole year and upwards unpaid.

18. And the ſaid Earl being appointed Commiſſioner within eleven ſeveral Counties of the Northern parts of England, for compounding with Recuſants for their forfeitures due to his Majeſty, which commiſſion beareth date the 8 th. day of July in the 5 th. year of his Majeſties Reign that now is, and being alſo Receiver of the compoſition money thereby ariſing, and other debts, duties and penalties for his Majeſties uſe, by Letters Patents dated the ninth day of the ſaid July: he to ingage the ſaid Recuſants to him, did compound with them at low and under-rates, and provided that they ſhould be diſcharged of all proceedings againſt them in all his Majeſties Courts both Temporal and Eccleſiaſtical, in manifeſt breach of, and contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm in that behalf eſtabliſhed.

19. That the ſaid Earl having taxed and levied the ſaid impoſitions, and raiſed the ſaid Monopolies, and committed the ſaid oppreſſions in his Majeſties name, and as by his Majeſties Royal command, he the ſaid Earl in May in the 15 th. year of his Majeſties Reign, did of his own authority continue and frame a new and unuſual Oath, by the purport whereof among many other things, the party taking the ſaid Oath, was to ſwear that he ſhould not proteſt againſt any of his Majeſties Royal commands, but ſubmit themſelves in all obedience thereunto, which Oath he ſo contrived to enforce the ſame on the Subjects of the Scottiſh Nation inhabiting in Ireland, and out of a hatred to the ſaid Nation, and to put them to a diſcontent of his Majeſty and his Government there, and compelled divers of his Majeſties ſaid ſubjects there to take the ſaid Oath, ſome whereof he grievouſly fined and impriſoned, and others he deſtroyed and exiled, and namely the tenth of October An. Dom. 1639, he fined Henry Steward and his Wife who refuſed to take the ſaid Oath, five thouſand pounds a-piece, and their two daughters and James Gray 3000 l. a-piece, and impriſoned them for not paying the ſaid fines. The ſaid Henry Stewards wife and daughters, and James Gray, being the Kings liege people of the Scottiſh Nation, and divers others he uſed in the like manner, And the ſaid Earl upon that occaſion did declare, that the ſaid Oath did not only oblige them in poynt of allegiance to his Majeſty, and acknowledgement of his ſupremacy only, but to the Ceremonies and Government of the Church eſtabliſhed or not eſtabliſhed by his Majeſties Royal Authority, and ſaid that the refuſers to obey he would proſecute to the blood.

20. That the ſaid Earl in the 15 and 16 years of his Majeſties Reign, and divers years paſt, laboured and endeavoured to beget in his Majeſty an ill opinion of his Subjects, namely thoſe of the Scottiſh Nation, and divers and ſundry times, and eſpecially ſince the Pacification made by his Majeſty with his ſaid Subjects of Scotland in Summer in the 15 th. year of his Majeſties Reign; he the ſaid Earl did endeavour to perſwade, incite, and provoke his Majeſty to an offenſive war againſt his ſaid Subjects of the Scottiſh Nation: and the ſaid Earl by his Counſel, actions and endeavours, hath been, and is a principal and chief incendiary of the war and diſcord between his Majeſty and his Subjects of England, and the ſaid Subjects of Scotland, and hath declared and adviſed his Majeſty that the demands made by the Scots in their Parliament, were a ſufficient cauſe of war againſt them; The ſaid Earl having formerly expreſſed the height and rancor of his mind, towards his Subjects of the Scottiſh Nation, viz. the 10 th. day of October in the 15 th. year of his Majeſties Reign, he ſaid that the Nation of the Scots were Rebells and Traytors, and he being then about to come to England, he then further ſaid, that if it pleaſed his Maſter (meaning his Majeſty) to ſend him back again, he would root out of the ſaid Kingdom, (meaning the Kingdom of Ireland) the Scottiſh Nation both root and branch. (Some Lords and others who had taken the ſaid Oath in the precedent article only excepted.) And the ſaid Earl hath cauſed divers of the Ships and Goods of the Scots to be ſtayed, ſeized and moleſted, to the intent to ſet on the ſaid War.

21. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford ſhortly after his Speeches mentioned in the laſt precedent Article, to wit, in the 15 th. year of his Majeſties Reign came into this Realm of England, and was made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and continued his Government of that Kingdom by a Deputy: At his arrival here, finding that his Majeſty had with much wiſdome and goodneſs compoſed the troubles in the North, and had made a pacification with his Subjects of Scotland: he laboured by all means to procure his Majeſty to break that Pacification, incenſing his Majeſty againſt his Subjects of that Kingdom, and the proceedings of the Parliament there: And having incenſed his Majeſty to an offenſive War againſt his ſaid Subjects of Scotland by Sea and by Land, and by pretext thereof to raiſe money and forces for the maintenance of that War, he counſelled his Majeſty to call a Parliament in England, yet the ſaid Earl intended, if the ſaid Proceedings of that Parliament ſhould not be ſuch as ſhould ſtand with the ſaid Earl of Straffords miſchievous deſigns, he would then procure his Majeſty to break off the ſame, and by waies of force and power to raiſe moneys upon the ſaid Subjects of this Kingdom.

And for the incouragement of his Majeſty to hearken to his advice, he did before his Majeſty and his Privy-Councel then ſitting in Councel, make a large Declaration, that he would ſerve his Majeſty in any other way, in caſe the Parliament ſhould not ſupply him.

22. That in the moneth of March before the beginning of the laſt Parliament, the ſaid Earl of Strafford went into Ireland, and procured the Parliament of that Kingdom to declare their aſſiſtance in a War againſt the Scots; and gave directions for the raiſing of an Army conſiſting of 8000 Foot, and 1000 Horſe, being for the moſt part Papiſts as aforeſaid, and confederating with one Sir George Ratcliff, did together with him the ſaid Sir George, trayterouſly conſpire to imploy the ſaid Army for the ruine and deſtruction of the Kingdom of England, and of his Majeſties Subjects, and of altering and ſubverting the fundamental Laws of this Kingdom. And ſhortly after the ſaid Earl of Strafford returned into England, and to ſundry perſons declared his opinion to be, that his Majeſty ſhould firſt try this Parliament here, and if that did not ſupply him according to his occaſions, he might then uſe his Prerogative as he pleaſed, to levy what he needed, and that he ſhould be acquitted both of God and man, and if he took ſome other courſes to ſupply himſelf, though it were againſt the will of his Subjects.

23. That upon the 13 th. day of April laſt, the Parliament of England met, and the Commons Houſe (then being the repreſentative body of all the Commons in the Kingdom, did according to the truſt repoſed in them, enter into debate and conſideration of the great grievances of this Kingdom, both in reſpect of Religion, and the publick liberty of this Kingdom, and his Majeſty referring chiefly to the ſaid Earl of Strafford and the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury the ordering and diſpoſing of all matters concerning the Parliament: He the ſaid Earl of Strafford with the aſſiſtance of the ſaid Arch-Biſhop, did procure his Majeſty by ſundry ſpeeches and meſſages, to urge the ſaid Commons Houſe to enter into ſome reſolution for his Majeſties ſupply for maintenance of his War againſt his Subjects of Scotland, before any courſe were taken for relief of the great and preſſing grievances, wherewith the Kingdom was then afflicted: whereupon a demand was then made from his Majeſty of 12 Subſidies for the releaſe of Ship-money only; and while the ſaid Commons then aſſembled (with expreſſions of great affection to his Majeſties Service) were in debate and conſideration of ſome ſupply before reſolution by them made; He the ſaid Earl of Strafford with the help and aſſiſtance of the ſaid Arch-Biſhop, did procure his Majeſty to diſſolve the laſt Parliament upon the 5 th. day of May laſt: And upon the ſame day, the ſaid Earl of Strafford did treacherouſly, falſely and malitiouſly endeavour to incenſe his Majeſty againſt his loving and faithful Subjects, who had been members of the ſaid Houſe of Commons, by telling his Majeſty they had denyed to ſupply him: and afterwards in the ſame moneth, did treacherouſly and wickedly counſel and adviſe his Majeſty to this effect, viz. That having tried the affection of his people, he was looſe and abſolved from all rules of Government, and was to do every thing that power would admit, and that his Majeſty had tryed all waies, and was refuſed, and ſhould be acquitted both of God and man; And that he had an Army in Ireland (meaning the Army above-mentioned conſiſting of Papiſts his Dependants as is aforeſaid) which he might imploy to reduce this Kingdom to obedience.

24. That in the ſame moneth of May, he the ſaid Earl of Strafford, falſely, treacherouſly and malitiouſly publiſhed and declared before others of his Majeſties Privy Councel, That the Parliament of England had forſaken the King, and that in denying to ſupply the King, they had given him the advantage to ſupply himſelf by other waies, and divers times he did malitiouſly, falſely and wickedly publiſh and Declare, That ſeeing the Parliament had refuſed to ſupply his Majeſty in the ordinary and usual way, the King might provide for the Kingdom in such waies as he should hold fit, and that he was not to suffer himself to be mastered by the frowardness of the people.

And having so malitiously slandered the said House of Commons, he did with the help and advice of the said Arch-Bishop of Canterbury and the Lord Finch late Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, cause to be printed and published in his Majesties name a false and scandalous Book, entituled, His Majesties Declaration of the Causes that moved him to dissolve the last Parliament, full of bitter and malitious invectives, and false and scandalous aspersions against the said House of Commons.

25. That not long after the dissolution of the said last Parliament, (viz. in the moneth of May and June) he the said Earl of Strafford did advise the King to go on rigorously in levying of the Ship-money, and did procure the Sheriffs of several Counties to be sent for, for not levying thereof, divers of which were threatned by him to be sued in the Star-Chamber, and afterwards by his advice were sued in the Star-Chamber for not levying the same, and divers of his Majesties Loving Subjects were sent for, and imprisoned by his advice about that and other illegal payments.

And a great Loane of 100000 l. was demanded of the City of London, and the Lord Mayor and Aldermen and the Sheriffs of the said City were often sent for to the Councel-Table to give an account of their proceedings in raysing of Ship-money, and furthering of that Loane, and were required to certifie the names of such Inhabitants of the said City as were fit to lend, which they with much humility refusing to do, he the said Earl of Strafford did use these or the like speeches, viz. That they deserved to be put to fine and ransome, and that no good would be done with them, till an example were made of them, they were laid by the heels, and some of the Aldermen hanged up.

26. That the said Earl of Strafford by wicked Counsel having brought his Majesty into excessive charges without any just cause, he did in the moneth of July last (for the support of the said great charges) counsel and approve two dangerous projects.

1. To seize upon the Bullion, and the money in the Mint.

2. And to embase his Majesties coyn with the mixtures of brass.

And accordingly he procured one hundred and thirty thousand pounds, which was then in the Mint, and belonging to divers Merchant-strangers and others to be seized on and stayed to his Majesties use: And when divers Merchants of London owners of the said Bullion came to his house to let him understand what great mischief that course would produce here and in other parts, and what prejudice it would be to the Kingdom by discrediting the Mint, and hindering the importation of Bullion: He the said Earl told them that the City of London dealt undutifully and unthankfully with his Majesty, and that if any hurt came to them, they might thank themselves; and that it was the course of other Princes to make use of such moneys to serve their occasions.

And when in the same moneth of July, the Officers of his Majesties Mint came to him, and gave him divers reasons against the embasing of the said money, he told them, that the French King did use to send Commissaries of Horse with Commissions to search into mens estates, and to peruse their accounts, that so they might know what to levy of them by force, which they did accordingly levy: and turning to the Lord Cottington said, That this was a point worthy his Lordships consideration.

27. That in or about the moneth of August last, he was made Lieutenant General of all his Majesties forces in the Northern parts against the Scots, and being at York, did in the moneth of September by his own authority, and without any lawful warrant, impose a Tax on his Majesties Subjects in the County of York of 8 d. per diem for maintenance of every Souldier of the Trained Bands of that County, which sums of money he caused to be levied by force: And to the end to compell his Majesties Subjects out of fear and terror to yield to the payment of the same, he did declare that he would commit them that refused the payment thereof, and the Souldiers should be satisfied out of their Estates, and they that refused it, were in very little better condition than guilty of High Treason.

28. That in the moneth of September and October last, he the said Earl of Strafford being certified of the Scots Armies coming into the Kingdom, being then Lieutenant General of his Majesties Army, did not provide for the Town of Newcastle as he ought to have done, but suffered the same to be lost, that so he might the more incense the English against the Scots: And for the same wicked purpose, and out of a malitious desire to engage the Kingdoms of England and Scotland in a National and bloody War, he did write to the Lord Conwey the General of the Horse, and under the said Earls command, that he should fight with the Scottish Army at the passage over the Tyne, whatsoever should follow, notwithstanding that the said Lord Conwey had formerly by letters informed him the said Earl, that his Majesties Army then under his command, was not of force sufficient to encounter the Scots, by which advice of his, he did contrary to the duty of his place betray his Majesties Army then under his command, to apparent danger and loss.

After these Articles were read, the Earls answer thereunto which he had delivered in writing into the Lords house was also read, and this took up the time till two in the afternoon: at which hour the Court rose, and the Earl was remanded to the Tower, with orders to be there again the next day at eight in the morning.

On Tuesday He came accompanied as before, and staid in the Exchequer-Chamber till nine in the morning, at which time the Court being sate, and the King, Queen and Prince within their Closets, the Earl was brought in.

Mr. Pym one of the Prosecutors first aggravates the charge against the Earl.

Mr. Pym one of the Prosecutors began first, and aggravated the charge which was the day before read with many superlative expressions, The main points whereof were, "That it was a Treason

"Treason far beyond the reach of words, that a "Native Subject and a Peer of England, the "prime Governour of Ireland, the Commander "of his Majesties Forces, and a Protestant in "Religion, should have in such an impious and "gross manner recompenced his Majesties fa- "vors, abused his goodness, and drawn all his "Dominions into hazard and peril of their Reli- "gion, Lives, Goods and Priviledges: That one "of these faults alone had been enough and too "much for the fulfilling of the exorbitancie and "wickedness of any one man, and what punish- "ment could be thought upon sufficient to expi- "ate crimes of such a transcendent nature.

The Earl begins to make his defence.

The Earl with great moderation spake in his own defence to this purpose: "He modestly re- "counted his services done to the King and "Crown of England, and his endeavors for ad- "vancement as well of the honor as commodity "both of England and Ireland; and as to Ire- "land he said, That there had been more Par- "liaments there since his Government than in "fifty yeers before; that he had opposed divers "projects and Monopolies, and improved the "Kings revenew from 50000 lib. per Annum, to "120000 lib. per Annum: That he had resto- "red the Churches maintenance, suppressed the "Outlaws, established obedience to Royal Au- "thority, and restrained the tyranny and usurpa- "tion of Great ones over the Commons, yet for "the effecting of all these actions, he reputed "himself the most weak and meanest instru- "ment.

Pym offers three new Articles against him.

Mr. Pym after the close of his Speech, told the Lords, there were three new Articles that the Commons had adjoined to his Charge by an after-search, and moved that he might presently reply to the same: Whereunto the Earl answer- ed, "It was very strange that after the close of "the Process, and where matters were come to "be scann'd and examined by proofs, that any new "Charge should be given in, yet lest he should "seem to decline the maintenance of his own "innocencie and the just defence of his honor, he "said he was willing to hear them, and have them "alleadged, provided that a convenient time "might be allowed to make his replies to them.

To which the Earl answers.

Pym excepts against the Earls answer.

But Mr. Pym excepted against this, and told them, That the House of Commons did conceive it to be dangerous to grant any further time on this occasion: Upon this importunity, the Lords did retire themselves, and after a little time of stay returned, and declared, that they had found the Earls suite to be equitable in desiring further time for answering, yet seeing the Articles themselves neither for number nor weight seemed to be of that importance, but that he might furnish out a present answer, they thought it fitting to grant no delay. The Earl then intreating them to pardon the weakness of his extemporary answers, desi- red to hear the Articles read, which were these.

The Lords retire a while and return.

and grant him no further time.

The Arti- cles are then read.

1. That he had within these two years with- drawn 30000 li. sterling from the Exchequer in Ireland, and imployed it to his own private uses.

2. That in the beginning of his Government, the Garrisons in Ireland had been maintained by the English Treasury.

3. That he had advanced Popish and infa- mous persons, as the Bishop of Waterford and o- thers to the prime Dignities of the Church of Ireland.

The Earl answers to the three Articles newly en- force'd.

1. To the first, he answered, "That thirty "thousand pounds were set apart for the King's "late service at his most special and most per- "emptory command, for which he produced "the Kings own Letter already approved, as his "acquittance at the Exchequer-board in Ire- "land.

2. To the second, "That at the beginning of "his Government, as ever before his time, the "Garrisons had been burthensome to the King- "dom of England, but that he had so improv'd "the Revenew, that they were now paid by that "Crown without any charge to this; for which "if the best endeavors of a Subject may justly "expect any reward from his King and Country, "he craved leave to think that he rather deserved "many thanks than the least punishment.

3. To the third, "He attests all the Clergy "of Ireland, if ever he had taken upon him any "particular medling in advancing their Church- "men, or whether he had done any thing con- "cerning such affairs: but upon the special ad- "vice of the best and wisest of their number: "adding, That when he befriended the Bishop "of Waterford, he conceived of him as a man "of integrity and learning fit for such an imploy- "ment, nor was there then the least suspition of "those monstrous impieties, wherewith he was "afterwards charged. That he had now justly "suffered for the same, and that he hoped they "would not lay a necessity upon him to prophe- "cie and divine of the future conditions and de- "portments of men: For others of the Church, "suspected of Popery, he knew none such, but "should answer to the Particulars so far as "as they concerned him, when they should hap- "pen to be alleadged.

This was all the business of this day; the Lords rose, and the Earl was appointed to come again the next morning, at which time they in- tended to proceed upon the particular Articles, and give Oath to the Witnesses, for hitherto they had only been upon the general heads.

On the first of the special Articles they insist- ed not.

The names of the Com- mittee of the House of Com- mons prose- cutors of the Earl.

The Committee of Prosecutors were, Mr. Jeffry Palmer, Mr. John Maynard, Mr. Bulstrod Whitlock, Mr. John Glyn, the Lord George Dig- by, Mr. Oliver St. John, Sir Walter Earl, Mr. John Selden, Mr. John Hampden, and Mr. Stroud.

The Lords being sate, and the Earl present on Wednesday in the morning, Mr. Glyn first spake: He said,

Mr. Glyn's Speech to the charge in the se- cond Artl- cle.

"The Earl of Strafford was impeached not "with simple but accumulative Treason, for "though in each particular such a monstrous "crime could not be deprehended, yet when all "conceived in the mass, and under one view, "he should be undoubtedly found the most wic- "ked and exorbitant Traytor that ever was ar- "raigned at the Bar: he added, That his charge "was intending to subvert and change the fun- "damental Laws, Liberties, and Priviledges of "both the Kingdoms, and to introduce an arbi- "trary and tyrannical Government: This, he "said, could not appear but by the fruits, which " were either in expreſſion or action. The ex

" preſſions were :

1. " That in the preſence of the Juſtices ſit-
" ting at York he ſaid, Some were all for Law, but " they ſhould find, That the Kings little finger
" ſhould be heavier than the loyns of the Law.

The Earls anſwer.

To this, being the ſubſtance of the ſecond Article, the Earl replied, " That having ſpoken ſuf" ficiently before to his juſtification in general,
" he would by their Lordſhips favour add theſe
" few words, That it did ſtrike him to the heart,
" to be accuſed of ſuch a wicked crime, and that " ſuch honourable perſons who were the Compa-
" nions of his youth, and with whom he had ſpent
" the beſt of his days, ſhould now riſe up in judg" ment againſt him ; yet he thanked God for it,
" it was not guilt but grief, that ſo much troubled
" him ; he added, That it was a wonder how he " had gotten ſtrength ſufficient in ſuch infirmity
" of body and anguiſh of mind, to collect his " thoughts and ſay any thing at all for himſelf :
" But the Almighty God who knows him to be " innocent, had furniſhed him with ſome abilities
" to give teſtimony to the truth and a good Con-
" ſcience : He therefore intreated, that if either
" in judgment or memory, he ſhould at any time
" fail, it might be imputed to his great weakneſs:
" And although the Gentlemen his Accuſers
" ſhould ſeem more ready in their Accuſations,
" than himſelf in his defence, that it might not
" prejudice his cauſe, who in very unequal terms,
" had to do with learned and eloquent Lawyers,
" bred up a long time and inured to ſuch judi" ciary pleadings, & whoſe Rhetorick he doubted
" not might preſent many things to their view in " a multiplying Glaſs ; he told them farther, that
" for theſe many years he had been weary of Pub-
" like ſervice, and that now it was his reſolution
" after he had vindicated his honor to retire him-
" ſelf, and to enjoy his much longed-for priva-
" cie : And yet he could not but ſay, it had been " his hearty wiſh and deſire to have rather vo" luntarily reſigned his places of honor like a ripe
" fruit fallen from the tree, than to be violently
" pulled from thence as a fruitleſs and unprofita-
" ble withered branch.

" To the charge of Treaſon, he ſaid, That un" der favour he conceived, although all the Ar" ticles contained in his impeachment were ve" rified againſt him, yet they could not all amount
" to Treaſon, neither ſimple nor accumulative,
" for, ſaid he, I do not underſtand by what in" terpretation of Law, the diverſion of Juſtice
" can be called a ſubverſion of the ſame, or the " exceeding of a Commiſſion, the Uſurpation of " a new Power ; To the particular alledged, he " replied, that his words were inverted, for that " his expreſſion was, That the little finger of the " Law, (if not ſupported by the Regal Power
" in granting Pardons for the Penalties of the " ſame) was heavier than the Kings loyns. That " this was his expreſſion, he verified.

1. Firſt by the occaſion, for he ſpake the words
" a long time ſince to ſome who had been impri-
" ſoned at York, and were then by the Kings fa" vor ſet at liberty, whom he incited to thank" fulneſs towards his Majeſty by this expreſ-
" ſion.

2. " Secondly, by Sir William Pennyman, a " Member of the Houſe of Commons who was
" there preſent and heard the words : which Sir
" William declared to be true.

In the examination of the witneſſes againſt him to this Article, he convinced one of them of untruth by interrogating, where he was when the ſpeech was heard, and how far diſtant from him ; to which the man replied, " He was twelve yards
" from him : the Earl then ſaid, It was impoſſi-
" ble for him to hear a man three yards off, by " reaſon of a deafneſs he had, which had held " him fourteen years, which being found true, the " witneſs was rejected :

Another witneſs Sir David Fowles was brought againſt him, againſt whom he excepted as his known and profeſt enemy, but that was not allowed of, becauſe in matters of Treaſon, a mans enemy may witneſs againſt him pro Domino Rege: this was all that was done for that time.

On Thurſday he appeared again, and the ſecond expreſſions in the third Article of the Charge, was charged againſt him, viz. 1641.

The ſecond expreſſion in the third Article charg'd againſt him.

That he had declared that Ireland was a Conquered Nation, and that the King may do with them what he pleaſed ; and ſpeaking of the Charters the former Kings of England made to the City of Dublin, he ſaid, They were nothing worth, and did bind the King no farther than he pleaſed.

This was aggravated as a prime note of his tyrannical will and diſaffection, that would permit no Law to bound the Subject, but what himſelf and ſuch as he ſhould appoint might draw by ſiniſtrous informations from a gratious and well-meaning Prince, and if this were admitted, the whole power and liberty of the Republike would utterly be loſt.

The Earl anſwers thereunto.

To this he replied, " That the firſt part of it " cannot be denied : and to the ſecond, That he
" ſaid only, That the King was the Law-giver,
" which he hoped none could deny without in" curring the crime of Treaſon ; and that the " Kings ſentence was a Law in matters not de" termined by Acts of Parliament, which all but " diſloyal Subjects would grant : profeſſing with" al, that it had been ever his endeavour to have
" the liberty of the Subject, and the Royal Pre" rogative follow both in one channel ; knowing " that, if either of them croſſed other, we could " expect nothing but a ſubverſion of the Com" mon-wealth, either by tyranny or rebellion :
" That the Prerogative was like the firſt ; the li" berty of the Subject like the ſecond Table,
" either both or neither can be preſerved : That " in his duty, he ſtood obliged, firſt to the King
" as God's Anointed, then in the ſecond place to " his Countrey, if it did not croſs the Regal
" power : And therefore hoped that what he " had ſaid was ſo far from being Treaſon, that he " thought a thouſand ſuch expreſſions would not " make up one Felony. This was all the pro-
" proceedings of this day.

On Friday, two other expreſſions were urged againſt him out of the 4*th*. Article :

Two expreſſions out of the fourth article urged againſt him.

1. That he would neither have Law or Law-yers diſpute or queſtion any of his Orders.

2. In ſpeaking of the Earl of Cork, he ſaid, he would make him and all Ireland know, ſo long as he had the Government, That any Act of State there there made or to be made, ſhould be as binding to the ſubjects of that Kingdom as an Act of Parliament.

The Earl of Cork was the main Witneſs to prove theſe expreſſions.

The Earls Anſwer.

The Earl anſwered, It were hard meaſure for a man to loſe his honour and his life for a haſty word, he confeſſed, he had often ſaid he would not ſuffer his orders to be contemned, becauſe in contempt of him, his Maſters honour would be wounded.

To the ſecond he ſaid, If a proportionable obedience was not as well due to Acts of State as to Acts of Parliament, in vain did the Councel ſit: And that he had done no more than what former Deputies and chief Governors of Ireland had done: And what was agreeable to his Inſtructions for the Councel Table, which he produced.

He convinced the Earl of Cork of two ſhameful overſights in his Depoſition, for he had declared upon his Oath, that the Earl had cauſed an Ordinance made againſt him to be interlined, and ſome words to be ſcraped out, which words were notwithſtanding ſtill found to be in the Ordinance by an Authentick Copy under the hand of Sir Paul Davies, Clerke of the Councel board in Ireland, which the Earl of Strafford produced.

In the next place, the Earl of Cork alledging amongſt other things that he had advanced a Groom of his to be a Preacher.

H: diſproves what the Earl of Cork alledged againſt him.

To diſprove which, the Earl produced a teſtimony from the Univerſity of Dublin, that the man had been a Maſter of Arts of ten or twelve years ſtanding before his advancement, adding withal that my Lord Corke was an excellent Scholar that could breed ſuch Grooms. Theſe matters took up the whole day on Friday.

Upon Saturday he appeared again, and having (as they ſaid) done with expreſſions, they would next proceed to his actions, and begin with thoſe concerning the execution of Martial Law againſt the Lords Mount-Norris and another perſon, as the matter is laid down in the 5*th.* Article;

Which they diſtinguiſhed under four heads.

1. That he exerciſed Martial Law in time of Peace.

2. That he was both party and Judge in Mount-Norris his cauſe.

3, That he proceeded ſummarily in the matter.

4. That he had not heard the exceptions made by Mount-Norris againſt his Witneſſes.

To the firſt he anſwered;

The Earl anſwers the firſt head of the firſt Article.

1. That all Armies have been, and muſt be governed by martial Law.

2. That there is a ſtanding Army in Ireland, and therefore the caſe is all one in time of Peace or War; And that the Army might be undone if they ſhould not uſe Martial Law, but were to expect remedy for the ſetling of a Mutiny, or aſſurance of Obedience from the Common Law.

3. That it had ever been the practiſe of the Deputies, particularly of Wilmot, Faulkland, Chicheſter, yea Corke himſelf, and therefore was no new thing brought in by him: This he proved both by the production of the military Ordinances, and by divers Witneſſes who knew ſentences given in that kind by them.

4. That he had a particular Warrant in his Commiſſion for this power.

5. That in the Lord Mount-Norris his Caſe, he was commanded to exerciſe the ſame by the Kings particular letter, both which he cauſed to be read.

His anſwer to the ſecond head.

To the ſecond he ſaid, he was not a Judge in the Tryal, but a party which appear'd, in that he ſate bare in the Court all the time of the Tryal, and gave no ſuffrage in it, and for further evidence of his being a party, he cauſed his Brother Sir George Wentworth in regard of intereſt of blood to decline all acting in the proceſs.

His anſwer to the third head.

To the third he ſaid, That he being not a Judge in this matter, the Court of War was to be anſwerable for their own proceedings, and that after a long reaſoning he had heard them ſay, No delay could ſafely be granted in Martial Courts.

His anſwer to the fourth head.

To the fourth he anſwered, That he was not a Judge in the caſe, and remembers not the exceptions againſt any Witneſſes, adding, that as he had been regular in his proceedings, ſo he had been moderate in the execution of that ſentence: for though the Lord Mount-Norris juſtly deſerved to dye, yet he had obtained for him the Kings Pardon for the ſaving of his life, and proteſted that he intended nothing by that ſentence, but in ſome meaſure to repair his own honour, and to give Mount-Norris fair reproof, who was known to be of an exorbitant and licentious tongue and ſpirit: Adding, that if the Houſe of Commons would go on the ſame way with him, and aſſure him that the iſſue of his charge ſhould be nothing elſe but to admoniſh him for the time to come, he would thank them heartily for it, and ſtudy amendment in all his pretended overſights: And whereas Mount-Norris complained, that he had jeeringly told him, when the ſentence was paſſed and pronounced againſt him, That e're he loſt his head, himſelf would loſe his hand; he anſwered that although he had been thought to be inſolent and haughty, yet he was never ſo impertinent to uſe this expreſſion: if any ſuch were, it was for undervaluing himſelf in ſaying, That e're a hair of Mount-Norris ſhould periſh, he would loſe his hands; And truly (ſaid he) if Mount-Norris would ſay ſo to me, even in the worſt ſenſe that can be conceived, That e're I dye, he would loſe his hand, I would take it very kindly from him. For the other man he avouched that he himſelf had voyced to hang him, both becauſe he was an errant thief, and alſo had fled from his colours, which by the very Common Law was juſtifiable: (and to this effect he cited a Statute 20 Henr. 6, and 7 Henr. 7.) That to fly from their colours is felony: He concluded, that ſeeing he was not acceſſary to the ſentence againſt Mount-Norris, had not ſate there as Judge, had a power to keep Martial Courts by his Commiſſion, had not exerciſed the ſame till a new command came from his Majeſty, had done no more than ever was practiſed in Ireland before his time, and had at laſt obtained Mount-Norris his pardon, He hoped there was nothing accuſable in him but his too remiſs and too moderate proceedings.

Mr. Glyns aggravation of the firſt Head.

Mr. Glyn in aggravation of the Exerciſe of Martial Law ſaid, That he knew the time when the Earl of Strafford was no leſs active and ſtirring

ring to enlarge the liberty of the Subject, and advance the Petition of Right, than now he is for extending his own arbitrary and tyrannical Government.

The Earls Reply.

To this he replyed, without the least semblance of Passion, That if at any time he had done the least service to the House of Commons, he thought his whole life well spent, nor could they ever so gratiously reward him as to give Commission to that Gentleman to express so much before that honourable Assembly, But withal, he said, if ever any such thing was done by him, he intreated it might now be remembred, and serve to over-ballance some slight and mean ever-sights committed by him, which he hoped should never make him guilty of Treason, unless it were Treason for a man to have no more wit and prudence than God and Nature had bestowed upon him. And so much for Saturday.

On Monday the Court sate again, and the Earl appeared and was charged with the sixth Article concerning the dispossession of the Lord Mount-Norris of the Manor of Tymore, which the Prosecutors inforced with many arguments, saying this fact was

1. Against an Act of the 7th. of Henr. 6. which provides all matters to be determined by the ordinary Judges.

2. Against the late Proclamation of the King.

3. Against the practise of all Deputies before that time, withal they added, that it was a tyranny that could not be express'd, to exercise this power over the persons of the Peers of the Land and their Goods.

The Earls answer to the Sixth article.

To this he replyed, That for his part in matter of justice (under favour he spake it) he thought there was no distinction to be made betwixt a Peer of the Land, and one of the Commons, except they did think that either fear or faction should do something, which had no place in him. He said,

1. That the Act of Henr. 6. answered it self sufficiently, both because it excepted the Court of Requests (and that his proceedings were nothing else in Ireland, and also it makes an express reservation of the Kings Prerogative, which he said was his Strength, because he derived his Commission from the King, and that the Act was the most express warrant in the World for him.

2. The Kings Proclamation mentioned came not out in five years after, wherefore he thought it hard to have a disobedience objected to him for a thing that was not in being, adding, that he wish'd from his heart they would respect the Kings command and Commissions, with that tenderness of affection and obedience as he did his Proclamations: He then proved that the like course by summary proceedings before the Deputies of Ireland, was the constant practise of all Deputies that went before him, but nevertheless he said, he was tender to exercise that power, till the King (induced by the humble Remonstrance of the meaner sort of people) had most peremptorily and upon just reasons commanded him, causing the Kings letter in that behalf to be read.

Obj. It was objected, that other Deputies had indeed determined upon suits of Equity, and matters of debt, but not of land.

He replyed, That neither he nor they had ever given sentence or determined any thing concerning matters of inheritance, but only concerning violent intrusion, which was this case in question, and which fell directly within a suit of Equity: And in deciding this controversie he had, he said, the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolles, and Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, to assist him, nor did he hear the business, till the Complainant by Petition had complaind of delay of Justice in the Chancery, where the suit had long depended, & upon the proofs exhibited in that Court, he made the Decree. He said moreover, the Natives would unwillingly be debarred of relief in this summary way of Proceeding, because they had that dispatch in a day or two which the Common Law would not yield in so many years, that as to this matter charged on him, seeing he had done nothing therein but what was customary, necessary and equitable, and the sentence just, he expected rather thanks from the state than a charge for ill department; he likewise shewed with what extertion and violence the Lord Mount-Norris had taken seisure of that piece of Land, and made the action to appear on his part very foul, and at last he concluded saying, That he had done no more in Ireland, than the Court of Requests in England usually doth: And that the Chancery Court in Ireland doth the same daily, and the last Chancellor was never charged for such proceedings, though his power and authority was less than his; But the difference of the person and his authority (it seemeth) doth difference the matter. And this was the business on Monday.

On Tuesday March the 31 th. he was charged with the 7th. Article, to which he answered, That the Lord Dillon with others producing his Patent according to a Proclamation on the behalf of his Majesty, the said Patent was questionable, upon which a case was drawn and argued by Counsel, and the Judges delivered their opinions thereupon. But the Lord Dillon or any other was not bound thereby, nor put out of their possessions, but might have traversed the office, or otherwise have legally proceeded, notwithstanding the said opinions. His answer to the seventh Article.

They then proceeded to the 8th. Article concerning a Petition exhibited by Thomas Hibbots against Dame Mary Hibbots Widow, to which he answered, That true it is he had voted against the Lady Hibbots, and thought he had reason so to do, the said Lady being discovered by fraud and circumvention to have bargained for lands of a great value for a small sum. And he denied that the said Lands were after sold to his use, or that the Major part of the Councel board voted for the Lady, the contrary appearing by the sentence under the hand of the Clerk of the Councel: which being true, he said, he might well threaten her with commitment, in case she disobeyed the said Order; Neither had he any underhand dealings with Sir Robert Meredith, for the Lady had her own land back from him, he also declared with what fraud and deceit the Lady had come to her Lands. His answer to the eighth Article.

After this Article they fell the same day upon the ninth, about the giving of Warrants to the Bishop of Downe and Connor, for apprehending all such persons (and presenting them before the Councel Table) as contemned the Ecclesiastical Ordinances.

This was aggravated as a new and Tyrannical form of proceeding against the liberty of the Subject.

To

To this he replied:

His answer to the ninth Article.

Firſt, He produced the Primate of Irelands, Arch-Biſhop Uſher's teſtimony under his hand, (he being himſelf ſick) that the ſame courſe had been uſed in Ireland before, and that Biſhop Montgomery, the Primates Predeceſſor in the Biſhoprick of Meath had had the ſame Warrant.

Secondly, He ſhewed the equity that ſuch aſſiſtance ſhould be given to Church-men, who otherwiſe becauſe of Papiſts and Schiſmaticks either to God or the King, would have no reſpect or obedience given them in that Kingdom.

Thirdly, He proved by two witneſſes, that ſuch Warrants were in uſe before his time.

Fourthly, He ſaid, He had never granted any but that one, and had preſently within ſome few moneths called the ſame in again; What (ſaid he) was the Biſhop of Downs carriage in it, he had no reaſon to anſwer for: But he preſumed the Biſhop could give a ſatisfactory anſwer for himſelf when he ſhould be called in queſtion; and ſo he concluded, That a matter ſo juſt, ſo neceſſary, ſo cuſtomary and practical before, he hoped ſhould not be charged upon him, as an introduction of a new and Tyrannical form of Government. And therefore ſubmitted himſelf to the mercy of God, and the equity of his Peers in his Tryal thereon. And this was the work on Tueſday.

On Wedneſday they charged him with the 12 th. Article, which was preſſed hard upon him by Mr. Glyn, who ſaid, That the Earl of Strafford having eſtabliſhed an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government over the Lives, Lands and Liberties of the Kings Subjects, his next deſire was to make intruſion upon the Crown it ſelf. That by applying to his own uſe, the publike Revenews he might be the more enabled to accompliſh his diſloyal and traycerous intentions; to which end having by a new Book of Rates inhanced the Cuſtoms he had gotten by advantage of a Leaſe from the Dutcheſs of Buckingham (which he procured for her far different from a former Leaſe to the Duke her Husband) above twenty ſix thouſand pounds yearly, which was a crime of a higher nature than thoſe contained in the preceding Articles, becauſe in thoſe there was ſome color or pretext of Juſtice, here none; thoſe in particulars, this in general; thoſe againſt the Subject only, this againſt the King himſelf.

For the proof of the Charge, they produced the Leaſe of the Duke of Buckingham, which was read and compared with that Leaſe to the Dutcheſs of Buckingham (which the Earl hath now by aſſignment) and ſome differences were ſhewn ariſing to the ſum of 2000 lib. in the Dukes Leaſe, the moiety only of concealed and forfeited goods were due to him: but the whole goods to the Dutcheſs in her Leaſe. Again, the Kings ſhips of prizes did not pay cuſtoms in the Dukes Leaſe, in the Dutcheſſes they did. Again, the Impoſt of the Wines (then belonging to the Earl of Carliſle) was not in the Dukes Leaſe, in the Dutcheſſes it was: Laſtly, Whereas the Earl of Strafford paid but 14000 lib. per annum for the Cuſtome, it was worth to him, they ſaid, as was apparent by the Books of the Exchequer 40000 lib. Witneſſes were examined.

Firſt, Sir James Hay, who depoſed that the Earl of Carliſle had an advantage of 1600 lib. per annum by his Leaſe of Wines.

Secondly, The Lord Ranelaugh, who depoſed that by the inſpection of the Books of Accompts, he had found the Cuſtomes to be Anno 1636. thirty ſix thouſand pounds. Anno 1637. 39000 lib. Anno 1638. 54000 lib. Anno 1639. 59000 lib.

With the Proofs they concluded the Charge; That notwithſtanding the Lord Strafford pretended a great meaſure of zeal and honeſty in his Majeſties ſervice, yet it is evident, he had abuſed the truſt put upon him, and by withdrawing ſo great ſums of money from the Crown, had weakned the King, prejudiced the Subject of the protection they were to expect from him, and had been the cauſe that the extraordinary ways of Impoſt and Monopolies had been taken, for ſupplying of the Royal neceſſity: And that this Act therefore ought to be enough to make the Charge and Impeachment of High-Treaſon laid againſt him.

The Earl anſwers to the twelfth Article.

The Earl replied, That he conceived he had given full ſatisfaction to all hitherto brought againſt him, about his pretended arbitrary Government, nor would he ſpend time in vain repetitions, and for the preſent Article, though in all parts it were granted to be true, yet he could not perceive by what interpretatation of Law it could imply the leaſt act of Treaſon, and when it ſhould be directly charged upon him as a point of Miſdemeanor, Oppreſſion, or Felony, he made no doubt, but he ſhould be very able to clear himſelf abundantly in that point alſo, yet leſt any prejudice might ſtick to his Honor by theſe bold aſſertions, He was content to ſtep ſo far out of the way as to give anſwers.

Firſt, "That it concerned him nothing, what "particulars in the Leaſe had paſt betwixt the "King and the Dutcheſs of Buckingham; or "whether ſhe had obtained more eaſie conditi- "ons than the Duke her Husband, eſpecially ſee- "ing the ſame was granted ſome years before "his coming to that Government; yet thus much "he could ſay, that the Dutcheſs had paid thirty "thouſand pounds fine, and therefore no marvel "that her yearly Rent was no leſs.

Secondly, "For the Book of Rates (where- "in the chief matter of oppreſſion and grievance "ſeemed to reſt) the ſame was there eſtabliſhed "by the Deputy Falkland, Anno 1628. three "years before his going into Ireland, and there- "fore it was exceeding ſtrange in his apprehen- "ſion, how that could riſe up in judgment a- "againſt him.

Thirdly, "That he had his intereſt in the Cu- "ſtoms by aſſignation of a Leaſe from the Dutch- "eſs of Buckingham, which was granted her be- "fore his Government, and he never heard it be- "fore alledged as a crime of Treaſon, for a man "to make a good bargain for himſelf.

Fourthly, "That not of his own accord, but "at the Kings ſpecial command, he had under- "gone that Charge, on hopes that upon the en- "quiry into the worth thereof, the Cuſtomes "might be improved for the benefit of the "Crown, and the true value thereof diſcover- "ed; this he proved by the Lord Cottington and "Sir Arthur Ingram.

Fifthly, "That when a new Book of Rates

"was recommended to him by the Councel-"board of England, in the time of his Leaſe, "which might have been of great advantage to "him, he ſo preferred a fear he had, That the "trade of Ireland might thereby be diſcouraged, "before his own commodity, as he preſumed in "all humility to refuſe the ſaid Book, and tend-"red his reaſons thereof to the Kingdom and "Councel-table of England.

Sixthly, "That he never underſtood that the "Cuſtomes could ariſe to thoſe great ſums alledg-"ed, but though they ſhould, yet his advantage "was but ſmall; For firſt, dividing the fourteen "thouſand pounds he paid to the King into eight "parts, five parts thereof was yearly given in "upon Oath (and that procured firſt by himſelf) "at the Exchequer-board, the other three parts "was divided amongſt four of them, which were "equal ſharers in the Leaſe, granted before his "time: And therefore he was confident, he "ſaid, the Lords would rather take his accuſation "in this Article as an exerciſe of Rhetorick in "the Gentlemen his Adverſaries, than as a thing "ſpoken in good earneſt by them.

The ſame day the 11 th. and 12 th. Articles were charged againſt him.

To the 11 th. concerning Licenſes for exportation of Pipe-ſtaves, he anſwered, "That Pipe-"ſtaves were prohibited in King James his time, "and not exported but by licence, paying 6 ſhil. "8 d. a thouſand, and that he had not raiſed ſo "much thereby to himſelf as his Predeceſſors had "done for ſuch Licences.

He anſwers to the 11th. Article.

The 12 th. Article was more inſiſted on, and in the opening of it, Mr. Glyn ſaid, That for the further advancement of his tyrannical and avaritious deſigns, he had of himſelf eſtabliſhed a Monopoly for the reſtraint of Tobacco in that Kingdom: where they offered five particulars to the proof:

1. That he had reſtrained the importation of Tobacco.

2. That in the mean time he had brought in a great quantity himſelf, and ſold the ſame at exorbitant prices.

3. That of Tobacco already imported, he had forbidden any to be ſold, but what was firſt ſealed by his Officers.

4. That upon a pretended diſobedience, he had puniſhed a great number of people by ſeiſure, impriſonments, fining, whipping, pillory and ſuch like cruel and inhumane uſages.

5. That by theſe means he had gained 100000 lib. yearly.

For proof whereof they produced.

1. The Proclamation for reſtraining Tobacco, which was read.

2. The Proclamation about Sealing the ſame.

3. Some witneſſes who declared that ſhips had been reſtrained from landing Tobacco.

4. Others who had known ſome Tobacco ſeized on as forfeited.

5. A Remonſtrance of the Houſe of Commons in Ireland, declaring that the Earl had ſold 500 Tun of Tobacco, which ſold at 2 s. 6 d. per pound, amounts to an hundred thouſand pounds.

They concluded the Charge, That he had ſucked up the Blood of the Kings Liege people, and had by this one point of oppreſſion raiſed greater ſums to himſelf than all the Kings Revenew in that Kingdom extended unto, and therefore was liable to the crime of Treaſon, for troubling the peace, and bereaving the people of their goods, who were intruſted into his care and Government.

The Earls Reply to this was:

1. That long before his coming to Ireland, the ſame reſtraint had been of Tobacco, and the ſame Impoſt of eighteen pence per pound, enjoyned by King James. He anſwers to the 12th. Article.

2. That at that time the Tradeſmen for this Commedity paid but 20 lib. a year to the Crown for the Impoſt, but now 400.

3. That the Parliament in Ireland 1628, had Petitioned to have the Impoſt ſetled by an Act of State for ever afterwards as a part of the Revenew of the Crown.

4. That he had expreſs command from the King for iſſuing thoſe Proclamations, and therefore could not imagine more danger in them, than in others for Monopolies in England in the worſt ſenſe.

5. That the Proclamations were ſent forth not by himſelf alone, but by the whole Councel-board of Ireland.

For the Proclamations, he told them, It was his own opinion (and if he failed in it, he humbly craved pardon, and hoped that it ſhould not be Treaſon to have no more judgment than God had beſtowed on him) that the King was indued by God with a power to make temporary Laws, and cauſe the ſame to be promulgated for the good of his people, upon ſudden emergent occaſions, to which Laws, Obedience is due, till they be abrogated by enſuing Parliaments: that he reſtrained no man from importing Tobacco, who was willing to pay the appointed Impoſt; that for his part, he had never traffiqued in all his time therein, nor had any part with the Contractors: And if any Tobacco was ſeized on, it was in contempt of the Proclamations: and if any perſon were cenſured to the Pillory, or whipping, it was for known perjury, the ordinary and uſual puniſhment in ſuch a caſe: Concerning the Tobacco imported, he ſaid, No conſideration was taken of the prices given for the Tobacco beyond Seas, of the Kings Revenew of 4000 l. of the Merchants payns and danger in bringing the ſame home; for his part, if any advantage were made, ſurely it was not his, nor could he annul every Contract or Leaſe made by the King: And therefore ſeeing his intereſt was none, he had done nothing but at the Kings direction, and at the advice of the Councel-board: ſince the ſame Impoſt was in King James his time, and Petitioned for by themſelves in Ireland: he hoped his carriage in the buſineſs ſhould be ſo far from a crime of Treaſon, that it ſhould rather be thought no crime at all.

So much for Wedneſday.

On Thurſday he was charged with the 13 th. Article, to which he made this enſuing anſwer:

"That he did endeavour to advance the Ma-"nufacture of Linnen rather than of Woollen, "becauſe the laſt would be the greater detriment "to England: That the Primate of Ireland, the "Archbiſhop of Dublin, Chancellor Loftus, and "the Lord Mount-Norris all of the Councel, "and His anſwer to the 13th Article.

" and ſubſcribers of the Proclamation were as li" able to the charge as himſelf : That the redu" cing of that Nation by Orders of the Councel-
" board to the Engliſh cuſtoms from their more
" ſavage uſage, as drawing Horſes by their tails,
" &c. had been of former practice : that the " project was of ſo ill avail to him, as he was the " worſe for the Manufacture, thirty thouſand
" pounds at leaſt by the Looms he had ſet up at " his own charge : As for the Warrants that " were iſſued out to ſeize upon goods, he affirmed
" the ſame to be neceſſary, becauſe there ought " to be no contempt of Proclamations : but that " any part did accrue to him, he flatly denied :
" And if any rigor was uſed in the execution, he
" ſaid, Not he, but the Officers were to anſwer
" for it, for this might happen in the moſt juſt and " neceſſary commands, nor was there ever any " complaint preſented to him of any ſuch mat" ter.

The ſame day they proceeded upon the later part of the 15 th. Article, waving the 14 th. and the former part of this. Mr. Jeffry Palmer urged upon him in theſe or the like words: That the Earl having by a Tyrannical power inverted the ordinary courſe of Juſtice, and given immediate Sentence upon the Lands and Goods of the Kings Subjects under pretence of diſobedience to his Orders, in proſecution whereof, he had laid Souldiers upon the ſame to their utter ruine: This Article, he ſaid, of it ſelf did contain an individual Treaſon, ſo that if there were no more than this, it were more than ſufficient to convince him of his impeachment; two things were offered in proof :

1. The Teſtimony of one Savil a Sergeant at Arms, who was called forth, and produced the Copy of a Watrant, upon which he had ſeſſed Souldiers.

2. He began to name ſome Statutes, by which ſuch ceſſing was Treaſon. But before he went on to that, the Earl deſired to be heard againſt Savils teſtimony, and ſaid, he hoped their Lordſhips would not upon an Article of ſuch importance admit of the Copy of an Order : he ſaid, No Tranſcript but an Original can make faith before the Kings Bench in a matter of Debt, and therefore he thought in matter of life and death before the Supreme Judicatory, leſs would not be allowed off : Moreover, if Copies be at any time received, they are ſuch as are given in upon Oath to have been compared with the Originals, but this was not ſo.

Glyn hereupon replied, that this Order ought to be admitted, ſince it was produced by the Officer himſelf, who beſt knew it, having executed the ſame.

His anſwer to the later part of the fifteenth Article.

The Earl anſwered, " That was the beſt ar" gument he could uſe why it ſhould not be ad" mitted: for (ſaid he) Mr Savil may be char" ged with Treaſon, for ceſſing men of war up-
" on the Kings Subjects, he hath nothing for his " defence but a pretended warrant from me: Now
" what he ſwears to my prejudice is to his own
" advantage, nor can a man by any equity in the " world be admitted to teſtifie againſt another,
" in ſuam juſtificationem.

This anſwer ſeemed ſo weighty to the Lords, that they roſe and went up to their Houſe; and after an hours ſtay, they returned, and declared That after much deliberation, they had reſolved, that this Copy ſhould not be admitted, and willed them to proceed to other proofs: which after a little pauſe they did.

1. The Lord Ranelagh affirmed that he heard of ſuch a Warrant, and knew ſometimes three, ſometimes five Souldiers billeted by it.

2. Maſter Clare declares the very ſame.

3. Another Depoſed, that he had ſeen ſuch a Warrant under the Deputies hand and ſeal; and ſo much for the proof.

For the Statutes alledged one of Ed. 3. 6. that whoſoever ſhould carry about with them Engliſh Enemies, Iriſh Rebells, or Hooded men, and ceſſe them upon the Subject, ſhould be puniſhed as a Traytor. Another of Henr. 6. 7. That whoſoever ſhould ceſſe Men of War, in his Majeſties Dominions, ſhould be thought to make War againſt the King, and puniſhed as a Traytor.

The Earls Reply was,

The Earls Reply to other proofs.

" That in all the courſe of his life, he had in" tended nothing more than the preſervation of " the lives, goods and welfare of the Kings Sub" jects, and that he dared profeſs, that under no
" Deputy, more than under himſelf, had there
" been a more free and uninterrupted courſe of " Juſtice.

To the charge he anſwered,

His anſwer to the Charge.

1. " That the Cuſtomes of Ireland differed " exceedingly from the Cuſtomes of England, as
" was clear by Coke's Books, and therefore though
" ceſſing of men might ſeem ſtrange here, yet not
" ſo there.

2. " That even in England he had known
" Souldiers preſſed upon men, by the Preſidents
" of York and Wales, in caſe of known and open
" contempts, and that both in point of Outlawry
" and Rebellion, and alſo even for ſums of debt
" between party and party, there is nothing more
" ordinary than theſe ceſſings to this day in Scot-
" land, whereby the chief houſe of the Owner is " ſeized upon.

3. " That to this day hath been nothing more
" uſual in Ireland than for the Governors to ap-
" point Souldiers to put all manner of Sentences
" in Execution, which he proved plainly to have " been done frequently, and familiarly exerciſed
" in Grandiſons, Faulklands, Chicheſters, Will-
" mots, Corks, and all preceding Deputies times:
" And had even been done for Outlawries for
" the Kings debts in the Exchequer, of collecti" ons of Contribution money, and (which comes " home to the poynt) for ſmall ſums of money
" between party and party, ſo that he mervailed
" qua fronte or with what boldneſs it could be " called an Arbitrary Government lately brought " in by him.

To this the Lord Dillon, Sir Adam Loftus, and Sir Arthur Terringham depoſed: the laſt of whom told, that in Faulkland's time he knew twenty Souldiers ſeſſed upon a man for refuſing to pay ſixteen ſhillings ſterling.

4. " That in his inſtructions for executing his " his Commiſſion, he had expreſſe warrant for
" the ſame, as were in the inſtructions to the " Lord Faulkland before him, both of which were " produced and read.

5. "That although all theſe Preſidents were "not, yet it were not poſſible to govern the "the Kingdom of Ireland otherwiſe, which had "been from all times accuſtomed to ſuch ſum-"mary proceedings.

6. "That no Teſtimony brought againſt him, "can prove that ever he gave warrant to that ef-"fect; And for the deeds of the Sergeant at "Arms, he did conceive himſelf to be anſwera-"ble for it.

As for the Acts of Parliament, he had reſerved them to the diſpute of his Lawyers, but was content to ſay thus much for the preſent.

1. "That it is a ground in the Civil Law, that "that where the King is not mentioned, there he "cannot be included: But (with all diſtance to "his ſacred perſon be it ſpoken) he conceived "himſelf to be in his Maſter the Kings place (for "ſo his Commiſſion did run) in that Kingdom of "Ireland.

2. "The words in the Statute are not apply-"able to him, for God knows, he never went "about in Perſon to lay Souldiers upon any of "the Kings Subjects.

3. "That the Kings own Souldiers, requiring "in a Cuſtomary way, obedience to his Orders, "could in no conſtruction be called, Iriſh Re-"bells, Engliſh Enemies, or Hooded men.

4. "That the uſe and cuſtome of the Law, was "the beſt interpreter thereof, and for that he had "already ſpoken enough.

5. "That it ſavoured more of prejudice than "equity, to ſtart out ſuch an old Statute againſt "him and none others, (though culpable of the ſame fact) to the overthrow and ruine of him and "his Poſterity.

6. "That (under favour he conceived) for "any Iriſh Cuſtome or upon any Iriſh Statute, "he was to be judged by the Peers of Ire-"land.

7. "That Statute of what force ſoever was re-pealed,

1. "By the 10 th. of Henr. 7. where it is ex-"preſly declared nothing ſhall be reputed Trea-"ſon hereafter, but what is ſo declared by the "preſent Statute, now not a word is there of any "ſuch Treaſon.

2. "By the 11 th. of Queen Elizabeth, where "expreſly power is given to the Deputy of Ire-"land to ceſſe and lay Souldiers, although the "ſame be reputed Treaſon in any others.

To the Statute of Henr. 6. he replyed, "That a ſlender anſwer might ſerve, he hoped "that no man would think him ſo inconſiderate "to war againſt the King of Britain and Ireland, "by the ſeſſing of five Souldiers: That he had "been charged by many for taking Arms for the "King, but to that time never for taking Arms "againſt him; And that he heartily wiſhed that "no man in all his Majeſties Dominions had "more practiſes with Rebells and Rebellious de-"ſigns than himſelf. So much for Thurſday.

At the cloſe he deſired the intermiſſion of a day, that he might recollect his ſpirits & ſtrength againſt the next time of charge, and with much difficulty obtained reſt till Saturday.

On Saturday they proceeded to the 16 th. Article, which Mr. Palmer charged thus: That the Lord of Strafford having eſtabliſhed a Tyrannical and Independent authority, by giving ſummary Decrees and Sentences, had deprived the ſubject of all juſt remedy; for in that Kingdom there was no ſupreme to himſelf to whom they might appeal: And leſt their juſt grievances might be made known to his Majeſty, he had obtained a reſtraint, that no complaint ſhould be made of injuſtice or oppreſſion done there, till the firſt addreſs had been made to himſelf, and that no perſon ſhould come out of that Kingdom but upon licenſe obtained from himſelf.

To which the Earl replyed to this effect.

His Reply to the ſixteenth Article.

"That the Deputy Faulkland had ſet out the "ſame Proclamation, That the ſame reſtraint "was contained in the Statute of 25 Henr. 6. "upon which the Proclamation was founded: "That he had the Kings expreſs warrant for the "Proclamation: That he had alſo power to do "it by the Commiſſion granted to him: and that "the Lords of the Councel and the Juſtices not "only yielded, but preſſed him unto it. That it "was done upon juſt cauſe, for had the Ports "been open, divers would have taken liberty to "go to Spain, to Doway, Rhemes or St. Owers, "which might have proved of dangerous and "miſchievous conſequence to the State. That "the Earl of D'eſmond ſtood at the time of this "reſtraint charged with Treaſon before the "Councel of Ireland for practiſing againſt the "life of one Sir Valentine Coke. That the Lord "Roch was then a Priſoner for debt in the Caſtle "of Dublin, and therefore incapable of a licenſe; "That Parry was not fined for coming over "without licenſe, but for ſeveral contempts a-"gainſt the Councel-board in Ireland, and that "in his ſentence he had but only a caſting voice, "as the Lord Keeper in the Star-Chamber: He concluded, that he hoped the leaſt ſuſpition of Treaſon could not accrue to him from theſe actings: and for oppreſſion or miſdemeanor when it ſhould be laid to his charge, he made no doubt but he was able to anſwer it.

The 17 and 18 Articles were waved, and on the cloſe of the day Mr. Whitlock charged him with the 19 th. Article, ſaying, That he did not only Tyranniſe over the bodies, but alſo over the conſciences of men, and to that purpoſe did contrive and frame a new and unuſual Oath injoyned to the Scots in Ireland, and becauſe ſome of tenderneſſe of conſcience did refuſe to take the ſame, he had fined them in great ſums of money, baniſhed a great number from that Kingdom, called all that Nation Traytors and Rebells, and ſaid if ever he returned home from England, he would root them out both ſtock and branch.

For proof of this,

1. Sir James Montgomery was produced, who declared at large how that Oath was contrived.

2. Sir Robert Maxwell of Ochyarden who ſpake to the ſame purpoſe.

3. Sir John Clotworthy, who declared that a great number had fled the Kingdom for fear of that Oath.

4. One Mr. Samuel, who depoſed that upon the 10 th. of October 1638. he heard the Deputy ſay theſe words, That if he returned, he would root them out ſtock and branch.

They

They concluded, That this was one of the chiefeſt crimes he had done againſt the Priviledg and Liberty of the Subject.

The Earls reply to the 19th. Article.

The Earl replied: "That every new Article acquainted him with a new Treaſon, that if "he had done any thing in all his life acceptable "to the King and Countrey, he conceived it to "be this: And to theſe particulars he anſwered to this purpoſe.

1. "He deſired the Lords would call to mind "the condition of thoſe times, no man (pointing "to my Lord Steward) knows better than your "Lordſhip, who had in the expedition againſt "the Scots, the chiefeſt place in his Majeſties "Service: I would be very ſorry (ſaid he) to "rub old ſores, eſpecially ſeeing I hope things "are in a fair way to a firm peace, and I wiſh "that I may not be deceived, that is, that it may "be ſo; only thus much I may ſay, we had then "greater fears and apprehenſions in Ireland, leſt "the Scots in that Kingdom (who were above "100000 Souls) might have joyned with their "Countrey-men at home, for the diſturbance of "our peace: and we detected a Treaſon of be-"traying of the Caſtle of Knockfergus, to a great "man in that Kingdom (whoſe name I now ſpare) "by one Freeman, who upon the diſcovery was "executed.

"The Councel-board in Ireland reſolved to "preſcribe the Scots an Oath whereby they "might declare their diſcontent to their Coun-"trey-mens proceedings, and oblige themſelves "to the Kings Service: But while we were a-"bout this, they of their own accord came to "Dublin toPetition for it, and took it with a won-"derful alacrity and free heartedneſs, ſo that it is "a marveilous thing for any man to ſay it was in-"vented or violently enjoyned by me.

2. "About the ſame time the ſame Oath, "Verbum Verbo, was by the Councel of En-"gland preſcribed to the Scots at London and "elſewhere, which was no ſmall incouragement "to us in Ireland.

3. "I had (ſaid he) which I never ſhewed, "becauſe I had no need before this time, a ſpe-"cial Warrant from the King, all written with "his own hand to that effect: And when the "King commands a matter not contrary to Law, "truly, I (ſaid he) do conceive it both contra-"to Law and Conſcience, not to yeild him all "due obedience.

For the proof brought againſt him, there was nothing inſiſted on, to be of any moment but the words.

For the firſt words, "That he had called all "the Nation Rebels and Traytors, He ſaid, there "was no proof at all, nor indeed could there be "any, for if I had ſaid it (ſaid he) I had been "perfectly out of my wits; and he thanked God, "ſuch irrational ſpeeches uſed not to eſcape him: "He honoured that Kingdom very much, be-"cauſe it was the Native Soil of our dread So-"vereign, his Gratious Maſter, and becauſe he "knew a great part, yea, (he hoped) the great-"eſt part of them had been and ever will be as "loyal and dutiful to the King as any other of his "Subjects; and of thoſe who had ſubſcribed that "unhappy Combination, he knew a great many "had done it againſt their hearts and wills, and "would ever be ready upon occaſion to remon-"ſtrate the ſame, by adhering to the King's ſer-"vice; ſo that this accuſation was nothing but a "wreſting and perverting his words and meaning "of purpoſe to make him odious, and irritate a "whole Nation againſt him.

"For other words they were proved only by "one witneſs, which could make no ſufficient "faith, and that witneſs too he could evince, if "not of perjury, yet of a notable miſtake; for "he had ſworn poſitively that he had ſpoken thoſe "words the 10 th. of October, whereas he came "out of Ireland into England the 12 th. of Sep-"tember before, and was at London the 21 th.

"For thoſe that had fled the Kingdom becauſe "of that Oath, he knew none ſuch, and if they "did, they fled into Scotland, which might ſuffi-"ficiently argue their intention and reſolutions: "for his part, if they were not willing to give "that teſtimony of their Loyalty to their Prince, "although he had known of their departure, he "would have been very loath to have kept them "againſt their wills, but ſhould have been "gladly rid of them, and have made them a "Bridge to be gone rather than to ſtay.

Upon Munday, Mr. Whitlock proceeded to the 20 th. Article, but ſaid, becauſe the matter was conſimilis naturæ, they would joyn the five next Articles together, becauſe all of them tended to one period, to ſhew what bad deſign he had to have ſubdued the Kingdoms both of England and Scotland by force of Arms, to reduce them to that arbitrary Government he had lately introduced into Ireland.

The Earl intreated they would proceed Article by Article as they had hitherto done, he ſaid, five Articles were many, the matter weighty, his Memory treachetous, and his Judgment weak.

It was ſharply replied by Mr. Glyn, that it doth not become the Priſoner at the Barr to preſcribe them in what way they ſhould give in their evidence.

The Earl modeſtly anſwered, "That if he "ſtood in his place, he would crave the like fa-"vour, unleſs his abilities did furniſh him with "more ſtrength than he could find in himſelf, for "his part he was contented they ſhould proceed "any way, always provided they would grant him "a competent time for replying.

Then Whitlock went on, and told the Lords, that ſomethings in thoſe Articles concerned the Scottiſh, ſomething the Engliſh Nation, that which concerned the Scottiſh, he reduced to five heads.

1. That the Deputy had ſaid at the Councel-board, that the Scots demands contained ſufficient matter to perſwade to an offenſive War.

2. That the ſame demands did ſtrike at the Root and Life of Monarchical Government, and were only to be anſwered by the Sword.

3. That he had cauſed ſome Scottiſh Goods and Ships to be ſeized on in Ireland.

4. That he had engaged the Iriſh Parliament by their Declaration in that War againſt the Scots.

5. That by all poſſible means he put bad thoughts and ſuſpitions into his Majeſty againſt his Scottiſh Subjects, and laboured to make a National Quarrel between them and England: which if the Kings Piety, and the Prudence of better States-men had not prevented, could not have been ſoadred up again without much blood.

Concerning England his ſpeeches were either before, or after the Parliament.

1. Before his Creature and boſome friend Sir George Ratcliff, he had ſaid to Sir Robert King, when he was doubting how the King might have moneys to pay the Armies, that the King had 400000 lib. in his purſe, 30000 men in the field, and his ſword by his ſide, and if he wanted money afterwards, who would pity him.

2. That his Brother Sir George Wentworth had ſaid to Sir Robert Barrington, upon the diſſolution of the laſt Parliament, that ſeeing the Engliſh would not grant ſupply to the King; it ſeems they were weary of their peace, and deſired to be conquered a ſecond time.

3. That he himſelf upon a diſcourſe with the Primate of Ireland, had ſaid, That he was much of the mind of thoſe Engliſh Divines, who maintained it lawful for a King, having tried the affection and benevolence of his people, and then denied their help, upon an inevitable neceſſity, and to prevent danger of the Kingdom, that he might uſe his Prerogative for his own ſupply, and the defence of his Subjects.

4. To the Lord Conway in a diſcourſe he had ſaid, that if the Parliament (meaning the laſt Parliament) ſhould not grant a competent ſupply, then the King was acquitted before God and man, and might uſe the Authority put into his hands.

5. He did ſay at the Councel-board, that if the Parliament ſhould deny to help the King, he would take any other way he could for his Majeſties ſervice and aſſiſtance.

His expreſſions after the Parliament were two.

1. That the Parliament had forſaken the King, and denied to ſupply him, and that the King ſhould not ſuffer himſelf to be overmaſtered by the frowardneſs, obſtinacie, and ſtubborneſs of his people.

2. That if his Majeſty pleaſed to imploy Forces, he had ſome in Ireland, that might ſerve to reduce this Kingdom.

The Proofs of the Scots particulars were theſe:

1. The Earl of Traquayr, who told them, that when he gave in the demands of the Scots, he heard him ſay, That it was time for the King to put himſelf into a poſture of War, but that firſt all the Councel of England ſaid the ſame as well as he. 2. That it was a double ſuppoſition, Firſt, that the demands were truly given in: Secondly, that there was no other remedy left but Arms to reduce them.

2. The Earl of Mortons teſtimony, being ſick himſelf, was produced, and it was one and the ſame with the Article.

3. Sir Henry Vane was examined, who declared that he had heard the Earl adviſe the King to an offenſive War, when his own Judgment was for a defenſive.

4. The teſtimony of the Earl of Northumberland was produced, which was the very ſame with that of Sir Henry Vane.

5. The Lord Treaſurer depoſed the ſame with Traquayr.

6. One Beane from Ireland depoſed, that he had known ſhips ſeized on there, but by whoſe procurement or warrant he knew not.

To the Articles about England.

1. Sir Robert King, and the Lord Ranelaugh, depoſed the ſame, that they had heard Sir George Ratcliff ſpeak thoſe words in the Article.

2. Sir Robert Barrington of Sir George Wentworth.

3. The Lord Primate of Irelands Teſtimony, who was ſick, was the ſame with the Article.

4. The Lord Conwey depoſed the ſame with the Article.

5. Sir Henry Vane depoſed, he did hear thoſe words ſaid at the Councel-table, if the Parliament ſhould deny to help the King, he would take any other way he could for his Majeſties ſervice and aſſiſtance.

For the two expreſſions after the Parliament.

Sir Thomas Jermayn, the Lord Newburgh, the Earl of Briſtol, and the Earl of Holland were examined to the firſt: but the teſtimony they gave did not reach to prove the words.

And to the ſecond, Sir Henry Vane was examined, who declared that he ſaid either thoſe words, or the like.

At this ſome of the Lords ſpake,

1. The Lord Savile, who deſired of Sir Henry Vane to know whether he ſaid, their, or this, or that Kingdom, and withal ſaid it was very hard to condemn a man for ſuch petit circumſtances.

2. The Earl of Southampton deſired to know whether Sir Henry Vane would ſwear theſe words poſitively or not: Sir Henry ſaid, poſitively either them, or the like; The Earl replied, that under favour thoſe, or the like could not be poſitive.

3. The Earl of Clare deſired to know, what could be meant by this Kingdom; for his part, he ſaid, he thought it meant of the Kingdom of Scotland, to which the word (this) might very well be relative, that Kingdom being only mentioned in the preceding diſcourſe: And that he was the more ready to be of that opinion, becauſe he could not ſee, by what Grammatical conſtruction it could be gathered from his words, that he meant to reduce England, which neither then was, neither is now (God be thanked) out of the way of obedience, nor upon rebellious courſes.

The Proſecutors at laſt concluded the Charge, that the words were ſo monſtrous that to aggravate them was to allay them, and therefore they would ſingly leave them to the Judgment of the Lords.

The Earls reply was:

"That though the heaping up of thoſe Arti- The Earls reply to the 20th and five following Articles.

" To the Lord Traquayres Depoſitions, he " thought their proofs did not much ſtick upon " him; for upon the ſuppoſitions, Firſt, that " the demands were true: Secondly, that they " were not juſtifiable: Thirdly, that no other " courſe could prevail: He could not ſee what " other advice he could poſſibly give the King, " than to put himſelf into a poſture of War, e- " ſpecially ſeeing that there was frequent reports " of the Scots Invading or entring into England, " neither was he of any other mind, than all the " reſt of the Councel-board.

" For that of Mortons, he doth not poſitively " remember the words, but if the demands were " read, perhaps they would imply nothing leſs, " and if ſo, how otherwiſe to be anſwered but by " the Sword? All other means being firſt aſſayed " which is ever to be ſuppoſed.

" For Sir Henry Vane, and Northumberlands " teſtimony about perſwading of an offenſive " War, He ſaid, he remembred it very well, and " thought it as free for him to give his opinion for " an offenſive, as they for a defenſive war: Opini- " ons (ſaid he) if they be attended with obſtinacie " or pertinacy, may make a Heretick, but that they " make a Traytor, I never heard till now, nor " (under favour) ſhall I be unwilling to acknow- " ledge my weakneſs, and correct my Errors, " whereof no man hath more, nor is more ſenſi- " ble of them, than my ſelf; yet if that opinion " of mine had been followed, it might perhaps " have ſpared us ſome money, and ſome reputa- " tion too, of which we have been prodigal e- " nough.

" For the laſt about the ſhips, it proves no- " thing, but what he would willingly confeſs, viz. " that ſome ſhips were there detained, and that " by himſelf, and his own direction, as Vice- " Admiral of Connaught, but it was at the Com- " mand of the Lord Admiral the Earl of Nor- " thumberland, and produced his Letter to that " purpoſe.

To the Engliſh Proofs, he marvelled much (he " ſaid) how Sir George Ratcliffes words could be " put upon him; Sir George (though alleadged " to be his boſome friend) yet had thoughts of " his own: No man (ſaid he) can commit " Treaſon by an Attorney, and ſhould I by my " friend Sir George as by a Proxy, it would be " ſomething ſtrange.

For his Brother, He never knew him before ſo raſh, but that was nothing to him, except they could prove a nearer Identity than nature had inſtituted, and that his Brothers words and his were all one: yet withal he conceived, that his Brothers words might be very well underſtood of the Scots conquering England, but not at all of the Iriſh; and ſo he wiſhed with all his heart he had not ſpoken ſomething which is like Prophecie.

To the Primates teſtimony (with all reverence to his integrity be it ſpoken) he is but one Witneſs, and in Law can prove nothing: add to this (ſaid he) that it was a private diſcourſe between him and me, and perhaps ſpoken by me tentandi gratia, and how far this ſhould be laid to a mans charge, Let your Lordſhips judge.

Yea, this ſeems to me againſt humanity it ſelf, and will make the Society of men ſo dangerous and loathſome to us, that our dwelling houſes will be turned to Cells, and our Towns to Deſarts: That which God and Nature have beſtowed upon us, our Tongues (for the greater comfort of venting our own conceptions, or craving the advice of wiſe and learned men) ſhall become to be ſnares and burdens to us, by a curious and needleſs fear, yet if my words be taken (ſaid he) with all that went before and followed after, I ſee no danger in them.

To the Lord Conwey, I may reply the ſame, with this addition, that it is a very natural motion for a man to preſerve himſelf, every Creature hath this priviledge, and ſhall we deny it to man, provided this be done in a lawful, though in an extraordinary way; this grain of ſalt muſt be added to all my diſcourſe.

To that of Sir Henry Vane, of offering my ſervice to the King, I thank him for the teſtimony, and think he hath done me much honour thereby, but if he or any body elſe do ſuſpect that his Majeſty will imploy me in any unlawful enterprizes, I ſhall think them more lyable to the Charge of Treaſon than my ſelf.

And then he went on ſaying:

To the firſt of the ſubſequent Teſtimonies, concerning that expreſſion, That the Parliament had forſaken the King, and denied to ſupply him, &c. (pretended in the Charge againſt me, to be ſaid the ſame day of the diſſolution of the Parliament, and urged as a conſequence of malice in me, for having firſt adviſed the diſſolution, and then endeavoured to incenſe his Majeſty againſt his people) though no teſtimony has yet proved the words, nor is it I hope, believed that I was the principal cauſe of the diſſolution of the Parliament, yet I ſhall crave leave to relate the matters that occurred previous thereunto.

Before I came to the Councel-Table, it was Voted by the Lords to demand twelve Subſidies, and Sir Henry Vane was ordered to demand no leſs; but coming in the interim, I perſwaded the Lords to Vote it again, and reſume the debate; whereupon it was agreed, that if the Parliament would not grant twelve Subſidies, Sir Henry ſhould deſcend to eight, and rather than fail to ſix, but he not obſerving his inſtructions, demanded twelve only without abatement or going lower; ſo that the height of this demand, urged the Parliament to deny, and their denial moved his Majeſty to diſſolve the Parliament, whereof Sir Henry Vane as I humbly conceive, was the chief occaſion.

To that part of the teſtimony proved by Sir Henry Vane, That if his Majeſty pleaſed to employ Forces, he had ſome in Ireland which would ſerve to reduce the Kingdom: He ſaid to this purpoſe:

" This lies ſore upon me, but to that which " the Earl of Clare hath ſaid already, give me " leave to add this, That the teſtimony of one " man is not a ſufficient Witneſs, nor can a man " be accuſed, much leſs condemned of Treaſon " upon this: and for that read the Statutes of " H. 7. 12. and of Ed. 6. 5. But to give you fur- " ther ſatisfaction, I ſhall deſire all the Lords of " the Councel which were then preſent, may be " examined, whether they heard thoſe words or " not, there were but eight preſent, with the " Arch-Biſhop, and Sir Francis Windebank; Sir

Henry

" Henry Vane gives the Teſtimony, I deny it, " four only remain.

Upon this the teſtimony of the Lords was taken.

1. The Earl of Northumberlands teſtimony was read, wherein was declared expreſly, that he had never heard thoſe words, nor any like them, but that he ſpake with great honour and regard of England to the King.

2. The Marqueſs Hamilton declared that he never heard ſuch words, but that he had often heard the Earl ſay, that the King was to uſe his Royal power candide & caſte, that it would never be well for this Kingdom till the Prerogative of the Crown and the Priviledge of the Subject went in one pace together, and that Parliaments were the happieſt means to keep a correſpondence betwixt the King and people.

The very ſame was delivered by the Lord Treaſurer and the Lord Cottington; " Now, my " Lords, ſaid he, you may mervail how theſe " words reſted only on the ears of Sir Henry " Vane, but, my Lords, (ſaid he) that I may re- " move all ſcruples from you, I will make it evi- " dent, that there was not the leaſt intention that " the Iriſh Army ſhould ſet a foot in England, " and then I hope you will conceive that I had " no meaning to reduce this Kingdom.

This he made cleer by the teſtimony of the Earl of Northumberland, the Oaths of Marqueſs Hamilton, Lord Cottington, Lord Treaſurer, Sir Thomas Lucas, who only were private to that matter.

" For other of my words, my Lords, (ſaid he) " I deſire you would not take them by halves, if " ſo, who ſhould be free from Treaſon? Cer- " tainly if ſuch a Preſident take footing, weſt- " minſter-Hall ſhall be more troubled with Trea- " ſon than with Common Law: Look therefore " to the antecedents and conſequents of my ſpee- " ches, and you ſhall find the State of the Que- " ſtion cleerly altered: The Antecedents were " upon an abſolute or inevitable neceſſity upon a " preſent invaſion, when the remedy of Parlia- " ment cannot be expected; the conſequents to " the Kingdom with accompts afterwards to the " Parliament: The Qualification too in a law- " ful, convenient and ordinary way, ſo far as the " preſent neceſſity can permit. Add but theſe, " and which of you are not of my mind? Is the " King endowed with no power from the Law? " Is he not Publicus inſpector regni? ſtands it " not him in hand to do ſomething on preſent ne- " ceſſities?

And that theſe were his words, he then proved again, by the Marqueſſe, the Lord Treaſurer, Lord Cottington, Sir Tho. Jermine.

" My Lords, What I have kept to the laſt " (ſaid he) is this, and I would intreat you ſe- " rioufly to think of it: If a mans table, his bed, " his houſe, his brother, his friends, (and that too " after they have given an Oath of ſecrecy) are " to be rack'd to find out Treaſon againſt him? " Let my misfortune, my Lords, be your adver- " tiſement, your wiſe Anceſtors were glad to put " bands and limits to this Lion Treaſon, if you " give it large ſcope of words to range into, he " will at laſt pull you or yours all to pieces.

" But my Lords, I never did think till now, " that matter of opinion ſhould be objected as " matter of Treaſon.

" For firſt, Opinions are free, and men may " argue both Pro and Con in all faculties without " any ſtain of reputation, otherwiſe all conſulta- " tions were vain.

2. " I may be of another judgement, then I " declare my ſelf to be of opinion perhaps to gain " better arguments for the maintenance of my " own Grounds.

3. " Many and my ſelf oftentimes have pro- " pounded an opinion, yet upon hearing better " Judgements, have preſently changed it.

4. " We uſe to ſtrain our opinions too high, " ſometimes that we may meet in a juſt modera- " tion with thoſe whom we conceive in the other extremity to be too low.

5. " It is expreſly commanded by the Stat. " Henr. 6. 9. that though a man ſhould ſay the " King is not lawful Heir to the Crown, and may " be depoſed, yet he is not to be charged with " Treaſon, but only with Felony, and I hope my " Lords, thoſe words are of a more tranſcendent " and ſuperlative nature than any alledged by me " to be ſpoken; But, my Lords, ſaid he, Lay it " to your hearts: it muſt come to you, you and " yours, your Poſterity are they whom God and " Nature, Birth and Education, have fitted to " beautifie the Royal Throne, and to ſuſtain the " weighty affairs of the Kingdom, If to give " your Opinions in Political agitation ſhall be ac- " counted Treaſon, who will be willing to ſerve " the King, or what a Dilemma are you in, if be- " ing ſworn Counſellors you ſpeak not your minds " freely, you are convict of Perjury, if you do, " perhaps of Treaſon; what detriment, what in- " commodity ſhall fall to the King and Kingdom, " if this be permitted? Which of you hereafter " will adventure, yea dare adventure ſo much as " to help by your advice, unleſs you be weary of " your lives, your Eſtates, your Poſterity, yea " your very honour; Let me never live longer " than to ſee this confuſion, nay I may ſay it, this " inhumanity in England, for my part, my Lords, " I here confeſs my ſelf, I ever have, and ever " ſhall ſpeak my opinion freely in any thing that " may concern the Honour and Safety of my Gra- " tious King, or my Dear Country, though the " Sword be two-edged, fearing him rather who " killeth the Soul, than he whoſe power reach- " eth only to the body.

" Nor do I ſee how I am culpable of Treaſon, " unleſs it be Treaſon for not being infallible, yet " if it be ſo, my Lords, you have this rag of mor- " tality before you loaden with many infirmities, " though you pull this into ſhreds, yet there is no " great loſs, there may be perhaps a great gain; " If I have ſeemed to have dared too far to give " teſtimony to the World of an innocent con- " ſcience towards God, and a reſolute loyalty to- " wards my Prince (which have ever been my " only Pole-ſtars in the whole courſe of my life) " and if by ſpilling of mine there be not a way " found to trace out the blood of the Nobility, " (which I hope your Lordſhips will look to) " there will be no diſadvantage at all ſuffered by " the loſs of Me.

Tueſday was a day of Reſt.

Upon Wedneſday Mr. Whitlock charged thus: That

That the precedent Articles were of so high a consequence, and of so transcendent a nature, that nothing wanted to make up the perfect measure of the most horrid Treason and monstrous attempt that ever by a Native was intended against his King and Countrey: But putting these designed projects into Execution, which had undoubtedly hapned to the subversion both of Church and State, had not the clemency and goodness of the Prince and the piety and carefulness of the well affected Peers timely foreseen and prevented the same, that still the Principles of Tyranny and Oppression had lodged within his bosome, and therefore had burst forth into these expressions and advices contained in the following Articles, where first they charged him in the 25*th.* with three things.

1. That he had advised the King to rigorous and unlawful exaction of Ship-money.

2. That he had given Counsel, that if the Sheriffs should deny their best indeavours and assistance to that effect, they should be sent for and fined by the Star-chamber and Imprisonment.

3. That when the Aldermen of London had in all humility presented the causes why the Ship-money could not be collected amongst them, and had given in their reasons why they refused to give in a list of their names within their City, who were able to afford the Loane-money; He in a contemptuous and Tyrannical manner in the face of the Councel-board had said to the King: Sir, these men because of their obstinacy and frowardness deserved very well to be fined, ransomed and laid by the heels: And it will never go well go well with your Service untill some of be hanged for example to others.

The proofs were these,

1. The Bishop of London, Lord Treasurer, who declared that he remembred the words very well, that the Earl had advised the King to cause the Ship-money to be gathered in, but he remembred withal that both himself and all the Councel had done the like, and that it was upon a present necessity and defect of money for entertaining the Army, which (the condition of the Armie considered) they all conceived was by any means to be kept on foot.

2. Alderman Wiseman declared, that upon an humble Remonstrance made to the Councel-board, that the City would take it ill, if a Tax roll should be delivered of their Estates who were thought able for the loane-money; the Lord Strafford said, they deserved to be fined, ransomed, and laid by the heels, But for the words of hanging them up, he heard not at all.

3. The Earl of Berkshire declared, that the Lord Strafford had said, that upon the refusal of such a service enjoyned by the Kings peremptory command, it was his opinion they might be fined.

4. Alderman Garway attested the preceding words, and withal added that the Earl to his best remembrance, had said, it were well for the Kings service if some of them were hanged up.

They closed up the charge, saying, That by such undutiful Expressions he had invaded the propriety of the Subject, and had put such discontent upon the City, that they were the less willing upon occasion to concurre for advantage of the Kings Service.

The Earl replyed, "That though all the charge "were, in the most strict and rigid way verified "against him, yet he could not conceive by what "Interpretation of Law it could be reach'd home "to High Treason, And to that common objection (that the Treason was not individual, but "accumulative) he replyed, that, under favour, "he thought that were as much as to say, No "Treason at all, Because, The Earls reply to Mr. Whitlocks new charge in the 25th. Article.

1. "That neither in Statute Law, Common "Law nor practise, there was ever till this time "heard of such a matter as accumulative Treason, or a Treason by way of consequence, but "that it is a word newly coyned to attend, a "charge newly invented, such a one as never "was before.

2. "That Treason was a thing of a simple and "specificative nature, and therefore could not be "so by accumulation, but either must be so in "some or either of the Articles, or else could not "be so at all.

3. "That a heap or Accumulation should be, "and not be of Homo-geneous things, and there-"fore that which in its first being is not trea-"sonable, can never confer to make up an accu-"mulative Treason. Cumulus, an heap of grain, "so called, because every or at least some of the "individuals are grain, if otherwise, an heap it "may be, but not an heap of grain: Just so per-"haps these Articles may make up an heap of Fe-"lonies, Oppressions, Errors, Misdemeanors, "and such like (and to the things themselves, I "shall give an answer, when under that name they "shall be charged against me) but they can no "waies confer to the making up of Treason, un-"less some, at the least be Treason in the Indi-"vidual.

2. "That the Testimonies brought against him, "were all of them single, not two one way, and "therefore could not make faith in matter of "debt, much less in matter of life and death: "That it was against the Statute expresly to im-"peach a man of High Treason under the Evi-"dence of two famous Witnesses, much less to "adjudge and convince him upon attestation of "one.

3. "To the Lord Treasurers testimony, he did "with all his heart condescend unto it: but "upon these grounds only, that there was a pre-"sent necessity of money that all the Councel-"board had so voyced with him, yea before him-"self, and he alwaies thought it presumption in "a man not to follow the wiser and more Judici-"ous: And that then there was a sentence of "the Star-Chamber for the right of paying ship-"money: for his part he would never be more "prudent than his teachers, nor give judgement "against the Judges: And therefore he thought "it not far amiss to advise the King for collecting "of that which by Law was his own, in such a "present and urgent necessity, and although his "opinion (and it was no more) had been amiss, "he hoped, that though in case of Religion being "attended with stubbornesse and pertinacy, it "might come home to Heresie, yet could it not "reach so far as Treason; unless it be Treason

" for a man to ſpeak his judgement freely, when " he is upon his Oath to do the ſame.

4. " For the words about fining, he had al- " ready acknowledged them in his General an- " ſwer to be true, but with theſe qualifications, " that it was his opinion only, that it was upon the " refuſal (as he conceived) of a juſt ſervice, that " he had ſpoken them by no means to prejudice " the Citizens, but to make them the more quick " and active in the Kings Service: That no ill " conſequence at all happened upon them: that " they were words might have been ſpared in- " deed, but innocently, though ſuddenly ſpoken, " which he hoped might proceed from a man of " ſuch a haſty and incircumſpect humor as himſelf " (made ſo both by nature and his much infirmity " of body) without any mind at all to Treaſon: " And that if all Cholerick Expreſſions of that " nature ſhould be accounted Treaſonable, there " would be more ſuits of that kind fly up & down " Weſtminſter-Hall than Common Law.

5. " To theſe words atteſted by Alderman Garway, he poſitively denyed them, and hoped " they ſhould never riſe up againſt him in Judge- " ment, becauſe the teſtimony was ſingle and not " poſitive, but only to his beſt remembrance, and " that it was exceeding ſtrange, that not any one " man neither of the Councel or the other Al- " dermen were ſo quick to obſerve them, but on- " ly Alderman Garway, which he thought ſuffici- " ent to nullifie that ſingle teſtimony, except he " could demonſtrate himſelf to have ſome rare " ſingular faculty of hearing. In the cloſe, he " deſired the Lords from his misfortunes to pro- " vide for their own Safety, and ſeriouſly to con- " ſider what a way was chalked out to ruine them, " both in their lives and their eſtates, if for every " opinion given in Councel, or words ſuddenly " or haſtily ſpoken, they (who are born to weild " the great affairs of the Kingdom) ſhould be ar- " raigned and ſentenced as Traytors.

Then they went to the 26th. Article, and charged thus,

That the Lord Strafford having by his wicked advices exhauſted the Kings Treaſury, did alſo councel him,

1. To embaſe the coyne by allay of copper money.

2. To ſeize upon all the Bullion in the Mint.

3. That in diſcourſe with ſome of the Aldermen, about the buſineſs he had ſaid, the City was more ready to countenance and relieve the Rebells than the King: And that the King of France did manage ſuch buſineſſes not by Treaties or Requeſt, but by ſending forth his Commiſſaries to take account of mens Eſtates, accompanied with Troops of Horſe.

The proofs were,

Firſt, Sir Thomas Edmonds, who declared that in his diſcourſe with the Lord Strafford, having remonſtrated unto him that Merchants goods were ſeized on beyond Seas becauſe of the money taken out of the Mint, he told him that if the Londoners ſuffered it, it was deſervedly, becauſe they had refuſed the King a ſmall Loane of Money upon Security, and that he thought them more ready to help the Rebells than the King.

Secondly, Mr. Palmer declared, that he ſpake ſomething about the King of France, but whether with relation to England or not, he did not remember.

Thirdly, Sir William Parkiſe atteſted in the ſame words, and withal, that the Lord Cottington was then preſent, and could declare the whole buſineſs.

Fourthly, Sir Ralph Freeman declared, that in a diſcourſe with the Lord Strafford, he had ſaid that the Servants in the Mint-houſe would refuſe to work in Copper-money: And he replied, That then it were well to ſend thoſe Servants to the Houſe of Correction.

They cloſed the Charge, That by ſuch undutiful Councel and words he had given more than ſufficient proof of his deſign and purpoſe to ſubdue this Kingdom and ſubvert the Fundamental Laws and Priviledges of the ſame.

The Earl replied:

The Earls anſwer to the 17th. Article.

That he expected ſome proofs to evidence the two firſt particulars, but heard of none: for the following words he confeſſed, probably they might proceed from the door of his lips: nor did he think it much amiſs, conſidering the preſent poſture to call that faction Rebels: As for the laſt words objected againſt him in that Article, he ſaid, that being in conference with ſome of the Londoners, there came to his hands at that inſtant a Letter from the Earl of Leiceſter, then at Paris, wherein were the Gazets incloſed, relating that the Cardinal had given order to levy Money by Souldiers: This he only told the Lord Cottington ſtanding by, but made not the leaſt application thereof to the Engliſh affairs: he ſaid moreover, there was no great likelihood that he had committed real acts of Treaſon, when his adverſe party was content to trifle away ſo much time about words, neither was there any Treaſon in them, though they had been fully verified; and therefore in that (as in all other Articles) he reſerved a power for his Councel to diſpute in matter of Law.

They then went to the 27th. Article, and charged thus, That immediately after his appointment to be Lieutenant General to the Army here in England, he ſhewed what principles of Arbitrary Government lurked within his boſome, for by his own immediate authority, without and againſt Law, he had laid Impoſts upon many of the Kings Subjects; whereof they mentioned three particulars:

1. That he impoſed 8 d. per diem for a Souldier upon the County of York, for entertaining the trained bands there one whole moneth.

2. That he ſent out Warrants for collecting the ſame, and threatned to impriſon ſuch as refuſed to pay.

3. That he ſaid it was a crime nigh to the crime of High Treaſon not to pay the ſame.

4. They added in his general replies, he had brought two things for his defence: 1. That the money was freely and voluntarily offered by thoſe in Yorkſhire. 2. That the great Counſel of the Peers had notice of the ſame: but to both they had the following anſwers to make, viz.

To the firſt, That a Petition was indeed preferred by the Yorkſhire-men to the King, and a moneths pay offered, but that the Lord Strafford had refuſed to preſent the ſame upon this exception only, becauſe in the ſame they had petitioned for a Parliament, whereby he evidently declared red what little inclination he had to that way.

To the second, they appealed to all the Lords whether any such order did pass before the Councel of the Peers at York.

The Proofs were:

1. A Warrant issued by Collonel Pennyman, for this money, and another by Sir Edward Osborn.

2. Mr. John Burrows, who declared that he was Clerk to the great Councel, but did remember of no order, and withal added that it might have passed at that time when he was at Rippon.

3. Mr. Dunstan, who declared, that he had known that money to be levied by some Musketiers.

4. By Sir William Ingram, who declared that he heard the Earl say, that to refuse the same came nigh to the crime of High-Treason.

They concluded the Charge, that by these particulars, it was more than evident what unhappy purposes and trayterous designs he had to subdue this Kingdom: and subvert the fundamental Laws and Priviledges.

The Earl replied:

The Earls Answer to the 27th. Article.

1. To the Petition, That it was true a Petition was drawn up by the York-shire Gentlemen, and as true that he had refused to present the same, because of that Clause about the Parliament: but the matter was thus. At his Majesties coming to York, it was thought necessary for the defence of that County to keep the Trained Bands on foot, because the Enemy was upon the Borders; and therefore the King directed him to write to all the Freeholders in York-shire to see what they would do for their own defence. The time and place were designed by the King, but the night before the meeting a small number convented and in a private and factious way did draw up that Petition, upon the morrow at their appointed Diet, in presence of the whole number, the Petition was presented to him, where he did advise them to leave out that Clause, and that because he knew the King out of his own gratious disposition had intended to call a Parliament, which he desired should rather be freely done, then upon the constraint and importunity of Petitions: Moreover, it would seem a mercenary thing in them at one and the same time to offer a benevolence, and withal to Petition for his favour; Upon this Remonstrance they were were all willing to recal the Petition, and directed him by word of mouth to offer unto the King the moneths pay in their names, which he did accordingly, in the presence of them to their no small advantage.

This he proved by Sir William Pennyman, Sir Paul Neal, Sir George Wentworth, Sir William Savil, Sir Thomas Danby, who all of them declared as much in ample terms, and withal added, That nothing was done upon better grounds of necessity and obedience, than the offer of that money, and that they never had heard any man grudge against it to this time.

For the second about the Councel of Peers, "he alledged, That he never made mention of "any Order of theirs; but he remembred very "well it was twice propounded before them, that "the King had approved it at that time as a just "and necessary act, and none of the Councel "contradicted it, which he conceived as a tacite "approbation and an Order in equivalence.

"But though that had not been, there was no"thing done in the business but at the special de"sires of the Gentlemen themselves, and "for their necessary defence and protection: "And though he had done it by himself alone, "yet he conceived he had so much power by his "Commission, causing the Commission to that "effect to be read: That albeit he should mistake "his Commission and do some inferiour act be"yond it (because military proceedings are not "always warranted by the Common Law) yet "it should not be imputed as an Act of Treason "to him. And to this effect read a Statute of 7 Hen. 2.

To the proof:

1. Collonel Pennymans Warrant, or Sir Robert Osbornes nothing concerned him, and he doubted not but those worthy Gentlemen could justifie their own acts, and that he had enough to do to answer his own misdemeanors.

2. For Sir John Burrows, he was at Rippon, when that Proposition was made.

3. That as the Warrant, so neither the Execution troubled him at all.

4. For Sir William Ingram, he was but a single testimony, and that such an one as he could produce an evidence to testifie, he had mistaken himself in his testimony upon Oath, if it were not to disadvantage the Gentleman.

He concluded that he had done nothing in that business, but upon the Petition of that County, the Kings especial command, the connivence at least of the Great Councel and upon a present necessity for the defence and safety of the County.

And so much for Wednesday.

Upon Thursday, the Committee for the Charge declared, That they had done with all the Articles, and were content to wave the last for reasons best known to themselves; only Sir Walter Earl added, that he had some observations to bring forth upon the 22 th. Article which he conceived might do much to prove the Lord Staffords design for landing the Irish forces in England.

And they were:

1. That in his Commission he had power to land them in Wales, or in any part of England or Scotland, which were altogether superfluous, unless there had been some purpose for the same.

2. That within two dayes before the date of the Commission, Letters were sent to the Lords Bridgewater, and Pembrook from Sir Francis Windebank to assist the Earl of Worcester, in levying Forces for the Kings service, and these might be supposed to have intended a joyning with the Irish.

3. That the Lord Ranelaugh at the raising of the Irish Army did fear such a design as this.

4. That the Town of Ayre in Scotland, where the Lord Strafford pretended he would land those Forces, was fortified with a Bulwark, a Garrison, and Blockhouse, which would prohibite landing there: that the Earl of Argyles bounds were divided thence by the Sea, and that the Barr or entry into the Town was very dangerous and shallow.

The proofs were only the reading of the Commission granted to the Lord Strafford.

The Earls reply to Sir Walter Earles observations on the 22th. Article.

The Earls reply.

1. "That his Commiſſion was the ſame Verbatim with Northumberlands for England, and "that it was drawn up by the Councel-board "here, and ſent over unto him: ſo no more de- "ſign in him then in the Gentlemen of the En- "gliſh Army, nor no larger than that was put up- "on him.

2. "That this was the firſt time that he heard "of any ſuch Letters, neither did they concern "him more than any of the houſe.

3. "That he was not bound to purge the "Lord Ranelaugh from all his fears; and that he "had his own fears too, which God forbid ſhould "be evidence of Treaſon againſt any man what- "ſoever.

4. "That it ſeemed the Gentlemen had bet- "ter information from that Kingdom than him- "ſelf, yet he would be confident to ſay, at Ayre "there was never ſuch a thing as Blockhouſe or "Garriſon: But to remove all ſcruples (for in- "deed the Road or Landing-place is not there "ſafe) he declared that it was his intention to "have landed ſome miles above Ayre, and made "only his Magazine at that Town.

"To the Earl of Argyles bounds, he hoped "the Gentleman knew they came not on foot "out of Ireland, but had ſhips to waft and tranſ- "port themſelves, and that one of his prime "Houſes (Roſneth) was within ſome few miles "of the ſame.

The Lord Digby finding Sir Walter Earle a little puzzell'd, endeavoured to bring him off, and told the Lords in ſuch a buſineſs as the plotting of Treaſon they muſt be content ſometimes with dark probabilities.

The Earl having thus anſwered the Charge againſt him, it was moved by one of the Proſecutors, that if he have any thing to ſay further in his defence he ſhould do it preſently; but he deſired time till the next morning, which was (not without difficulty) granted.

The next morning the Lords met, but the Lieutenant of the Tower appeared without his Priſoner, certifying that the Earl was taken with a great fit of the ſtone that night, and continued ſo ill as he could not go abroad without danger of his life. The Commons thought this an excuſe to gain time, but the Lords believed the relation, Mr. Glyn moved that if he did not appear upon Saturday morning, he ſhould loſe the Priviledge to ſpeak in his own defence afterwards, and they permitted to proceed: But the Lord Steward ſaid, That the Lords had appointed ſome of their number to go to the Tower, and learn the juſt cauſe of his ſtay, and if by any means he were able, he ſhould be obliged to come, but if not, humanity and common equity would excuſe him. Theſe Lords that went to the Tower found the Earl much eaſed of his pain by the application of ſome remedies, which the Phyſitians had adminiſtred unto him; ſo that the next day he appeared before them, and one of the Proſecutors proffered new proofs concerning the two and twentieth Article, upon which the Earl craved the freedom for himſelf concerning ſome teſtimonies not yet exhibited on his behalf, whence enſued a hot conteſt betwixt the two Houſes, which took up two days debate, but at laſt the reaſons of the Lords prevailed, who declared that in the common diſpenſation of equity, the accuſed ſhould have equal allowance to ſuperinduct new proofs as well as the Accuſers, and it was agreed that all further teſtimony ſhould be waved on both ſides.

Upon Tueſday the Earl appeared, and the Lord Steward told him, that the Lords had ordered, that both their teſtimonies ſhould be waved, and if he had any thing to ſay further in his own defence, he ſhould proceed, ſo that that day might put an end to what concerned the matter of fact. The Earl replied, That in all humility and obedience he would ſubmit himſelf to that or any other their Decrees whatſoever, though it ſhould reach as far home unto him as his own life; but withal humbly begged, That if hereafter he ſhould be troubled (for they were to ſpeak laſt) with new matter, or with ſupplemental proof, he might have leave to ſpeak ſomething in his own defence.

The Lord Steward anſwered, It is all the reaſon in the world:

Whereupon the Earl made a ſummary repetition of the ſeveral particulars of the former defence, which ended, he continued his Speech thus:

The Earl of Straffords Speech.

My Lords,

"There remains another kind of Treaſon, "that I ſhould be guilty of, for endeavouring to "ſubvert the fundamental Laws of the Land; "that this ſhould be Treaſon together, that is not "Treaſon in one part; a Treaſon accumulative, "that when it will not do it alone, being weaved "up with others, it ſhould do it, ſeems very "ſtrange. Under favour, my Lords, I conceive "there is neither Statute nor Common Law "which doth declare this endeavoring to ſubvert "the Fundamental Laws of the Land to be High "Treaſon, for I have been diligent in the inqui- "ry, as you know it deeply concerns me, and "could never diſcover it: It is hard to be que- "ſtioned for life and honour upon a Law that "cannot be ſhewn: for it is a rule in Sir Edward "Coke: De non apparentibus & non exiſtentibus "eadem eſt ratio. Jeſu! Where hath this fire "lain hid ſo many hundred of years without "ſmoke to diſcover it, till it thus burſt forth to "conſume me and my children? That puniſh- "ment ſhould precede promulgation of a Law; "To be puniſhed by a Law ſubſequent to the fact "is extreme hard: What can be ſafe, if this be "admitted? My Lords, it is hard in another re- "ſpect that there ſhould be no token ſet, by "which we ſhould know this offence; no admo- "nition by which we ſhould avoid it: If a man "paſs the Thames in a Boat, and ſplit himſelf "upon an Anchor, and no Buoy be floating to "diſcover it, he who oweth the Anchor ſhall "make ſatisfaction, but if a Buoy be ſet there, "every man paſſeth upon his own peril: Now "where is this mark, where the token upon this "Crime to declare it to be High Treaſon? My "Lords, be pleaſed to give that regard to the "Peerage of England, as never to expoſe your "ſelves to ſuch moot-points, ſuch conſtructive "interpretations of Law. If there muſt be a tri- "al of Wits, let the ſubject-matter be of ſomewhat

" what elſe than the lives and honours of Peers. " It will be wiſdome for your Selves, for your Poſterity, and for the whole Kingdom to caſt into " the fire theſe bloody and myſterious Volumes " of conſtructive & arbitrary Treaſon, as the Primitive chriſtians did their books of curious Arts " and betake your ſelves to the plain letter of the " Law and Statute, that telleth us what is and " what is not Treaſon, without being more ambitious to be more learned in the Art of killing " than our Fore-fathers: It is now full 240 years " ſince any man was touched for this alledged " Crime to the height before my ſelf; Let us not " awaken theſe ſleeping Lions to our deſtructions, by raking up a few muſty Records that have lain by the walls ſo many ages, " forgotten or neglected. May your Lordſhips " pleaſe not to add this to my other misfortunes; " for my ſins be-ſlave me, not for Treaſon; let " not a Preſident be deſired from me, ſo diſadvantageous as this will be in the conſequence " to the whole Kingdom; Do not through me " wound the intereſt of the Common-wealth: " And howſoever theſe Gentlemen ſay, they " ſpeak for the Common-wealth, yet in this particular I indeed ſpeak for it, and ſhew the inconveniences and miſchiefs which will fall upon it; for as it is ſaid in the Statute of the Firſt " of Henr. 4. No man will know what to do or " ſay for fear of ſuch penalties: Do not, my " Lords, put ſuch difficulties upon Miniſters of " State, that men of Wiſdome, of Honour, of " Fortune, may not with cheerfulneſs and ſafety " be imployed for the publick; if you weigh and " meaſure them by grains and ſcruples, the publick affairs of the Kingdom will lye waſte; no " man will meddle with them who has any thing " to looſe. My Lords, I have troubled you longer than I ſhould have done, were it not an intereſt of thoſe dear pledges a Saint in Heaven " hath left me. [At this he ſtop'd a while, offering up ſome tears to her aſhes] What I forfeit my ſelf is nothing, but that my indiſcretion " ſhould extend to my Poſterity, it woundeth me " to the very ſoul: you will pardon my infirmity, " ſomething I ſhould have added, but am not able; " therefore let it paſs: And now, my Lords, for " my ſelf, I have been by the bleſſing of Almighty God taught, that the afflictions of this preſent life, are not to be compared to the Eternal " weight of Glory which ſhall be revealed hereafter: And ſo, my Lords, even ſo, with all " tranquility of mind, I freely ſubmit my ſelf to " your Judgement: and whether that Judgement " be of life or death,

——TE DEUM LAUDAMUS.

As ſoon as the Earl had ended, Mr. Glyn and Mr. Pym ſpent ſome time in repetition of the charge, wherein they proceeded Article by Article, endeavouring by Rhetorical declamations to render his offences as odious as they could.

The Earl allowed to plead by his Counſel.

Matters of fact being thus tranſacted, the Earl moved that he might be allowed to plead by his Counſel as to matter of Law: to which the Lords agreed, but the Commons would not till after three days Conference aſſent thereunto; and on wedneſday when they met in their houſe, they conſidered and debated much in what manner to proceed further againſt the Earl of Strafford.

By the modeſty of his behaviour he had much inſinuated into the good opinion of the Lords & many of the Commons, and by the clearneſs of his anſwers to the ſeveral parts of his charge, his Crimes appeared not to be ſpecifically comprehended under the letter of any Statute Declaratory of Treaſon: but the Proſecutors perceiving hereby that the Judgement of the Lords upon the whole matter might not anſwer their Expectation, urged, that though he were not guilty of Treaſon, or any of thoſe offences enumerated in the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. yet ſo great were his Crimes, that according to a branch of that Statute, they ought to be declared Treaſon. For it is therein mentioned, that if any other caſe ſuppoſed to be Treaſon, which is not in that Statute ſpecified, ſhould happen, no judgement ſhould be given till the cauſe be ſhewed, and declared before the King and his Parliament, whether it ought to be judged Treaſon, or other Felony. This branch (they ſaid) gave the Parliament power to declare Treaſon, & in the enumeration of his offences, they argued, That his intentions to ſubvert the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, was Treaſon at Common Law before the making of the fore-named Statute: and ſuch Treaſons were not thereby taken away, but by the words before recited, might be declared as often as occaſion ſhould require, but becauſe many doubts aroſe concerning ſuch Treaſons, the wiſdome of thoſe times thought it not fit to ſubmit the Judgement thereof to any leſs authority than the Parliament: Theſe Debates produced a reſolution in the houſe to declare him guilty of Treaſon: but becauſe they had no preſident ſince the firſt of Henr. the 4 th. of any fact declared Treaſon in Parliament, that was not expreſſed in the letter of ſome Statute, they doubted a little of the way of Declaring Treaſon, but at laſt concluded to do it by Bill of Attainder.

The Commons paſs the Bill of Attainder againſt the Earl of Strafford.

This was much oppos'd by Selden, Bridgeman, and Holburne, three Eminent Lawyers, at that time Members of the Commons Houſe, who made it manifeſt that the Salvo of the Statute of the 15 th. Edw. 3. was repeal'd, and that no man could be convict of Treaſon but by the letter of that Statute; nevertheleſs, being put to a queſtion, the Majority of Voices carried it for a Bill, and a Committee was appointed to prepare it.

The Arguments by thoſe and others then us'd againſt it, ſhall not be here inſerted, becauſe moſt of them were alledged by the Councel for the Earl, and when thoſe come to be mentioned, they will be related. There had been three Conferenences betwixt the two Houſes of theſe matters.

The Lords reſolve to hear the Earls Councel in matter of Law.

The Lords at the firſt, of the two laſt of the three Conferences (for the firſt was not a free Conference) told the Commons that they had reſolv'd to give full audience to the Earl of Strafford's Councel in matter of Law, and that they as competent Judges would by themſelves give Judgement in the cauſe, as that which was moſt ſuitable to the Practice, Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom, the ſafety of the Nobility, and to Common Juſtice, to which thoſe of the Commons reply'd, that their Houſe was reſolv'd to go on with the Bill of Attainder, and if the ſame ſhould be rejected by the Lords, they fear'd a rupture and diviſion might enſue to the ruine and deſolation of the Kingdom, for no content would be given to the Subject, unleſs the man who had ſo much intruded upon their right, might be puniſh'd as a Traytor: and for the practice and laws of the Kingdom, they ſaid no man had ever found ſuch a favourable hearing; and that the Proceſs againſt the Duke of Norfolk and Somerſet, and the Earl of Eſſex, were all of them cloſed on one day.

On the next day they met at another Conference, where the Lords told thoſe of the Commons, that they ſhould expect nothing from their houſe, but what ſhould tend to the Peace and Preſervation of the Kingdom, nor was there a more forceable argument for that, than to preſerve the Laws and Cuſtomes thereof, leaſt innovation ſo much complained of by them, might unhappily be found among themſelves, that the Subjects ſhould have all that Juſtice could afford, but that an Act of Injuſtice would never give ſatisfaction to the world, nor ſafety to themſelves, the eyes of all forein States being fixed upon the buſineſs in agitation, and the wiſdome of our Nation either to be much advanced or depreſſed by their Judgements in this caſe; That the Proceſs againſt Norfolk and Eſſex (for Somerſet was convict only of Felony, and had not ſo much animadverſion to ſave himſelf by his Book) were for direct and formal Treaſon compriſed in one or two individual Acts, but this againſt the Lord Strafford only Arbitrary and accumulative, to be pick'd out of the Articles. And therefore that it was impoſſible to have a full examination of them all, to give Sentence againſt him, And thoſe Noble-Men were charg'd with ſome breach of Statutes formerly made, but here a new Statute was to be made, or elſe he to be found guiltleſs, They concluded that they had given Order for his appearance on Saturday, And that in the great Hall at Weſtminſter where the Houſe of Commons might, if they pleaſed, be preſent.

The Commons Conferrers refuſe to be there.

After ſome deliberation with their Houſe, the Commoners Conferrers anſwered, that ſince the Lords had ſo reſolved, they ſhould deny to be there, and to hear what his Councel could ſay for him, for to reply any more in publick, they neither could nor would, becauſe of the Bill already read, only if their Lordſhips ſhould take any ſcruple in the matter of Law, they would be ready to give them ſatisfaction in a private Conference, and to give publick ſatisfaction alſo therein.

The next day the Lords and Commons convened in the great Hall, but they that were of the Committee for the proſecution did not ſtand at the Barr as before, but ſate promiſcuouſly with the reſt of their fellows; ſo that a mouth was not opened for the Houſe of Commons all that day: After they were ſet, the Lord Steward told the Earl, "That the Lords had reſolved to give him "a fair hearing in the matter of Law, and there- "fore deſired that the Counſel in urging thereof "might keep that diſtance, moderation, and re- "ſpect to the Judicatory, that was fitting, and not "at all to meddle with the matter of fact.

The Earl replied, "That in all humility he "acknowledged that favour from the Lords, and "that it was ſuch an one too, as he could not but "expect from ſuch honourable Peers, and juſt "perſons, in whoſe integrity and goodneſs (un- "der that which he had placed above) he had re- "poſed his chiefeſt confidence, for his Councel "they knew much better than himſelf, what "concerned the point of diſcretion and Reve- "rence, and that he doubted not but that they "would give all ſatisfaction and obedience there- "in.

The Earls Councel called to the Barr.

Then his Councel were called to the Barr, which were Mr. Lane the Princes Attorney, Mr. Gardner the Recorder of London, and two o- thers.

Mr. Lane ſpake firſt to this purpoſe:

Mr. Lanes Speech to Lords in his behalf.

"My Lords, I ſhall not at all touch the mat- "ter of Law farther than to clear your Judg- "ments in one Statute only, viz. 25 Edw. 3. "becauſe when the ſame was alleadged by the "Lord Strafford in his own defence, that not be- "ing convict of the Letter thereof, he could not "be convict of Treaſon: I remember the Salvo "of the Statute was much inſiſted upon by thoſe "from the Houſe of Commons, as much con- "ducing to their ends. My Lords, I will firſt "ſpeak of the Statute it ſelf, and then of its "Salvo or proviſion: The Statute is (That if any man ſhall intend the death of the King, his Queen, their Children; Kill the Chancellor, or Judge upon the Bench, imbaſe the Kings Coyn, or counterfeit the Broad Seal, &c. he ſhall be convict and puniſhed as a Traytor.) "That the Lord "Strafford comes not within the Letter of this "Statute, is not ſo much as once alleadged, nor "indeed it cannot be with any reaſon; all that "can be ſaid is, that by relation or by argument, "a minore ad majus, he may be drawn into it, yet "that this cannot be, I humbly offer theſe conſi- "derations.

"Firſt, This is a declarative Law, and ſuch "are not to be taken by way of conſequence, e- "quity or conſtruction, but by the Letter only, "otherwiſe they ſhould imply a contradiction to "themſelves, and be no more declarative Laws, "but Laws of conſtruction or conſtitutive.

2. "This is a penal Law, and ſuch (if our "grounds hitherto unqueſtioned hold good) can "admit of no conſtructions or inferences, for pe- "nalties are to perſwade the keeping of known "Laws, not of Laws conjectural, ambiguous, and "by conſequence (which perhaps the moſt learn- "ed may not in their diſputes queſtion, much leſs "the ſubject (who is not obliged to interpret "the Statute) doubt of in the point of obedience, "yea, rather without any doubt, he is rather to "obey the Letter of the Statute, and conceive "(and that truly) that he is not liable to the pe- "nalty.

3. "We have a notable Law 13 Eliz. cap. 2. "whereby it is declared that the bringing in of "Bulls from Rome, to ſtir up the Subject to mu- "tiny and Rebellion, ſhall be puniſhed as Trea- "ſon: Now if by interpretation or by conſe- "quence this ſence might have been thruſt upon "the preceding Statutes, the making of this had "been ſuperfluous; yea, the perſons then char- "ed with that Crime, might have been impeach- "ed of Treaſon, even before the making of this "Act.

"Anno 21 Edw. 3. We have a Statute, de- claring

" claring that for a Servant to kill his Master is an " Act of Treason; and in the 23 year of the same " King, a Process of Treason was framed against " a man for killing his Father, grounded upon the " same argument a minore ad majus: But it was " found (and the Sentence is yet in the Records) " that although in the 21 year of Edw. 3. that " Argument might have been admitted, yet in " the 27 it could not, by reason of the declara- " tive Law, intervening in the 25 year; and this " Case comes very home to the point in Law.

" My Lords, I will not demand what kind of " offence it may be for a man to subvert the fun- " damental Laws of the Kingdom, the Crime " doubtless is unnatural and monstrous, and the " punishment must keep the same proportion, " only I presume to offer these few things to your " Lordships consideration:

1. That one or more Acts of Injustice whether maliciously or ignorantly done, can in no sense of Law be called the subversion of the Fundamental Laws; if so, as many Judges (perhaps) so many Traytors; it is very incident to mans nature to err, nor doth the Lord Strafford plead his innocencie in oversights but in Treason.

2. I do remember the Case of John de la Pole Duke of Suffolk, this man in the 28 of Hen. 6. was charged by the House of Commons with Articles of Treason, and those too very like to these against my Lord Strafford.

1. That he had given the King bad advices.
2. That he had embased his Coyn.
3. That he had cessed men of War.
4. That he had given out summary Decrees.
5. That he had imposed Taxes.
6. That he had corrupted the Fountains of Justice.
7. That he had perswaded the King to unnecessary War, and the giving over of Anjou in France.

" And for all these though he was charged " with High Treason for wronging the right of " the Subject, and subverting the Fundamental " Laws of the Kingdom, yet after a long agitati- " on, the matter was found by the Lords of Par- " liament not to imply Treason, but only Felony. " Add to this another who in the 23 of Hen. 8. " was charged for subverting the English Laws, " and yet no Treason charg'd upon him. Add to " both the charge of Richard Lark, pleaded at " the Common Pleas, who was charg'd with " Treason for subverting the Law, but convicted " only of Felony, by which you may see, my " Lords, what to this time hath been subverting " the Laws.

3. " It is very considerable that the Lord " Strafford is not charged to have subverted, but " only to have intended to subvert the funda- " mental Laws, and this I conceive if there were " no more might keep him free from that Statute " of the 25 of Edw. 3. For although as touch- " ing the King, his Queen and Children, " intention is treasonable; yet in all other things " there mentioned there must be action beside " intention, for it is not said if a man do intend " to kill a Chancellour, it shall be Treason, but " if he doth kill him; and if he doth actually " counterfeit the Broad Seal: and although a " man should prepare a furnace, make ready his " stamp, melt his Bullion, yet if he gives not the " Kings impression upon the Coin, all his inten- " tions, yea, his preparations will not serve to " make up a Treason.

Ye see therefore, my Lords, that the body of the Statute cannot stick against the Lord Strafford, neither in Letter nor consequence, this is not, that must not be; all that can be said is, that the fact may be Treason by the Common Law. For my part I profess my ignorance, who ever thought the Common Law might declare, but never make a Treason; it might be presupposed that there is a Statute whereupon to build a declaration, and therefore to say there is no Statute for it, it is to say, it is no Treason at all; the Statute ever makes the Treason: and to be declared Treason either by Common Law, or by Parliament, are but two different ways of proceedings, and must both resolve into one Principle, nay, and which comes home to the point. In the 21 of Edw. 3. To kill a man imployed in the Kings War was Treason, and the 23. to kill the Kings Messenger was Treason by declaration of the Common Law, but always by reason of the Statute, yet none of these are Treasons, but Felonies only, because of the intervening Statute of the 25 th. of Edw. 3. such hath ever been thought the force of its Letter and Declaration: and so I will leave it and a word or two of the Salvo, which is this, that because all particulars could not be enumerated, therefore what the Parliament should declare to be Treasonable in time to come, should be punished as a Treason.

And according to this reservative, in the 8 th year of King Richard 2. one charged before the Kings Bench, was afterward referred to the Parliament, and there though the fact was not contained in the body of the Statute, yet because of the Proviso aforementioned, it was adjudged Treason.

In the 11 th. year of the same King the Duke of Ireland and Nevil Archbishop of York were impeached of High Treason by Gloceſter, Arundel, and Warwick, and notwithstanding the Statute were convicted thereof by the Salvo; but in the 21 th. of the same Richard 2. the tide turned, and the King had such a hand with the Parliament, that the Sentence was recalled, and those three Noblemen themselves were adjudged Traytors. Again, in the 1 of Hen. 4. his Successor, that Revocation of the 21 R. 2. was repealed, and the Sentence of the 11 th. of his Reign established; such were the tossings too and fro of Treason, and all because of that uncertain Proviso.

Therefore it was that in the same Parliament the 1 of H. 4. A Petition was preferred by the Nobility to have Treason limited within some Statute.

Because they knew not what to speak or what to do for fear thereof: And in Cap. 10. an Act was made upon this Petition, that the Salvo should be holden repealed in all times to come, and nothing esteemed Treason but what was literally contained in the 25 of Edw. 3. and therefore it is said in the Records, That there was great joy at the making of this Act, in that the drawn sword hanging over every mans head by this slender thred of a consequence or illation, was removed by that

Act,

Act. Add to this, that in the 1 of Qu. Mary, Cap. 1. the ſame is repeated, That no man ſhall be puniſhed in life or eſtate as a Traytor, but for the Crime contained in the Statute of the 25 Edw. 3. without the leaſt mention of the pretended Salvo.

The Earl of Northumberlands Caſe comes nigh to the point, he was charged with Treaſon, the 5 of Hen. 4. and if the Statute of the 1 of H. 4. Chap. 10. whereby this Proviſo is repealed had not interven'd, no doubt he had been condemned of Treaſon, but he was only convict of Felony, and that becauſe he could not be drawn within the Letter of the Statute of the 25 of Edw. 3. And I dare confidently ſay it, that ſince that Act was made the 1 of Hen. 4. Chap. 10. wherely the Proviſo is repealed, no man hath ever been declared a Traytor either by King or Parliament, except it were upon that, or ſome other Statute literally and declaratively taken. Theſe two things I do offer to your Lordſhips conſiderations: That the Lord Strafford cannot be impeached of Treaſon by the Statute of the 25 Edw. 3. and that the Salvo contained in the ſame, ſtands repealed almoſt two hundred years ago. And this is all I conceive to be neceſſary for that Statute which was alleadged by the Lord Strafford in his defence for matter of Law.

The Recorder ſaid, he could add nothing to what the former Counſel had ſpoken for matter of Law; "but if their Lordſhips would State unto "him any further queſtions, he was ready to give "his reſolution according to his beſt ability.

No anſwer was made to this motion, but the Lords & Commons adjourned to their reſpective Houſes without appointing any time for their next meeting.

The Commons were reſolv'd to proceed upon the Bill of Attainder, which was ſo extraordinary a thing, that it did not paſs without great debate. The Lord Digby then a Member of the Commons Houſe, and one of the moſt active Proſecutors of him, was ſo ſatisfied with his Anſwers at his Tryal, that he could not but ſhew a diſlike to the paſſage of it, upon every occaſion that occurr'd in the reading or debating thereof, which made Pym and ſome others that were reſolv'd on the buſineſs, to do what they could to blaſt his credit in the houſe, but yet when the laſt reading of the Bill was in the Commons Houſe, he gave ſo generous a teſtimony againſt it, That it may not be unfit to record what he then ſaid in this Hiſtory:

Mr. Speaker,

The Lord Digbys Speech againſt the Bill of Attainder.

"We are now upon the point of giving (as "much as in us lies) the final Sentence unto "death or life, on a great Miniſter of State, and "Peer of this Kingdom, Thomas Earl of Straf- "ford, a name of hatred in the preſent age by his "practices, and fit to be made a terror to future "ages by his puniſhment.

"I have had the honour to be imployed by the "Houſe in this great buſineſs, from the firſt hour "that it was taken into conſideration: it was a "matter of great truſt, (and I will ſay it with "confidence) that I have not only ſerved the "Houſe in it with induſtry, according to my abi-"lity but with moſt exact faithfulneſs & ſecrecie.

"And as I have hitherto diſcharged my duty "to this Houſe, and to my Country in the pro-"greſs of this great cauſe; ſo I truſt I ſhall do "now in the laſt period of it to God, and to a "good Conſcience.

"I do wiſh the peace of that unto my ſelf, and "the bleſſings of Almighty God to me and my "Poſterity, according as my judgment on the life "of this man ſhall be conſonant with my heart, "and the beſt of my underſtanding in all inte-"grity.

"I know well, Maſter Speaker, that by ſome "things I have ſaid of late, whilſt this Bill was in "agitation, I have raiſed ſome prejudices upon "me in this cauſe.

"Yea, ſome (I thank them for their plain-"dealing) have been ſo free as to tell me, that "I ſuffered much by the backwardneſs I have "ſhewn in this Bill of Attainder of the Earl of "Strafford, againſt whom I have been formerly "ſo keen, ſo active.

"Mr. Speaker, I deſire of you and the reſt of "this Houſe a ſuſpenſion of Judgment concern-"me till I have opened my heart unto you freely "and clearly in this buſineſs.

"Truly Sir, I am ſtill the ſame in my opinions "and affections as unto the Earl of Strafford, I "confidently believe him the moſt dangerous "Miniſter, the moſt inſupportable to free Sub-"jects, that can be character'd.

"I beleeve his practices in themſelves as "high, as tyrannical as any Subject ever ventur'd "on, and the malignity of them hugely aggrava-"ted by thoſe rare abilities of his, whereof God "hath given him the uſe, but the Divel the ap-"plication. In a word, I beleeve him ſtill that "grand Apoſtate to the Common-wealth, who "muſt not expect to be pardoned in this world, "till he be diſpatch'd to the other. And yet let "me tell you, Mr. Speaker, my hand muſt not "be to that diſpatch, I proteſt as my Conſcience "ſtands informed, I had rather it were off.

"Let me unfold unto you the Myſtery, Mr. "Speaker.

"I will not dwell much upon juſtifying unto "you my ſeeming variance at this time from what "I was formerly, by putting you in mind of the "difference between Proſecutors and Judges.

"How miſ-becoming that fervour would be in "a Judge, which perhaps was commendable in a "Proſecutor. Judges we are now, and muſt put "on another perſonage.

"It is honeſt and noble to be earneſt in order "to the diſcovery of truth, but when that hath "been brought as far as it can to light, our judg-"ment thereupon ought to be calm and cau-"tious.

"In proſecution upon probable grounds, we "are accountable only for our induſtry or remiſ-"neſs, but in Judgment we are deeply reſpon-"ſible to God Almighty, for its rectitude or ob-"liquity. In caſes of life, the Judge is God's "Steward of the parties blood, and muſt give a "ſtrict account for every drop.

"But as I told you, Mr. Speaker, I will not "inſiſt long upon this ground of difference in "me now, from what I was formerly.

"The truth on't is, Sir, the ſame ground where-"upon I wiſh the reſt of the five to whom you firſt

" firſt committed the conſideration of my Lord " of Strafford) brought down our opinion that " it was fit he ſhould be accuſed of Treaſon, up- " on the ſame ground I was engaged with ear- " neſtnèſs in his proſecution, and had the ſame " ground remained in that force of belief with " me, which till very lately it did, I ſhould not " have been tender in his condemnation. But " truly Sir, to deal plainly with you, that ground " of our accuſation, that ſpur to our proſecution, " and that which ſhould be in the baſis of my " judgment, of the Earl of Strafford as unto " Treaſon, is to my underſtanding quite vaniſht " away.

" This it was Mr. Speaker:

" His adviſing the King to employ the Army " of Ireland to reduce England.

" This I was aſſured would be proved, before I " gave my conſent to his Accuſation. I was con- " firmed in the ſame belief during the proſecu- " tion, and fortified in it moſt of all ſince Sir " Henry Vanes preparatory examinations, by the " aſſurances which that worthy Member Maſter " Pym gave me, that his Teſtimony would " be made convincing, by ſome Notes of " what paſſed at the Junto concurrent with it, " which I ever underſtanding to be of ſome other " Counſellour, you ſee now prove but a Copy of " the ſame Secretaries Notes, diſcover'd and " produc'd in the manner you have heard, " and thoſe, diſ-joynted fragments of the " venomous part of diſcourſes, no reſults; no " Concluſions of Counſels, which are the only " things that Secretaries ſhould regiſter; there " being no uſe at all of the other, but to accuſe " and to bring men into danger.

" But Sir, this is not that which overthrows the " evidence with me, concerning the Army of " Ireland, nor yet that all the Junto upon their " Oaths remember nothing of it.

" But this Sir, which I ſhall tell you is that " which works with me, under favour, to an utter " overthrow of this evidence as unto that of the " Army of Ireland: Before whilſt I was a Pro- " ſecutor, and under tie of ſecrecie, I might not " diſcover any weakneſs of the cauſe, which now " as a Judge I muſt. Maſter Secretary was exa- " mined thrice upon Oath at the preparatory " Committee.

" The firſt time he was queſtioned to all the " Interrogatories, and to that part of the ſeventh " which concerns the Army of Ireland, he ſaid " poſitively in theſe words, I cannot charge him " with that. But for the reſt, he deſired time to " recollect himſelf, which was granted him.

" Some days after he was examined a ſecond " time, and then depoſed theſe words, concern- " ing the Kings being abſolved from Rules of " Government, and ſo forth, very clearly, but " being preſt to that part, concerning the Iriſh " Army, again, ſaid he could ſay nothing to that.

" Here we thought we had done with him, till " divers weeks after my Lord of Northumber- " land and all others of the Junto, denying to " have heard any thing concerning thoſe words " of reducing England by the Iriſh Army, it was " thought fit to examine the Secretary once more, " and then he depoſes theſe words to have been " ſaid by the Earl of Strafford to his Majeſty: " you have an Army which you may imploy here " to reduce, (or ſome word to that ſenſe) this " Kingdom.

" Mr. Speaker, theſe are the circumſtances " which I confeſs with my conſcience, thruſt quite " out of doors that grand Article of our Charge, " concerning his deſperate advice to the King, " of employing the Iriſh Army here.

" Let not this I beſeech you be driven to an " aſperſion upon Maſter Secretary, as if he ſhould " have ſworn otherwiſe than he knew or believed, " he is too worthy to do that; only let thus much " be infer'd from it, that he who twice upon " Oath with time of recollection, could not re- " member any thing of ſuch a buſineſs, might " well a third time miſ-remember ſomewhat: and " in this buſineſs the difference of one letter, " here for there, or that for this, quite alters the " caſe, the later alſo being the more probable, " ſince it is confeſt of all hands, that the debate " then was concerning a War with Scotland, and " you may remember at the Barre he once ſaid to " imploy there. And thus, Mr. Speaker, I have " faithfully given you an account what it is that " hath blunted the edge of the Hatchet or Bill " with me towards my Lord of Strafford.

" This was that whereupon I accuſed him with " a free heart, proſecuted him with earneſtneſs, " and had it to my underſtanding been proved, " ſhould have condemned him with innocence; " Whereas now I cannot ſatisfie my conſcience " to do it.

" I profeſſe I can have no notion of any bodies " intents to ſubvert the Laws treaſonably, or by " force, and this deſign of force not appearing, " all his other wicked practices cannot amount ſo " high with me.

" I can find a more eaſie and more natural " ſpring, from whence to derive all his other " Crimes, than from an intent to bring in Tyran- " nie, and to make his own Poſterity as well as us " ſlaves; as from Revenge, from Pride, from A- " varice, from Paſſion, and Inſolence of Na- " ture.

" But had this of the Iriſh Army been proved, " it would have diffuſed a complexion of Trea- " ſon over all, it would have been a Withe in- " deed, to bind all thoſe other ſcattered and leſ- " ſer branches, as it were into a Fagot of Trea- " ſon.

" I do not ſay but the reſt may repreſent him a " man as worthy to dye, and perhaps worthier " than many a Traytor. I do not ſay, but they may " juſtly direct us to Enact that they ſhall be Trea- " ſon for the future.

" But God keep me from giving Judgement " of death on any Man, and of ruine to his inno- " cent Poſterity, upon a Law made a poſte- " riori.

" Let the Mark be ſet on the door where the " Plague is, and then let him that will enter, " dye.

" I know, Maſter Speaker, there is in Parlia- " ment a double power of life and death by Bill, " a Judicial power, and a Legiſlative: the mea- " ſure of the one is what's legally juſt, and the " other, what is prudentially and politickly fit for " the good and preſervation of the whole. But " thoſe two, under favour, are not to be confoun-

" ded in Judgement. We muſt not piece up " want of Legality with matter of Convenience, " nor the defailance of prudential fitneſſe, with " a pretence of legal Juſtice.

" To condemn my Lord of Strafford Judici- " ally as for Treaſon, my conſcience is not aſſu- " red that the matter will bear it.

" And to do it by the Legiſlative power, my " reaſon conſultively cannot agree to that, ſince " I am perſwaded neither the Lords nor the King " will paſs the Bill, and conſequently, that our " paſſing it will be a cauſe of great diviſions and " combuſtions in the State.

" And therefore my humble advice is, that " that laying aſide this Bill of Attainder, we " may think of another, ſaving only life, ſuch as " may ſecure the State from my Lord of Straf- " ford, without endangering it, as much by divi- " ſion concerning his puniſhment, as he hath en- " dangered it by his practices.

" If this may not be hearkened unto, let me " conclude in ſaying that unto you all, which I " have throughly inculcated to mine own conſci- " ence upon this occaſion. Let every man lay his " hand upon his heart, and ſadly conſider what " we are going to do, with a breath, either Ju- " ſtice or Murther; Juſtice on the one ſide, or " murther heightened and aggravated to its ſu- " premeſt extent: For as the Caſuiſts ſay, that he " who lyes with his Siſter, commits Inceſt, but he " that marries his Siſter, ſins higher, by applying " Gods Ordinance to his Crime: So doubtleſs, " he that commits murther with the Sword of Ju- " ſtice, heightens that Crime to the utmoſt.

" The danger being ſo great, and the caſe ſo " doubtful, that I ſee the beſt Lawyers in diame- " tral oppoſition concerning it, Let every man " wipe his heart, as he does his eyes, when he " would judge of a nice and ſubtil object. The " eye if it be prelincted with any colour, is vitia- " ted in its diſcerning. Let us take heed of a " blood-ſhotten eye of Judgement.

" Let every man purge his heart clear of all paſ- " ſions (I know this great and wiſe body poli- " tick can have none, but I ſpeak to individuals " from the weakneſſe which I find in my ſelf.) " Away with perſonal animoſities, away with all " flatteries to the people, in being the ſharper a- " gainſt him, becauſe he is odious to them; away " with all fears, leſt by the ſparing his blood they " may be incens'd; away with all ſuch conſidera- " tions, as that it is not fit for a Parliament, that " one accuſed by it of Treaſon ſhould eſcape " with life.

" Let not former vehemence of any againſt " him, nor fear from thence, that he cannot be " ſafe while that man lives, be an ingredient in " the ſentence of any one of us.

" Of all theſe corruptives of Judgment, Mr. " Speaker, I do before God diſcharge my ſelf to " the uttermoſt of my power.

" And do with a clear Conſcience waſh my " hands of this mans Blood, by this ſolemn Pro- " teſtation, that my Vote goes not to the taking " off the Earl of Straffords life.

The Earls enemies greatly offended at this Speech.

At this Speech thoſe were much offended who deſign'd the death of this Earl, and they were ſo factious in the purſuit of it, that they took the Names of all the diſſenters upon a diviſion of the Houſe when the Bill paſs'd and caus'd them to be diſpers'd among their party in the City who came in great tumults to Weſtminſter to clamor for Juſtice, and in the Old Palace-Yard in Weſt- minſter thoſe diſſenters were poſted up, to be expos'd to the fury of the ungovern'd multitude, made at this time ſo mad and violent that ſome of them were heard to ſay, If they could not have the Earl of Straffords life, they would have the Kings; and in their Paper they call'd the moderate part of the Houſe of Commons Straf- fordians. The Names of thoſe that refuſed to paſs the Bill of Attainder.

The ſame afternoon this Bill of Attainder was carried up to the Lords Houſe, where it reſted many days, and had probably never paſs'd had not many of the Peers been terrified from coming to the Houſe by the tumultuous multitude, in whom ſuch fears and jealouſies were infus'd by the artifices of ſome of the Members of both Houſes, that when any debate was like to be carried againſt them in either Houſe, they would ſend for great numbers of them with ſwords and clubs who would menace, reproach, and aſſault ſuch Members as diſliked them; But notwithſtanding all this violence of proſecution, the Lords were much unſatisfied, and ſo many ſcruples were ſtarted by them, that a conference was deſir'd with the Commons to reſolve them, and it was agreed that Oliver St. John the Kings Sollicitor ſhould on the 29 th. of this Moneth give their Lordſhips an account in publick in Weſtminſter-Hall of the reaſons impelling the Houſe of Commons to proceed by Bill, ordering alſo that the Earl of Strafford ſhould then be preſent. Whilſt theſe things were in agitation, many conſultations were had about raiſing money for the paying and disbanding the Engliſh and Scotch Armies in the North, and other matters relating thereunto.

Artifices uſed to make the Bill paſs in the Lords Houſe.

The Commons had Voted to give three hundred thouſand pounds to the Scots as a fit proportion for recompenſe of their loſſes and neceſſities occaſion'd by this War, notwithſtanding the great Levies made by them for their ſubſiſtence in the Northern Counties, but thoſe that invited them hither, ſo their own purpoſes were effected, cared not into what extremity the Kingdom was brought, brought, and therefore they gave many delays to the Scotch Treaty, and to the disbanding the Armies, and the raising mony for these ends: and one of them said, They could not yet spare them, that the sons of Zerviah were too strong for them: but upon a debate of these matters in the House of Commons, when many discourses were made of the necessities of the Northern parts, occasion'd by the Scotch Army, and one Mr. Gervase Holles a Burgess for Newborne upon Trent said, That the best way of paying them, was by Arms to expel them forth of the Kingdom: They took such offence at his Speech that they speedily call'd him to the Bar, and being not satisfied with what he said there, they expell'd him from the House.

The Commons Vote 300000 lib. to the Scots.

Mr. Strode. Exact Collection pag. 521.

Mr. Gervase Holles expelled the House for a Speech concerning the Scotch Army.

These transactions were carried on with great heat by a clamorous pretended necessity of Reformation in Church and State, and the people were perswaded to believe their Religion and Liberties had been lost if the Scots had not interposed at this time; wherefore that the time of the Armies stay may be prolong'd till such alterations in Church and State were made as they designed, all things were urged that might heighten the jealousies of the people, and at this time many apprehensions were rais'd of danger by the exercise of Popery and their access to the Court, as also of the continuance of the Army in Ireland: So that a Petition was presented to the King, for three things touching those matters:

A Petition presented to the King.

1. For removing of all Papists from Court.
2. For disarming of them generally throughout the Kingdom.
3. For disbanding the Irish Army.

To all which the King the 28*th.* delivered answer contractly thus:

The Kings Answer to the Petition.

For the first, they all knew what legal trust the Crown hath in that particular, therefore he shall not need to say any thing to give them assurance that he shall use it so, as there shall be no just cause of scandal.

For the second, He is content it shall be done according to Law.

For the last, He had entred into consultation about it, and found many difficulties therein, and he doth so wish the disbanding of all Armies, as he doth conjure them speedily, and heartily to joyn with him in disbanding those two in England.

The day after the King had given this answer, the Earl of Strafford in pursuance of what was before resolv'd, was brought into Westminster-Hall before a Committee of both Houses of Parliament, where Mr. St. John did endeavour to satisfie the Lords in the reasonableness of the Bill of Attainder to induce them to pass it; for though their Proofs at the Tryal were insufficient, and nothing but legal evidence could prevail in Judicature, by this way both Lords and Commons might proceed by the light of their own Consciences without any further proof whatsoever: And so it was expresly affirm'd by Mr. St. John in the Speech he then made, wherein he said:

Mr. St. Johns reasons to the Lords for the Bill of Attainder.

That although single testimony might be sufficient to satisfie private Consciences, yet how far it would have been satisfactory in a judicial way, where forms of Law are more to be stood upon, was not so clear; whereas in this way of Bill private satisfaction to each mans Conscience is sufficient, although no evidence had been given at all.

And towards the conclusion of what he said after many aggravations of the Earls offences tending (as he said) to subvert our Laws; he told them, He that would not have had others to have Law, should not have any himself. It is true (said he) we give Law to Hares and Deer, because they be Beasts of Chase. It was never accounted either cruelty or foul play to knock Foxes and Wolves on the head, as they can be found, because these be Beasts of prey: the Warrener sets Traps for Powlcats and other Vermine, for preservation of the Warren.

Upon the Close of this Speech the Lords and Commons rose, nor was there a word spoken but by Mr. St. John, only the Earl by a kind of dumb eloquence, often holding up his hands towards Heaven, all along the Speech made his reply with a deep silence; and the next day, he petitioned the Lords to be heard again, alleadging that his Lawyers had not fully spoken at their last meeting, but this was denied him, and many of the Lords shewed greater propensity towards the Earls condemnation than before; whereof the King being inform'd, he came the next day to the House of Peers, and having sent for the House of Commons, he spake to them to this purpose:

The Earls Petition for a second hearing denied.

The Kings Speech concerning the Earl of Strafford.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I had no intention to have spoken to you of this business to day, which is the great business of the Earl of Strafford, because I would do nothing which might hinder your occasions. But Judgment being ready to be past on him, I think it most necessary to declare my conscience therein.

I am sure you know I have been present at the hearing of this great Cause, from one end to the other; and I must tell you that in my Conscience I cannot condemn him of High Treason.

It is not fit for me to argue this business, I am sure you will not expect it, a positive Doctrine best becomes the mouth of a Prince, yet must I tell you three truths, which I am sure no man can tell so well as my self.

1. That I had never any intention of bringing over the Irish Army into England, nor ever was advised by any body so to do.
2. That there was never any debate before me, either in publike Councel, or private Committee, of the disloyalty of my English Subjects, nor ever had I any suspition of them.
3. That I was never counselled by any to alter the least of any of the Laws of England, much less to alter all the Laws. Nay, I tell you this, I think no body durst ever be so impudent as to move me to it; For if they had, I should have made them such an example, and put such a mark upon them, that all Posterity should know my intentions by it, they being ever to govern by the Law, and no otherwise.

I desire rightly to be understood, for though I tell you in my Conscience I cannot condemn him of High Treason, yet cannot I clear him of Misdemeanors; therefore I hope you may finde out a way to satisfie Justice, and your own fears, and not oppress my Conscience.

My Lords, I hope you know what a tender Conscience is, and I must declare unto you, that to satisfie my people I would do great matters; but in this of Conscience, neither fear, nor any other respect whatsoever, shall ever make me go against it.

Certainly I have not deserved so ill of this Parliament at this time that they should press me in this tender point, therefore I cannot suspect you will go about it. Nay, I must confess for Misdemeanours, I am so clear in them, that though I will not chalk out the way, yet I will shew you that I think my Lord of Strafford is not fit hereafter to serve me, or the Common-wealth in any place of trust, no not so much as a Constable. Therefore I leave it to you my Lords, to find out some such way as to bring me out of this straight, and keep your selves and the Kingdom from such inconveniencies.

The Solemnization of the Marriage of the Prince of Oringe and the Lady Mary eldest Daugter to the King.

This coming of the King, and the Speech then made relisht so ill with the two Houses, that few of them attended on the Solemnities of the next day, May 2. being Sunday, on which the Kings eldest Daughter married to the Prince of Orange, and the next day five or six thousand of Prentices and other tumultuous Citizens came down to Westminster, most of them arm'd with swords, and demanded of the Lords as they went to the House, Justice and Execution against the Earl of Strafford, and many of them they likewise affronted in their passage.

Tumults at Westminster

The same day intimation was given to the House of Commons of practises upon the English Army, to bring them up to London to awe the Parliament; which was an artifice used by some leading men to add to those distractions already raised to fill the minds of the people with fears & jealousies, when in truth all that appeared in reference thereunto amounted only to this:

Observation being made of the great tumults about Westminster, which seem'd to threaten the safety of such of the Members of both Houses as were known not to agree with the designs of some passionate men, who countenanc'd the delivering of Petitions attended and subscrib'd by the hands of many thousands against the Laws and establisht Government of the Kingdom, (which yet seem'd to receive some countenance, and to carry some authority, as instances of the affections of so many persons:) it fell into the thoughts of some Officers of the Army of known, and publick affections to their Countrey, that a Petition of a modest and a dutiful nature from the whole Army, For the composing and setling all grievances in the Church and State by Law, might for the reason of it prevail with the whole House, and coming from such Body might confirm those, who might be shaken with any fears of power or force by the Tumults: but even this in the debate of it had so many intervening difficulties, that it was laid aside two moneths before any discovery, yet nevertheless this Alarm gave occasion to the Commons immediately to frame a Protestation which the same day it was made, was imposed upon all the Members before they were permitted to go out of the House, and was taken by all of them, except the Lord Digby and an Unkle of his, and shortly after, it was sent to the Lords, and by them taken also, and afterwards by an order of the House of Commons, all the Subjects of England were injoyn'd to take it, under pain of being thought unfit of bearing any office either in Church or Common-wealth, to which the Lords would not consent. The Protestation was in these words:

A petition from the army presented to the Parliament.

The Protestation taken by both Houses, and the Subjects of England.

I A. B. do in the presence of Almighty God, promise, vow, and protest, to maintain and defend, as far as lawfully I may, with my life, power, and estate, the true reformed Protestant Religion, expressed in the Doctrine of the Church of England against all Popery and Popish Innovations within this Realm contrary to the same Doctrine, and according to the duty of my Allegiance to his Majesties Royal Person, Honour and Estate; as also the Power and Priviledges of Parliament, the lawful Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and every person that maketh this Protestation in whatsoever he shall do in the lawful pursuance of the same. And to my power, and as far as lawfully I may, I will oppose, and by all good waies and means endeavour to bring to condigne punishment all such as shall either by force, practice, plots, councels and conspiracies, or otherwise do any thing, to the contrary of any thing in this Present Protestation contained. And further, that I shall in all just and honourable waies, indeavour to preserve the union and peace between the three Kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland: And neither for fear, nor other respect shall relinquish this Promise, Vow, and Protestation.

How this Protestation was observ'd by most of them that took it, will be discover'd hereafter.

On the fifth of May, ground was taken from the great apprehensions of the House of Commons, that the Parliament might be dissolv'd before Justice should be done upon Delinquents, publick Grievances redrest, a firm Peace betwixt England and Scotland concluded, and before Provision should be made for the re-payment of such moneys as should be taken up upon Credit to answer the immediate emergencies that were at that time in the State: to debate of the necessity of a Bill for the continuance of this Parliament not to be prorogu'd or adjourn'd, but by Act of Parliament, in which there was such haste made, that within two daies after the first mention of it, it was pass'd in the House of Commons, and carried up to the Lords, where it staid not long, for the temptation was too great to let a Bill of this Nature be laid aside, and in a few daies after it came before them, (viz.) on Saturday the 8 th. of May, both that, and the Bill of Attainder were pass'd; The Bill of Attainder had a hard passage, of 45 present, there were 19 against it, there were many of the Earls friends that absented themselves for fear of the tumults, otherwise the suffrages for him, had more than counterpoys'd the Votes for his death: the same day they sent to the King, to desire accesse to him, which was granted, and about four a clock they attended in the Banquetting-house at White-Hall, where after some stay, these two Bills were presented to him, with a signification, that the present danger of the Kingdom, could not admit of delay, and therefore they humbly besought him, to give his Royal assent thereunto; The King told them they should expect his answer on Monday, and so they parted from each other.

A Bill for the continuance of the Parliament pass'd by both Houses.

The Lords also pass the Bill of Attainder.

They present both to the King, requesting his Royal assent.

On the next day which was Sunday, the King sends sends for the Arch-Bishop of Armagh, the Bishops of London, Durham, Lincolne, and Carliſle, whom he desir'd as Casuists to advise him, whether in Justice he ought to pass the Bill of Attainder against the Earl, all but the Bishop of Lincolne, were very tender in this affair, the matters of fact they say he could himself best judge of, having been present at the Tryal; and for the matter of Law, what was Treason, and what not, he was to rest in the opinion of the Judges, whose office it was to declare the Law, and who were sworn therein to carry themselves indifferently betwixt him and his Subjects, that the King might shew mercy to him, and pardon his offence, without any scruple of conscience, they said no man doubted, if other reasons of State did not hinder, of which the major part, desir'd neither to be Judges nor Advisers, but the Bishop of Lincolne went a little farther, he urg'd the opinion of the Judges, and the Judgement of the Parliament thereupon, representing the terrible consequences of an inraged multitude, and that no other expedient could be found out to appease the people. It is not said the King was convinc'd, by any thing said to him at this Conference, but the motive superior to all, was a Letter he received from the Earl, wherein he thus concluded.

The King consults with the Bishops about the Case of the Earl, as to matter of Conscience.

SIR,

(To set Your Majesties Conscience at liberty,) I do most humbly beseech You, for the preventing of such mischiefs as may happen by Your refusal, to pass the Bill. By this means to remove praised be God, I cannot say this accursed, but I confess this unfortunate thing forth of the way, towards that blessed agreement which God (I trust) shall for ever establish betwixt You and Your Subjects. Sir, My consent herein shall more acquit You to God, than all the World can do besides: To a willing man there is no injury done. And as by Gods Grace I forgive all the World, with a calmness and meekness of infinite contentment to my dislodging Soul; So Sir, I can give up the life of this World with all cheerfulness imaginable, in the just acknowledgement of Your exceeding Favours, and only beg that in Your Goodness, You would vouchsafe to cast Your gratious regard upon my poor Son, and his three Sisters, less or more, and no otherwise than their unfortunate Father shall appear more or less guilty of this death. God preserve Your Majesty:

The Earls Letter to the King for the freeing of his Conscience.

Your Majesties Most Humble and Faithful Subject, and Servant,

STRAFFORD.

On the next day in the morning he sign'd a Commission to the Earl of Arundel, the Lord Privy Seal, the Earl of Pembroke, and others, for the passing of the two Bills, the one for the continuation of the Parliament, the other the Bill of Attainder against the Earl of Strafford, than which Concession never any thing pass'd from him with greater Reluctancy at the present, or which he bewail'd afterward with greater remorse of conscience, for those themselves that fram'd it, knowing of what dangerous consequence it might be hereafter to the lives and fortunes of the Subjects to let such a president remain in force, a clause was added to the Bill, that it should not be drawn into example for the time to come: which because it may seem strange to them that know it not, we shall here insert so much of the enacting part thereof as concerns this point, (for the preamble is only a recital of the heads of the Accusation.)

The King signs a Commission to pass the two Bills.

Be it therefore enacted by the Kings Most Excellent Majesty, and by the Lords and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same; that the said Earl of Strafford for the heinous Crimes and Offences aforesaid, stand and be adjudged and attainted of High Treason, and shall suffer such pain of death, and incurre such forfeiture of his Goods and Chattels, Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, of any Estate of Free-hold or Inheritance in the said Kingdoms of England and Ireland, which the said Earl or any other to his use, or in trust for him, have, or had the first day of the sitting of this present Parliament, or at any time since. Provided that no Judge or Judges, Justice or Justices whatsoever, shall adjudge or interpret any act or thing to be Treason, nor hear or determine any Treason, nor in any other manner than he or they should or ought to have done before the making of this Act, & as if this Act had never been made.

Thus have we Treason and no Treason in the self-same action, that being judg'd Treason in this one man, which never was to be judg'd Treason in any other.

What inducements the King had to pass this Act, and with what regret he did it we have heard, but *who drew him to the other may be now inquir'd, some attribute it to the Lord Say then Master of the Wards, & one of his Majesties Privy Councel, who as it is reported when the King ask'd him if a continuance for seven years might not serve the turn, made answer, that he hop'd they would dispatch all businesses in so many Moneths, and that if his Majesty pass'd the Bill, it should be so far from the making the Parliament Perpetual, that he was confident they would desire to be dissolv'd before three years end; but most lay the blame on the Marques of Hamilton, who by cutting out so much work for the King in England, doubted not carry on his designs in Scotland without interruption, for it is credibly said, that he did brag much of this service when he was in that Kingdom, affirming frequently that he had got a Perpetual Parliament for the English, and would procure the like for the Scots before he had done: Although the King sign'd the Commission for passing of these Acts, yet the Royal assent was not given to them till the tenth of May, and on the next day, the King wrote to the Lords by the Prince of Wales, in these words:

*The Act for continuance of the Parliament.

The King gives his Royal assent to the two Acts.

My Lords,

I did yesterday satisfie the Justice of the Kingdom by passing the Bill of Attainder against the Earl of Strafford. But Mercy being as inherent & inseparable to a King as Justice, I desire in some measure to shew that likewise, by suffering that unfortunate man to fulfil the natural course of his life in ſome cloſe impriſonment, yet ſo, that if he ever make the leaſt offer to eſcape, or offer directly or indirectly to meddle in any ſort of Publike buſineſs, eſpecially with me, either by Meſſage or Letter, it ſhall coſt him his life without further Proceſs. This, if it may be done without the diſcontentment of my people, will be an unſpeakable contentment to me.

To which end, as in the firſt place, I by this Letter do earneſtly deſire your approbation, and to endear it the more, have choſen him to carry it, who is of all your Houſe moſt dear unto me: So I deſire that by conference you will endeavour to give the Houſe of Commons contentment; likewiſe aſſuring you, that the exerciſe of Mercy is no more pleaſing to me, than to ſee both Houſes of Parliament conſent, for my ſake that I ſhould moderate the ſeverity of the Law in ſo important a Caſe.

I will not ſay that your complying with me in this my intended Mercy, ſhall make me more willing, but certainly it will make me more chearful in granting your juſt grievances. But if no leſs than his life can ſatisfie my People, I muſt ſay, Fiat Juſtitia. Thus again recommending the conſideration of my intentions to you, I reſt,

Your unalterable and affectionate friend,

Charles R.

If he muſt die, it were Charity to reprieve him till Saturday.

This Letter was twice read in the Houſe of Peers, who after conſideration thereof, ſent twelve of their number to the King, to ſignifie to him, that neither of the two intentions expreſt in the Letter, could with duty in them, or without danger to his Conſort the Queen, be poſſibly admitted. Which being accompliſh'd and more expreſſions offered, the King ſuffer'd no more words to come from them, but ſaid, that what he intended by his Letter, was with an if, if it may be done without diſcontentment to his people. If it cannot be, I ſay again the ſame that I wrote, Fiat Juſtitia.

The Lords ſend to ſatisfie the King about this matter.

My other intention proceeding out of Charity, for a few days reſpit, was upon certain information that his eſtate was ſo diſtracted that it neceſſarily required ſome few days for the ſettlement thereof.

Whereunto the Lords anſwered their purpoſe was to be ſuiters to his Majeſty for favour to be ſhewed to his innocent Children, and if himſelf had made any proviſion for them, that the ſame might hold. This was well pleaſing to his Majeſty, who hereupon departed from the Lords. At his Majeſties departure they offered up into his hands the Letter it ſelf which he had ſent. But he pleaſed to ſay, What I have written to you, I ſhall be content it be regiſtred by you in your Houſe. In it you ſee my mind, I hope you will uſe it to mine Honour.

Upon Wedneſday the 12 of May, the Earl was ſummon'd to his period: He was conveyed from the Tower by a Court of Guard, formed of the Trained Bands. Before him went the Marſhals men, next the Sheriffs Officers with Halberts, then the Warders of the Tower, then the Earls Gentleman-Uſher bare-headed, and next him the Earl himſelf accompanied with the Primate of Armagh and others. Upon his firſt coming forth, being to paſs near the Arch-biſhops lodging (who ſtood at the window waiting for his approach) he lifted up his eyes, and eſpying the Arch-Biſhop, beſtowed a low obeyſance towards him, ſaying, My Lord, your Prayers, and your Bleſſing: the Arch-Biſhop lift up his hands, and beſtowed both; but overcome with grief fell to the ground in animi deliquio. The Earl proceeding a little farther, he bowed the ſecond time, ſaying, Farewel my Lord, God protect your innocencie.

Being brought to the Scaffold, he addreſt his Speech to the Lord Primate to this effect:

My Lord Primate of Ireland,

The Earl of Straffords Speech on the Scaffold directed to the Lord Primate of Ireland.

It is my very great comfort that I have your Lordſhip by me this day, in regard I have been known to you this many years, and I do thank God and your Lordſhip for it that you are here. I am come hither by the good will and pleaſure of the Almighty to pay that laſt debt I owe to ſin. And to ſubmit to that Judgment which hath paſs'd againſt me. I do it with a very contented and quiet mind; I thank God I do freely forgive all the world. I thank God, I can ſay it and truly too, my Conſcience bearing me witneſs, that in all my imployment ſince I had the honour to ſerve his Majeſty, I never had any thing in the purpoſe of my heart, but what tended to the joynt and individual proſperity of King and People, although it hath been my ill fortune to be miſconſtrued.

There is one thing I deſire to free my ſelf of, & I am confident I ſhall obtain your Chriſtian charity in the belief of it. I was ſo far from being againſt Parliaments, that I did always think the Parliaments of England, were the moſt happy conſtitutions that any Kingdom or nation lived under, & the beſt means under God to make the King & people happy.

For my death I here acquit all the world, and beſeech the God of Heaven heartily to forgive them that contrived it, though in the intentions and purpoſes of my heart, I am not made guilty of what I die for. And it is a great comfort for me, that his Majeſty conceives me not meriting ſo heavy a punniſhment as this.

I wiſh this Kingdom all proſperity and happineſs, and deſire every one who hears me, to conſider ſeriouſly whether the Reformation of a Kingdom ſhould be written in Letters of Blood. Let me never be ſo unhappy as that the leaſt drop of my blood ſhould riſe up in Judgment againſt any of you, but I fear you are in the wrong way.

I profeſs that I die a true and obedient Son of the Church of England wherein I was born, and in which I was bred. Peace and proſperity be ever to it.

This ſaid, he deſired all preſent to aſſiſt him in his Prayers, wherein he continued near a quarter of an hour, then riſing up he bad all his friends farewel, eſpecially by name his Brother Sir George Wentworth, by whom he ſent his love to his wife and bleſſing to his Children, willing him to charge his Son, never to meddle with the Patrimony of the Church.

Then he addreſt himſelf to the Block, and having prayed a while, he gave the Executioner the token of his preparedneſs, whereat the Heads-man doing his office, ſevered his head from his Body at the firſt ſtroke. Thus died this unfortunate Earl. A Gentleman he was of excellent indowments, of a happy fluencie in Speech, and of a ſearching and ſound Judgment in Counſel, and allways faithful to his Maſter therein. The Scots deſigning ſome alterations in that Kingdom, preprejudicial to the Kings Government there both in Church and State, were oppos'd therein by him, which made him formidable to them and they therefore became his mortal enemies, ſo that ſome ſaid, he ſuffered not ſo much a ſacrifice to the Scots revenge, as to their fear: his Character is expreſs'd by the King his Maſter, who ſaid, He looked upon the Earl of Strafford, as a Gentleman whoſe great abilities might make a Prince rather afraid, than aſhamed to imploy him in the greateſt affairs of State.

His Character.

ΕΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚ. Chap. 2.

For thoſe were prone to create in him great confidence of undertakings, and this was like enough to betray him to great errors and many enemies: whereof he could not but contract good ſtore, while moving in ſo high a Sphear, and with ſo vigorous a luſtre, he muſt needs (as the Sun) raiſe many envious exhalations, which condenſed by a Popular Odium, were capable to caſt a cloud upon the brighteſt merit and integrity.

His Children were reſtored to their Honor and Eſtates on the Petition of the Lords and Commons; and the Commons were ſeemingly moſt favoured therein, to make ſome recompenſe to them, or to give proof to the Nobility (leaſt they ſhould be skared by the example) that not ſo much the eſtate as the man was aimed at; but when the Kingdom had need of that head for its ſervice, they could not reſtore it, for at this time our want of his great abilities makes them better underſtood than our fruition of them, ſo dark is our humane underſtanding in preſerving that, which is uſeful and vertuous amongſt us.

The Earls Children reſtored to their honour and Eſtates.

Though we were enter'd into great diſtempers at this time, yet the Kingdom was mindful of the reſtitution of his Nephew the Elector Palatine, who was to attend the Emperour at a Diet to be held at Ratisbone, and Sir Thomas Roe was appointed Embaſſador from hence, to aſſiſt him there, & to add to the reputation of the Embaſſie, the Parliament joyned with the King in a Manifeſto on the Electors behalf, but no ſucceſs enſued.

The King ſent Sir Thomas Roe to the Diet at Ratisbone to aſſiſt his Nephew.

The Parliament now in good ſecurity and power, began to think themſelves concern'd to disband both the Armies.

The Scots by the firſt ceſſation, were limited but for a Month, but they having reſolv'd not to part with them, till they had procured the paſſage of ſeveral Laws in agitation their ſtay was from time to time enlarg'd, till there was almoſt nothing left for the King to grant, as by ſeveral of the Acts hereafter mentioned may appear.

The Triennial Parliament before ſpoken of was a great conceſſion, for thereby the power of calling Parliaments, in caſe of neglect or refuſal, was put into the hands of Sheriffs, and Conſtables, which every one thought a great foundation of confidence betwixt the King and his people: but becauſe many of the peoples grievances were conceived to proceed from the great liberty of the Councel-Board, or from ſome Orders and directions from them, the King admitted to his Privy Councel, the Earls of Hartford, Eſſex, Bedford, Warwick, the Lord Viſcount Say, and ſome others, all of them eminently in eſteem with the people for their reputation of Honor & Juſtice, that no irregularities might be there committed: and divers of the Kings moſt eminent Officers ſurrendred their Offices to the King, to inable him the better to gratifie moſt of them.

The Earls of Hartford, Eſſex, Bedford, Warwick, Lord Say with ſome others made Privy Counſellers.

The Biſhop of Londons Office of Treaſurer, was put into the hands of five Commiſſioners; the Earl of Hartford was ſworn Governour of the Prince in the room of the Earl of Newcaſtle; and the Earl of Eſſex Lord Chamberlain of the Kings Houſhold in the place of the Earl of Pembrook; the Office of Maſter of the Wards was reſign'd by the Lord Cottington, and conferr'd on the Lord Say; and the Earl of Leiceſter was made Lieutenant of Ireland: having thus begun, the King was reſolved to proportion remedies to all the viſible known Diſeaſes of the State, by the advice and Councel of both Houſes of Parliament, making hitherto no rule to his conceſſions but their asking: Thus they gain'd from him the abolition of the Star-Chamber, a Court formerly erected by Act of Parliament.

The Lord Treaſurer and other great Officers reſign up their places.

The Star-Chamber aboliſhed.

The High Commiſſion Court had proceeded with too much ſtrictneſs, having ſo far out-grown the power of Law that it would not be limited and guided by it, and therefore that Branch of the Statute by which it was erected was repealed.

The High Commiſſion Court put down.

The Writs for Ship-money, and all the proceedings in that buſineſs were by the Kings conſent adjudged void, and the Judgments, Enrolments, and Entries thereupon vacated and cancell'd, though all the Judges had ſubſcrib'd unanimouſly to the lawfulneſs of it in time of danger, of which danger the King was declared to be the Judge; and moreover, being brought to a publike Trial, after it had been argued by Counſel on both ſides in the Courts of Juſtice, and by all the Judges in the Exchequer Chamber there paſs'd a definitive Sentence for it: but this abrogation of Ship-money by a Law was not enough, for Bramſton, Trevor, Weſton, Davenport, and Crawly five of the Judges that gave their opinions for it were impeached of high Miſdemeanors for ſo doing, and Barkly another of the Judges accuſed of Treaſon, but no further proſecution was made therein.

Ship-money relinquiſht by the King.

Five of the Judges for Ship-money impeached of High miſdemeanor and Barkly accuſed of Treaſon.

Under colour of executing the Forreſt Laws many had been vex'd by preſentments, fines, and impriſonments, for remedy whereof, the King paſs'd a Law, for the certainty of the Meets, Limits, and Bounds of all the Forreſts in England, with great proviſion for the eaſe of the Subject in that behalf, likewiſe he paſs'd a Law againſt divers incroachments and oppreſſions in the Stannary Courts, and in an Act for granting the Subſidy of Tonnage and Poundage to him, in the Preamble thereof he parted with his Title of impoſing; a power adjudged good, and exercis'd by former Kings, and though diſputed, never reſolv'd againſt by Judgment in Parliament. And by an Act for regulating the Office for Clerk of the Market, becauſe the undue execution thereof had been grievous to many of the people: he conſented that no Clerk of the Market of his Houſe, ſhould hereafter execute his Office in any part of the Kingdom, but only within the Verge of the Court, and granted the execution of that Office, to the Mayors and Bailiffs of Towns Corporate and to the Lords of Liberties and Franchiſes; and in an Act obtained from him for prevention of vexatious proceedings touching the Order of Knighthood he abſolutely parted with and diſcharg'd a right and duty as unqueſtionably due due to him by the law as any ſervice he could challenge; He parted alſo with his propriety in the making of Gun-powder, and conſented to an Act, for diſclaiming of his Power in preſſing Souldiers, enjoyed by all his Predeceſſors for defence of his Perſon and the Realm: But that which chiefly protracted the disbanding of the Armies, was a Bill tender'd to the Houſe of Commons, for the aboliſhing of Biſhops root and branch, but that took no effect, and now the Treaty between the two Kingdoms being finiſh'd, and an Act paſs'd for confirmation thereof, the Armies were ſuddenly to be disbanded, and for that purpoſe the Earl of Holland was made General of the Engliſh Army, and for the payment of them and other debts of the Kingdom, a Pole-Bill was paſs'd, wherein the whole Kingdom was aſſeſs'd, every Duke at 100 l. a Marqueſs at 80 l. Earls 60 l. Viſcounts and Barons at 40 l. Knights of the Bath 30 l. Knights Batchelors at 20 l. Eſquires 10 l. and every Gentleman diſpending 100 l. per annum, 15 l. and all others of ability, a competent proportion; the meaneſt through the whole Kingdom was not excuſed under ſix pence; As for the 300000 l. voted to be paid to the Scots towars a Supply of their loſſes, it was agreed that 100000 l. thereof ſhould be paid at Midſummer come twelve-moneth, and the other 200000 l. two years after, which was ſecur'd to them by Act of Parliament.

The Treaty between the two Kingdoms confirm'd.

Earl of Holland made General of the Engliſh Army.

A Pole rais'd for the payment of the Armies.

And on the ſixth of Auguſt both Armies were disbanded, and four daies after the King began his Journey to Scotland to ſettle the affairs of that Nation, and on the ſame day both Houſes of Parliament adjourn'd themſelves to the 20*th.* of October, and a Committee of the Houſe of Commons conſiſting of fifty Members, was appointed to ſit during the receſſe.

Both the Armies disbanded.

The King takes a journey into Scotland.

The King at his coming into Scotland, was received there with great demonſtrations of affection by all the people, and to oblige them to him, he confirm'd not only the Articles of the Treaty betwixt the two Nations by Act of Parliament, but all his former conceſſions alſo, and all ſuch things as had been acted by them in their general aſſemblies; And likewiſe the better to pleaſe them, he conferr'd Titles of Honour and Dignity on ſome, and great places of power, truſt and profit on others: amongſt theſe the Marqueſs of Hamilton was made Duke of Hamilton, General Leſly was created Earl of Leven, who was ſo tranſported with a ſenſe of the Kings favour and bounty to him, that he often proteſted, and once at Perth upon his knees in the Houſe of the Earl of Kenoul, that he would never bear Arms againſt the King.

The King confers Honour upon many perſons during his abode in Scotland.

A while after the King being at Edenburgh, ſome information was given to the Marqueſſes of Hamilton and Argile, that there was ſome deſign upon their perſons, which made them for ſome few daies withdraw themſelves from the Parliament out of Edenburgh, but their perſons were of ſuch quality and eſtimation in Scotland, that great care was taken to diſcover the ground thereof, and after full examination by the Parliament, upon the whole, they themſelves, and that great Councel were ſatisfied, that the information firſt given to them, could not be made good to the proof of any deſign to the danger of their perſons; but the King who was a little reflected on in the firſt information, could not conceal his reſentment of this carriage in Hamilton, and when he delivered to him his Patent of Duke in Parliament (according to the manner of that Nation,) he told him he had not deſerv'd to be miſtruſted by him, for he knew well when he was accus'd to him of High Treaſon, he permitted him even then to lye in his Bed-Chamber: This reproof had no great impreſſion on the new Duke, though he ſeem'd outwardly much troubled for having given the King ſo juſt a cauſe of diſpleaſure, yet upon the firſt report of this buſineſs at London (without ſtaying to hear the opinion of the Parliament of Scotland, who had fully examin'd it,) ſtrange interpretations were made upon the matter as highly and nearly concerning the peace of England, and a ſudden reſolution was taken firſt by the Committee during the receſſe, and after by the Parliament to have a guard for the defence of London, Weſtminſter, and both Houſes of Parliament, which troubled the minds of the people with the apprehenſion of new danger, when they were ſo lately freed from the fears of two Armies.

About the end of October this year, a Rebellion broke out in Ireland, which was carried ſo cloſe, that no certain notice was given of the conſpiracy till the very evening before it was to be put in Execution.

A Bloody Rebellion breaks out in Ireland.

The innocent Proteſtants were upon a ſudden diſſeized of their Eſtates, and the perſons of above 200000 men, women and children, murder'd, within the ſpace of one Moneth, and many of them with exquiſite and unheard of tortures, that which increas'd the wonder of moſt men was, the conſideration that the antient hatred which the Iriſh, (a thing incident to conquer'd Nations) had born to the Engliſh, did now ſeem to be forgotten; forty years of peace had compacted thoſe two Nations into one body, and cemented them together by all conjunctures of alliance, by intermarriages, and conſanguinity, which was in outward appearance ſtrengthened by frequent entertainments, and all kinds of friendly neighbourhood.

This deſign was to be put in execution on the 23*th.* of October, upon which day, not only the Caſtle of Dublin, the Kingdoms chief Magazine, a Store-houſe of 10000 arms at that time, but all other Forts and Magazines in that Kingdom, were to be ſurpriz'd, and all the Engliſh and Proteſtants that joyn'd not with them, to be murder'd.

The ſeizure of Dublin Caſtle was prevented by timely diſcovery of the Plot to the two Lords Juſtices, by one Owen O Conally of Iriſh Extract, but a Proteſtant, which diſcovery was but the very night before that fatal day, and the occaſion of it very accidental, by one Hugh Mac Mahon, Grandſon to the great Tyrone, a Gentleman of a plentiful Fortune, in the County of Monagan, & one that had been a Lieutenant Colonel in the King of Spains Service, who truſted this Owen with ſome relations concerning it at a Tavern.

O Conally by diſcovery of the Plot, prevents the ſeizure of Dublin Caſtle.

Upon which diſcovery, Mac Mahon and the Lord Mac-Guire were preſently apprehended by the Lords Juſtices, and many Conſpirators of great note eſcaped that night out of Dublin; ſo was Dublin ſaved, that all Ireland might not be loſt

Mac Mahon and the Lord Mac-Guire apprehended.

1641. lost in one day. But the horrid design was past prevention, as to the general; for the Conspirators were up at the day fix'd in all Counties round about; and poor English Protestants arrived at Dublin every day, robbed and spoiled of all they had, relating how their Houses were seized, how Towns and Villages in all parts were fired, and cruel outrages committed.

The Lords Justices, Sir William Parsons, and Sir John Burlace taking those Arms which they found in Dublin, and arming whom they could to defend themselves, dispatched Letters to the King in Scotland, and the Earl of Leicester, then chosen Deputy, but staying in England.

The Earl of Leicester chosen Deputy for Ireland.

I was generally said, the late insurrection (we must not call it Rebellion) in Scotland gave the first incouragement to this in Ireland, and the pretences were in many of them the same, namely, for liberty of conscience, not to have the English Bishops and Liturgie impos'd upon them, and these, as those in Scotland, being mighty zealous in their Religion, when once they were possess'd with a possibility of compassing their designs, executed whatever the impetuous dictates of Superstition, or wicked exhortation of Priests could infuse into them in this exceeding the actions of the Scots, whose Religion founded on more pious Principles, instructed them not to such bloody waies of propagation of it.

The Irish rebellion occasioned by the Insurrection in Scotland.

The Lords Justices sent Sir Henry Spotswood to Scotland to the King, with intelligence of all that hapned, and thereupon he sent Sir James Stuart to the Lords of the Privy-Councel in Ireland, to acquaint them with his knowledge and instructions, and to carry all that money that his present stores could supply; He mov'd also the Parliament of Scotland (as being neareſt) to a speedy help, but they excus'd their aids, because Ireland was dependent upon the Crown of England, but they said, if the State of England would use any of their men for that service, they would make propositions in order to it: at the same time likewise he sends Post to the Parliament of England, and a while after Owen O Conally the first discoverer of the Plot, brought Letters to London to the Earl of Leicester with an account of it, wherein the Lords Justices desired some reward might be given to him; upon the receipt of which the Parliament Voted him a gift of five hundred pounds, and an annuity of 200 lib. a year, and at a conference of both Houses they resolved to consider of the relief of Ireland, and passed several Votes to that end; but little was done for their relief till the King returned to London, which was about the end of November.

The King receives intelligence of what hapned in Ireland and sends Sir James Stuart with instructions thither.

He moves the Parliament of Scotland for aid, which they excuse.

O Conally the discoverer of the Plot rewarded.

The Irish to dishearten the English from any resistance, bragg'd that the Queen was with their Army; that the King would come amongst them with Auxiliary Forces; that they did but maintain his cause against the Puritans; that they had the Kings Commission for what they did (shewing indeed a Patent that themselves had drawn, but thereto was affixed an old Broad Seal that had been taken from an obsolete Patent out of Farnham Abby by one Plunket; in the presence of many of their Lords and Priests, as was afterwards attested by the Confession of many.) That the Scots were in confederacie with them, to beget a faith of which, they abstained for some time from the lives and fortunes of those of that nation among them.

The Irish pretend the Kings Commission for what they did, thereby to dishearten the English.

On the other side to encourage the Natives of their own party, they produced fictitious Letters, wherein they were informed from England, that the Parliament had passed an Act, that all the Irish should be compelled to the Protestant worship; and the refusers for the first offence should forfeit all their Goods, for the second their Estates, and for the third their lives. Besides they presented them with the hopes of Liberty: that the English yoke should be shaken off; that they would have a King of their own Nation; and that the Goods and Estates of the English should be divided among the Natives.

And feined Letters that the Parliament would compel them to protestancy.

With these hopes of Spoil and Liberty in the Irish, the Rebellion increas'd. The Rebels in Ulster under the conduct of Sir Phelem Oneal, assisted by Turbeck Oneal his Brother, Rory Mac-Guire Brother to the Lord Mac-Guire, Philp O Rely, Mulvere O Rely, Sir Conno Mac Gennes, called Mac Ruian, and others had possest themselves of all the strong places in Ulster, (London-Derry, Colrein, & the Town and Castle of Eniskellen excepted) many places which the English defended, and they could not either surprize by Treachery, or take by plain force, they had surrendred to them upon composition and Articles, which they afterwards most perfidiously broke, butchering and massacring the poor English without pity or compassion to Age or Sex, though they still spared the Scottish Plantations in Ulster, because of their numbers; and likewise for fear of the Scottish Army so easily to be transported into the North parts of Ireland, till such time as their General Sir Phelem Oneal (one of the Race of the late bloody Earl of Tyrone, of English Education, a Gentleman of Lincolns-Inn, and a Professed Protestant till some time before) having gathered together a numerous rabble of the natives, who dayly flocked in to him, fell upon their Quarters; where though he exercised not that cruelty upon their persons which he did upon the English, yet he deprived them both of their goods and livings, enforcing many of them to fly away naked to the Scottish shore; from thence he marched into the English Pale, and in the beginning of November he took Dundalk, and soon after he encamped at Arde within seven miles of Tredagh.

The Rebels possest themselves of all strong places in Ulster.

They contrary to Articles of surrender massacre the poor English but spare the Scots.

The King finding his stay in Scotland to be somewhat longer than he expected, that the business of Ireland might not suffer thereby, referr'd the whole business of Ireland to the Parliament of England, who had undertaken the charge and management of the War, wherewith the Earl of Leicester acquainted the Lords Justices, letting them know further, that they had declared a speedy and vigorous assistance, and had designed for their present supply, the sum of 50000 lib. which would be raised with all convenient speed.

The Parliament designs money for Ireland.

By this time the Lords of the Councel in Ireland had armed as many as they were able, and given Commissions for raising of several Regiments, which were put into the hands (for the most part) of Gallant men, as their actions afterwards testified to the world; Sir Charles Coote, an active, and valiant man (who was also 1641. made Governour of Dublin) with great ſpeed made up his Regiment out of the poor, robbed, and ſtripped Engliſh, which had fled to Dublin; Sir Henry Titchborn a worthy Commander was diſpatched away with a Regiment of Foot, to keep Tredagh from the approaching Rebels: the Lord Lambert, and Sir Thomas Lucas, Captain Armſtrong, Captain Yarner, with others raiſed many Companies of Souldiers there.

Forces raiſed to go againſt the Rebels.

This was done about the middle of November; at which time alſo the Earl of Ormond with his well armed Troop of Horſe came to Dublin; wherewith in few days after, he was by a Commiſſion ſent from the Earl of Leiceſter, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (as likewiſe by the Kings approbation from Scotland ſignified in a Letter) made Lieutenant General of all the Forces there, who being a perſon of great eſtate, credit and reputation in that Kingdom, and a Proteſtant, did very eminent ſervice againſt the Rebels.

The Earl of Ormond made Lieutenant General of the forces there.

The Parliament in proſecution of their great promiſes, ſent over twenty thouſand pounds in money which arrived ſeaſonably at this time, their treaſure being much exhauſted, by paying the new Companies they had raiſed, but with this ſmall relief they were much incouraged, and very ſucceſsful ſervice was performed in divers places againſt the Iriſh, but no levies of men were made in England, till the King had diſclaimed his power of preſſing Souldiers, and thereby laid himſelf open to thoſe Arms that were afterward raiſed againſt him: the firſt Souldiers they ſent was a Regiment under Sir Simon Hartcourt, who arrived in Ireland on the laſt of December.

A Regiment ſent to Ireland under Sir Simon Hartcourt.

Whilſt that Kingdom was thus diſtreſſed, the King returned out of Scotland into England about the end of November, and was by the City of London entertained, feaſted and conducted to his Palace at Whitehal with as pompous ſolemnity, and coſtly expreſſions of love and duty as ever any King of England was, and the chief of them afterward were feaſted by him at Hampton-Court, where ſeveral of the Aldermen had the honour of Knighthood conferred upon them: but this little proſpect of happineſs was quickly clouded by a Remonſtrance of the State of the Kingdom preſented to him at Hampton-Court a few days after his arrival there, from the Houſe of Commons, which they prepared for him againſt his coming to London, wherein all the miſtakes and misfortunes which had happened from the Kings firſt coming to the Crown and before, to that very hour were with great aſperity recited.

The King returns out of Scotland.

The Parliament preſent a Remonſtrance to him at Hampton Court.

Moſt moderate men wondered at this carriage towards the King, ſince he had from the firſt ſitting of the Parliament, denied nothing to them, they reaſonably asked, and when he went to Scotland it was voiced to all, that he parted a gratious King, from a contented people: and in Scotland he gave ſo much ſatisfaction to that people (though afterwards as appeared by their unfaithfulneſs they were perverted) that they cauſed an Act (then in force) to be publiſhed and revived, That it ſhould be deteſtable and damnable Treaſon in the higheſt degree that could be for any of the Scots Nation conjunctly or ſingly to levy Arms, or any Military Forces upon any pretence whatſoever, without the Kings Commiſſion.

An Act publiſhed in Scotland againſt levying arms without the Kings Commiſſion.

Thoſe in the Parliament of England that were ill diſpoſed to the Kings perſon and Government (as too many were) were much diſpleaſed at theſe methods of his to gain the affections of his people; & therefore they us'd all the endeavors they could, to blaſt him, & this remonſtrance as an engine for that work was prepared and brought into the Houſe, where the greateſt induſtry and skill imaginable was uſed by private ſollicitations, threats and promiſes to procure it to paſs; the Debate laſted from ten in the morning till three of the Clock the next morning, ſo that at laſt they carried it by eleven Voices, when many of the more aged, and perſons of beſt fortunes not accuſtomed to ſuch watchings were wearied out, and many others not daring to provoke the prevailing faction, left the Houſe: the conſent of the Lords was not asked, for of that they deſpaired, though ſome of them were too apt to be ſeduced: this they preſented to the King at Hampton-Court, with a Petition before it as ſharp as the Remonſtrance it ſelf, wherein they deſired him:

1641.

A petition preſented with the remonſtrance.

1. To concur with the People for depriving the Biſhops of their Votes in Parliament. (for which there was yet no Bill paſs'd.)

2. To imploy ſuch people about him as the Parliament might confide in: and,

3. Not to alienate any of the forfeited and eſcheated Lands in Ireland, which ſhould accrew to the Crown by reaſon of the Rebellion, and thereupon they promiſed to undergo the hazard and expences of the War, and to apply themſelves to ſuch Counſels and courſes, as may ſupport the Royal Eſtate with honour and plenty at home, and with power and reputation abroad.

This Petition and ſtrange Remonſtrance, was gratiouſly received by the King, from the hands of the preſenters, who were Members of the Commons Houſe; and he promiſed an anſwer to them, but in the mean time deſired, that the Remonſtrance might not be printed and publiſhed to the People: the thing it ſelf, and the printing any thing of the like nature, being never heard of, by the direction of the Houſe of Commons till this Parliament, it being the firſt appeal to the people and of fatal conſequence, both to the King, & many of the buſie Actors in this tranſaction.

The King receives the petition.

And deſires them not to publiſh the remonſtrance.

But without giving the King leiſure to anſwer, ſpecial direction was given for printing the Remonſtrance, and equal care taken for the publiſhing it in all places and parts of the Kingdom: but this did not hinder the King from performing his promiſe, to anſwer their Petition, and vindicate himſelf from theſe aſperſions that were publiſhed in the Remonſtrance, to leſſen or blemiſh his Reputation with the people.

They contrariwiſe order it to be publiſhed in all parts of the Kingdom.

The King anſwers the Petition and vindicates himſelf from the aſperſions of the Remonſtrance.

That part of the Petition, that he would not alienate the forfeited and eſcheated Lands in Ireland, he did diſlike, he ſaid, it might be a reſolution very fit for him to take (though he doubted whether it were ſeaſonable to take reſolutions of that nature, before the events of the War were ſeen) and to all the other parts, he gave ſuch modeſt and gratious replies, (but yet not without ſome reſentment of their dealing towards him) that many of the prime Actors were much diſcontented, to find their practices ſo fully diſcovered, ſo that they had recourſe to their former perillous remedy, the tumults of the multitude to bring about their next deſign.

For

The Commons pass a Bill for disabling all persons in Holy Orders to exercise Temporal Jurisdiction.

For the Commons having passed a Bill of disabling all persons in holy orders to exercise any Temporal Jurisdiction or Authority (wherein the Votes of the Bishops in the House of Peers were taken away) when it came to the Lords House it met with a very cold reception; but the tumultuous rabble were so insolent that they assaulted and evil intreated some of the Peers even at the doors of their House, crying out against Bishops and bending most of their malice against them, whereby they were deterred from doing their duty; and afterwards they went to White-Hall, and made a stand before the Gate in a great body, saying, they would have no more Porters-Lodge, but would speak with the King when they pleased: and when the Lords at a conference with the House of Commons, desired they would joyn with them in a Declaration for the suppressing such tumults, several speeches were made in justification of them, Mr. Pym saying God forbid that the House of Commons should proceed in any way to dishearten people to obtain their just desires in such a way.

The tumult upon the Lords slighting the Bill, comes to their House, and clamour against the Bishops.

The Commons justifie those tumults.

The Lords having in vain tried this way, appointed by advice of the Judges a Writ to be directed to the Sheriffs and Justices upon divers Statutes to suppress all tumultuous resort, in obedience to which the Justices appointed the Constables and others to attend about Westminster, to hinder that unlawful conflux of people, which was no sooner done; but the Constables and Justices of the Peace were sent for by the House of Commons, and the setting forth a Watch was Voted to be a breach of Priviledge, and before any conference with the Lords, by whose direction that Legal Writ issued out, the Watch were discharged, and one of the Justices for doing his duty according to that Writ was sent to the Tower.

The Lords direct a writ to the Sheriffs and Justices to suppress those tumults.

Whereupon the Constables and Justices are sent for by the Commons.

These licentious and unpunished tumults, gave occasion to the Bishops (who could not repair to the House without danger of their lives) to frame their Petition and Protestation to the King and Peers, which was to this purpose:

The Bishops protestation against the actions of the Parliament.

They protested themselves to abominate all actions or opinions tending to Popery, or any malignity against the State; but were willing and ready to perform their duties in Parliament: But whereas coming to perform that duty and service, they have been rudely menaced, affronted, and put in fear of their lives by multitudes of people, and can find no redress or protection upon complaint made, they therefore humbly protest before his Majesty and the Noble Peers, that saving to themselves all their Rights and Interests of sitting and Voting in that House at other times, they dare not sit and Vote in the House of Peers, until his Majesty shall further secure them. And because their fears are not in vain, but upon true grounds and objects, they do in all duty and humility therefore protest before his Majesty and the Peers, against all Laws, Orders, Votes, Resolutions and Determinations, as in themselves null and of none effect, which in their absence since the 27 th. of this instant December 1641. have already passed, as likewise against all such as shall hereafter pass, during this their enforced absence from the said House. Which Protestation they desired the King to command the Clerk of that House to record.

The Lords were so much displeased at this Protestation, that immediately at a conference with the Commons, they declared it was of dangerous consequence, and deeply intrenching upon the fundamental Priviledges & being of Parliament, at which the Commons took so great a heat, that after a little debate, they pass'd a resolution by vote to accuse them of High Treason, and sent Mr. Glyn to the Lords House to impeach them thereof, which caused their commitment to the Tower, where they continued about four moneths.

They are charged with treason and committed to the Tower.

The King thinking himself at this time unsafe at Whitehal without a Guard, accepted of the offer of some Gentlemen of the Inns of Court to be a Guard to him, by which means the insollency of the Rabble was in some degree checkt, but they instructed by their heads laboured to make it more unsafe to the King, by seeking on this occasion to raise the rage and jealousie of the whole City against him. For at midnight there were cries made in the streets of London, that all people should arise to their defence, for the King with his Papists were coming to fire the City, and cut their throats in their beds; then which though nothing was more false, yet it found the effects of truth; and the people by such Alarms being terrified from sleep, the impressions of those nightly fears lay long upon their Spirits in the day, and filled them almost with madness.

The King upon this sent a message to the Common Councel of London, complaining of tumultuous assemblies of the people from the City daily resorting to Westminster to the disturbance of that Place and his Palace at Whitehal; but the House of Commons to obviate this, Petitioned him for a Guard for security of their Persons, alleadging, that there was a malignant party, bitterly envenomed against them, who did daily gather strength and confidence, and were now come to that height of boldness, as to give out insolent and menacing speeches against the Parliament it self. It was therefore their humble desires that they might have a Guard out of the City, commanded by the Earl of Essex, Lord Chamberlain of his Majesties Houshold, of whose fidelity to the King and Commonwealth no question was ever made.

The Parliament petition the King for a Guard.

This Petition was denied by the King; but with a solemn engagement of himself by the word of a King, that the security of all, and every one of them from violence was, and ever should be as much his care, as the preservation of himself and his children, and if this general assurance would not suffice, to remove those apprehensions, he would command such a Guard to wait upon them, as he would be responsible for to Almighty God.

The King denies the Petition.

The King at such time as he was in Scotland, and expostulated with some of the Chiefs among them, touching their coming into England in a Hostile manner, and found, that some who were now leading men in the Houses of Parliament, had invited them to it. And having furnish'd himself with sufficient proofs thereof, he commanded his Attorney General to draw up an Impeachment of High Treason against some of them; That is to say, the Lord Kimbolton a member of the House of Peers, Denzill Hollis Esq. Sir Arthur Haslerig, Mr. Hambden, Mr. Pym, and Mr. Strode, 1641.

Kimbolton with five Members of the House of Commons charged with High Treason by the King.

all Members of the House of Commons, appointing him likewise to inform the House of Peers therewith, and with the general matters of the charge; and at the same time he sent a Serjeant at Arms to the House of Commons, to acquaint them that he did accuse, and intend to prosecute the five Members of that House for High Treason, and did require that their Persons might be secur'd in Custody.

The Articles of their Accusation were, to this purpose.

1. That they had endeavoured to subvert the Government, to deprive the King of his legal power, and to place on Subjects an arbitrary and tyrannical power.

2. That they had endeavoured by foul aspersions upon his Majesties Government, to alienate the affections of his People from him.

3. That they endeavoured to draw his late Army from his Obedience, to side with them in trayterous designs.

4. That they trayterously invited and incouraged a forein power to invade his Majesties Kingdom of England.

5. That they trayterously endeavoured to subvert the very Rights and Beings of Parliament.

6. That they have endeavoured by force, and terror, to compel the Parliament to joyn with them in their trayterous designs, and to that end have actually raised and countenanced tumults against the King and Parliament.

7. That they have trayterously conspired to levie, and actually have levied War against the King.

The Commons justifie the accused Members.

The House of Commons did nothing herein to comply with the Kings intimation to them concerning the accused Members, but when a Serjeant at Arms was sent to arrest their persons, there came a countermand from them, by which the Serjeant was deterr'd from doing his Office; for they had voted, if any person came to attach them without order from that House, they might stand upon their defence, and make resistance.

The King seeing this obstruction of Justice, and that opposition was like to be made if he proceeded in the ordinary way of Justice, resolv'd to go himself to the House of Commons, and by a cleer discovery of his intentions, prevent all seeming inconveniences, and in this he was so secret, (as he thought) that he discovered it not till the very minute of his going.

He therefore took with him the Palsgrave, (his Nephew) and about 100 Lords and Gentlemen, and their followers, and went to the House of Commons, where commanding his attendance to move no further than the Stairs, to offer no violence, nor return any uncivil language to any, although provok'd; He himself, with the Palsgrave only, entred the House, and demanded that the accused Persons may be delivered into his hands, with whom he promises to deal no otherwise than according to Law, but they whom he sought, being before inform'd, as it is reported, of the Kings coming, by the secret intelligence of the Countesse of Carlisle, had forsook the place, and withdrawn themselves into the City, wherefore the King having renew'd his Charge, without injury to any, immediately departed.

The King comes to the House of Commons to demand the delivery of the five Members.

This Act of the Kings was voted by the Commons a breach of Priviledge, and strange reports and scandals were raised against him in the City of London, by the friends of the accused Members, as that he had offered violence to the House of Commons, and came thither with force to murder several Members, and used threatning speeches against the Parliament, with which the City was so possess'd, that unusual Watches were set, and Guards plac'd in several places thereof, as if some desperate attempt or assault were to be made upon it; and as if all men were now absolved from the rules of obedience; Publick direction is given, for drawing down the Train-bands of the City to Westminster on a day appointed, to guard and bring in triumph the Persons accus'd of High Treason, as such worthy Patriots, that the Common-wealth it self could not subsist, but with reference to them.

The Commons vote this a breach of Priviledge.

This coming to the knowledge of the King, although many gallant and faithful Servants proffered their Service, to curb any insolencies that should be attempted on him, yet was he resolv'd to withdraw himself, with the Queen and their children to Hampton Court, to give time for their jealousies and rumors to waste and perish. And though the King was not conscious to himself of any error in his first proceeding against these Members, remembring that in a Petition from both Houses of Parliament in the beginning of his Reign, in the case of the Earl of Arundel it was asserted, that in case of Treason, Felony, & breach of Peace, Priviledge of Parliament doth not extend; yet neither his desisting from the Prosecution of that impeachment, nor any thing that he could either say or do, would give satisfaction.

The King removes to Hampton-Court.

But that nothing might be omitted in him to manifest the cleerness of his intentions, he sent a message to the Parliament of the twentyth of January, wherein in gratious expressions he propos'd; That since particular Grievances and Distractions were too many, and would be too tedious to be presented by themselves, that they would comprise and digest them into one entire Body, that so both he and themselves might be able to make the more clear Judgement of them; And that it should then appear, by what he would do, how far he hath been from intending or designing any of those things, which the too great fears and jealousies of some Persons, seem'd to apprehend; and how ready he would be to equal or exceed the greatest examples of most indulgent Princes in their Acts of Grace and Favour to the People.

The Kings message to the Parliament.

This Message was receiv'd by the Parliament with thanks, and most people expected very good effects of it, but the accused Members and their faction, fearing this good disposition of the King might put an end to their Empire, cast about all waies how they might obstruct the settlement of affairs, and in a Petition to the King on pretence the better to enable them to discharge their duties in those matters, they desir'd him to raise up to them a sure ground of confidence by putting the Tower of London into their hands, together with the Command of the Royal Navy, as also all the Forts, Castles, and Train-Bands of the Kingdom, all which they comprehended under the name of the Militia: This Petition was ill reliss'd

The Commons petition the King to have the Militia put into their hands.

1641. reliſh'd by him, but he conceal'd his reſentment for ſome time, and about the midſt of February he and the Queen went to Canterbury with the Princeſſe Mary, and from thence to Dover, and there ſhe imbarqued her ſelf with her Daughter, and accompanied her to Holland: The Kings ſtay at Canterbury and Dover was not long, nor the place ſo remote, but that ſome buſineſs paſs'd, of which the greateſt was, The Bill for taking away the Biſhops votes in Parliament; from Canterbury the King came to Greenwich, and from thence he ſent for the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of York to come to him, to accompany him to York, whither he forthwith went, as to a place of ſafety, where he might better find a way to compoſe thoſe differences which now began to imbroyl the Kingdom.

The Queen accompanies the Princeſſe Mary into Holland.

The King moves to York.

The Parliament ſend after him in his journey to York two Petitions for the Militia, one came to him at Theobalds, and the other at Huntington, to both of which he gave a denyal; but ſince they could not have it by his conſent, they took it without it, and both Houſes paſs'd it by an Ordinance, and ſetled it in divers Counties in the hands of ſuch as they repoſed confidence.

The King look'd upon this as the beginning of a War againſt him, and therefore that he might not be ſurpriz'd, he iſſued out ſeveral Commiſſions of Array to perſons of the moſt eminent quality, to muſter, train and array the Subjects for defence of himſelf and the Kingdom; and becauſe of the indiſpoſition of the Earl of Northumberland to command the Fleet, the King appointed Sir John Pennington in his place; but the Parliament by a meſſage of the 28*th.* of March, diſliked of that choice, and recommended the Earl of Warwick to the King, but this the King would not admit of; Nevertheleſs, they authorized him to command the Fleet without the Kings conſent, and within a few Moneths they uſed ſuch arts, that he became poſſeſs'd of the whole Navy: At Hull the King had a Magazine of Arms, and ammunition provided for the late intended War againſt the Scots, which was laid up there, when the occaſion of that War was taken away. Of this Town he intended to poſſeſs himſelf, and to make uſe of his own Arms and Ammunition for his own Preſervation; but coming before the Gates of the Town, he was denied entrance by Sir John Hotham, who by the appointment of the Houſe of Commons, had newly taken Charge of that place.

The King iſſues out Commiſſions of Array.

1642. The King and Parliament differ about who ſhall be chief Commander at Sea.

Sir John Hotham denies the King entrance into Hull.

The King thereupon proclaimed him Traytor, and by letters to the Parliament complain'd to them of the indignity, and required ſatisfaction, but they juſtified him therein, and ſent a Committee of the Lords and Commons to reſide there, for the better ſecuring of the Garriſon to them, and they gave the Governour power to raiſe the Train-bands for his defence. The King was forc'd for the time to indure this indignity, but being very intent of ſubduing the Rebellion of Ireland, he ſent a Meſſage to the Parliament to declare his intention to go thither in Perſon, and acquainted them with his purpoſe in order thereunto, to raiſe two thouſand Foot, and two hundred Horſe in the Counties near Cheſter for a Guard to his Perſon, which was ſo grateful news to the Lords Juſtices and Councel of Ireland, that they very much rejoyc'd thereat, but the Parliament were ſo jealous of any thing that tended to the Kings ſecurity, that they reſolved to oppoſe it, but in regard it was a popular action, they were forced to uſe art in it; They ſhewed many inconveniences in the undertaking ſuch a journey, both in the hazard of the Kings Perſon, and interruption of the proceedings of Parliament; but the chief matter was an apprehenſion, that hereby the King might have a good occaſion of raiſing Souldiers for his defence againſt the deſigns and contrivances againſt him; wherefore in the concluſion of their anſwer to the Kings meſſage, They declare, that they cannot conſent to any levies but ſuch as they ſhall adviſe and direct, and if any be otherwiſe rais'd, they muſt declare againſt them.

1642. The Parliament oppoſe the Kings intention to go in perſon into Ireland.

The King did hereupon decline the levying of Guards and his Journey to Ireland, but reflecting now upon the affront of Sir John Hotham to him, and hearing that the Parliament againſt his conſent had raiſed Guards to themſelves, He ſummoned the Gentry of York-ſhire to a meeting, and acquainted them, That his Magazine at Hull was going to be taken from him againſt his will, the Militia againſt the Law, and his conſent, put in Execution, and Sir John Hotham's treaſon countenanced; ſo that upon theſe conſiderations, he was reſolved to have a Guard to ſecure his Perſon, in which he deſired their aſſiſtance, that he might be able to protect them, the Laws, and the true Proteſtant Religion from violation, or injury.

The King ſummons the Gentry of York-ſhire to his aſſiſtance.

The Kings deſires herein were with great affection complyed with, but the Parliament, upon notice thereof, declared, That it is againſt the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, that any of the Subjects thereof, ſhould be commanded by the King to attend him at his pleaſure, and that whoſoever, upon pretence of his Majeſties command, ſhall take up Arms in a War-like manner, ſhall be eſteemed diſturbers of the Peace, and to be proceeded againſt accordingly; but this did not terrifie the people of York-ſhire from doing their duty to the King.

The Parliaments declaration.

The breach now began to grow very wide, and many Members of both Houſes repaired to the King to York, inſomuch that in a very ſhort ſpace, there were more of the Peers at York, than ſitting with the Parliament at Weſtminſter.

Many Members of both Houſes repair to the King to York.

The Commons, that they might not ſeem dejected at this time, ſent up an impeachment to the Houſe of Lords againſt nine of thoſe Peers that deſerted, that is to ſay, The Earl of Northampton, the Earl of Devonſhire, the Earl of Dover, the Earl of Monmouth, the Lord Howard of Charleton, and the Lord Rich for high Crimes and Miſdemeanors; the ſubſtance whereof was, "For that contrary to their duty, they had deſer-"ted their attendance on the Houſe, abſenting "themſelves, after a Vote paſſed in both Houſes; "That the King ſeduced by wicked Councel, in-"tended to make War againſt the Parliament, and that whoſoever ſerv'd or aſſiſted him in that War, was adjudg'd a Traytor.

The Commons impeach nine of the Peers.

He thereupon is proclaim'd Traytor. The Parliament juſtifie Sir John Hotham.

1642. Upon the impeachment, the House of Peers entred into debate thereof, and the nine Lords were censured:

The nine Lords censured.

1. Never to sit more as Members of that House.

2. That they should be utterly uncapable of any benefits or Priviledges of Parliament, and that they should suffer imprisonment during their pleasure.

Not long after this, the Lord Keeper Littleton sent away the great Seal to the King, by one Mr. Elliot who was sent to him for it, and the next day he himself followed it, and came safe to the King at York; but this departure of the Seal, put the Parliament to a great plunge, and they sent (in vain) to intercept it in its passage.

The Lord Littleton flies to York with the Great Seal.

The King found himself in very good esteem in the Northern parts, but he was rather willing to prevent the effusion of Blood, by any reasonable accommodation, than ingage the Nation in a Civil War; and during his abode at York many Messages and Replies to that purpose passed between him and the Parliament, and at last, that they might not seem altogether averse from Peace, about the beginning of June they sent a Petition to the King with Nineteen Propositions.

The Propositions were:

The Parliaments propositions to the King.

1. That all the Kings Privy Councel, great Officers, and Ministers of State may be put out, excepting such as the Parliament shall approve, and to assign them an Oath.

2. That all Affairs of State be managed by the Parliament, except such matters as are transferred by them to the Privy Councel, and to be concluded by the Major part of the Nobility under their hands: the full number not to exceed five and twenty, nor under fifteen; and if any place fall void in the interval of Parliament, then the major part of the Councel to chuse one to be confirmed at the next Session of Parliament.

3. That all the Great Officers of the Kingdom shall be chosen with approbation of Parliament, &c. as before said.

4. The Government and Education of the King's Children by Parliament, &c. ut supra.

5. Their Marriages to be treated and concluded by Parliament, &c.

6. The Laws against Papists, Priests, and others be executed without Toleration or Dispensation, except by Parliament.

7. No Popish Lord or Peer to have Vote in Parliament, and their Children to be educated in the Protestant Faith.

8. To reform Church Government as the Parliament shall advise.

9. To settle the Militia as the Parliament have ordered, and for the King to recal all his Declarations published against their Ordinances therein.

10. All Privy Counsellors and Judges to take Oath for maintenance of the Petition of Right, and other Statutes which shall be made this Parliament.

11. All Officers placed by Parliament to hold their places quam diu bene se gesserint.

12. All Members of Parliament put out during this time to be restored again.

13. The Justice of Parliament to pass upon all Delinquents, and they to appear or abide their censure.

14. The General Pardon to pass with Exceptions, as the Parliament shall advise.

15. All Forts and Castles of the Kingdom to be disposed of by Parliament, ut supra.

16. The King to discharge all his Guards and Forces now in being, and not to raise any other, but in case of actual Rebellion.

17. The King to enter into a strict alliance with all Reformed States, for their assistance to recover the Rights of his Royal Sister and her Princely Issue to those Dignities and Dominions which belong unto them.

18. To clear the Lord Kimbolton and the five Members by Act of Parliament.

19. No Peer hereafter to be made, shall sit in Parliament without their consent.

And these Articles being confirmed, the Parliament engage to make him a happy Prince.

The King rejects the propositions

The King shewed great dislike at these Propositions, for indeed they seemed rather calculated to gratifie the ambition of some of those that framed them, than for any other purpose, and the answer he gave was more smart than usually his answers were.

Amongst other things, he told them, That they had contrary to Law pressed their Ordinances on the people, wrested from him the Command of the Militia, countenanced the Treason of Hotham, and had directed to the People Invectives against his Government, asperst him with the favouring of Papists; and with an utter dislike of the Propositions, he protested, that if he were vanquisht and a Prisoner, in worse condition than any the most unfortunate of his Predecessors had ever been reduced unto, he would never stoop so low, as to grant those demands, and to make himself of a King of England, a Duke of Venice.

Both sides make preparation for War.

And now both sides prepared for War, and on the 10*th.* of June an Order was made by both Houses of Parliament, for bringing in of Money and Plate to Guild-hall for their Service, wherein it was expresst, that whosoever should bring any Money or Plate, or furnish any with Horse and Arms, should have their moneys repaid with Interest, according to eight in the hundred, for which both Houses of Parliament did ingage the Publike Faith.

The King was not wanting to his own Preservation in the mean time, and to do whatsoever might give incouragement to the business he had in hand; and first he assembled all the Peers then at York to attend him, and made to them a short Declaration, wherein he expressed himself to them in these words.

The Kings Declaration to the Peers at York.

We do declare, that we will require no obedience from you, but what is warranted by the known Laws, as We expect that you shall not yeeld to any Commands not Legally grounded, or imposed by any other. We will defend you all, and all such as shall refuse any such Commands, whether they proceed from any Votes and Orders of both Houses, or any other way, from all danger whatsoever. We will 1641. will defend the true Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſhed by the Laws, the lawful Liberties of the Subjects of England, and the juſt Priviledges of all the three Eſtates of Parliament; and ſhall require no farther obedience from you, than as we accordingly ſhall perform the ſame. And we will not (as is falſely pretended) engage you in any War againſt the Parliament, except it be for our neceſſary defence againſt ſuch as do inſolently invade, or attempt againſt us and our Adherents.

Upon this Declaration of the King thoſe Lords and others of his Councel made a Promiſe to him, and ſubſcribed it with their hands as followeth.

The Peers Engagement to the King.

We do ingage our ſelves not to obey any Orders or Commands whatſoever, not warranted by the known Laws of the Land. We engage our ſelves to defend your Majeſties Perſon, Crown, and Dignity, with your juſt and legal Prerogative, againſt all Perſons and Power whatſoever. We will defend the true Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſhed by the Law of the Land, the lawful Liberties of the Subjects of England, and the juſt Priviledges of your Majeſty, and both Houſes of Parliament. Laſtly, we engage our ſelves not to obey any Rule, Order, or Ordinance whatſoever, concerning the Militia that hath not the Royal aſſent.

The King forbids the Lord Mayor of London to raiſe Arms or Money.

The King immediately wrote a Letter to the Lord Mayor of London, and the Aldermen and Sheriffs, forbidding by expreſs Command any Contribution of Money or Plate towards the raiſing of any Arms whatſoever for the Parliament; and invited all his loving Subjects (to prevent their own danger and the danger of the Kingdom from a Malignant party,) to contribute money or Plate to Him, and they ſhall be repayed with conſideration of 8 in the Hundred, and immediately upon it, he made a Profeſſion before thoſe forementioned Lords and Counſellors about him; avowing any preparations, or intentions to levie War againſt the Parliament; upon which the Lords and others then preſent at York, made this further Declaration and Profeſſion, ſubſcribed under their hands.

The Lords and others at York in a Declaration

We whoſe names are underwritten, in obedience to his Majeſties deſire, and out of the duty which we owe to his Majeſties Honour, and to truth, being here upon the place, and witneſſes of his Majeſties frequent and earneſt Declarations and profeſſions of his abhorring all deſigns of making War upon the Parliament; and not ſeeing any colour of Preparations or Counſels that might reaſonably beget the belief of any ſuch deſign, do profeſs before God, and teſtifie to all the world, that we are fully perſwaded that his Majeſty hath no ſuch intention; but that all his endeavours tend to the firm and conſtant ſettlement of the true Proteſtant Religion, and the juſt priviledges of Parliament, the Liberty of the Subject, and the Law, peace, and proſperity of this Kingdom.

1642. acquit the King from any deſigns of making War againſt the Parliament.

The King was ſtrengthned with ſome Arms and Ammunition from Holland, from the endeavours of the Queen, but more ſtrengthned by this Proteſtation in his behalf, concerning his intention of not making War againſt the Parliament, proceeded in his buſineſs with great circumſpection and indefatigable induſtry, and from York he went to Newark, where he made a Speech to the Gentry of Nottinghamſhire in a loving and winning way, commending their affections towards him: another Speech he made at Lincoln to the Gentry of that County full of Proteſtations concerning his good intentions not only to them but to the whole Kingdom and the Laws and Liberties of it, ſo that within three weeks both in his own Perſon, and by his Meſſengers with Speeches, Proclamations, and Declarations, he advanced his buſineſs in a wonderful manner. From Lincoln he removed to York, and from thence to Beverley, from whence he ſent a Meſſage to both Houſes, and a Proclamation concerning his going to Hull, to take it in, requiring before his journey that it might be delivered to him: Which they anſwered with a Petition, praying him to disband all his Forces about Hull, to recal his Commiſſion of Array, diſmiſs his Guards, and come to his Parliament, at which the King was much diſpleaſed, and the Parliament Voted, that an Army ſhould be raiſed, whereof by the Vote of both Houſes the Earl of Eſſex was choſen General, with whom they proteſted to live and die in that cauſe; the King had about 3000 Foot, moſt of them Train-band-men, and 1000 Horſe before Hull.

The King takes a journey into Nottinghamſhire and Lincolnſhire to win thoſe places to his party.

The King reſolves to reduce Hull

The Parliament raiſe an Army under the command of the Earl of Eſſex.

Hotham upon the Kings advance, having the advantage of a Spring-tide, drew up the Sluces and drowned all the Countrey about the Town.

The Parliament took all care imaginable to ſupply the Town, which they reinforced with 500 Souldiers, under the Command of Sir John Meldrum. The King finding ſo great a ſtrength to oppoſe him, and conſidering the preciouſneſs of that time which he conſumed there without hope of ſucceſs, reſolved to march away: ſome about him, laid the fault of his not prevailing, upon the unskilfulneſs of the Countrey Captains, and the unexperienced rawneſs of the Souldiers, it was ſaid, the King might have ſped better, if Sir John Pennington could have brought part of the Navy to his aſſiſtance, to have ſtreightned them by Sea, but that was ſeized by the Earl of Warwick.

The King leaves Hull.

The Earl of Warwick gets the command of the Navy.

The Earl of Eſſex was very buſie in raiſing his Army, the Earl of Bedford was made General of the 1642. the Horſe, Sir John Merrick Major General of the Army; the Lord Roberts, the Lord St. John, the Lord Rochford, the Lord Gray of Growby, Mr. Denzil Hollis, Mr. Hambden, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir William Waller, Sir Samuel Luke, Sir Henry Cholmley, and Mr. Grantham, all Members of Parliament, had Commiſſions for Regiments.

The King in the mean time was not idle, he went to Leiceſter, where he ſummoned the Gentry and Freeholders, and by his great affability won many of them to an opinion of his Cauſe, and from thence by the firſt of Auguſt he returns to York, where he ſummoned the County, and acquainted them with the Parliaments preparations for War, and deſired their advice and aſſiſtance, for the Parliament had now publiſhed a Declaration for the raiſing of all power and force by Train-bands or otherwiſe to lead againſt all Traytors and their Adherents that oppoſed the Parliament, and them to kill and ſlay, as enemies to the peace of the Kingdom, and in it they named moſt of the Kings Lord Lieutenants and Commiſſioners of Array in the ſeveral Counties. The King then recommended to them the compleating of a Regiment for the Prince, and that he might not be behind hand with the Parliament, he publiſhes a Proclamation, wherein the Earl of Eſſex was proclaimed a Rebel and Traytor to the King and Crown, and all Colonels and Officers authorized by the Parliament that ſhould not inſtantly lay down their Arms were declared guilty of High Treaſon.

The Earl of Eſſex and the reſt of the Parliaments Commanders proclaimed Rebels by the King.

To obviate this, the Parliament had declared, That whoſoever ſhall return from the King to the Parliaments Army within ten days after publication, ſhould have reception and pardon, excepting Perſons impeacht of Delinquencie or Treaſon, or ſuch as have been eminent Actors againſt them, and except the Duke of Richmond, the Earls of Briſtow, Cumberland, Newcaſtle, Rivers, and Carnarvon, the Viſcounts Newark and Faulkland, Secretary Nicholas, Endymion Porter, and Mr. Edward Hyde.

The King hearing the Parliament intended to ſend an Army Weſtward, gave Commiſſion under the Great Seal of England, to the Marqueſs of Hartford, to be his Lieutenant General within the Counties of Devon, Cornwal, Sommerſet, Dorſet, Wilts, Southampton, Berks, Oxford, Hereford, Monmouth, Radnor, Brecknock, Glamorgan, Carnarvon, Pembroke and Cardigan; and ſent to encourage Colonel Goring, who kept Portſmouth at that time for him.

The King ſets up his Standard at Nottingham He ſends to treat with the Parliament.

The preparations were very great on both ſides, and on the 20*th.* of Auguſt the King ſet up his Standard at Nottingham, from whence he ſent up a Meſſage to both Houſes by the Earls of Southampton and Dorſet, and Sir John Culpepper for a Treaty of Peace.

When they came to Weſtminſter they were not permitted to ſit in Parliament, whereof they were Members, nor could the Earl of Southampton (againſt whom there was leaſt exception) be admitted to deliver it, but it was ſent into the Houſe of Peers by the Uſher of the Black Rod.

In the Meſſage the King ſignified,
That obſerving that many miſtakes had ariſen by the Meſſages, Petitions, and Anſwers, betwixt him and the two Houſes of Parliament, which might be prevented by ſome other way of Treaty, wherein the matters in difference might be more clearly underſtood, and more freely tranſatted, he propoſed that a certain number of perſons might be ſent, and inabled by the Parliament to a Treaty in ſome indifferent place, with the like number authorized by him. 1642.

The Parliament anſwered to this effect, That until he take down his Standard, and recal thoſe Proclamations, & Declarations wherby he declared the actions of both Houſes to be treaſonable, & their perſons Traytors, and wherby he had put them and the whole Kingdom out of his protection, they cannot admit of any ſuch Treaty. The Parliaments anſwer to the Kings Meſſage.

The King replied to this, That he never did declare both Houſes of Parliament Traytors, or ſet up his Standard againſt them, much leſs to put them and the Kingdom out of his protection, and to remove all ſcruples which might hinder a Treaty, he promiſed ſo that a day be appointed by them for the revoking their Declarations againſt all perſons as Traytors, or otherwiſe for aſſiſting him, he will upon the ſame day recal his Proclamations and Declarations, and take down his Standard. The Kings reply.

To this the Parliament anſwered by Petition, inſiſting upon their former requeſt, To recal his Proclamations, concluding, that they can never allow themſelves to be ballanced with thoſe perſons about the King, who they ſtiled perſons of deſperate diſpoſitions and Counſels.

Thus did they contend for ſome time by Declarations and Proclamations, which proved all fruitleſs, for the Parliament having in their power all the Kings Revenue and his Navy, together with the ſtrength and riches of the City of London, and great contributions from them and others of money and plate, thought the Kings forces ſo inconſiderable in reſpect of theirs, that they deſpiſed all the overtures he made for peace, or put ſuch expreſſions into the anſwers they made to them, that he could not with honour and ſafety approve of them.

About the beginning of September Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice, the ſecond and third Sons of the late King of Bohemia, came to offer their ſervice to the King their Unkle, whom preſently he put into Command; Prince Rupert within a fortnight after his arrival commanded a ſmall party of thoſe Forces which the King had at that time gathered together, with which he marched into divers parts of Warwickſhire, Nottinghamſhire, Leiceſterſhire, Worceſterſhire, and Cheſhire, his forces ſtill encreaſing as he marched. Prince Rupert and Pr. Maurice put into command by the King.

And whilſt the Prince was thus active with his party, the King moved on ſlowly with thoſe forces which he had, through Darbyſhire, Staffordſhire, Leicerſhire, and Nottinghamſhire, and ſo on to Shrewsbury, where he intended to Quarter for a time, as a fit Rendevouze for thoſe Troops & Companies he expected from Wales & other adjacent parts; for thoſe of Denbigh & Flintſhire and gene- The King takes up his Quarters at Shrewsbury.

1642. generally all Wales were very cordial to him and his Cauſe.

To Shrewsbury the King cauſed a Mint to be brought, and there coined all the Plate which he then had, or was then and ſoon after preſented to him; for the Univerſity of Cambridge, and many Noblemen, Gentlemen, and others, about that time had ſent their plate to him, and many others had furniſhed him both with men, Horſes, and Arms; and within few days after his coming thither his ſtrength by his diligence and addreſs was wonderfully increaſed, even beyond his own hope, for he had ſummoned the Gentry and Freeholders, and made to them a Speech ſo full of affectionate expreſſions, as rendred him to their thoughts, an injured Prince, and moved compaſſionate affections towards him: the Speech it ſelf was in theſe words:

His Speech to the Gentry.

Gentlemen,

It is ſome benefit to me, from the inſolencies and misfortunes which have driven me about, that they have brought me to ſo good a part of my Kingdom, and to ſo faithful a part of my people: I hope neither you nor I ſhall repent my coming hither; I will do my part that you may not; and of you I was confident before I came. The reſidence of an Army is not uſually pleaſant to any place; and mine may carry more fear with it, ſince it may be thought (being robb'd and ſpoyled of all mine own, and ſuch terror uſed to fright and keep all men from ſupplying me) I muſt only live upon the aid and relief of my people. But be not afraid; I would to God my poor Subjects ſuffered no more by the inſolence and violence of that Army raiſed againſt me, (though they have made themſelves wanton even with plenty) than you ſhall do by mine; and yet I fear I cannot prevent all diſorders; I will do my beſt: And this I promiſe you, no man ſhall be a loſer by me, if I can help it.

I have ſent hither for a Mint; I will melt down all my own Plate, and expoſe all my Land to ſale or morgage, that if it be poſſible, I may not bring the leaſt preſſure upon you: In the mean time, I have ſummoned you hither to do that for me and your ſelves, for the maintenance of your Religion, and the law of the Land (by which you injoy all that you have) which other men do againſt us. Do not ſuffer ſo good a cauſe to be loſt, for want of ſupplying me with that, which will be taken from you by thoſe who purſue me with this violence. And whilſt theſe ill men ſacrifice their Money, Plate, and utmoſt induſtry to deſtroy the Common-wealth, be you no leſs liberal to preſerve it. Aſſure your ſelves, if it pleaſe God to bleſs me with ſucceſs, I ſhall remember the aſſiſtance that every particular man here gives me, to his advantage. However, it will hereafter (how furiouſly ſoever the minds of men are now poſſeſſed) be honour and comfort to you, that with ſome charge and trouble to your ſelves, you did your part to ſupport your King, and preſerve the Kingdom.

God had ſo bleſſed the juſt endeavours of the King, that before the middle of October, which was about three weeks after his firſt coming to Shrewsbury, with a ſmall body of an Army, he was grown to a ſtrength conſiſting of ſix thouſand foot, three thouſand brave horſe, and two thouſand dragoons in one body, beſides what he had in other parts, of which he gave the chief command, under himſelf, to the Earl of Lindſey, and the next to General Ruthen a Scotch Gentleman of great experience, and Prince Rupert was made General of the Horſe, and the next in command to him was Commiſſary Wilmott.

1642. The Earl of Lindſey chief Commander of the Kings Army.

Whilſt the King and the Parliament were gathering their Forces together, ſeveral parties were imployed in divers parts of the Kingdom; Collonel Goring was beſieg'd in Portſmouth by Sir John Meincles Regiment of Foot, and the County Trained-Bands, with one Troop of Horſe, to which place a Squadron of the Fleet was alſo ſent to ſtraighten it the more, and the Garriſon Souldiers were ſo practiſed on, the Governor had no confidence in them, ſo that though the Marqueſſe of Hartford haſtened to his relief with ſome Forces he had newly raiſed, yet he was neceſſitated to ſurrender the Town before he could help him, and had conditions to be tranſported in one of the Kings Ships to the Brill in Holland, whether he was conveyed accordingly; But the Marqueſs of Hartford, though he could not ſecure Portſmouth, yet he ſeized on Sherborne Caſtle in Dorſet-ſhire, and paſſed by the Earl of Bedford, (who commanded in thoſe parts a party of the Parliaments Troops) and marched over Severn into Wales to raiſe more Forces for the King, giving the Earl a little Bruſh in his paſſage.

Portſmouth ſurrendred up to the Parliament.

Sherborne Caſtle ſeiz'd on by the Marqueſſe of Hartford, for the King.

The Parliament Army raiſed under the Earl of Eſſex, was now grown to a conſiderable Bulk, conſiſting of about 16000 Horſe and Foot united in one Army, beſides parties abroad, their general Randezvouze was at Northampton, where the Lord Brook, Lord Roberts, Collonel Hambden, and many others of the chief Commanders ſtaid with them, expecting the preſence of the General, and on the ninth of September, he ſet out of London with great ſolemnity; The Parliament ſent a Petition to him at Northampton, to be by him preſented to the King; the effect of which was, To entreat his Majeſty to withdraw his preſence from thoſe wicked perſons about him, (for ſo all the Kings party were called by them) and not to mix his danger with theirs, but that he would return to his Parliament without his Forces, and by their advice compoſe the preſent diſtempers.

The Earl of Eſſex marches out of London to his Army.

The Parliaments petition to be preſented to the King by the Earl of Eſſex.

The Earl of Eſſex after he had been at Northampton a while, had increaſed his Army to the number of 20000. from whence he march'd to Coventry, and from thence to Warwick, and having left ſome Companies in both thoſe Towns for their ſecurity, he march'd away towards Worceſter, upon intelligence that the King himſelf intended to come thither with his Forces.

Sir John Byron had firſt entered Worceſter for the King, whom Captain Fiennes had endeavoured to diſlodge with ſome Troops of the Parliament and Countrey Voluntiers which he had gotten together, with whom he aſſaulted the Town on the Weſt ſide of Severn, ſuppoſing ſome of Eſſex his Troops were marching towards the Town on the other ſide, (as he was informed by a Spie,) but thoſe proved to be a party of the Kings Horſe under Prince Rupert, who march'd into the Town with 500 Horſe, and made Fiennes draw off to a diſtance. The Prince had notice that Collonel Sandys with a Regiment of Parliament Horſe, together with Captain Hales, Captain Wingate, Captain Fiennes, and Captain Anſtin were drawn together to attack him, and thereupon he march-out of the City into a green Meadow near adjoyning, and drew up his men into Battalia, the paſſage to the Meadow was through a lane where not above four could march a breſt, of which the Prince took the advantage, and charged them firſt there, where the Rear could not come up to aſſiſt the Van, nor the Van retreat without great diſorder, ſo that the Prince prevailed: Douglas, Colonel Sandys his Major was ſlain, and the Colonels own Cornet, the Colonel himſelf was deſperately wounded, and many of his Souldiers killed, and ſome ſlaughter was alſo made of the Princes men.

Sir John Byron takes Worceſter for the King.

Col. Sandys routed at Worceſter by Prince Rupert.

The Prince after the fight drew into Worceſter, but hearing Eſſex was marching thither with his whole Army, he went away to Ludlow, twenty miles from thence; nor was his intelligence ill, for immediately after the fight Eſſex came to Worceſter with his Army, where he lay a moneth, and from thence he ſent the Earl of Stamford with a Party to Hereford to impede the Kings levies in Southwales, and ſent other Forces to poſſeſs Gloceſter and Briſtol. The Parliament began now to apprehend the Kings ſtrength; for many began to appear for him in ſeveral parts of the Kingdom; in Yorkſhire and the Northern parts, the Marqueſs of Newcaſtle, the Earl of Cumberland, Sir Marmaduke Langdale, Sir Francis Wortly, and many others had raiſed many Souldiers, and were ſo powerful, that the Lord Fairfax, Sir Thomas Fairfax his Son, Sir John Hotham, and his Son Capt. Hotham, who had gathered ſome men together for the Parliament were not able to appear againſt them: In Cornwal a body was framing under Sir Bevil Greenvil, and Sir Nicholas Slaning; and Sir Ralph Hopton a perſon of good conduct and courage was haſtning to them to aſſiſt in their levies, and many others in ſeveral parts of the Kingdom were arming on both ſides.

And in Cornwal.

Whilſt the affairs of England were in this Military poſture, Ireland was neglected, ſome few Regiments were ſent over from Scotland, and the Earl of Leiceſters Regiment under Colonel Monck from England, but in no proportion to the neceſſities of that Kingdom, nevertheleſs they made many impreſſions upon their enemies into Leinſter and Ulſter, but Munſter was but meanly ſupplied.

The King had conſented to an Act of Parliament before he left London, For the ſpeedy and effectual reducing of the Rebels in his Majeſties Kingdom of Ireland to their due obedience; wherein ſeveral perſons were invited as Adventurers to advance money for that ſervice, who were to be repaid in Land for the ſame when the Rebels ſhould be ſubdued, according to the proportions following, for each adventure of 200 lib. one thouſand Acres in Ulſter: for three hundred pounds, one thouſand Acres in Conaght; for 450 lib. one thouſand Acres in Munſter; for ſix hundred pounds, one thouſand Acres in Leinſter; all according to the Engliſh meaſure, and conſiſting of Meadow, Arable and profitable paſture, the Boggs, Woods, and barren Mountains being to be caſt in, over and above, and to be holden in free and common ſoccage of the King, as of his Caſtle Dublin, and ſo for a greater or leſſer ſums: and it is particularly enacted that no part of that money which ſhould be paid in according to the Act, ſhall be imployed to any other purpoſe, than the reducing of thoſe Rebels, until they ſhall be declared to be ſubdued. The Parliament nevertheleſs to enable them the better to ſet out their Army had diverted 100000 l. of this mony, whereat the King was very much offended and reſented it very ſharply in one of his Meſſages to them; but they anſwered, that they did intend ſpeedily to repay it, and to recapitulate, did charge the King with intercepting 900 Suites of Cloathes, with a Chirurgions cheſt, and ſome draught Horſes going into Ireland for the Train of Artillery there; but the Parliament made yet bolder, and made uſe of the greateſt part of a Brigade raiſed under my Lord Wharton and one Colonel Horton, deſigned for Munſter, againſt the King in a Battle which was this year fought, of which hereafter; but by this proceeding on both ſides, it was evident they both thought the ſecurity of England more conſiderable to them than that of Ireland, which could not well ſubſiſt without this.

The Title of the Act.

The Parliament divert ſome of the money deſigned for the relief of Ireland, for ſetting out their own Army.

It was now about the middle of October when the King came from Shrewsbury, he marched along by Coventry and ſummoned the Town, but by the example of Hull, he was denied entrance.

The King denyed entrance into Coventry.

Marching on, he came and lay at Southam being but a ſmall diſtance from Eſſex his Army, from whence he ſtruck a terror into the City of London it ſelf, for he was then nearer to London then Eſſex was, inſomuch that both Houſes began to apprehend his approach, and Ordered that the Train Bands ſhould be ſpeedily raiſed for a Guard and ſome works for planting of Ordnance in ſpecial places about the City of London and Suburbs, and the Parliament ſent twelve Companies to poſſeſs and guard Windſor Caſtle.

The Earl thought it his chief work to march as near to the King as he could; and on the 22 th. of October he lodged at Keinton within ſix miles of the King, who then lay at one Sir William Chauſeys houſe near thereunto, and his forces lodged at Cropredy and Edgecot.

The King the next morning drew his Army to Edgehil, and Eſſex intended to reſt all Sunday in Keinton, to expect two Regiments of Foot, eleven Troops of Horſe, and ſeven Piece of Cannon who were a days march behind him, but when he heard the Kings Army was in the field, he drew his Army into Battalia, conſiſting of 12000 Foot in twelve Regiments, and 40 Troops of Horſe, and Dragooners; the Kings Army was eſteemed about ten thouſand Foot, and about 4000 Horſe and Dragooners, but moſt of the Foot were very ill armed; at the bottom of Edgehill, there was a large Plain, called the Vale of the Red Horſe, where Eſſex drew his Army into Battalia, about a half mile diſtant from the foot of Edgehill; the main Battel of the Kings Army was led on by the Earl of Lindſey on foot, with a Pike in his hand, Prince Rupert commanded the Kings right wing, wherein was the greateſt ſtrength of Horſe, and General Ruthen, and Commiſſary Wilmot in the left; the right wing of the

The Battel at Edgehil.

1642. the Parliaments Horſe was commanded by Sir Philip Stapleton, and the left which had the greateſt force, by Sir James Ramſey then Commiſſary General; the General himſelf was in the Main body, and Sir John Meldrum had the Van: the King perceiving the Hedges near the hill lined by ſome Muskettiers of Eſſex his Army, ſent Major Boſtock and Captain Hammond of Sir Lewis Dives his Regiment down the Hill to remove them, but in the mean time my Lord of Eſſex cauſed three pieces of Cannon to be fired upon the Kings Army, which was anſwered from the King with the like number, and then the Battel began, and was continued with ſuch fury that near ſix thouſand were ſlain upon the place; and certainly the Parliament Army had been undoubtedly ruined that day, and an abſolute Victory gained on the Kings ſide to the concluſion of the War, if the right wing of the Kings Army had not too far purſued the Victory, gained over the left wing of Eſſex his Army (which was routed at the firſt charge) but wheeled about to aſſiſt thoſe Regiments that were ſomewhat too much diſtreſſed by their abſence, for they followed the chaſe to Keinton, where they ſeized on the Carriages and Wagons of the Enemy, and went two miles further, till they were in ſight of Colonel Hambden, who was marching up to the Parliament Army with a Brigade of freſh men: upon ſight of the freſh men, they wheeled about, and though their ſo long abſence was blamed, yet they came time enough to ſecure a Victory to their party, which was before dubious: thoſe of Quality that were loſt of the Kings ſide, were the Earl of Lindſey, the Lord Aubigny, and Sir Edmund Verney: of the Parliaments ſide many were ſlain, but there being but few of equal note in that ſervice to thoſe of the Kings, they are not remembred, only mention is made of the Lord St. John, Colonel Charles Eſſex, and Lieutenant Colonel Ramſey; the Lord Willoughby of Ersby, Colonel Vavaſor, and Sir Edward Stradling of the Kings party were taken priſoners: the Kings Standard was taken but regained by Captain Smith, who for that ſervice was in the field Knighted Banneret; each part pretended to the Victory, but it went clearly on the Kings ſide, who though he loſt his General, yet he kept the field, and poſſeſs'd the dead bodies, and rifled all the Wagons and Carriages of the Enemy; and not ſo only, but he made his way open to London which the Earl before endeavoured to hinder, and in his way in the very ſight as it were of the Earl of Eſſex, he took Banbury Caſtle, where he had fifteen hundred Arms, and finally entred triumphantly into Oxford with no fewer than an hundred and fifty Colours. Amongſt the papers of the Earl of Eſſex a Letter was found from one Blake that attended the King, and held correſpondence with the the enemy, for which he was tried by a Court Martial, and condemned and executed betwixt Abington and Oxford.

Banbury Caſtle taken by the King.

The Earl after the Battel marched to Warwick, and left the Countrey clear to London to the King, and he after a very very ſhort ſtay at Oxford, marched through Abington to Henley, where his Army was two or three days refreſhed, and from thence he made a nearer approach towards London, and came to Colbrook in the mean time the Earl of Eſſex had alſo marched with his Army nearer to London, and on the ſeventh of November came himſelf to Weſtminſter, where he was wellcomed by both Houſes of Parliament, and had a preſent of 5000 lib. given to him.

1642. The Earl of Eſſex comes to Weſtminſter and is received with great honour.

Whilſt the King was at Colbrook, the Parliament ſent a Petition to him by two Peers, and three Commoners, wherein in very humble terms, they deſired his Majeſty to ſtay at ſome convenient place not far from London, till ſuch time as Committees of Parliament might attend him, with ſome Propoſitions for the removal of the preſent Diſtempers, the King liked well of this Petition, and ſent back the Meſſengers with a very complying anſwer, ſignifying, that he would reſide at his Caſtle at Windſor, or any other place if that ſhould not be liked, till ſuch time as Committees might be ſent to him: but the ſame night that he had diſpatcht theſe Meſſengers, news was brought that Eſſex had advanced with his Army, and the Artillery towards him, and that having poſſeſt himſelf of Windſor, Kingſton, and Acton, if Brentford were likewiſe poſſeſt, the Kings Army would be ſo ſtreightned, that it could neither well move nor ſubſiſt, whereupon a Councel of War being called, it was reſolved that part of the army ſhould advance, & diſpoſſeſs the enemy from Brentford, which was accordingly done, & there was for ſome time a very ſharp fight betwixt the Kings forces and thoſe of the Parliament that were there lodged, but the Kings party prevailed, killed the Commander in chief then preſent, and ſeveral others, and took 500 priſoners, and as many arms, with 15 pices of Ordnance, 11 Colours and ſtore of Ammunition; and the King was reſolved the next day to have marched to London, had not advice come that both the remainder of that Army under Eſſex, & the Auxiliaries of London under the Earl of Warwick, were drawn upon Turnham-Green to oppoſe his marching further; whereupon he paſſed his Troops over Kingſton-Bridge to Oatlands, and from thence to Redding, where he left a good Garriſon, and marched with forces to Oxford.

The Parliament preſent a petition to the King at Colebrook.

The fight at Brentford in which the Kings party prevailed.

The King marched to Oxford.

The City of London were very much inſtigated by ſome incendiaries upon this action of the Kings, and were wrought on to petition the Parliament to proceed no further in the buſineſs of accommodation for which they had the thanks of both Houſes, though the Parliament in a Meſſage to the King, did confeſs that they gave direction to the Earl of Eſſex to draw the Army out of London, and that part of it was quartered at Brentford, whilſt the Committee was with the King, but they endeavoured to excuſe it, by ſaying, that they ſent a Meſſenger with a Letter to know whether his Majeſty intended forbearance of hoſtility, who found the parties in fight, and could not paſs.

The Kings forces in the North, became very conſiderable, the Earl of Newcaſtle, and the Earl of Cumberland being joyned, made up 8000 Horſe and foot, and their power daily increaſed, ſo that the Lord Fairfax and his Son Sir Thomas, Captain Hotham, Sir Hugh Cholmley, Sir Edward Loftus, Sir Matthew Bointon, Sir Henry Anderſon and others who commanded for the Parliament in theſe parts were ill able to 1642. withstand them, and the Kings side received a good addition of strength in those parts by the landing of Collonel Goring at Newcastle with two hundred Commanders from Holland, and other provisions of War, which made the Lord Fairfax and those with him implore aid from the Parliament, and they thereof form'd an association of the Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, Cambridge, the Isle of Ely, and the City of Norwich, whereof the Lord Grey of Wark was by commission of the Earl of Essex made Commander in chief, with authority to raise Forces.

In February General King a Scotch Commander of great experience in military affairs, came out of Holland, landed at Newcastle, joyned himself with the Earl of Newcastle, and passed to York with 6000 Arms. In the same Moneth also, the Queen landed from Holland at Burlington-Bay, with great Provision of Arms and Ammunition, and many Commanders of note in her Retinue, and was conveyed by the Earl of Newcastle to the City of York, to which place, the Earl of Montrosse, and the Lord Ogilby came to her out of Scotland with 120 Horse; and Sir Hugh Cholmley, who had the Government of Scarborough for the Parliament, declar'd for the King, and presented himself at York with 300 men to the Queen for his Service; Sir John Hotham also and his Son, were at the same time inclin'd to desert the Parliaments cause, but their intentions were discovered, and they were both seized upon at Hull, and sent up to London, where they long remained Prisoners in the Tower, before the time of their Tryal and execution.

Sir John Hotham and his Son sent up prisoners to the Parliament.

The Parliament having fortified Glouceſter with a good Garrison, thought of inlarging their quarters towards Oxford, and had in order thereunto, drawn a great strength into Cirenceſter, the King was not well pleased with this neighbourhood, but ordered Prince Rupert with 4000 horse and foot, to take the Town, who marching by as if he intended to attempt Sudely Castle, (which had been lately before taken by * Massey,) when they expected him not, turn'd his whole force upon them, and after about an hours resistance made himself Master of the place, where he took eleven hundred prisoners, and three thousand Arms.

The King was not so exalted by these successes to be well pleased with a War, that brought so much calamity to his people, and therefore he proposed a Treaty to the Parliament, to which after many delaies they consented, and about the beginning of March, the Earl of Northumberland, Mr. Pierpoint, Sir William Ermine, Sir John Holland, and Mr. Bulstrode Whitlock attended him at Oxford with propositions of Peace; but they were such as rather did beseem a conquering than a losing side, yet the King being resolved to treat upon them; howsoever, he found the Commissioners so straightned in time, and so tyed to such particular instructions as the Houses had given them, that nothing could be yielded to which might conduce to the composing of the present distempers, so that after many messages betwixt London and Oxford, the Parliament sent to their Commissioners to return to London upon the 17*th*. of April; upon which the Earl of Essex immediately advanc'd with his Army to besiege Redding then a Garrison for the King.

The Treaty at Oxford proves ineffectual.

1643. The King upon the first notice sent a supply of 700 Musketteers to the Town, and some store of Ammunition, but all could not avail to the holding out of the Town against so great an Army, continually supply'd from London with fresh men, provisions and ammunition.

The King therefore after a while sent a good body of Horse and Foot to relieve the Town, who assaulted a quarter of the Parliaments Army at Causam Bridge within a mile of it, where many of the Kings Forces were slain, and forced to retreat, but those in the Garrison were thought to have failed in performance of their duty, in not drawing out a sufficient party to have made a diversion at the same time, but the failer herein, was imputed to Collonel Feilding then Lieutenant Governor for Sir Arthur Aston the Governor, who was disabled from service by a bruise or wound he had received in the siege, so that within 16 daies of Essex his first sitting down before the Town, it was render'd to him upon Terms, but honourable enough, viz. All the Forces to march out in war-like manner with 50 Carts for carriage, free passage to Oxford, the Town to be sav'd from plunder, and that whosoever would, might have liberty to leave it within six weeks after.

Redding surrendred to Essex by Col. Feilding deputy Governor.

The Town of Redding was infected with a pestilential Feaver when Essex enter'd it, which caused a great sickness and mortality amongst his Souldiers, besides which, they were much discontented for want of pay, so that when he removed to Causam House to avoid the infection, many of his Souldiers unanimously disbanded and went away; but though he gain'd nothing by this Town, the murmur at Oxford was great for the losing of it, and Collonel Feilding was accused of treachery therein, and being found guilty by a Court martial, was sentenced to be shot to death, but by the Kings clemency he was pardoned.

About this time scarce any County of England was free from the War, and in most places the Kings parties were victorious; In Warwick-shire, Northampton-shire, and Stafford-shire, many encounters passed betwixt the Kings Forces under Prince Rupert and the Earl of Northampton of the Kings side, and the Lord Brooke, Sir John Gell, and Sir William Brereton for the Parliament, by one of which the Earl of Northampton lost his life, and the Lord Brooks was slain before the Town of Lichfeild, which was afterward taken by his Souldiers, and again retaken by Prince Rupert.

The Earl of of Northampton routing the Parliaments Forces, is himself slain.

Lichfield taken by Prince Rupert.

In York-shire and those more Northern parts, the Lord Fairfax and his Son did take some Towns, and do more than could be expected from so little force, but after a while, the whole Countrey was subdued by the Kings Arms, and they were forced into Hull.

York-shire subdued by the Kings Arms.

The greatest part of Wales was for the King, but to prevent the increase of his good fortune: The Earl of Stamford was sent with an Army into the West, where Sir Ralph Hopton, with some Forces of the Kings, lay before Plimmouth then a Garrison for the Parliament, but upon the Earls advance, he drew from thence, and fought and defeated a great part of the Earls Forces; after this, a truce was made betwixt the Earl and Sir Ralph

The Earl of Stamfords Forces defeated by Sir Ralph Hopton.

1643. Ralph Hopton for twenty daies, and in the mean time Sir George Chudleigh who had been very active and succesful for the Parliament in Devonshire, began to reflect upon his past actions, and by considering the pretences of both parties, resolved with himself not to hazard his life and reputation, but upon what he thought a most just cause, and hereupon he quitted his side, and joyned with the Kings Forces, but to satisfie his friends with the reason of his so doing he publish'd a short declaration to this effect.

Sir George Chudleighs declaration, shewing the reason of his deserting the Parliament.

That Petitions of Right are commendable, and Remonstrances may be lawful, but Arms, though defensive, are very doubtful. My Lot (saith he) fell to be cast on the Parliament side, by a strong opinion of the goodness of their Cause, which to my Judgement then appeared to be so; Religion and the Subjects Liberty seemed to me to be in danger, but the destruction of Kingdoms cannot be the way to save it, nor can the losse of Christian Subjects, nor the Subjects losse of their Estates by Plunder or Assessement concur with Piety, nor yet with propriety: as for Religion, which is the chief, his Majesty (whom God long preserve) hath given us unquestionable Security. I have cast my self at my Soveraigns feet, and implored his grations pardon. I will contend no more in word or deed. And this my Resolution with the undisputable grounds thereof, I thought good to declare to my friends and Countrey-men, that they may understand my change to proceed from no compulsion.

This addition of strength was very advantageous to the King; for shortly after in a Battail fought at Stratton in Cornwall, the Earl of Stamford was overthrown, and inforced to betake himself to the City of Exeter, whither Sir Ralph and Sir George Chudleigh, with the Devon-shire and Cornish Forces followed him, and with part of their Troops so straightened it, that they had opportunity to imploy the main body of their Army in other Service, which with the conjunction of the Marques of Hartford who had raised many Regiments, the greatest part of the West was reduced to the Kings obedience. Bristol was designed to be seized on for the King about the beginning of May, by one Mr. Robert Yeomans, late Sheriff of the City, and William Yeomans his Brother, with Mr. George Bourchier, and Mr. Edward Dacres, and some others of their friends who had Commission from the King to liste Forces, & possesse themselves of the Town; and for the better enabling them thereunto, Prince Rupert hover'd thereabouts with a party of 5000 men, but the raising and listing of Souldiers made the matter so communicative, that it was discovered to the Governor, who caused the four above-mentioned to be seized on, and tryed by a Court Marshal, who condemn'd them all, and Robert Yeomans and Bourchier were on the 30*th.* of May executed, and the like fate hapned to some worthy Gentlemen and other Eminent Citizens of London, who intended to have contrived a meane to have put a period to the present War, by stopping the issues of it in the Fountain, by securing the City of London, and seizing several Members of Parliament. It was detected by one Roe a Servant to Mr. Tomkins, on the last day of May; The chief Actors were, Mr. Edmond Waller a Member of the House of Commons, Mr. Tomkins, Mr. Chaloner, Mr. Hasell, Mr. White, and Mr. Blinkorne, who were to be strengthened in their endeavors by the Kings Commission of Array brought to London privately by the Lady Aubigny; but upon this detection, all was blasted, and the persons before named, were all tried by a Court Martial at Guild-Hall, and condemned, whereof Mr. Tomkins and Mr. Chaloner were on the 5*th.* of July executed; Mr. Waller after a years imprisonment in the Tower, paid a fine of ten thousand pounds, and was for ten years banished into France. 1643.

The like hapned to several Gentlemen and Citizens of London for a design laid to seize it.

Sir William Waller about the time of Edge-Hill Fight, had received a Commission to be Collonel of a Regiment of Horse, and had gained a great reputation with the Parliament and the City of London, for some service he did that Winter with Collonel Urrey, Collonel Browne, and some others in the taking of Chichester, and hindring levies for the King in Sussex, so that he was furnished with an Army this Spring, with which he did many acceptable Services to his party in Wiltshire, Glouceter-shire, Monmouth and Hereford-shire, wherein he took many Towns possessed by the Kings Souldiers, and was very succesful, but whilst he was active in those parts, the Parliament pressed the Earl of Essex to march towards Oxford to streighten that Garrison, and take some order by the conjunction of the forces of the associates, to hinder Prince Ruperts joyning with the Queen; In prosecution whereof, he march'd with his Army to those parts of Buckingham-shire which were neerest to Oxford, and setled his head quarters at Thame; upon his coming thither, the weather was very unseasonable, and great rains fell, so that his Souldiers became very weak and sickly, and much mortality ensued, but to put a good face upon his condition, he frequently sent out parties upon several occasions, though little or no service was at any time perform'd by them, but about the sixteenth of June, intelligence came to Oxford that a great party of Parliamenteers was then quartered at Postcombe and Chimer in Oxford-shire towards Thame, and Prince Rupert drew out a good party to attack them in their quarters, which he did, and took many Prisoners, but upon the Alarm, Collonel Hambden, with Sheffield and others of Essex his Army, drew into Chalgrove-Field, with design to fight the Prince, where he drew towards them, and after a brisk charge or two, he routed them, and took many Prisoners, and horses and arms, and killd many, Major Gunter was shot dead upon the place, and Collonel Sheffield and Mr. Hambden were both very much wounded, of which the last died three or four daies after, it being observed, That he received his wounds in that field where he first executed the Parliaments Commission for the Militia, against the Kings authority; upon this affront Essex draws his Army off to Bristol, with a purpose to recruit his Regiments with some forces from the neighbouring Counties, but they were too much busied to spare any assistance. About this time (or a little before) the Parliament resolved upon a very extraordinary action, which was the making of a new great Seal, it had some opposition in the debate, but by a majority of voices in both houses, 1643. Houſes it was voted to be done; yet to put ſome colour on the enterprize, they paſſed an Order, That if the Lord Keeper Littleton upon ſummons did not return with the Great Seal within fourteen days, he ſhould looſe his place, and what ever ſhould be ſealed therewith by him after that time ſhould be null and void in Law. But this menacing Vote did not bring the Great Seal from Oxford; ſo that their new Great Seal was made, and ſome few moneths after the uſe of it authorized by Ordinance of both Houſes.

The Queen marcheth with her Forces towards the King.

The Queen was now marching with ſix or ſeven thouſand Horſe and Foot towards the King, but in the way ſhe was ſo careful of Lincolnſhire and Nottingamſhire, that ſhe left twenty Troops of Horſe and two thouſand Foot, with Arms for five hundred more under the Command of Colonel Charles Cavendiſh who did eminent ſervice before and after in thoſe Counties. About the 13 th. of June ſhe came to Newark, and was there well-comed with a Victory obtained three days before over ſome of the Parliaments Forces by the ſame Colonel Cavendiſh at Dunnington in Lincolnſhire: after ſome ſtay at Newark, her Army marched to Burton upon Trent, which was taken by the Lord Fermine Commander in Chief of her Army, and from thence ſhe went by eaſie marches to Stratford upon Avon, where Prince Rupert came to her with many Troops from Oxford, ſhe had with her when he met her three thouſand good foot, and thirty Troops of Horſe and Dragoons, with ſix pieces of Ordnance, two Mortar-pieces, and a hundred and fifty Wagons which with thoſe of the Prince made up a better Army than Eſſex could make to oppoſe them; for his men were waſted by ſickneſs to a very inconſiderable number, and he drew them to Kingſton and other places near London, to lie there till he could recruit. In the mean time the rent betwixt the King and Parliament became wider than ever, for now they proceeded to that height to draw up Articles of High Treaſon againſt the Queen, ſome of them were:

The Parliamentarians beaten at Dunnington in Lincolnſhire by Col. Cavendiſh.

Articles of High treaſon againſt the Queen.

1. That ſhe had pawned the Crown Jewels in Holland.

2. That ſhe had favoured the Rebellion in Ireland.

3. That ſhe had endeavoured to raiſe a party in Scotland againſt the Parliament; and that ſhe had gone in the head of a Popiſh Army in England, for ſo they termed the Forces with her (though few or none of that Religion were amongſt them) divers other Articles were framed againſt her; upon which Mr. Pym carried up an Impeachment to the Lords: they were (or ſeemed to be) at firſt ſurpized at ſo extraordinary a matter, but after ſome time they agreed to the Charge.

The ſucceſſes of Sir William Waller gave ſo great a reputation to his Army that the King ſent for his Weſtern Forces towards Oxford to hinder the progreſs of his fortune, for it was feared at Oxford if he had not ſome check he might make himſelf maſter of Ludlow and Worceſter and ſo bring a great tract of Land and many conſiderable Garriſons into the power of the Parliament: Sir Ralph Hopton in purſuance of his Orders was marched into Sommerſetſhire and Prince Maurice with the Earl of Carnarvon and a good ſtrength of Horſe were ſent from Oxford to joyn with him. Sir William Waller was come to Bath with his Army, with whom Sir Edward Hungerford, Sir John Horner, and Mr. Strode were joyned, and they marched towards Sir Ralph Hopton, and came ſo near him, that on the third and fourth of July ſome skirmiſhes had paſſed betwixt ſome parties of each ſide, and priſoners were taken of both parties, but on Wedneſday the 5 th. of July the two Armies engaged at a place called Lanſdown about eight miles from Briſtol, and the fight was maintained betwixt them from two in the afternoon till one the next morning, at which time the Parliamentarians left the field, and the Kings party had gained a great Victory, if by accident their Ammunition had not blown up, whereby two Captains were ſlain, and above twenty wounded, whereof Sir Ralph Hopton himſelf was one, & in the battel Sir Bevil Greenville a perſon of great renown & integrity to the Kings Cauſe was ſlain, together with Mr. Leak a hopeful young Gentleman Son to the Earl of Scarſdale, who was found dead in the field with the Colours of the enemy about his arm, as alſo one Lieutenant Colonel, one Major, and two Captains; what Officers fell on the Parliaments ſide was not known, becauſe the publiſhers of ſuch actions were unwilling to be very particular in their relations that they might not too much diſcourage their party. 1643.

Landsdown Fight.

Waller being advertiſed of what had happened having got ſome freſh men from Briſtol marched after Hopton, hoping to ingage him before he could get Ammunition to defend himſelf, ſo that he was forced to retire to the Devizes a Town in Wiltſhire, and there he was by Waller block'd up, and after a while he became ſo diſtreſſed that he began to treat about the ſurrender of it, (for Prince Maurice was with the Horſe retired towards Oxford) but immediately the fortune of War changed, for the King having notice of Hoptons condition, ſent Commiſſary Wilmot with the Earl of Carnarvon and Crawfords Regiments of Horſe and others to the number of fifteen hundred to relieve him; upon whoſe approach near to Sir William Waller, he drew off to a place called Round-way-down, where the Horſe began the fight, but after a while both Horſe and Foot encountred each other, and Wallers Army was totally vanquiſhed; and four braſs Guns, and all the Ammunition and Baggage were taken, with nine Cornets of Horſe, and eight and twenty Colours of Foot; Sir Arthur Hazlerig was wounded; and many other Officers, and a great number of Soldiers killed; and this Victory was obtained on the 13 th. of July, on the ſame day whereon the King and the Queen met at the foot of Edgehil, where the firſt Battel betwixt him and the Earl of Eſſex, had been fought as was before mentioned; their meeting after ſo long abſence and on ſo ſad an occaſion was very joyful to each other, they went that night to Sir Thomas Popes houſe at Wroxon, where they lay all night, and the next morning they came with the Prince, the Duke of York, and their Army with the Carriages and Ammunition to Woodſtock and from thence to Oxford, where her coming was rather to a triumph than a War.

The King and Queen meet at Edghil.

May's Abridgment. fol. 100.

The

1643. The King being willing to profit himself of this good success to his forces, ordered Prince Rupert to joyn himself with his Brother and the whole body of his strength in those parts and to march immediately to Bristol. Before which place he came on the four and twentieth of July, and summoned it to be surrendred to him: Colonel Nathaniel Fines Son to the Lord Say and Seal was then Governour of the City who made a shew of great resistance, but yet after three days it was surrendred upon the ensuing Articles.

Bristol delivered up to Prince Rupert.

1. That none of the Citizens should be molested in their persons or goods.
2. That every Officer should march forth with his Arms.
3. That every Trooper should ride out with his Horse and his sword.
4. That every Souldier should march away with his Sword, Bag, and Baggage.
5. That a safe Convoy should be allowed for twenty miles.

A fews days after the taking of this City, the King marched thither to see it and settle the affairs of those parts, where presently after his arrival he received news of the surrender of Dorchester to the Earl of Carnarvon, and a day or two after Portland, Weymouth and Melcombe submitted to his forces, so that about this time the King was possessed of all the Western Counties, from the farthest part of Cornwal except some few Garrisons that were blocked up; and now or a little time after the Lord Fairfax and all his forces were defeated at Adderton Moor, and he and them driven into Hull by the Earl of Newcastle: and from thence Northward even to the borders of Scotland there was no Army in the field to hinder the King and his forces from marching whither they pleased: London was then altogether unsatisfied, & many in it favoured the Kings cause, and most of the chief Gentry of the associated Counties were ready upon any appearance for the King to have secured those Counties to him, wherefore it was expected that in this conjuncture of affairs the King would have marched with his Army to London, and the Earl of Newcastle with his into the associated Counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, whereby a sudden end would undoubtedly have been put to this Civil War, which was not only the opinion of those in the Kings Quarters, but many at London and in the Parliament were of the same mind, and some of them deserted the Party and submitted to the King, and others were on the point of quitting the Kingdom. But in the midst of these hopes the King against his own judgment was at a Councel of War over-ruled to go to besiege Gloucester; and a few days after the Earl of Newcastle sate down before Hull; To this fatal City of Gloucester the King in person with his Army marched in the beginning of August, and about the 10 th. he sate down before it, and by two Heraulds summoned the City to be surrendred to him; to which summons within two hours an answer was drawn and consented unto both by the Citizens and Souldiers, which was presented to the King by Major Pudsey and one Toby Jordan a Citizen of the place, in these words:

Several places in the West submit to the King.

The L. Fairfax defeated at Adderton Moor by the Earl of Newcastle.

Hull besieged by the Earl of Newcastel, and Gloucester besieged by the King.

1643.

We the Inhabitants, Magistrates, Officers, and Souldiers within this Garrison of Gloucester, unto his Majesties gratious Message return this humble answer, That we do keep this City according to our Oaths and Allegiance to and for the use of his Majesty and his Royal posterity. And do accordingly conceive our selves wholly bound to obey the Commands of his Majesty signified by both Houses of Parliament, and are resolved by Gods help to keep this City accordingly.

The King received this answer without any expression of choller or indignation, seeming only to wonder at their confidence, for in all appearance they could have no hope of relief, the whose number of Souldiers, Horse, Foot, and Dragoons, together with the Train-Bands, and those Horse and Dragoons, which they on a sudden got from Barkly Castle, amounted to few more than fifteen hundred, forty barrels of powder was all their store, with a very mean and slender Artillery for such a service, and the works were of a great compass and little more than half perfected: so that it was generally believed, the King would rather presently have attempted the Town by a storm, whilst they were yet in some consternation, than wasted his time and Souldiers by a Siege: but by all the intelligence he could get, the Parliament was in no condition to send any forces to disturb him, and his Councel of War thought it better to save his Infantry by a little expence of time, than by exposing the hazard of so many of their lives in an assault. So that a close Siege was made on all sides, though the first had been the wiser Counsel.

The Parliament were very much troubled at the news of this Siege, and used all the endeavours possibly to recruit Essex his broken Army for the relief of it; the first thing they did was to cause 2000 men to be pressed to strengthen some weak Companies, and upon a conference with the Committee of the Militia of the City of London, by consent of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, they procured from thence two Regiments of the Train-Bands, three Regiments of Auxiliaries, and a Regiment of Horse, nor were they less mindful of the North, for the Army from Scotland which they had invited to their assistance could not be ready soon enough to secure these parts, wherefore they passed an Ordinance for the speedy pressing of 20000 men to be raised out of the six Associate Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, Cambridge, Hartford, and Huntington, to be put under the Command of the Earl of Manchester. In preparation whereunto Colonel Oliver Cromwel was very active, he had the year before the Command of a Troop of Horse, with which he secured the Town of Cambridge, and obstructed many Levies for the King in Cambridgeshire, Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk; but sometime before this he had a Commission to be a Colonel, and by authority thereof he raised a Regiment of Horse consisting of a thousand, with which he was imployed in several of the North-west parts of England, where he joyned as occasion 1642. caſion offered with Sir William Brereton, Sir John Gell, the Lord Grey of Groby, and others, and did very conſiderable ſervice to his party; his great deſign was by this new Army to attempt to change the whole Diſcipline of the Parliaments Militia, for having obſerved that the Kings Horſe, who were his greateſt ſtrength conſiſted of Gentlemen, or the ſervants of ſuch, and that theſe led on by a ſenſe of Honour, did in moſt encounters worſt their enemies, he believed if the Parliament Horſe could be framed of the moſt zealous of their party, ſuch as were perſwaded by the preaching of the Miniſters that the Cauſe was Gods Cauſe, and that all their religious Liberties were at ſtake in it, and thoſe that died therein died in the favour of God, and in aſſurance of Salvation, they might ſet this ſenſe of Conſcience againſt the other ſenſe of Honor, and be in better hopes of ſucceſs than before; and this method he put in practiſe as far as he could in the new raiſed forces before-mentioned, whereof moſt of the Officers were very great zealots, and the Souldiers by degrees became of the ſame leven, and thoſe were they that effected afterwards what he hoped for from them.

Eſſex muſters his Army at Hounſlow-Heath.

On the 24*th.* of Auguſt the Earl of Eſſex drew all his Army together to Hounſlow, where allmoſt all the Members of both Houſes of Parliament were preſent, the remainder of his old Army was well recruited, and he had got ſome additional Regiments of Horſe, beſides the Horſe and Foot he had from the City, which made a gallant appearance. That night he marched to Colbrook, where he ſtaid a day for ſome more men that were to come to him, and then he marched to Beckonsfield, and ſo forward to Beerton, where he cloathed his Army, and marched on.

The King thought it ſcarce credible that an Army could have been ſo ſoon got together, but ſince it was ſo, he ſent out parties to obſtruct their march, but they marched ſo cloſe, and in ſo good order, that little obſtruction could be given to his progreſs; ſo that by the fifth of September he came to Presbury Hills, where he drew up his whole Army in view of the City, and diſcharged four pieces of great Ordnance to give them notice of his approach, which was at a time when the Kings forces were prepared ready for a ſtorm, the beſieged in want, and their Ammunition conſumed to three Barrels of powder: but upon conſultation had by the King with the General Officers, it was reſolv'd the Army ſhould draw off, which was done, and all their Huts were ſet on fire. Eſſex marched thence to Cheltenham, and ſtayed there two days, and from thence on the 8*th.* of September he went with his whole Army to Gloceſter, where he ſtaid two nights till he had furniſhed the City with Ammunition, money, and other neceſſaries, and from thence marched to Tewksbury, ſtaying betwixt the Kings forces and that Garriſon four days, to give them more time the better to furniſh themſelves with Victuals: whilſt he ſtayed there he had advice that a body of the Kings Army were then in Cirenceſter Caſtle, and there had laid in great ſtores of Proviſion; upon which advertiſement, want of Victuals and neceſſaries increaſing upon his whole Army, he made a long march with the Van-guard of his Troops to fall upon them, which he did about one of the Clock in the morning, ſending in a party of Horſe to ſeize upon the Centinels and Guards, whilſt himſelf with the reſt of the Horſe begirt the Town, and a Forlornhope of Foot with his own Foot Regiment entred into it, and ſurpriſed two Regiments of Horſe (belonging to Sir Nicholas Criſpe and Colonel Spencer) here he found thirty load of proviſion, which proved a great relief to his Army, then in extreme diſtreſs for want thereof. Having proved ſucceſsful in this encounter, he by ſhort marches paſſed from thence to Cricklade, ſo to Swinden, intending to paſs thorow Hungerford, but paſſing over Oburn Chace, Prince Rupert with the greateſt part of the Kings Horſe charged the whole Army by two commanded parties, one under the Lord Jermyn, and the other under Colonel Urrey, who performed their duties ſo well, that many great Bodies of Eſſex his Horſe and Foot were diſordered with little loſs to the Kings Souldiers or Officers, ſave only to the Marqueſs de la Vieuville, a young French Nobleman, who was a very brave and Generous Cavalier, and unfortunately ſlain.

Prince Rupert with the Kings Horſe diſorders Eſſex his whole Army.

Eſſex from thence marched to Hungerford, and the Prince ſent an expreſs to the King then at Wantage, deſiring him to advance with all haſt to Newberry, the better to hinder Eſſex's march to London, which was the thing he chiefly endeavored. The King was glad of the advice, and in purſuance of it he marched away to Newberry, where he got before Eſſex; the next day the Parliament Army marched from Hungerford toward Newberry, but hearing the Kings forces had poſſeſt the Town, they lay that night in the field, but the next morning by break of day Eſſex gave orders to march to a hill, called Biggs-hill near Newberry, which with ſome ſtruggle he gained, but the Forlorn of the Kings Army by endeavouring to hinder him of ſo advantageous a place, did there begin the fight, which was very vigorouſly proſecuted on both ſides till night came on, that both parties drew off. The next day Eſſex found his way open towards Reading, ſo that although the loſs was equal to both Armies (ſaving that as the Quality of the Commanders were greater on the Kings ſide, more eminent Perſons of that party were ſlain) yet the Victory was allowed to the Parliament Army, becauſe they gained thereby their way to London, from which the King ſtrove to hinder them. The number of the ſlain in this Battel is not recorded, Captain Maſſey, Captain Hunt, and divers other Officers of Eſſex his Army were killed, but not many of higher rank than Captains; three of the Nobility fell on the Kings ſide, the Earl of Carnarvon, the Earl of Sunderland, and the Lord Fankland. After this Fight the King marched to Oxford, and the Earl of Eſſex drew his Army to Reading, and from thence to the Towns and Villages near London: but the King on the 3*d.* of October finding Reading free placed a good Garriſon in it.

into it for the King, but whilst the Marquess of Newcastle vainly thought to take in Hull, before he left York-shire, the Earl of Manchester with Collonel Cromwell, and what Forces they could hastily get together, marched into Norfolk, and besieged Lyn, which in desperation of relief after a few daies was yielded to them, and to save the Town from plunder, the Earl impos'd a fine upon the Inhabitants of 10*s.* a man to every private Souldier, and a Moneths pay to every Officer, which amounted to 30000*l.* and a while after, namely on the eleventh of October, Sir John Meldrum march'd out of Hull, with two bodies of foot under the command of Collonel Lambert and Captain Rainsbrough, and fell upon the Marquess of Newcastles quarters before the Town, driving them from their Out-works & Trenches, where they kill'd fourscore of his Souldiers, and took 110 prisoners, and nine great pieces of Ordnance, and forced himself to retreat to Beverley, from whence afterward, all his Army march'd away, and left the Town free: yet Sir Thomas Fairfax and those in the Town, were not in a condition to take the field, but Meldrum was dispatch'd to London to sollicite for forces to be sent to Hull to make up an Army, but in the mean time, the Earl of Newcastle having received great quantities of Arms from Denmark, which were brought to Scarbrough, used diligence to augment his Army to be able not only to oppose the Scots, which were very near ready to march into England, but to strengthen Newark, and the Kings other Garrisons in the Northern parts, whereof Lincolne and some others had been taken by the Earl of Manchester, whilst the Earl of Newcastles Army lay before Hull, and others had been much distressed: But whilst these things were acted in the North, many considerable occurrences happened in other parts, which deserve to be mentioned.

The King being moved with compassion of the sad condition of his Protestant Subjects in Ireland, for want of relief and supply of money, Munition, Arms, Provisions, Clothes, and all other necessaries: for the Parliament, who had undertaken the managery of that War, and raised great sums of money for that end, imployed the greatest part of it in the War in England against the King, so that many of the English Souldiers, unable to endure the insupportable necessity that lay upon them, did many times seize on Ships, and force the Mariners to transport them to England, which being represented to the King, He in July this year, sent a Commission to the Marquess of Ormond then Lieutenant General of the English Army, to treat with the Irish for a cessation of Arms for one year, which after some time, upon the 15*th.* of September was agreed to by both parties, and whilst this cessation was making in Ireland, the Kings Armies in the Western parts of England were very prosperous; insomuch, that about the same time, or a little before, Biddiford, Appleford, Barnstable and Exeter, were surrendred to the King by the victorious arms of Prince Maurice, who from Exeter march'd to Dartmouth, which place was on the sixth of October surrendred likewise to him, so that though the King was unfortunately prevail'd with to lose the opportunity of ending the War, by besieging Glouceſter and Hull, yet was his condition at this time much better than the year before; for whereas a twelve moneth past, he had in all the West but the County of Cornwall, and in York-shire no more than that City and Pomfret Castle, and except at Redding, Wallingford, and Abington, not a Souldier quartered out of Oxford, not a Ship nor Port except Newcastle and Fawmouth, and as the Parliament themselves published, not ten thousand men in Arms, he had now five Armies in being, and was possessed of all the Western Counties and Garrisons therein, except Plymouth, Lyn and Poole, and of all York-shire, Hull only excepted, and in Cheshire none but Namptwitch stood out against him, and Wales was wholly His; and though the Parliament got from him, Stafford, Warrington, Lyn, Lincolne, and some other inconsiderable Garrisons; the King in lieu of those gained from them, Saltash, Cirencester, Burmingham, Leige, Lichfeild, Bradford, Hallifax, Wakefield, Dainton, Bristol, Bath, Dorchester, Weymouth, Biddiford, Barnstable, Appleford, Tenby, Haverford-west, Pembroke and Exeter, and as to Glouceſter, great care was taken to hinder excursions from that Garrison; Sir William Vavasor was sent with a strong party of Horse to engarison Hereford, with commission to raise Forces, and to command in Chief in that County and Glouceſter-shire; Sudeley Castle was garrisoned by the Lord Chandois for the King, which stop'd Glouceſters entercourse with Warwick, the only way of Commerce with London; Berkley Castle was for the King maintained by a Scottish Captain. Sir John Winter was strongly setled in the Forrest of Deane, a Garrison was likewise put into Beverston Castle, and indeed Garrisons there were in every corner of the County, besides several parties of the Kings Army which lay abroad in the Fields about it; so that Glouceſter was almost as much distressed as if it had been besieged, they being inforced to fight or skirmish for whatever they got. In the mean time, an additional supply of one thousand Foot, and one hundred Horse, under the command of Sir William St. Leger and Collonel Min, landed out of Ireland to the Kings aid, and were with eight pieces of Ordnance ordered to advance to Thornbury, the more to distresse the City of Glouceſter.

The French King and the Queen Regent of France, seem'd very sensible of the Kings condition, and sent the Count de Harcourt (a Prince of the House of Lorrain, and a great Souldier,) their Embassador into England, to offer the mediation of France to compose the differences betwixt the King and the Parliament; He came first to London, and addrest himself to both Houses for a safe conduct to Oxford to the King, which they granted, and on the 18*th.* of October he made his entry into that City, and three daies after, he had publick audience in the great Hall at Christs Church, where the King and Queen receiv'd him with great State and Magnificence; and whilst he staid at Oxford, he and his retinue were lodg'd in St. John's Colledg, but finding himself unable to effect any thing of his Embassy, after a few moneths stay, he returned. Sir William Waller who had lain long in London to forme an Army, had at last got together six thousand Horse and Foot, with which he was about this

The King ſhortly after this misfortune, was recompenced with the good news of 4000 Engliſh Foot landed in North-Wales, out of Ireland, under Sir Michael Erneley, who immediately after their landing, took in Hawardin Caſtle neer Cheſter, and might afterwards have proved more ſerviceable than they were to the King, had they not been divided as they were into ſeveral parts of his Armies, but been kept together under their old and known Commanders.

The Scots promiſed to the Parliament (from whom Commiſſioners were ſent to Edenburgh about that buſineſs,) that they would bring into England to their aſſiſtance, an Army conſiſting of one and twenty thouſand Horſe and Foot, towards the charge of raiſing whereof, the Parliament ſent 100000 l. into Scotland, and great levies of men were made for this Army, which was now near drawn together, but ſome at Oxford had ſo good an opinion of the Scots, that they would hardly be brought to believe they would invade England, till they ſaw them in the bowels of the Nation; for General Leſley with great imprecations upon himſelf, as has been before expreſt in this Hiſtory, proteſted never to draw his ſword againſt the King, but the ruling party in Scotland to facilitate the raiſing of this Army, had raiſed a report that the King was deſerted by moſt of his Nobility.

The King repoſing great truſt in the Duke of Hamilton, had written to him to uſe all his power and intereſt to keep his Countrey-men at home, which had not been difficult for one of his credit in that Nation; but he by ſome ſecret Arts did more inflame them, and to cover his deceit, pretended to fly from Scotland to Oxford, where he came about the laſt of December, pretending to ſeek a ſhelter there for his loyaltie, but the King had ſo good information of his practices in Scotland, that as ſoon as he came thither, he and the Earl of Lanerick his Brother, were both forbidden the Court, whereupon Lanerick got privately out of Oxford, and went to London, where he was well received, which increaſed the Kings ill opinion of his Brother, and he was ſent priſoner to Pendennis Caſtle.

The D. of Hamilton ſent priſoner to Pendennis Caſtle.

The King had on the 22 th. of December ſummoned the Members of both Houſes, who had deſerted thoſe at Weſtminſter to aſſemble at Oxford on the 22 th. of January following, where accordingly they met in the great Hall at Chriſts Church, & after the King had made a ſhort Speech to them, he diſmiſt them to their ſeats. The The Lords ſate in the upper Schools, and the Commons in the Convocation Houſe, and for their better welcome, he advanced Prince Rupert to the Titles of Duke of Cumberland, and Earl of Holderneſs, and created James his ſecond Son, Duke of York, by which name he had been appointed to be called at the time of his birth, that they might ſit and vote amongſt them. After they had ſat a while, by a letter they mov'd the Earl of Eſſex to endeavour peace, and did alſo declare againſt the Invaſion of the Scots by another letter ſent to them, in which they acquainted them with the falſeneſs of their reports concerning the King, and ſhewed how inconſiderable a number of Lords were with thoſe that invited them in; the King himſelf writ alſo to them to put them in mind of their ſeveral ingagements to be quiet, but before thoſe letters could come to Scotland, and indeed ſome daies before the Parliament had aſſembled at Oxford, the Scots Army was marched into England, but when the letters came to the ruling party at Edenburgh, with a ſtrange unheard of inſolency, they commanded them to be burnt by the hands of the Hangman, but the diſhonour of that Nation was in a great meaſure repaired by the gallantry and faithfulneſſe of the Marqueſs of Montroſs, who about the time of this their Invaſion, was made General Governour of Scotland, and with an incredible induſtry by ſmall numbers of men won many Battails, and overthrew well form'd Armies, whereof ſome relation ſhall be made hereafter, and had he not been betrayed by thoſe he truſted, he had forc'd that people to Juſtice and quietneſſe. Upon the entry of the Scotch Army into England, a letter was writ from Barwick in the name of the Committee of both Kingdoms, ſubſcribed by the Marqueſſe of Argile and Sir William Armine to Sir Thomas Glemham, who then lay at Anwick with 16 Troops of Horſe, two Regiments of Foot, eight Drakes, and twenty pieces of Ordnance, which was to be communicated to the Gentlemen of Northumberland, wherein it was ſignified, That they came into England to proſecute the ends of the Covenant, namely, the Preſervation and Reformation of Religion, the true honour and happineſs of the King, and the publick peace and liberty of his Dominions, hoping that things of ſo great and conſiderable conſequence would find with him and them ſuch entertainment as might anſwer the weight and importance of them: Adding, That if miſinformation, or any other unhappy grounds ſhould ſo far prevail with him and the reſt, as to reckon them in the number of their enemies; and if inſtead of that concurrence with them which they wiſhed and hoped to deſerve, they found oppoſition and acts of Hoſtility, the Law of Nature and their own reaſon, might tell them what they were to expect. Sir Thomas return'd an anſwer to this Letter, to this purpoſe,

The Scotch Army deſcend as far as Yorkſhire.

Sir John Meldrum, the Lord Fairfax, Sir Tho. Fairfax, Sir Will. Conſtable, and Col. Lambert had out of Lincolnſhire & the aſſociated Counties got many men together, and made ſuch impreſſions upon the Marqueſs of Newcaſtles Quarters, that they became very well able to keep a Body together in Yorkſhire, and Sir John Meldrum marched into Nottinghamſhire, where he joyned with ſome troops of the Earl of Manchеſter, & the Lord Willoughby of Parham, to the number of 8000 Horſe & foot, with which they beſieged Newark.

Newark beſieged by Meldrum.

The King was much concerned at the news of this Siege, and was reſolved at any hazard to relieve the Town, in order whereunto the King ſent an expreſs to Prince Rupert, which came to him on the 12*th.* of March to Cheſter, wherein he commanded him to draw what Forces he could together to raiſe the Siege of Newark; upon this advice he made haſt to Shrewsbury, ſpeeding away Major Legg (General of the Ordnance) before to chuſe out ſo many commanded Muſquettiers of the Engliſh (of late come out of Ireland) as might well be ſpared out of that Garriſon. Theſe were a thouſand Muſquettiers of Colonel Broughtons and Colonel Tilliers Regiments, with a hundred and twenty of Colonel Sir Fulk Hunks. All theſe ſent down by the Severn, met the Prince at Bridgenorth on Friday. Of Horſe he took along his own Troop, and Regiment, with twenty of Major General Urrey's; with theſe Forces he drew along three field pieces. At Wolverhampton next day was his Army recruited by a hundred horſe, and 200 foot of Colonel Leveſons. On Munday night he had notice at Aſhby de la Zouch, of two thouſand two hundred enemies under Sir Edward Hartop, ſent out by Meldrum to the paſs and Bridge over the Sore, a mile from Loughborough in Leiceſterſhire. Their purpoſe was either to intercept General Major Porter, or to prevent his joyning with my Lord Loughborow: for thither with four Regiments of Horſe, and a thouſand commanded Muskettiers of my Lord of Newcaſtles men, was Porter now come from about Newark, to hinder the farther inroads into Leiceſterſhire. Daily ſlight Skirmiſhes here paſſed. For Meldrum not able to force the paſſage, and hearing of my Lord of Loughborow's drawing out ſtole away. Porter thus diſ-ingaged, was the next day together with my Lord Loughborows forces conjoyned to the Princes. That night they all quartered in a Cloſe by Bingham, eight miles ſhort of Newark.

An expreſs ſent by the King to Prince Rupert to raiſe the Siege.

About two of the Clock, the Moon then well up, the Drums beat, and all marched. Hitherto had the marches been ſo ſpeedy, as fame it ſelf was prevented; for by Meldrums own Letter ſent to the Lord Fairfax, which was intercepted the night before; they had no more but an uncredited Rumor of Prince Rupert's coming. On this days maach the Prince had notice by his eſpials, how the enemies were buſied all that morning in ſending away their Cannons; which proved no other, than their drawing them off their Batteries into their Chief work at the Spittle, or Exeter-Houſe, a little more than Musket-ſhot from the Town; for into that one Quarter had they this morning drawn all their Regiments and Ammunition. The Prince having intelligence of their amaſſing themſelves thus into one body, which he ſuppoſed a preparation to march off ſuddenly; advanced his Van of Horſe upon the ſpur to overtake them: the reſt of his Horſe had order to keep along with the Foot, Cannon and Ammunition. Coming near the Beacon-hill a mile ſhort of Newark, he perceived ſome Horſes of the enemies; who upon his approach, drew down the other ſide to their own Groſs. The Prince thus eaſily gaining the hill, was earneſt to purſue his good fortune, upon his apprehenſion of having many advantages upon a retreating enemy: whereupon he gave order to charge them with all the Horſe then with him to ingage them till the Reer and Foot ſhould be marched up to him. Trooping thus to the edge of the Hill, he perceived the moſt of the enemy in Battalia, (Horſe and Foot) near the Spittle: all except four great Bodies of Horſe, who expected him at the very deſcent of the Hill. The Prince thus ordered his own few forces; firſt himſelf with his own Troop of Life-Guards undertook to attacque that Body on the left hand, appointing my Lord Loughborow's Troop to ſecond him, and Colonel Charles Gerard's Troop to be as a Reſerve a little on my Lords right hand. The Princes Regiment was caſt out into five Diviſions, two Troops to each Diviſion: in the firſt and very right hand of all, were Captain Gardiner, and Captain Richardſon; then Captain Cobb, and Captain Martin; then the Lord Grandiſon and Sir Thomas Dalliſon, next them the Troops of Sir Lewis Dives, and the Lord Dillon; Major Leggs and Lieutenant Colonel O Neals Troops being next unto the Life-Guards; this Regiment was ſeconded by Major General Porters Regiment: the Field-Word, was King and Queen; theirs Religion. The fight began about nine a Clock; and after a while it grew fierce, eſpecially on the Princes his right wing, the other doubling their Files from three to ſix deep, and charged two utmoſt Troops upon the Flanks ſo hard, that Capt. Martin came timely in to help to beat them off; the Prince himſelf having pierced deep into the enemies, and being obſerved and known, was dangerouſly at once aſſaulted by three ſturdy Perſons, whereof one fell by his own ſword; a ſecond being piſtoll'd by Maſter Mortaign one of his own Gentlemen; the third now ready to lay hand on the Princes collar, had it almoſt chopt of by Sir William Neal; he thus diſ-enggaed with a ſhot only in his Gauntlet, with Sir Richard Crane and his own Troop, charged quite thorow the Body, purſuing them in a Rout home to their

The fight at Newark.

1643. Works at the Spittle, presently after this, his Regiment with their seconds likewise routed the three other bodies, four of the Troops charging even into the Work, and bringing away a Captain prisoner; Loughborow also deported himself honorably, some of his shrunk at the second Charge, but he himself rode back to rally and bring them up again: Colonel Gerard was shot in the arm in this encounter, and being by the fall of his Horse much bruised, was taken prisoner.

After a little pause both sides began to make ready for a second Charge; the Prince to make impression, and they to receive it: and though for a good while they disputed it roughly, yet by fine force were they and all the rest driven quite out of the field beyond their own work, Foot and Cannon at the Spittle; divers of them hasting by a Bridge of Boats over that branch of the Trent into the Island: four other Troops, with as many foot Companies hasted up to Muskam-bridge upon the other side of the Island, and main stream of the River, about three quarters of a mile both from Newark and the Spittle: here they stayed till towards evening; when breaking the Bridge behinde them, and throwing one piece of Cannon into the Trent, they hasted to Nottingham. In both these stiff bouts, the Prince took five Cornets, and ninety Prisoners, whereof three Captains, some Gentlemen, three Cornets, besides other Officers, and two Cannoniers. And now as if an universal Truce had been agreed upon, there was some half an hours silence, excepting that the enemies Canon disturbed it. As for the Prince he now staied for his Foot and the Reer of his Horse, both left full two miles behinde, when his Van began to double their march to overtake the enemy; anon came up his Foot, all that day commanded by Colonel Tillier: these resting themselves a while upon the hill, the first division being part of those that came from Shrewsbury, were led on by the Colonel; these marched down in the face of the enemy, hooting at their Cannon, and flanked with some Horse, they were wheeled to the right into a Meadow; at their coming, the enemy drew all their Horse and Foot within their Spittle-work, and coming up against this place, both sides saluted one another at too far a distance with a short volley; but Colonel Tillier was not to stay here, as being by his Orders to march up to the very Rivers side, to recover the Boat-bridge from the enemy; but this being too well guarded, he was glad to go off, making a stand without reach of Cannon. In this time were divers more bodies brought down into the field, who charged up to the enemies work, and killed many: Loughborows men being left upon the hill for a reserve. Thus was the valley bespread with the Princes Battalions: and in this posture stood the Army. Sir Richard Byron Governour of Newark likewise before this, had sent part of his Garrison both (Horse and Foot) into another ground on the South-east side of the Town. And by this time had the Prince notice given him by a Prisoner, and by one of theirs that came over to him, how they were so distressed for want of Victuals, that they were not able to live there two days. Whereupon he began to resolve upon other Counsels, esteeming it cheaper to block up their trenches than to storm them. And blockt up they were already in a very narrow room, no more being free than the backside of the Spittle towards the River. Besides which they were on all sides surrounded by his forces. On the South-side by the Town; on the East by the Prince; and on the North by Colonel Tillier. Into the Island on the West, had the Prince sent five hundred Horse, besides 200 of the Newark Troopers. Thus the late blockers found themselves now besieged, and without much hope of sudden relief, or safe means for sally: for so well had the Prince ordered them, that had they sallied forwards, he had then fallen on upon their first issuing out, both in front, and flanks with his Army, and the Town had charged them upon their Reer. Had they offered to escape over their Boat bridge, those in the Isle had disturbed their passing, and others entertained their coming over. By this time had the Prince commanded Sir Richard Byron with his own, and Sir Gervase Eyres Horse Regiment with 800 of Sir John Digbyes foot, to advance so high into the Island, as to put in betwixt the enemies two Bridges. By which interposition was all intercourse cut off, betwixt their greater Body at the Spittle, and those at Muskam-Bridge: upon this those eight Colours at the Bridge retreated, as aforesaid. Under favour of these Town-forces too, was the Prince resolved to cast up a Redoubt that night betwixt the Bridges, but going to view the Ground, the enemy sent out a Trumpet to desire a Parley. To make way for this, and the more to sweeten and oblige the Prince, had Sir John Meldrum some hours before sent home Colonel Gerard, yet upon the Parole of a Souldier and a Gentleman, to return himself a Prisoner when ever he should be called. They having sent out to Parley quit their bridg, which the Prince presently possessed by 100 Musquettiers. For the Parley on the Prince his part was appointed Sir Richard Crane, Captain of his Life-Guards, with Sir William Neale, Scout-Master-General, the other sending Sir Miles Hobard, and Sir John Palgrave two Colonels of Norfolk, on their part. The Prince his Horse were so overmarcht, and the Foot so beaten off their Leggs by long marches, that he found his men not very able to engage a new, and the enemy were more than was believed; so that he was willing to give them good conditions, and the rather, for that (as by intercepted Letters it appeared) the Lord Fairfax and his Son Sir Thomas, being commanded by the Councel of State to march, other places might ere long have need of his presence, so that (at length) he condescended to these Articles.

Upon this Victory of the Prince, the Garriſons of Gainsbrow, Lincolne and Sleeford, were quitted by the Parliamentarians, and Sterne Caſtle in Stafford-ſhire was ſurrendred to Sir Gilbert Gerard for the King; but four daies after the action at Newark, The Kings Forces under the Marqueſs of Newcaſtle received a conſiderable loſs at a place called Hilton, where for two or three daies ſeveral skirmiſhes were made betwixt the Engliſh and Scotch Armies, and on the 25 th. of March they came to a pretty cloſe engagement, wherein the Engliſh Foot were much diſordered and one Brigade of the Horſe routed, and about two hundred horſe and men were taken, but not without great loſſe to the Scots, though their numbers were increaſed with 3000 Engliſh Sea-men and others which came to them in Sunderland from Hull, and upon this diſorder the Marqueſs inlarged his quarters Southward, but the Scots did not yet advance much farther.

The Marqueſſe of Newcaſtle receives a loſs at Hilton.

Sir William Waller having taken Arundel Caſtle in Suſſex, and procured a commiſſion from the Parliament leſs dependent on Eſſex than that he had before, marches into Hampſhire againſt the Lord Hopton, who was then very fortunate there, having taken Warder Caſtle, and many other places. At Brandon Heath neer Alesford, both parties met on the 30 th. of March, and there was a very hot diſpute betwixt them, but Waller having the advantage of the ground, and a covert of trees and hedges to ſhelter his foot, did thereby great execution on the Kings Party, who preſſing too eagerly to gain a Victory, loſt it; yet it was not an intire Conqueſt, for my Lord Hopton retreated to Wincheſter with all his Cannon, except two heavy pieces which were plunged, and could not eaſily be drawn off; but Sir John Smyth and Collonel Butler, and ſome other Officers of leſs note, of his Army, were ſlain, and 200 common Souldiers, and many others wounded, amongſt which the Lord Steward Brother to the Duke of Richmond was one, who died three or four daies after at Abington, of his wounds: He was a young Noble-man of great courage and generoſity in all his actions, and very debonaire and affable in his behaviour towards all; on the Parliament ſide many Officers and Souldiers were killed and wounded, and of the wounded, Collonel Thomſon who loſt his leg, and Collonel Dalbie, were the moſt remarkable; after this Fight, the Town of Wincheſter was yielded to Sir William Waller, but the Caſtle continued long after a Garriſon for the King. The news of the affront lately given to the Marqueſs of Newcaſtles Army by General Leſley, animated Fairfax, and the Forces in York-ſhire, to draw what Troops they could together to endeavour to joyn with the Scots, who were now upon their march, and in purſuance of this deſign, the Lord Fairfax marched out of Hull with twenty Troops of Horſe, and joyned with his Son Sir Thomas and Collonel Lambert, who made up about Sixty Troops more, beſides a good body of Foot under Sir John Meldrum, making up in all to the number of ſeven thouſand Horſe and Foot, and with this little Army they made as if they intended to march to York, but on the 11 th. of April, when they came neer Selby (where Collonel Bellaſis lay with a good body of Men, as a reſerve to the Marqueſſe of Newcaſtle) they drew before the Town, and about eleven of the Clock they aſſaulted it in three places, & after two hours fight, made themſelves maſters thereof, wherein they took Collonel Bellaſis the Commander in Chief, Governor of York, with moſt of the reſt of the Officers, and ſixteen hundred common Souldiers, a Drake, and a Saker, ſeven barrels of Powder, ſixteen bundles of Match, great ſtore of Bullets, and two thouſand Arms; immediately upon this ſucceſſe, the Marqueſſe of Newcaſtle retreated to York, to re-inforce that Garriſon, in caſe any attempt ſhould be made upon it; and Fairfax march'd to meet the Scots, and joyned his Army with theirs at Wetherby, from whence they diſpoſed them to quarters till a reſolution ſhould be taken for further action: In the mean time, the Queen being great with child at Oxford, and ſomewhat apprehenſive of a ſiege there by the Earl of Eſſex and Sir William Waller, which was the common intelligence of that time, to prevent the inconveniences thereof, ſet out from Oxford on the 17 th. of April towards Exeter, where ſhe ſafely arrived ſome time after; and two daies after her departure from Oxford, the Parliamentary convention at Oxford were by the King prorogued to the eighth of October, and that prorogation was afterward inlarged to the ninth of November by proclamation. Prince Rupert was very active in Shropſhire, Cheſhire, Stafford-ſhire and Lancaſhire, to make an Army ſufficient to relieve the Marqueſſe of Newcaſtle, who was ſomewhat ſtreightned in York-ſhire by the Parliament Forces, where he had done very good ſervice in taking many Garriſons from the Enemie, as Longford Houſe, and Tonge Caſtle in Shropſhire, Stopford in Cheſhire, and Bolton in Lancaſhire, beſides the relief of Latham Houſe, (which had been 18 weeks defended by the Counteſſe of Derby againſt a cloſe ſiege) and the defeat of many parties that encountred him or his Forces at ſeveral times, but we ſhall leave him for a while to ſpeak of the Kings condition at this time.

Arundel Caſtle taken by Sir William Waller.

Waller defeated at Brandon-Heath by the Lord Hopton.

Wincheſter yielded to Sir William Waller.

Selby taken by the Lord Fairfax.

Fairfax joyns his Army with the Scots.

The Queen upon apprehenſion of danger, removes from Oxford to Exeter.

The Parliament at Oxford prorogued.

Latham Houſe defended 18 weeks by the Counteſs of Derby, relieved by Prince Rupert.

The Parliament having formed two Armies, whereof the Foot were far the moſt part made up of London Trained-Bands and Auxiliaries, one under the Earl of Eſſex, and the other under Sir William Waller; both Armies randezvouz'd on the 24 th. of May at Blewbury in Berkſhire, and kept their head-quarters that night at Abington within five miles of Oxford, where they continued five or ſix daies, and Eſſex marched from thence to Iſlip, with purpoſe to diſtreſs Oxford on the North part, and left Sir William Waller at Abington on the South part.

The King perceiving the Parliaments intention to beſiege Oxford, was reſolved to endeavour to prevent it, by giving their Armies ſome diſtant diverſion, or at leaſt to remove his perſon from the incommodities of a ſiege: The place reſolved to go to, was Worceſter, which he kept ſo private, that ſcarce any knew of it but himſelf, and

The Parliament forms two Armies under the Earl of Eſſex and Sir William Waller.

1644. to amuse the enemie, on the third of June, he sent a party of five or six hundred Horse, under the Command of the Earl of Cleaveland, to alarm Abington, who bravely enter'd the Turnepike, and if he had had more forces, might have carried the Town, but having done his business, he retreated with his Party to Oxford, whilst Waller drew his Troops about Abington, expecting the Kings march that way, but He that evening appointed his Randezvouze at Northly, about eight miles from Oxford, where he drew up his Army, consisting of about 7000 Horse and Foot, 12 Drakes, and 60 Carriages, and having refresh'd himself at one Mr. Parrets House there, from whence he marched to Burton on the Water, a Village between Burford and Stow on the Wold, and there lodged at Dr. Temples the Parson there.

The King removes with his Army from Oxford to Worcester.

From Burton the King went to Parshore, and from thence to Worcester.

Essex and Waller having notice of the Kings march 18 hours after he was gone, pursued him two several waies; Essex was in some trouble to know what to do, considering that fighting would not so much waste his men, as tedious marches after the Kings light Army, when his was cumber'd with a heavy train of Artillery, so that he thought it more prudent to put Waller upon this service, and to stay for him at Burford to consult about the prosecution of it. At Burford it was resolved that Essex should march Westward, to bring those Counties into the obedience of the Parliament, whilst Waller should get what Forces he could together, to joyn with him in pursuit of the King, who was yet at Worcester, from whence on the 11 th. of June he sent a party out to relieve Dudley Castle that was besieg'd, and having intelligence that the Parliament Armies were now sever'd, and hearing that Waller came nearer by tedious and hungry marches, the King advanced to Budeley, where he stayed four daies, and Waller imagining his intention to be to march towards Prince Rupert, hastned into Stafford-shire to get before him, but the King turns back with resolution to be furnish'd with more men and ammunition from Oxford, and in order thereunto on the 18 th. of June he come to Witney, where he staid till some forces came to increase his Army, and being as well provided as he could in so short a time; He march'd towards the Parliaments associated Counties, and on the 22 th. of June he came to Buckingham, where he received the joyful news of the Queens safe delivery of the Princess Henrietta.

Essex marches Westward. Waller pursues the King to Worcester.

The King marches to Buckingham, where he receives the news of the birth of the Princess Henrietta at Exeter.

Waller to recruit his Army from the Garrisons of Glouceſter, Warwick, Coventrey, Northampton and Kenelworth Castle had on the 26 th of June, a Rendezvouze in Keinton field, whereof the King having notice, turn'd his march towards him, and quarter'd that night at Brackley; two daies after the King coming before Banbury, he found Waller drawn up in Battalia Westward from the Town on the side of Crountch-Hill, taking advantage of the Hills, Boggs, and Ditches, so that the King march'd to Daintry, leaving a guard of Dragoons at Cropredy-bridge, to secure his pass over the River, and thereupon the Army march'd over, and the Musketteers that guarded the Bridge, were gone off, when Waller greedily apprehending to make some advantage upon the Kings Reare, puts over 2000 Horse, with a great body of Foot, and 14 pieces of Cannon, sufficient as he thought to disorder it; the Kings Rear consisted of the Earl of Cleaveland, and the Earl of Northampton's Brigades of Horse, and Sir Bernard Ashley's tertia of Foot: These fac'd about, and routed all of the Enemie that had pass'd the Bridge; and the Earl of Northampton seeing some of Wallers Horse indeavouring to ford the River, charg'd and repuls'd them: In this fight 300 of Waller's Souldiers were slain, and Weems their General of the Ordnance was taken prisoner, with two Lieutenant Collonels, three Captains, two Lieutenants, four Cornets, with other Ensigns and Officers, 180 common Souldiers, five Gunners, and fourteen great Guns. There was slain on the Kings part, Sir William Butler, and Sir William Clarke, the Lord Wilmot General of the Horse, was twice Prisoner, but rescued once by Sir Frederick Cornwallis, and the second time by Mr. Robert Howard, who was knighted for the service of that day, Collonel Nevil was also hurt, and some other Officers and others were taken Prisoners, but there were not above twenty slain. 1644.

Sir William Waller routed by the Kings Forces at Cropredy-bridge

The King marched to Evesham after this fight, from whence he sent a message to the Parliament to invite them to a Treaty of Peace, and from thence he went on to Bath; Sir William Waller was not in a condition to follow him, but after some time, he went to London to sollicit recruits, whilst the King marched after Essex into the west. In the beginning of this Moneth, Prince Rupert marched out of Lancashire with a considerable Army for the relief of York, wherein the Marquesse of Newcastle had been besieg'd two moneths by three Armies under the Command of the Earl of Manchester, the Lord Fairfax and General Lesley; they all upon approach of the Prince, drew of their Army, and thereupon the Prince and the Marquesse of Newcastle marched after them to a plain called Marston-Moor, where on the third of July, a terrible Fight began, in which the Prince at first had much the better, taking their Ordnance, and many of them Prisoners, insomuch that General Lesley and the Lord Fairfax thinking all had been lost, fled many miles from the place where the Battail was fought, and never came to the remainder of their Army, till two daies after the Fight; but in conclusion, (whether by fate that attends the event of War, or by neglect, I know not) the fortune of the day turned, and the Parliament Forces recovered their lost Ordnance, and took some of the Princes Baggage, and with it Sir Charles Lucas, Collonel Porter, and Collonel Tiliard Prisoners. In this Battail were slain on his Majesties part, the Lord Cary, Sir Thomas Metham, Collonel Enre, Collonel Towneley, with some others of note, and about 1500 common Souldiers. On the Parliaments part were slain Sir Charles Fairfax, with many other of their Commanders, and at least 3000 Souldiers. 1644.

The King sends a message to the Parliament about a Treaty of Peace.

York besieged by Manchester, Fairfax & Lesley, is relieved by Prince Rupert, Marston-Moor Fight, wherein Prince Rupert was at last defeated.

After this Battail the Parliament Army sate down again before York, and Prince Rupert marched away with about 6000 Horse and Draggoons into Lancashire, and from thence to Chester, but the Marquess of Newcastle, and his two Sons, General King, the Lord Falconbridge, the 1644. Lord Widdrington, Earl of Carnwarth, Bishop of London-Derry, Lord William Carnaby General Pay-master, Sir Edward Widdrington, Colonel Carnaby, Colonel Basset, Colonel Mozen, Sir Wal. Vavasor, Sir Hugh Cholmley, Sir Fra. Mackworth, and Sir Charles Cavendish, did all take shipping at Scarborow, and were from thence transported to Hamborough. The reason of the abrupt departure of the Marquess at this time, was said to be occasioned upon some difference betwixt the Prince and him, concerning the conduct of the late Battel at Marston-Moor, or rather betwixt the Prince and General King, by whom as one of great experience in War, the Marquess was then much advised; but King being a Scotch-man was was very hardly spoken of by the Northern Officers as a person of less courage and skill in Military affairs, then was ascribed to him; or else not zealous enough against his Countrey men.

Lord

The Parliament Army had now lain twelve days before York, since their last approach to it, and preparation was made for a storm; but Sir Thomas Glemham the Governour sent a Trumpetter out late at night for a Parley, for his Provisions and Ammunition was much wasted, and he had not above 1000 Souldiers beside those that were sick and wounded to defend the Town: So that upon the 16 th of July the City was surrendred upon very honorable terms, amongst which the two or three first were, That all Officers and Souldiers should march out with their Horses and Arms, flying Colours, Drums beating, Matches lighted, Bullets in mouth, with Bagg and Baggage, and a Convoy to Skipton, and that no Souldiers shall be plundered: But the Souldiers that were to guard them, in violation of these conditions, plundered many of the Waggons, at which the Earl of Manchester and Cromwel were so much displeased, that many of them were censured at a Court Martial, but little restitution was made, and most of them that were accused, agreed in one excuse, viz. That they never heard it was any part of the agreement, that they should march away, and be protected with their Bagg and Baggage, and that many of Sir Thomas Glemham's Souldiers set them on to plunder, discovering to them which were the Waggons of Papists, in rifeling whereof they assisted and got their share.

York surrendred to the Parliament.

Having endeavoured hitherto in the actions of this year, to apply them to the times whereon they were acted, we must now return to describe the motions of the Earl of Essex and the King in the Western parts, which for some weeks together administred the greatest matter for Story.

Whilst the King was at Bath, he received advice that Essex was about the 16 th. of July marcht from Teverton in Devonshire towards Plymouth to raise the Siege, which Sir Richard Greenvil had at that time before Plymouth and disperse his forces, which was the result of a Councel of War then had, when two other Questions were proposed, either to march back to meet the Kings forces, or to besiege Exeter, but neither of those were approved, and they were not very earnest to attempt Exeter now they knew they had frighted the Queen from thence, who about the 15 th. or 16 th. of July safely arrived at Brest in Britanny, where she was very well received, though she got not thither without much hazard, having 100 great shot made at her, and those few small Vessels of her Guard by a Squadron of the Parliament Ships that lay to intercept her. 1644.

The Queen leaves Exeter and arrives at Brest in Britanny.

As soon as the King heard of Essex's advance towards Plymouth, he marcht with his Army into Somersetshire, and at Kingsmore, he summoned the Gentry of the County, and recommended to them the care of that County in his absence, and not to suffer themselves to be drawn away from his service; and hearing that upon the march of Essex his Army towards Plymouth, Sir Richard Greenvil had raised his Siege thereof, and was marcht into Cornwal, with his own Regiment, and the Regiments of Colonel Fortescue, Colonel Carew, and Colonel Acktland, and that Essex was marching after him with his Army, he immediately advanced with all his forces towards Cornwal, but before he could get thither, Essex had much distressed Greenvil, having almost inclosed him with three Regiments of Horse, and a Company of Dragoons under Colonel Bear.

The King marcheth with his Army into Somersetshire.

Sir Richard Greenville distressed by Essex.

On the first of August the King entred Cornwal, passing over the Tamor at Polton-Bridge, and he marched directly to Liscard, where for some time he setled his head-Quarters; the County was very cordial to him, insomuch that not any of Essex his men could straggle from their Quarters without danger to be killed or taken prisoners by the Country people, which made him (who then Quartered at Listithiel about 8 miles from Liscard) keep his Army very much together, and call back those he had sent to attempt on Sir Richard Greenvil, but all his care did not prevent the loss of some of his chief Officers; for Quartermaster-General Dalbeir, Colonel Allured, Lieutenant Colonel Carleton, and Lieutenant Colonel Bartley with some other Officers being at the Lord Mohuns House at Buccocock at Dinner, were all except Dalbier surprized by a party of the Kings Horse, and brought prisoners to Liscard on the 4 th. of August.

The King enters Cornwal and marcheth to Liscard.

Many of Essex his Officers surprized and brought prisoners to Liscard.

The King by the addition of Prince Maurice his Army was much increased in strength, and in all appearance likely to give himself (as it after happened) a conquest over Essex, but the tenderness he always had towards his Subjects, made him try rather (according to his custome) first to seek peace before he proceeded to the rigour of War, in order whereunto he writ from Liscard a Letter to Essex, dated August the 6. which he sent to him by his Nephew, the Lord Beauchamp, but no return was made to it, and a day or two after another Letter was writ to him by the Officers of the Army, to which he sent a negative answer to the Earl of Forth, importing, That he had received a Letter from his Lordship, and some other Commanders, by which a Treaty was desired with him for a general Peace, which he could not admit of without breach of the trust reposed in him by the Parliament having no power by his Commission to treat in a matter of such importance. During this conjuncture of affairs, an unhappy accident fell out in the Kings Army, for in the consultation amongst the Officers of the Letter to be sent to Essex a very earnest debate

Prince Maurice joins his Army with the Kings.

The King sends a Letter of grace to Essex.

was

1644. was had of the matter of it, and the manner of the addreſs, and ſome expreſſions uttered by the L. Wilmot therein, of making the Prince of Wales Mediator in the buſineſs, which by ſome diſaffected to that Lord was improved to his prejudice, as if he intended to make a diviſion in the Army; and thereupon the King was perſwaded to ſecure him, and ſend him away with a Guard to Oxford; which cauſed a great conſternation in the Army, for he was very well beloved of the Souldiers, and if great care had not been uſed to temper the minds of many of them, great inconveniencies might have enſued; but nevertheleſs the King loſt hereby the counſel and conduct of one of his beſt Officers, who by all the actions of his life before and after gave ſuch evident marks of his Loyalty that even his enemies were aſhamed and ſorry for their apprehenſions of him: General Goring was at the inſtant of his remove put into his Command, and the King began to uſe all poſſible means to diſtreſs the Enemy by allmoſt encompaſſing them with his forces, he himſelf and Prince Maurice, quartered at Boconnock, Greenvil faſtned himſelf at Lanbetherock three miles Weſt of the King, and poſſeſſed himſelf of Leprin-Bridge a mile above Liſtithiel, to which place the Tide flowed up from Foy, ſo that it was not fordable but at one paſs between that and the Sea: the Kings Army incamped between Boconnock and a Heath that parted his Quarters and the enemy, and placed Guards on all places on the River leading from his Quarters at Liſtithiel to Foy, poſſeſſing a Houſe of the Lord Mohuns over againſt the Town, and a Fort that commanded the mouth of the Haven; ſo that Eſſex had no place for relief by water but at a ſmall Creek Mimibilley, and St. Blaſe's his Bay, but neither ſafe for Ships, but they retained a large ſpace of ground Weſtward, whereupon Goring was ſent with moſt of the Horſe, and Sir Thomas Baſſet with 1500 Foot to thoſe parts to ſtop all proviſions coming in at St. Blaſe, by which means Eſſex and his Army were reduced to ſuch ſtraits, that Sir William Belfour with five and twenty hundred of their Horſe broke away before day in the morning on the 31 th. of Auguſt between the Quarters of his Majeſty and Prince Maurice, as they lay encamped, and got to Saltaſh, and the ſame night Eſſex himſelf and the Lord Roberts deſerted the Army, and got away in a Boat to Plymouth.

Lord Wilmot ſecured at Oxford.

General Goring put into his Command.

Eſſex is blockt up by the Kings forces in Cornwal.

Eſſex forced to deſert his Army.

The next day Skippon with the foot endeavoured to march to Foy, but the King having notice of their motion marched ſoon after them, and that day took five of their Ordnance, falling into their Rear within two miles of Liſtithiel, the next morning they made a ſtand, and with their remaining Horſe regained ſome fields from whence they had been forced before, whereupon the King ſent Captain Edward Brett with the Queens Troop, who in his view forced them to retire, regained the loſt ground, and got more, and returned in good order with the loſs only of four of his men, and himſelf ſhot in the arm; for which good ſervice the King immediately Knighted him. In the evening their men were ſo harraſſed, they could ſcarce be made to ſtand to their Arms, and in that their condition Lieutenant Colonel Butler came to deſire a parley of the King, which was granted, and a Treaty followed, by which on the firſt of December, the following Articles were accorded betwixt Prince Maurice and the Earl of Brainford on the one part and Major General Philip Skippon and Colonel Chriſtopher Whitbcot on the other part.

Captain Brett Knighted for his good ſervice.

1644. A Treaty betwixt Prince Maurice and Major General Skippon.

1. That all the Officers and Souldiers Horſe and Foot on this ſide the River Foy, ſhall to morrow being the 1 of September at 11 of the Clock deliver up their own Quarters, all their Cannon, Train of Artillery, Carriages, Arms Offenſive and Defenſive, both of Horſe and Foot, Powder, Bullet, Match, and Ammunition unto ſuch Officers as the General of his Majeſties Artillery ſhall appoint, except Swords and Piſtols of all Officers above Corporals.

2. That all Officers and Souldiers, both Horſe and Foot of the ſaid Army ſhall march out of their Quarters to Liſtithiel with Colours, Trumpets, and Drums, and that all Officers above the degree of Sergeants, ſhall have their Servants, not exceeding the number of fifty.

3. That they ſhall march from Liſtithiel to Pool and Wareham, and not touch any Garriſon by the way.

4. In caſe they march from Pool, that they ſhall not bear Arms, till they come to Portſmouth and Southampton.

5. That all the ſick and wounded ſhall lie at Foy till they be cured.

6. That they ſhall have in their march all the money they can procure from Plymouth, and all other accommodation they can obtain from thence.

7. That there ſhall be no inviting of Souldiers, but ſuch as come voluntary to his Majeſties ſervice.

And according to theſe Articles, the King had delivered up to him all the Train of Artillery, conſiſting of 49 Braſs Pieces of Ordnance (with thoſe taken before) two hundred and odd Barrels of Gunpowder, with Match and Ball proportionable, 700 Carriages, and betwixt eight and nine thouſand Arms; and many of the Common Souldiers deſerted their Officers, and voluntary offered their ſervice to the King; but this Victory did not leſſen the Kings inclination to peace, inſomuch that on the 8 th. of September he ſent a ſecond Meſſage to the Parliament from Taveſtock, though this, as that before had no anſwer; nor was any Treaty agreed on till January following, as will be hereafter mentioned. But in ſtead of this Meſſage, if he had gone with his Army towards London in all probability he might have made an end of the War, the Army of Eſſex being thus broken, and that of Mancheſter not returned from the Northern ſervice.

The King ſends a ſecond Meſſage to the Parliament for peace.

About this time the Marqueſs of Montroſs was very victorious for the King in Scotland, having obtained a great victory over the Covenanters upon Newbigging-Moor, and taken Perth, and within fourteen days after this he gained another victory near unto Aberdeen, and ſoon after took that City, and marched from thence into the Earl of Argyles Countrey, which he waſted with fire and ſword, and did many great ſervices, even to admiration, conſidering the ſmallneſs of his be-1644. beginning, and the little assistance he had from England; but we shall leave a while the narrative of his fortune, to return to the transactions in England, which were the remaining part of this year prosecuted in several places with various success: In the West after the great Victory over Essex his Army, Ilsford-Comb, Barnstable, and Saltash submitted to the Kings Arms, and Basing-house that had been eighteen weeks besieged, was relieved by a party from Oxford under Sir Henry Gage, and a little after, he with the Earl of Northampton raised the Siege of Banbury-Castle, which had been a moneth beleagur'd by Colonel John Fines, and slew and took many of his men, and one piece of Ordnance: but the good fortune of the Parliament in several parts ballanced this success with advantage, Monmouth was in September taken by Colonel Massy, and the Town and Castle of Newcastle which had long endured the utmost force of the English and Scotch Armies was taken by storm with great loss to the Assailants on the 27 th. of October, and a while after Leverpool in Lancashire was surrendred to Sir John Meldrum, but the great businesses that concluded this year were the Battel of Newberry, and the Treaty at Uxbridge, which will come next to be related, interwoven with some other of the most remarkable occurrences that then hapned.

The King has good success in the West.

The Parliaments success in divers parts.

The Earls of Essex and Manchester, and Sir William Waller had drawn a great Army together, with a resolution to hinder the Kings march to Oxford, but he not believing that Essex could have so soon appeared at the head of an Army, sought or was willing not to decline engagement. Essex and Manchester on the 23 th. of October rendevouz'd their Army in Aldermaston Park, and the next night came privately over the water at a Ford near Padworth, and next morning to Bucklebury-heath neer Newberry, where the King then was, and about 12 of the Clock drew down their whole Army between Thatcham and Shaw, and skirmished with the Kings Horse; On Saturday both Armies plied one another with their great Ordnance, but without much hurt done. Then some of Manchesters Troops and London Trained bands crossed the River Kennet between the hill and Newberry, and did some execution upon those that kept the pass against them: But Sir Bernard Ashley coming to their rescue, forceth the other over the River. Again, in the afternoon 4000 of Essex and Wallers Horse and Dragoons with 500 Pikes charged the Royal Army on the West-side of Newberry, where were the Cornish foot, & the Duke of Yorks Regiment, with 5 field pieces, and Prince Maurice's Brigade of Cornish Horse, all which having not unmanfully sustained the rough charge of the Parliamentarians, were yet forced to retreat back in some disorder, and here some of the Kings field pieces were taken. The Essexians following their success, advanced with 500 Horse, and a sufficient strength of Musketiers betwixt Newberry and Spine upon the Kings Life-Guards, and Sir Humphrey Bennets Brigade, whom they overpowred, and had much more endammaged, if the Lord Bernard Stewart had not come up to their assistance, and secured their Retreat on the East-side of Spine; the Parliamentarians having setled three bodies of Foot in certain inclosures, advanced over a ditch with a great body of Horse to break through the Kings Guards, but first they were obliged to fight with General Goring and the Earl of Cleavelands Brigade (who charged stoutly & beat back the enemy, but pursuing disorderly were repulsed with loss. 1644.

The Battel at Newberry.

Upon the North-east of Newlerry stood the Lord Ashley, with Colonel George Lysle, against whom the Earl of Manchesters Horse and Foot, with the Trained Bands of London came down the hill, and worsted Colonel Lysles Guards. But Sir John Brown Lieut. Colonel of the Prince of Wales his Regiment of Horse charged the Foot, and stopt them, and then received a charge of 1000 Horse, and was forced to retreat.

Manchester in the next place forces his way to charge the Reserve commanded by Colonel Thelwel, and after a smart dispute beat them out of the field and gains their Colours, and two pieces of Cannon: In this Battel on the Kings part were were slain, Sir Anthony St. Leger, Lieutenant Col. Leak, Lieutenant Colonel Topping, and Cap. Catlin; the Earl of Cleaveland, and some few were taken; the Earl of Brainford & Forth, Sir John Greenvill, Sir Richard Campfield, Major Alford, and Captain Walgrave and others were wounded, many private Souldiers slain and taken prisoners. The fight endured till eight of the Clock at night, and was ended to the advantage of the Parliamentarians; for the King perceiving that most of his Brigades were shattered, and fearing a total overthrow if the Battel should be renewed, marched away secretly to Dennington-Castle, and there left behind him his great pieces of Ordnance, and so hasted to Wallingford. General Essex lodged himself in Newbury, and having in vain summoned and assaulted Denning-Castle, he marched away on the 29 th. of October, committing the care of that Siege to a party which he left behind him.

The Kings party worsted at Newbury.

The King after this fight made what hast he could to recruit and refresh his Army that he might relieve Dennington-Castle, which was not sufficiently provided, and bring from thence the Ordnance, Ammunition & Baggage which he left there, and that he might also succor Basing house, which was again besieged & therefore on the 6 th. of Novemb. he had his Rendevouze at Bullington-Green betwixt Wallingford and Oxford, and from thence he marched two days after to Dennington, but upon his approach to the Castle, the enemy drew off their forces, and he put into the Garrison a supply of such things as they wanted, and then drew off the Train of Artillery, and other Carriages which he had left there: and hearing Sir William Waller was with an Army about Hungerford, he marcht thither to ingage him, but they would not venter an encounter, and from thence Sir Henry Gage was sent with a Party to relieve Basing-house, but before he came, the besiegers drew off, and left the work very easie to him. After these performances the King returned to Oxford, and disposed his Army to Winter Quarters, and there he was attended by the Earl of Denbigh, and some of the House of Commons as Commissioners from the Parliament, with Propositions for a Peace, which produced an overture for a Message to be sent from him to the Parliament by the Duke of Richmond, and the 1644. Earl of Southampton, which was agreed to, and from thence a Treaty was had at Uxbridge, which began about the first of February after, of which we shall make further mention in its place.

About the end of this Moneth, Sir Alexander Carew who was Governor of St. Nicholas Island at Plymouth, was tryed by a Court Martial for endeavouring to deliver up the Island to the King, and sentenced to be beheaded, which sentence was a few daies after executed upon him on Tower-Hill, and by the same Court Martial Sir John Hotham and his Son were in like manner arraigned, found guilty, and executed for designing to quit their party, and by some service to ingratiate a return to their allegiance to the King, concerning whose misfortunes, The King amongst other reflections thereon in his excellent * Book, express'd him thus;

Sir Alexander Carew beheaded. Sir John Hotham and his Son executed.

* Εἰκὼν Βασιλικὴ, cap. 3. p. 46.

" Sir John Hotham unreproached, unthreatned, not curs'd by any language or secret imprecation of mine, only blasted with the conscience of his own wickedness, and falling from one inconstancy to another, not long after pays his own and his eldest Sons heads, as forfeitures of their disloyalty, to those men, from whom surely he might have expected another reward than thus, to divide their heads from their bodies, whose hearts with them were divided from their King.

" Nor is it strange that they who imployed them at first in so high a service, and so successful to them, should not find mercy enough to forgive him, who had so much premerited of of them: For Apostacy unto Loyaltie, some men account the most unpardonable sin.

" Not did a solitary vengeance serve the turn; the cutting off one head in a Family, is not enough to expiate the affront done to the head of the Common-weale. The eldest Son must be involved in the punishment, as he was infected with the sin of the Father, against the Father of his Countrey; Root and branch God cuts off in one day.

" These observations are obvious to every fancy: God knows I was so far from rejoycing in Hotham's ruine, though it were such as were able to give the greatest thirst for revenge a full draught, (being executed by them who first imployed him against Me) that I so far pitied him, as I thought he at first acted more against the light of his Conscience, than I hope other men do in the same cause.

By these and other executions at this time, the Parliament made themselves very terrible to their Officers, against whom any particular crimes could be objected, but where the offences were general and the persons of great interest in their Army, they were more cautious in their methods, and it happened at this time, that they were much perplex'd at the ill conduct of their Armies, in suffering the King to make that progress he lately did in the relief of Dennington and Basing-House; for by his appearance there, the quarters of the Parliaments Army on that side, were at Redding, Henly, Abington and Farnham, and the Kings Troops were quarter'd at Basing, Odiam, Newbury, Blewburie, and Marlborough.

Dennington and Basing-House relieved by the Kings Forces.

Essex began to be suspected as careless or discontented, and Collonel Norton writ a letter that he had received a warrant from a chief Commander of the Army to withdraw from Basing: And the Earl of Manchester made a long Relation in writing concerning the carriage at Dennington, wherein he made his own defence, but accused Collonel Cromwell. Upon this the House of Commons fell into consideration of the slow proceedings of their Armies, alledging that many of their Officers were deficient in not prosecuting advantages, which tended to the Prolongation of the War, and that the differences amongst their Commanders were commonly most where the command is greatest; which produced this Resolution, (viz.) That no member of either House of Parliament, shall (during this War) injoy or execute any Office or Command Military or Civil, which hath been granted or conferred on any Member of either House, or by any authority derived from either House, and that an Ordinance be brought in to that purpose. 1644.

The House of Commons vote that no Parliament man shall execute any command military or civil.

This Vote and the Ordinance thereupon was very much opposed by the Peers, but petitions from the City and several Counties were framed and presented to move their compliance, which in the end prevailed upon them; In the mean time, though it was now Winter, and not ordinarily a time of action, the War went on in several places, and several new Garrisons were made by both parties, to the miserable spoyl and destruction of the Countrey. Sir Jacob Ashley possessed himself of Cirencester with three Brigades of Foot, and four Regiments of Horse, and became so formidable, that he commanded Contribution to the very gates of Gloucester, nor were the Garrisons in Worcester, Hereford, and Bristol, less active, and Munmouth that had been before taken from the King, was regain'd by the Lord Herbert of Ragland, but in the midst of this good Fortune on the Kings side, a Garrison was form'd at Abington, a Town within five miles of Oxford, by order from the Two Houses of Parliament, under the command of Collonel Brown, the King and Councel looking on, and suffering the Intrenchments to be made, the Works to be raised, and the Ordnance to be planted on the same. * It cannot be denied, but that Sir Henry Gage and many of the chief Commanders which were then in and about Oxford, offered their service to the King, and earnestly desired leave to prevent that mischief which by the Intrenchments of this Town must needs fall upon them. But the Lord George Digby, not long before made Principal Secretary of State, had perswaded the King unto the contrary, upon assurance that he held intelligence with Brown, and that as soon as the Town was fortified and furnished with Victual, Arms and Ammunition, at the charges of the Houses of Parliament, it would immediately be delivered into his Majesties hand. In which design he was deluded, and exposed to some loss of Reputation: For Brown having brought his project to the highest round of the ladder (as himself expressed it) thought it high time to turn it off, and to declare himself for the two Houses against the King; printing not long after all the letters which passed between him and the Lord Digby upon this occasion. 1644.

Monmouth regained by the Lord Herbert of Ragland.

Abington made a Garrison for the Parliament under Browns command.

But

1644. But now when it was too late, Sir Hen. Gage was sent with a commanded party out of Oxford and Wallingford to raise a Fort at Cullam Bridg within half a mile of Abington, but the design being discovered, he was prevented, and in the attempt unfortunately received a shot, whereof within two hours he died, and with him Lieutenant Collonel Lower the Deputy Governor of Wallingford, and Major Green of that Garrison, with several others of great courage and reputation.

Arch-Bishop Laud beheaded on Tower-Hill.

On the same day, or the day before, William Laud, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, was beheaded on Tower-Hill, after he had been kept four years a Prisoner in the Tower, his Rent sequestred, and his Books, Papers, and all his Goods seiz'd; his Charge was, a constructive Treason under several heads reducible into two particulars;

1. For indeavouring the subversion of the Laws of the Land.
2. And a like endeavour to overthrow the Protestant Religion.

His Tryal was at the Lords Bar, and Mr. William Pryn of Lincolns-Inne, his profest enemy, was made his Prosecutor, wherein nothing was omitted to aggravate his offences, though when all that could be, was said, nothing that did amount to Treason could be proved against him, but the Scots who were at that time very prevalent, would not be satisfied, unless he were put to death, to manifest thereby their zeal against the Episcopal Hierarchy, to usher in the Presbyterian Government at the approaching Treaty, so that by an Ordinance of Lords and Commons, he was adjudged guilty of High Treason, though at the passing thereof in the House of Peers, there were but seven present, (viz. * the Earls of Kent, Pembroke, Salisbury and Bullingbrook, and the Lords, North, Gray, and Bruce.)

* Heylins History of the Life of King Charl. I. pag. 113.

He ended his life with such a modest confidence, and so much piety, that his greatest enemies then present, who came to behold the Execution with hearts full of joy, returned back with eyes as full of tears.

The Treaty at Uxbridge

In pursuance of several messages from the King for a Treaty, it was assented to by the Parliament, and at Uxbridge Commissioners met on the 30*th.* of January for the King, on one part, and for the Parliament of England and the Parliament of Scotland on the other.

1644.

The first things to be treated on, were;

1. Religion.
2. The Militia.
3. Ireland.

The matters of the Treaty.

The first paper at the opening of the Treaty was, concerning Religion which was delivered from the Kings Commissioners to the others in these words;

1. That freedome be left to all Persons of what opinion soever in matters of Ceremony, and that all the penalties of the Laws and Customs which enjoyn these penalties, be suspended.

2. That the Bishops shall exercise no Act of Jurisdiction, or Ordination, without the consent and counsel of the Presbyters, who shall be chosen by the Clergie of each Dioceſs, out of the Learnedst and gravest Ministers of that Dioceſs.

3. That the Bishop keep his constant Residence in his Dioceſs, except when he shall be required by his Majesty to attend him on any occasion; and that if he be not hindred by the infirmity of old age, or sickness: he preach every Sunday in some Church within his Dioceſs.

4. That the Ordination of Ministers shall be alwaies in the publick and solemn manner, and very strict rules observed concerning the sufficiency and other qualifications of those men who shall be received into Holy Orders: And the Bishop shall not receive any into holy Orders without the Approbation and consent of the Presbyters, or the major part of them.

5. That competent Maintenance be established by Parliament, to such Vicarages as belong to Bishops, Deans and Chapters, out of the Impropriations according to the value of the several Parishes.

6. That no man shall be capable of two Parsonages or Vicaridges with cure of Souls.

7. That toward the setling of the publick Peace, 100000 l. shall be raised by Parliament, out of the Estates of Bishops, Deans and Chapters, in such manner as the King and Parliament shall think fit, without the Alienation of any of the said Lands.

8. That the Jurisdiction in causes Testamentary, Decimals and Matrimonials, be setled in such a manner as shall seem most convenient by the King and Parliament: And likewise that Acts to be passed for regulating of Visitations, and against immoderate Fees in Ecclesiastical Courts, and abuses by frivolous Excommunications, and all other abuses in Ecclesiastical Jurisdictions as shall be agreed upon by King and Parliament.

And if the Parliaments Commissioners will insist upon any other things which they shall think necessary for Religion, the Kings Commissioners shall very willingly apply themselves to the consideration thereof.

The Parliament Commissioners after they had perused this paper, delivered one of theirs to the 1644. Kings Commissioners, which was as followeth.

That a Bill be passed for abolishing of all Arch-Bishops, Bishops, &c. according to the third Proposition.

That the Ordinances concerning the calling and sitting of the Assembly of Divines, be confirmed by Act of Parliament.

That the directory for Publick worship already passed both Houses, and the Propositions concerning Church-Government annexed and passed both Houses, be Enacted as a part of Reformation of Religion and Uniformity, according to the first Proposition.

That his Majesty take the Solemn Leagne and Covenant, and that the Covenants be enjoyned to be taken according to the second Proposition.

To this was annexed the following Paper.

That the ordinary way of dividing Christians into distinct Congregations, and most expedient for edification, is by the respective bounds of their dwellings.

That the Minister and the Church Officers in each Congregation, shall joyn in the Government of the Church, as shall be established by the Parliament.

That many particular Congregations shall be under one Presbyterial Government.

That the Church be governed by Congregational, Classical, and Synodical Assemblies, to be established by Parliament.

That Synodical Assemblies shall consist both of Provincial and National Assemblies.

These papers were debated on three daies without any determination on any one controverted point, and on the 4*th.* of February, The Parliament Commissioners delivered in the following proposals concerning the Militia.

We desire that the Subjects of England may be Armed, Trained and Disciplined as the Parliament shall think fit; and that the like be for Scotland, as the Parliament there shall think fit: And that his Majesty give his Royal assent to the Acts following.

1. An Act for setling the Admiralty and Forces at Sea, and moneys thereto for maintenance, to be as the Parliament shall think fit, and the like for Scotland.

2. An Act for setling the Admiralty, and all Forces at Sea, and moneys thereto for maintenance to be as the Parliament shall think fit. The like for Scotland.

3. An Act for setling all Forces by Sea and Land in Commissioners to be named by Parliament, to be such as both Kingdoms shall confide in, with power to suppress all powers and forces contrary thereto, and to act as they shall be directed by Parliament.

And so for the Kingdom of Scotland.

That the Militia of the City of London, and the Parishes without London, and the Liberties within the weekly Bills of Mortality, be in the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council.

That the Tower of London may be in the Government of the City, and the chief Officers thereof nominated, and removable by the Common Council.

That the Citizens or Forces of London may not be drawn out of the City without their own consent, and the example of drawing them out in these distracted times, may be no President for the future.

These papers were likewise debated three days, and then the Parliament Commissioners presented a paper concerning Ireland, to this effect;

That His Majesty give his Royal assent to an Act to make void the cessation of Ireland, and all Treaties of the Rebells without consent of Parliament, and to settle the Prosecution of the War of Ireland in the Parliament, to be managed by the joyne advice of both Kingdoms, and his Majesty to assist, and to do no act to discountenance or molest them therein.

The Kings Commissioners in the debate of this Proposition, did lay open the eminent and inevitable necessity which caused the King to make the Irish Cessation, which he was in honour obliged to make good; nevertheless they offered to condescend to any thing for the security of the Kings Protestant Subjects, but the Parliament Commissioners were so bound up by their instructions, that they could admit of no alteration of what they offered.

The matter of Religion was then resumed, and that was to be concluded before they proceeded to any other proposition. But so many difficulties occurr'd in the debate thereon, that no accord could be made; for the Parliament to endeare the Scots to them, had caused every Member of each House to take the Scotch Covenant, whereby they bound themselves to the preservation of the Religion of Scotland, in Doctrine, Worship, Discipline and Government: and, To endeavour the extirpation of Episcopacy, and the Reformation of Religion in England and Ireland, according to the example of the best Reformed Churches. Whereby they could mean nothing less than to bring them to the discipline of Scotland, because they had sworn to the preservation of the Religion there. Moreover, they had sworn in this Covenant against detestable indifferency and neutrality (to keep their own words) whereby it seem'd apparent, that though at first the contrivers of this Oath pretended only for liberty of Conscience, they now would allow none to any; wherefore the Kings Commissioners were at a stand; for the King took himself bound by the Oath of his Coronation, not to alter the government of the Church, and they were bound by their instructions to insist thereon, so that the Treaty became desperate upon this account, though on the Kings part it was offered. That if the Articles proposed by them, did not give satisfaction, that then so great an alteration as the total abolishment of a Government established by Law, might (for the imparlance of it, and any reformation in doctrine for the scandal of it) be suspended, till after the disbanding of all Armies, when the King should be present with the Parliament, and calling a National Synod, might receive such advice both from the one and the other, as should be necessary, and as any Reformation thus calmly made, would needs prove for the singular benefit; so, whether the contrary, that is an alteration even to things though in themselves good, could

by

1644. by the principles of Christian Religion, be enforced upon the King or Kingdom.

This would not be admitted, and the time allowed for the Treaty being but twenty daies, nothing was effected therein; for the Parliament were resolved to have no peace but on their own terms, believing all the Kings proposals for peace, to proceed either from an inability to hold out the War, or from the weakness and irresolutions of his Councel.

The Treaty proves ineffectual.

Shrewsbury taken.

After this followed the taking of Shrewsbury, a place of very great importance to the King, as the Gate which opened into Wales, situate on a rising ground, and almost encompassed about by the River Severn; that part which is not invironed by water, being wholly taken up and made good by a very strong Castle. By the loss of which Town, the Kings former intercourse with his loyal Subjects of North-Wales was not only hindred, but a present stop was given to an association which was then upon the point of concluding between the Counties of Salop, Flint, Chester, Worcester, &c. to the great prejudice of the Kings affairs in those parts of the Kingdom.

Pomfret Castle relieved by Sir Marmaduke Langdale, and the Lord Fairfax's Army defeated.

But to make a recompence in some measure for this great loss about the beginning of March this year, Pomfret Castle in York-shire was relieved by Sir Marmaduke Langdale, who there defeated the Lord Fairfax's Army that lay before it, and in his going thither, he defeated a great Party of the Parliament Forces commanded by Collonel Rossiter near Melton-Moubray in Leicestershire.

The Prince of Wales sent into the West to perfect the Association.

The King at this time thought fit to send the Prince of Wales into the West, to perfect the association which had been begun in the end of the last Summer: and in those Countreys to advance such further Forces as might not only serve for the defence of themselves, but give some reasonable increase to his Army; so that upon the fifth of March, He set forwards toward Bristol, accompanied by the Lord Culpepper and Sir Edward Hide, as his principal Counsellors, and some of the chief Gentry of the West, who were of most authority in their several Countreys.

The King having advised with such of the Members of both Houses of Parliament, as had assembled at Oxford, from their last meeting in November after their Prorogation, to the tenth of March; He then, being resolv'd for action, dismist them to their several Countreys.

1645. And now both sides prepare for action, in order whereunto the Parliament had passed their Ordinance which they called self-denying, wherein all and every the Members of either House were to be discharg'd of all their Command Military or Civil, and in pursuance thereof, they elected Sir Thomas Fairfax to be General of their Army, which they new modell'd out of their other Armies, consisting of 11 Regiments of Horse, and 10 Regiments of Foot. Oliver Cromwell, though a Member of the House of Commons, was particularly excepted out of the Ordinance, and so was Skippon the Major General, and Ireton the Commissary General of the Horse; and to make way for these Officers, the Earls of Essex, Manchester, and Denby, surrendred their Commissions in the Lords House, and the Earl of Warwick also surrendred his Commission of Admiral.

The Parliament pass their self-denying Ordinance.

Sir Thomas Fairfax made General of their Army.

Cromwell, Skippon, and Ireton, excepted out of their Ordinance.

Essex, Manchester, and Denby, surrender their Commissions, and Warwick his Admiralship.

April the third Sir Thomas Fairfax sets forth for Windsor, where he applies himself to the gathering together of his Army, to which place Lieutenant General Cromwel came to him, and was immediately ordered to march towards Oxford, with a Brigade of 1100 Horse and Dragoons, to intercept a Convoy of Horse, which Prince Rupert had sent from Worcester to fetch off the King from Oxford with his Train of Artillery, and some foot with intention to take the field, and at Islelip, Cromwel falls upon them, which after some dispute he routed, and took divers Prisoners, and about 200 Horse, and from thence he pursued several of them that escaped to Blechingdon House, where Colonel Windebanck kept a Garrison for the King, which was surrendred to him upon the first summons, but the Colonel was soon after condemned by a Court of War at Oxford, and shot to death for parting so easily with the place. A few days after Cromwel marches to Farringdon, and assaulted that Garrison, but was repulst with the loss of near two hundred men, besides many that were wounded and taken prisoners. The King perceiving that Fairfax intended to besiege Oxford sent for Prince Rupert and General Goring to march to him thither, and these about the beginning of May came to Oxford, and fetcht of the King, who quickly increased his Army, and advanced with it towards the relief of Chester, but Goring returned to the Siege of Taunton, from whence he had been called to this service.

1645.

Fairfax goes to Windsor to gather up his Army.

Cromwel routs some Horse sent to Convey the King from Oxford.

Colonel Windebank shot to death at Oxford.

Cromwel repulsed at Farringdon.

Prince Rupert and Gen. Goring come to Oxford and fetch off the King.

Fairfax in commiseration of the distrest condition of Taunton marched with his Army to the relief of it as far as Blanford, but upon second thoughts he sends Colonel Welden with near two thousand Horse and Dragoons, and 5000 Foot to Taunton, and returns to Newbury, where he receives an express to march to Oxford and lay close Siege to it: in the mean time Welden makes hast to Taunton, and the Kings forces before the Town being informed it was the whole Army, resolved to give one furious assault, and if that took not effect to quit the place, which was performed, and they entred the Town, and fired two Streets, but the Governour retired to the Castle, and they could not force that, wherefore they drew off, and suffered Col. Welden to enter the Town, but Goring, Greenvil, and Barkley, uniting their forces together did so press upon Welden, that they besieged him and the Town again. By this time the King had relieved Chester, and from thence marched to Leicester, and taken it by assault, wherein were many Prisoners of note, and good store of Arms and Ammunition, and from thence he went to Daventry. Fairfax having intelligence as he lay at the Siege of Oxford, of this fortunate progress of the Kings Arms, was resolved to raise his Siege, and march directly towards him, with an intent to give him Battel, and in pursuance hereof on the 5*th* of June his Army randevouzed at Great Brickhil, and from thence be marcht to Gilbrough, within four miles of Northampton, and five miles of Brough-hil, which was one of the quarters of the Royallists.

Fairfax lays close Siege to Oxford.

The King relieves Chester, and takes Leicester by assault.

The King hereupon drew of from Brough-hil, minding to march Northward to the relief of Pomfret, which was again besieged, but Fairfax being eager to engage, sent Ireton with a flying 1645. party of Horſe, who fell into Naſeby Town, and took many priſoners, giving ſuch an Alarm to the whole Army, that the King at midnight left his own Quarters, and for ſecurity haſtned to Harbrough, where he raiſed Prince Rupert, and called a Councel of War, where it was reſolved to give Battel, and becauſe Fairfax had been ſo forward, they would not ſtay for him, but ſeek him out, and at a place near Naſeby in Northamptonſhire, the two Armies met on Saturday the 14*th.* of June.

The fight at Naſeby.

The King himſelf commanded the Main Body, Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice the Right Wing, Sir Marmaduke Langdale the Left, the Earl of Lindſey, and the Lord Aſhley the right-hand Reſerve, the Lord Bard and Sir George Liſle the Left. Of the Parliaments Army, Fairfax and Skippon commanded the Main Body, Cromwel the right Wing, with whom was Roſſiter, who came with his forces but a little before the fight, and Ireton had the Left. The Reſerves were brought up by Rainsborow, Hammond, and Pride: Prince Rupert charged the Parliaments left wing, Commanded by Ireton, who made notable reſiſtance, but at laſt was forced to give ground, Ireton himſelf being run through the Thigh with a Pike, and into the Face with a Halbert, his Horſe ſhot under him, and himſelf taken Priſoner. For a while Rupert follows the Chaſe almoſt to Naſeby Town, and in his return ſummoned the Train, who made no other anſwer but with their Firelocks: but in the mean time Cromwel chargeth furioſly on the Kings left Wing, and got the better, forcing them from the Body, and proſecuting the advantage, quite broke them and their Reſerve; during which the Main Bodies had charged one another with incredible fierceneſs, often Retreating & Rallying, falling in together with the But-ends of their Muſquets, and coming to handy-blows with their Swords. But Fairfax's his Foot coming up ſeaſonably to the Horſe, and Cromwel coming in with his Victorious right Wing, they all charged together upon the Kings main Army, who unable to endure any longer, retired out of the field towards Leiceſter, and Prince Rupert, who now too late returned from his too eager purſuit, ſeeing the day loſt, accompanied them in their Town, and haſts to Litchfield. This Battel was exceeding bloody, both Armies being very courageous and numerous, not being five hundred odds, fought in a large fallow field, on the North-weſt-ſide of Naſeby, about a mile broad, which ſpace of ground was wholly taken up. On the Parliaments ſide were wounded and ſlain, above a thouſand Officers and private Souldiers: Major General Skippon (who was an old experienced Souldier, and was ordered to draw up the form of the Battel) fought ſtoutly that day; and although he was ſorely wounded in the beginning of the fight, and the General deſired him to go off the field, he anſwered, he would not ſtir ſo long as a man would ſtand; and accordingly ſtayed till the Battel was ended. Ireton (as is ſaid before) was dangerouſly hurt and taken priſoner for a while, after he had done his part, but in the confuſion of the fight got looſe again, and ſaw the Victory atchieved. The General and Lieutenant General performed their work with ſufficient reſolution (had their Cauſe been as good) and by their own examples infuſed valour into their followers, ſo likewiſe did the other Officers of whom divers were wounded. 1645.

On the other ſide, the King ſhewed himſelf that day a couragious General, keeping cloſe with his Horſe, and himſelf in perſon rallying them to hot encounters, the Earl of Lindſey, Lord Aſhley, Colonel Raſtol and other were wounded, 20 Colonels, Knights, and Officers of note, and 600 private Souldiers ſlain: but much more was the dammage that the King ſuſtained, by what was taken, viz. ſix Colonels, 8 Lieutenant Colonels, 18 Majors, 70 Captains, 8 Lieutenants, 200 Enſigns, and other inferiour Officers, 4500 Common Souldiers, and many women, 13 of the Kings houſhold Servants, four of his Footmen, 12 Pieces of Ordnance, 8000 Arms, 40 Barrels of Powder, 200 Carriages, all their Bagg and Baggage, with ſtore of rich Pillage, 3000 Horſe, the Kings Standard, one of the Kings Coaches, and his Cabinet of Letters and Papers, which were after publiſhed by the Parliament (with leſs decency and civility than became ſuch an aſſembly) Sir Marmaduke Langdale haſted away the the ſame night to Newark. The next day General Fairfax ſent up Col. John Fines to London with the Priſoners and Colours taken in the fight.

The King having ſaved himſelf by flight, gathered together ſome part of his ſcattered forces, but never was able to make head againſt the Conquerors, loſing this year one Garriſon after another, till his whole ſtrength was almoſt reduced to Oxford, I ſhall take notice only of ſome of the principal, namely Leiceſter, Carliſle, Pomfract-Caſtle, Bridgwater, Scarbrough, Briſtow, Hereford, and Weſtcheſter, on which ſo great a part of his affairs did moſt eſpecially depend.

Several garriſons of the Kings taken.

On the 16*th.* of June, Fairfax ſat down before Leiceſter, and ſummoned the Governor the Lord Haſtings to deliver up the Town, which he refuſing, Warrants were iſſued for the Country to bring in Ladders and other neceſſaries for a ſtorm; and Haſtings continuing yet obſtinate, he aſſailed it in ſeveral places, and at the Newark-ſide, he made ſo wide a Breach, that the Governor deſired a Parlee, which was granted, and thereupon a ſurrendring enſued upon very fair terms. There were in the Town 14 pieces of Ordnance, thirty Colours, 2000 Arms, 500 Horſe, 50 Barrels of Powder, and Ammunition proportionable, and about a week after Sir Thomas Glemham Governor of Carliſle, having been long beſieged by the Parliament forces, and deſpairing of ſuccours yielded up the Town. The low condition of Col. Welden, & the Town of Taunton, cauſed the Committee of both Kingdoms to order General Fairfax to march thither, which he readily obeyed, but upon his approach to the Town, General Goring on the tenth of July, drew off from Taunton, and retreated to Langport. The next day Fairfax being at Long-Sutton within two miles of Langport, he drew out his forces early in the morning in Sutton-field, Goring likewiſe drew forth at that time, and took a paſs leading to Bridgwater, and lined the way to it with Muſquettiers, Fairfax ſent Major Bethel 1645. to force the pass, but he was repulst; then Desbrough was sent with 200 Horse, who prest so hard upon the Royallists, that they were put to a disorderly retreat into Langport, setting one end of the Town on fire, that the smoke thereof might hinder the enemies pursuit of them; but Lieutetenant General Crommel with some Troops prest through, and pursued them within two miles of Bridgwater.

In this fight Goring lost about 200 of his men, who were slain, and about 1400 taken prisoners, of which Colonel Brettrige, and Colonel Slingsby were the Chief. On Fairfax's side Colonel Cook, Colonel Butler, and Major Bethel were wounded, and a Captain of Butlers slain, and about 100 of the Souldiers killed and wounded.

Sir John Digby died of his wounds at Bridgwater.

Sir John Digby who was Major General of the Horse to Goring was shot in the elbow, and carried into Bridgwater, where shortly after he died of his wound, and was very much lamented by his party, he was about forty five years of age at the time of his death, and in all his life was scarce ever heard to swear or seem angry; he had very great courage and conduct in Martial affairs, and was competently learned also in many Sciences. Goring after he had refresht himself for some time in Bridgwater, marched away to the North of Devonshire: Sir Thomas Fairfax presently thereupon sits down before Bridgwater, and summons the Town, but being resolutely denied by Sir Edmond Windham the Governor, he stormed the lower part thereof which is divided from the rest by a Bridge and gained it, and the next day he shot hot steel plugs into the Town, by which means, and by some intelligence he had with the Town, most of the houses that were thatcht were fired, whereby the Townsmen were so distracted, that they left the Works, and flung down their Arms to endeavour to save their houses. In the midst of this consternation, Fairfax sent a Trumpeter in to the Governor, wherin he acquainted him, that he purposed to assault the Town, but in compassion to the women and children therein, he offered to permit as many of them as desired it, to go out of the Town; upon this there was so great a distraction in the Garrison, that the Governor was forced to yield to a Treaty; and thereupon on the 23 of July the Town was surrendred, upon condition only of fair Quarter, but all except Townsmen that were in Arms to be prisoners at War, of which there were a thousand Officers and Souldiers, and in their stores they found 44 Barrels of Powder, and 400 weight of match; and in the Town 44 pieces of Ordnance, and 1500 Arms; and two days before Pomfract-Castle after three moneths Siege was delivered up to Major General Pointz upon condition for the Officers and Souldiers to march away with their Arms, Drums beating, and Colours flying, and bullet in mouth, with six shot of Powder, and bullet proportionable: and on the 25 th. of July the Castle of Scarbrough had the like fate, it being then surrendred by Sir Hugh Cholmley the Governour, to Sir Matthew Boynton, who commanded the forces before it upon very honorable conditions, amongst which it was provided, that the Governor and all his Officers and Souldiers should have a safe Convoy to Newark, and from thence after six days notice, as many as desired should have a pass to go into Holland, or any other place abroad, and none were to be plundered or forced to take up Arms against their wills, but to have Passes to go home if they desired them. They had kept this Castle so well, that at the delivery thereof, many of the Officers and Souldiers were so sick and weak, that they were brought out in sheets: there were about 35 pieces of Ordnance in the Castle, besides many Arms, but very little Victual or Ammunition. 1645.

Bridgwater yeelded up to Fairfax.

Pomfract-Castle delivered up to Gen. Pointz.

Scarbrough Castle surrendred to Sir Matthew Lointon.

Bristow comes next, a place conveniently seated for the trade of Spain, the River capable of great ships, and the Port well guarded: At the taking of this City by the Kings forces, to such strengths as before it had, there was added a fort Royal, then conceived impregnable, into this City Prince Rupert had put himself at the present, and was besieged not long after by General Fairfax, who came before it on the 25 th. of August. The Prince made several sallies, and did some execution upon the enemy, but not without considerable loss to his own party, amongst which Sir Bernard Ashley, and Sir Richard Crane died of wounds they received in one of them.

Bristow stormed by Fairfax.

Fairfax had intelligence that the works in many places were very weak and imperfect, and withal he heard that the King did purpose to joyn with Goring to raise the Siege, but first expected that they should weary themselves so long before the Town, till he should be able to draw together a force sufficient for such an enterprize: upon consideration whereof a counsel of War was called, and resolution taken to storm the City, which was done in this order; Colonel Forteſcue with four Regiments on Sommerſetſhire-side, Colonel Montague with the like number on both sides of Lawford-Gate, and Colonel Rainsborough on this side the River Froom, from the Sally-port to the Fryers port, and other Regiments were disposed in several stations, to second the assailants, and enter the lines; Forteſcue failed in his attempt, but Montague and Rainsborough effected their business, and Rainsborough possest himself of Fryers-port, and all the other Forts, except the great Fort were taken; the way being thus made by the Foot, the Horse entred the Town, and the Princes Horse hastned to get themselves into the Fort-Royal, but the Parliamentarians from the Fryers-port did so command the Gate and entrance into the great Fort, that none could go in or out, so that the next day a Parley was had, and Articles concluded on for the surrender thereof; and in the place they had above 200 pieces of Ordnance, 8000 Arms, 200 barrels of Powder, 80 Tun of Beer, and great store of other Provisions. In the storm on the Kings side Major Price, Major Williams, and ten other Officers were slain, and many Souldiers, and Colonel Taylor wounded. On the Parliaments side, Lieutenant Colonel Purefoy, and Captain Hill and Major Crommel with 30 more Officers were killed; and Major Bethel, Major Gethings, with some others of less note were wounded. The Prince on the 11 th. of September marched out of the City with eight Lords in his Company, 500 Horse, and 1400 foot, the Foot marched with their Musquets and other Arms, but when they 1645. they came within 20 miles of Oxford, they were to lay them down.

Fairfax marches into the West to the Prince of of Wales.

Briſtow being thus reduced, Fairfax marched into the Weſt, towards the Prince of Wales, (who was now in the middle parts of Devonſhire) intending to take in Exeter, but there were ſo many blocks in his way, that it was a long time after before he gained that City, as will be hereafter related.

The quick ſurrendring of Briſtow did much trouble the King, for he thought that City (ſo well fortified and furniſht with Victual, Arms, and Ammunition) would rather have given a turn to his affairs, by the ruine of the Parliament Army againſt it than otherways, there had before ſome Letters paſſed betwixt the King and the Prince, touching the Kings coming to a ſpeedy agreement with his two Houſes of Parliament, in which the King was ſo far preſſed, that he ſeemed to be diſpleaſed at it, and diſpatched a Meſſenger to the Lords at Oxford to diſplace Colonel William Legg (then Governour thereof, and a great confident of the Prince's) and to put Sir Thomas Glemham into his place.

Scots raiſe their ſiege from Hereford.

Hereford next followed the ſame fortune of Briſtol, which having been beſieged by the Scots from the 13 th. of July to the firſt of September (at which time they were forced to draw off, upon news that their help was required in their own Kingdom, where Montroſs was very prevalent, having defeated an Army imployed againſt him in a Battel fought in Kilſieth field near Glaſcow:) the Town was ſuddenly ſurprized by Colonel Birch and Colonel Morgan (the laſt then Governor of Gloceſter) on the eighteenth of December; the King a little before this time had got a ſmall Army together in Wales, and ſeeing Briſtol loſt, was very deſirous to free Cheſter (a City of very great importance in thoſe parts of the Kingdom) from the Siege then before it by Sir William Brereton, Collonel Jones, and others, to effect which, he march'd with his Army conſiſting of about five thouſand men, and moſt Horſe to relieve the Town; but in his march towards it, he was fought by General Poyntz at Routon-More within two miles of Cheſter, where being outpower'd with numbers, his Army was worſted, and amongſt others, the Lord Bernard Stewart (Brother to the Duke of Richmond then newly made Earl of Litchfeild) was ſlain; he was a young Nobleman of great hopes, and therefore was his loſs very much lamented by the King; upon this diſcomfiture, the King drew his broken Army towards the North-eaſt, and commanded the Lord Digby and Sir Marmaduke Langdale to march for Scotland, and to joyn with the Marqueſs of Montroſs, who was very ſucceſful there, and only wanted Horſe to enable him to reduce that whole Kingdom to the Kings obedience. Theſe in obedience to their order march'd Northward, and at a Village called Sherborne, they ſurprized ſeven hundred of the Parliament Foot, with their arms and baggage, but ſtaying there for carriages, ſome of General Poyntz his Forces commanded by Collonel Copley, Collonel Lilborne, and Collonel Allured, fell upon them, and routed them, killing and taking about a hundred Officers, three hundred common Souldiers, ſix hundred Horſe, with their furniture, and the Lord Digbyes Coach and Horſes, and therein his Cabinet of Letters, but he, with the remains of his ſhatter'd Brigade, making towards Scotland, was a ſecond time met upon Carliſle Sands, and utterly defeated, he himſelf eſcaping to the Iſle of Man, from whence he got a paſſage into Ireland: The King was got to Newark when this misfortune hapned to the Lord Digby, but ſo great was the diſcontent he found there, that he was put to much trouble thereby; Sir Richard Willis upon ſome inſtigation of Digby, was a little before removed from the Government of the Town, and the Lord Bellaſis made Governor thereof in his place, at which Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice were diſpleaſed, becauſe he was a perſon by them much favoured and eſteemed, and their diſpleaſure was in a while too openly manifeſted; for at a dinner with the Governor upon the 17 th. of Octoober, upon ſome diſcourſe of the preſent tranſactions, and the managery of the Lord Digby, General Gerard ſaid, he was a Traytor, to which Bellaſis made ſuch a reply as occaſioned many paſſionate diſputes, wherein the two Princes juſtified Gerard; the King in the interim came in, and quieted the buſineſs by his preſence for a time, but in the doing thereof, ſome indecent carriages and expreſſions were made towards him by the inſtigation of Willis, which are not fit to be remembred; and in the concluſion, the two Princes, Gerard, the Lord Hawley, and Sir Richard Willis, with ſome others of their friends, retired to Norton Houſe fourteen miles from Newark, from whence they ſent to the Parliament for a paſs to tranſport them out of the Kingdom, and obtained it.

1645.

The King comes to Newark.

Sir Richard Willis removed, and the Lord Bellaſis made Governor of Newark.

The two Princes, Gerard, Lord Hawley, and Willis, depart the Kingdom.

These traverſes were accompanied with unwelcome intelligence from moſt places; for about this time, the King received the ill news of the taking from him of Baſing-Houſe by ſtorm, (the defendants not having a ſufficient number to man their works) and therein the Marqueſſe of Wincheſter (who had long and gallantly defended his Houſe) taken priſoner, with about two hundred others, and about a hundred were ſlain in the defence of the place; and as one misfortune is commonly followed by another, he had notice about the ſame time of the loſs of Shelford Houſe taken by ſtorm, wherein the Governor Collonel Stanhop, a Son of the Earl of Cheſterfeild, and neer two hundred more, were kill'd after the Houſe was entred.

Baſing-houſe taken by ſtorm, and in it the Marqueſs of Wincheſter.

Shelford-Houſe taken by ſtorm, and Colonel Stanhop, with many others ſlain.

Newark at this time became ſo in-ſecure, that the King thought it inconvenient to continue longer therein, and therefore with a guard of three hundred Horſe, he got ſafe to Oxford on the third of November, and thither the Princes Rupert and Maurice came to him from Worceſter after a ſerious reflection upon themſelves for their miſcarriages towards him, and were perfectly reconciled to his favour.

The King leaves Newark, and comes ſafe to Oxford, whither the two Princes came to him and regain his favour

The Kings Forces in moſt parts became very much leſſen'd, and though by the endeavours of the Queene, and ſome of his Miniſters abroad, forein aid was promiſed him againſt the next Summer, yet the King in affection to his people, was rather inclined to trye all other waies than accept of thoſe ſuccors, and to that purpoſe from the 5 th. of December to the three and twentyth of March following, he ſent nine or ten meſſages to the Parlia-

Routon-More Battail, wherein his Majeſties Army was worſted, and the Lord Bernard Stuart Earl of Lichfield ſlain.

Lord Digby defeated at Sherburn in York-ſhire, and himſelf compell'd to fly into Ireland.

Montroſſes Victory in Kilſieth-field neer Glaſcow.

1645. Parliament with offers of Peace, and for the better accompliſhment thereof, he propoſed to have a perſonal treaty with them, but they would not conſent to any other terms of accommodation, than to have all their demands drawn up into Bills to be preſented to him for his aſſent, yet in the mean time the King omitted not to uſe all waies in his power to relieve his Garriſons, and the Prince of Wales in the Weſt was very active, but the ſpirits of men became ſo much depreſſed by the victorious progreſſe of the Parliaments Troops, that nothing ſucceeded.

The King ſends offers of Peace to the Parliament, but they would not hear of an accommodation.

The ſiege of Plymouth was raiſed by Fairfax, and two daies after Dartmouth was ſurrendred to him by Sir Hugh Pollard the Governor thereof, and from thence he marched to Exeter, and ſummon'd it, and there he left Sir Hardres Waller to block up the City, whilſt himſelf with the reſt of his Forces went to find out the Prince his Army then commanded by the Lord Hopton, he himſelf being gone into Cornwall to raiſe the Trained-Bands, and what other Souldiers he could to ſtrengthen his Troops; whilſt theſe things were acting in the Weſt, the King at Oxford was again intent upon the relief of Cheſter, and for that ſervice ſeveral Forces were by Sir William Vaughan drawn out of the Garriſons of Hereford, Ludlow, Worceſter, and Bridgenorth, who with ſeven hundred Horſe, and ſeven hundred Foot, advanced to its relief; but the enemie drawing out a party of a thouſand four hundred Horſe, and a thouſand Foot, encountred, and utterly routed him, ſo that after this attempt, all hopes of relief failing, on the ſame day the City was delivered up to Sir William Brereton upon theſe conditions, viz. That the Lord Byron and all Noblemen, Commanders, and Officers, and Souldiers, ſhould depart the Town in all their apparel whatſoever; The Lord Byron with Horſe and Arms, and ten men alike accompliſhed to attend him; his Lady, and Servants, with Coaches, in each four Horſes, with ſuch other Ladies & Gentlewomen as he thought fit, and with his Books, Evidences and Writings in his poſſeſſion; but all of them with not above fourty pounds in money, and twenty pound in plate; the reſt of the Noblemen with their Ladies anſwerable to their honour, with not above thirty pounds in money, and ſo every one in their degrees to the common Souldiers, who were to march away with 20 s. each: Nor were the Conditions for the Citizens leſs reaſonable, which were the eaſier condeſcended to by Sir William Brereton, though he knew their diſtreſs, becauſe of the deſire he had not to ruine the City, the chief of his County, and of which he hoped to be Governor.

Dartmouth ſurrendred to Fairfax.

The Kings Forces ſent to the relief of Cheſter, routed, and the City delivered up to Sir William Brereton.

And on the ſame day Belvoir Caſtle was by Sir Gervaſe Lucas ſurrendred to General Poyntz upon Conditions, and the Governour and his Lady, with the Officers and Souldiers, were with a Convey conducted to Litchfield. At Torrington in Devonſhire, Fairfax found the Lord Hopton with his Army, which he reſolved to ingage; Hopton having the leſſer number, drew up his men into ſeveral cloſes, and Fairfax preſſed upon him very hard, but a great part of the time was ſpent in Skirmiſhes by ſeveral parties, till both retired; at length the Forlorne-hopes of both Armies engaged, that of the Parliaments, with its Reſerve, was at firſt beaten back to the main body of their Army, but that advancing, the Fight began about eight a clock at night, nigh the Town, to which the Royaliſts retreated, and there they maintained the charge ſo reſolutely, that had not Fairfax's Souldiers been heartned with freſh ſupplyes, they had given it utterly over; but the other overpowered by their freſh numbers, gave back, whereby the Enemie gained the Town; which being entred into, the Magazine in the great Church was fired by a train, and deſtroyed Fairfax more men than he had loſt in the Battail; for there was no leſs than eighty Barrels of Powder: upon the firing of the Magazine, Sir John Digby took advantage of the Enemies amazement, and gave them a reſolute Charge, in which he did ſome execution, and ſo fell off, and marched with the reſt of the Forces into Cornwall; whether Fairfax followed with ſo much ſpeed, that he compell'd the Royaliſts in diſorder to quit Launceſton, whereupon the Prince of Wales marched away towards Pendennis Caſtle, accompanied with the Lord Capel, the Lord Culpepper, and Sir Edward Hide, and took ſhipping there on the firſt of March, and arrived ſafely at Scilly; the Lord Hopton ſoon after finding it in vain to make reſiſtance with his broken Army, being ſummoned by Fairfax to disband, conſented to it upon very honourable Conditions; but having experienc'd how ill Articles had been obſerved, and being likewiſe ſenſible of the ill effects of the Kings gratious propoſals for peace; He choſe rather than to go to Oxford (whither by Articles he might have been conveyed by fifty of his own, and fifty of the Parliaments Horſe) to tranſport himſelf to France.

1645.

The Lord Hopton beaten, and Torrington taken by Fairfax.

Launceſton quitted by the King.

The Prince of Wales takes ſhipping, and arrives at Scilly.

Lord Hopton accepted of conditions for diſbanding his Army, and tranſports himſelf to France.

After the disbanding of theſe Forces, all the Kings Garriſons and Forts in Cornwall yielded, except Pendennis Caſtle, and St. Michaels Mount, and General Fairfax return'd to the ſiege of Exeter.

All theſe miſchances thus hapning on the neck of one another, all the Kings hopes and expectation reſted upon the coming of Sir Jacob Aſtley, (created Lord Aſtley of Redding two years ſince: Who having kept together ſome Remainders of the Kings Forces ſince the fight near Cheſter, and increaſing them with the acceſſion of ſome freſh ſupplyes, marched towards the King, and was to have been met upon the way by Sir John Campsfeild with the Oxford Horſe. But either through the want of Intelligence, or the neceſſity of fate, or ſome occaſional delaies, it was ſo long before Campsfield was upon his march, that the News came of the Lord Aſtleys being vanquiſh'd by Colonel Morgan at a place called Donnington near Stow on the Wold, on the 21 th. of March: In which fight himſelf was taken priſoner, and with him all the Kings hopes were loſt of preſerving Oxford, till he could better his condition.

Lord Aſhley defeated at Stow.

The King having often ſent to the Parliament (as hath been ſaid) to invite them to a Treaty of Peace, offering to come to Weſtminſter in Perſon, had on the 30 th. of March a meſſage from the Parliament, wherein they told him, That it would be unſafe for him or them to return to Weſtminſter, untill he had aſſented to the Propoſitions which they were framing, &c. And to pre-1646. vent his coming to London without their knowledge and consent, they voted, That if the King should come, or attempt to come within the Lines of Communication; that then the Committee of the Militia of London should have Power, and were thereby enjoyned to apprehend and secure such as should come with him, to prevent resort unto him, and to secure his Person.

The Parliament vote againtt the Kings coming to London in order to a Treaty.

Exeter was at this time so much distress'd, and without possibility of relief, that the City was on the 13 th. of April surrendred to Fairfax upon very good conditions; Sir John Berkley the Governor was to march out with his Souldiers, both Cornish and others in the height of Honour, with Drums beating, Colours flying, Bullet in mouth, Matches lighted, &c. The first into their Countrey, and the others to Oxford; The Princesse Henrietta youngest Daughter to the King, (who ever since her Birth had continued in this City under the care of the Lady Dalkeith) was sent up to London, there to be disposed of by the Parliament, till soon after she was by her Governesse conveyed privately to her Mother in France. To the Fortune of Exeter, Barnstable Town and Fort, St. Michaels Mount, Dunston Castle, Woodstock, and many other Garrisons soon after submitted; so that Fairfax his victorious Army having cleared the West, was now resolved to march up to a close beleaguering of Oxford, (which had sometime before been extremely streightned by the continual Alarms of Fleetwood and Rainsborough) which made the King begin to think of some way for his safety; and at last on the 27 th. of April the King disguised, departed out of Oxford, accompanied only with Mr. Hudson a Minister, aud Mr. John Ashburnham, and few or none else were acquainted with his design, so that though many knew that he was gone, yet various were the opinions whether; some said to Wales, others to Montross in Scotland, but the most general opinion was, that he was come up and lay in London concealed; to discover which, the Parliament passed an Order, That whatsoever person should harbour or conceal, or know of the harbouring or concealing of the Kings Person, and should not immediately reveal it to the Speakers of both Houses, shall be proceeded against as a Traitor to the Common-wealth, forfeit his whole Estate, and dye without mercy, But contrary to all mens expectations, he is at length heard of at the Scots Camp before Newark; many wondred how he durst trust his Person with them, but the Parliament having notice of it, immediately ordered that the Commissioners, and the General of the Scotish Army, should be desired, that his Majesties Person might be disposed of as the Two Houses should desire and direct, and that he be thence disposed of, and sent to Warwick Castle, and that John Ashburnham and the rest that came with him into the Scots Quarters, should be sent for as Delinquents by the Serjeants at Arms, and that the Commissioners of the Parliament residing before Newark, should make a Narrative of the Kings coming thither, and present it to the House; But these votes were scarce past when came a Letter from the General and Commissioners of the Scottish Army to the Committee of both Kingdoms, to be communicated to the Parliament, acquainting them, That the earnest desire they had to keep a right understanding between the two Kingdoms, moved them to acquaint them with that strange providence wherewith they were surprized, together with their carriage and desires thereupon; That the King came yesterday into their Army in so private a way, that after they had made some search for him upon the surmises of some Persons who pretended to know his face, yet they could not find him in sundry Houses; That they believed their Lordships would think it was matter of much astonishment to them, seeing they did not expect him to come into any place under their Power; They conceived it not fit to inquire into the Causes, but to endeavour that his being here might be improved for procuring the work of Uniformity, for setling Religion, and attaining of Peace according to the League and Covenant, and Treaty, by the advice of the Parliaments of both Kingdoms, and their Commissioners authorized for that effect; That trusting to their integrity, they were perswaded that none would so far misconstrue them, as that they intended to make use of this seeming advantage, for promoting any other ends than were expressed in the Covenant, and had hitherto been pursued by them with no less Conscience than care; That for further satisfaction they did ingenuously declare, That there had been no Treaty nor Capitulation betwixt his Majesty and them, nor any in their names; but that they left the waies and means of Peace to the Parliaments of both Kingdoms, and so far as concerned them as they had a witness in Heaven, they were confident to make it appear, That there was nothing more in their desires than in all their resolutions and proceedings to adhere to the Covenant and Treaty; That their greatest thoughts should be taken up in studying, and their utmost abilities imployed in acting those things which most advanced the publick good and common happiness of both Kingdoms, wherein by the help of God they should labour to use so much tenderness and care, that they hope it shall soon appear, their actions were the result of honest and single intentions; That they could not in a matter of so deep consequence and common interest, but seek their Lordships advice; for which effect they had also written to the Committee of Affairs in Scotland, with intentions to move joyne consents and resolutions, that after a seed time of Afflictions, we might reap the sweet fruits of Truth and Peace. This was the account given by Leven the General, and the Commissioners in the Army to the Committee of both Kingdoms at Westminster. In the mean time the Garrison of Newark (which had been for a long time valiantly defended by the Lord Bellasis both against the Scots and English Forces, and had made many fortunate Sallies upon the Besiegers) was upon the 4 th. of May, the day before the King came into the Scotch Camp, entred upon a Treaty, and on the 9 th. was agreed to be surrendred upon Condition,

"them to have three moneths time to make their "peace with the Parliament; or that failing, to "be allowed Passes to go beyond Sea. About this time also was Banbury Castle surrendred, and not long after Carnarvon Town and Castle were delivered up upon Articles by the Lord Byron, and the Scots having conveyed the King from Southwel to Newcastle; for the more surer possession of him, He on the 10*th*. of June by their advice, published a direction to Sir Thomas Glemham, Sir Thomas Tilsely, Colonel Washington, and Colonel Blague, Governors of Oxford, Worcester, Litchfield, and Wallingford, and to all other Commanders of any Towns, Castles or Forts within the Kingdom of England and Dominion of Wales, giving them an account of his Resolutions to comply with the designs of his Parliament in every thing that might be for the good of his Subjects, and leave no means unattempted for the removing of differences betwixt them; and the more to evidence the reality of his intentions therein, he required them upon Honourable Conditions to quit the Towns and Forts intrusted to them, and to disband all the Forces under their several Commands: But before notice hereof came to Oxford, the Governor and Lords there had come to a Treaty, to begin at Hedington the 17 th. of May, between Sir John Mounson, Sir John Heyden, Sir Tho. Gardner, Sir George Binion, Sir Richard Willis, Sir Stephen Hawkins, Colonel Gosvell, Colonel Tillier, Doctor Zouch, Thomas Christy, John Dutton, Geffry Palmer, and Robert Mead, Esquires, for the besieged; and Lieutenant General Hammond, Commissary General Ireton, Colonel Lambert, Colonel Rich, Scout-Master General Watson, Major Desbrough, Major Harrison, Mr. Herbert, and Mr. Waller, for the Parliament. And after a tedious Treaty continued to the 25 th. of June, without any Cessation of Arms it was delivered upon Conditions sufficiently honourable, had they been as honourably performed; The whole number of the Garrison was supposed to amount to 7000 Souldiers and Scholars in pay, who all marched out; but many of the Nobility and Gentry had leave to tarry for Passes; the Chief of whom were the Duke of York, the Princes Rupert and Maurice, the Earls of Dorset, Hertford, and Southampton, the Lords Cottington, Dunsmore, Secretary Nicholas, and others. The Duke of York was conveyed to London, and at St. James's committed with the rest of the Royal Children to the tuition and care of the Earl of Northumberland and his Lady. The two Princes Rupert and Maurice had Passes granted them to go beyond Sea, but before their departure by the Parliaments leave they had a visit made to them by their Brother the Prince Elector, (who all this time sided with the Parliament;) which they coldly received. Two daies after the surrendry, all the Seals of Estate were sent up from the General to the two Houses at Westminster, to wit, the Great Seal of ENGLAND, carried by the Lord Keeper Littleton to the King in the year 1642. The Privie-Seal, Signet, Kings-Bench, Exchequer, Court of Wards, Admiralty, and Navy-Seals, together with the Sword; the Seals were immediately voted to be broken in pieces, which was accordingly performed by a Smith in the House of Lords, the Commons standing by, and the broken Silver given in reward to the two Speakers, but the Sword was laid up safe in the Wardrobe. All other Garrisons were soon after surrendred according to the Kings Order, Ragland Castle was one of the last held out in England or Wales, which the Old Marquess of Worcester a man of fourscore and four years of age, delivered up on very good Conditions, when the King had neither Field Army nor scarce a Garrison besides it in England.

The King sends directions to his Commanders to quit their Towns and Forts, & so disband their Forces.

Oxford delivered up to the Parliament.

The Duke of York with the rest of the Kings Children committed to the care of the Earl of Northumberland.

All the seals of Estate broken in the Lords House.

Ragland Castle surrendred.

The Kings Children were not long kept together under that restraint the Parliament put upon them, the Princesse Henrietta being in a short time after conveyed into France by the Lady Dalkeith, and the Duke of York after, as will be related hereafter.

The King having by advice of the Scots (as you have heard) given Order to all the Governors of his Garrisons in England and Wales, to give up all the Towns and Castles which remain'd untaken, found not such a general obedience to his Commands, as the Scots expected; for many of them consider'd him as being under a Restraint, and speaking rather the sense of others than his own, upon which grounds they continued still upon their guard, in hope of better times, or of better conditions: but the Scots desirous to haste home in safety with that spoyl and plunder which they had gotten in their marching and remarching betwixt Tweed and Hereford, were very impatient at this caution of the Kings Governors, and therefore prest his Majesty to reiterate his Orders, but that which they most earnestly importun'd was, that the Marqueese of Montross should lay down his Commission, who with small strength in the beginning, and inconsiderable Forces when they were at the best, had acted things in Scotland even unto admiration. For besides many victories of less consequence, he had twice beaten the Marqueese of Argile out of the Field, followed him home, and wasted his Countrey with fire and sword. He vanquish'd Baily one of the best Souldiers of the faction (commanding over a well formed Army) in a set Battel fought between them; and followed his blow so well, that he made himself Master of the City and Castle of Edenburgh, releasing divers of his friends who had been seized and imprisoned there when he first took arms. Had the Lord Digbies Horse come to him, he had not only perfected, but assured the conquest of that Kingdom: but instead of those aids which he expected, he was unexpectedly set upon, and his whole Army broken by David Lesley, sent from the Scots Army in England, with six thousand Horse to oppose the progress of his fortune; whose coming being known to the Earl of Roxborow and Traquair (in whom the King continued still his wonted confidence) was purposely concealed from him, to the end that he being once suppressed, and in him the Kings power destroyed in Scotland, they might be sure from being called to an account of their former Treasons: however he began to make head again, and was in a way of well-doing when he received the Kings command to disband his Forces; to which he readily conformed, took ship, and put himself into a voluntary exile.

1646. Whilſt the King was at Southwell he had written to the Parliament for a Treaty, which after many debates, was ſo far comply'd with, as to ſend Propoſitions to him by the Earls of Pembroke and Suffolk, Mr. Godwin, Sir Walter Earl, Sir John Hippeſley, and Mr. Robinſon, but they were ſo high both in relation to the Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown, and tending to the change of Religion eſtabliſhed, that he could not conſent to them, but to give them ſome ſatisfaction therein, On the firſt of Auguſt the following Meſſage was ſent to them;

C. R.

The Kings Meſſage to the Parliament.

The Propoſitions tendered to his Majeſty by the Commiſſioners, &c. (to which the Houſes of Parliament have taken twice ſo many moneths for deliberation, as they have aſſigned daies for His Majeſties anſwer) do import ſo great alterations of Government both in Church and State, as it is very difficult to return a particular and poſitive Anſwer, before a full debate, wherein thoſe Propoſitions, and the neceſſary explanations, true ſenſe and reaſons thereof be rightly weighed and underſtood, & that His Majeſty upon the full view of the whole Propoſitions, may know what is left, as well as what is taken away or changed. In all which he finds (upon diſcourſe with the ſaid Commiſſioners) that they are ſo bound up from any Capacity, either to give reaſons for the demands they bring, or to give ears to ſuch deſires as His Majeſty is to propound, as it is impoſſible for him to give ſuch a preſent Judgment of, and Anſwer to theſe Propoſitions whereby he can Anſwer to God, that a ſafe and well-grounded peace will enſue, (which is evident to all the World can never be, unleſs the juſt Power of the Crown, as well as the freedome and propriety of the Subject, with the juſt liberty and priviledges of the Parliament, be likewiſe ſetled) to which end His Majeſty deſires and propoſes to come to London, or any of his Houſes thereabouts upon the publick Faith, and ſecurity of the two Houſes of Parliament, and the Scots Commiſſioners, that he ſhall be there with freedome, honour and ſafety, where by his perſonal preſence he may not only raiſe a mutual confidence between him and his people, but alſo have thoſe doubts cleared, and thoſe difficulties explained unto him, which he now conceives to be deſtructive to his juſt legal Power, if he ſhould give a full conſent to theſe propoſitions as they now ſtand. As likewiſe that he may make known to them ſuch his reaſonable demands, as he is moſt aſſured will be very much conducible to that peace which all good men deſire and pray for, by the ſetling of Religion, the juſt priviledges of Parliament, with the freedome and propriety of the Subject. And His Majeſty aſſures them, that as he can never condeſcend unto what is abſolutely deſtructive unto that juſt power, which by the Laws of God and the Land he is born unto, ſo he will chearfully grant and give his aſſent unto all ſuch Bills on the deſire of his two Houſes, or reaſonable Demands from Scotland, which ſhall be really for the good and peace of his people, not having regard to his own particulars, (much leſs any bodies elſe) in reſpect of the happineſs of thoſe Kingdoms: Wherefore His Majeſty conjures them as Chriſtians, as Subjects, and as Men who deſire to leave a good Name behind them, that they will ſo receive and make uſe of this Anſwer, that all iſſues of blood may be ſtopped, and theſe unhappy diſtractions peaceably ſetled; and upon aſſurance of an Agreement, His Majeſty will immediately ſend for the Prince his Son, abſolutely expecting his perfect obedience to return to this Kingdome. 1646.

This Meſſage did not prevail, and many debates were agitated betwixt the Parliament and the Scots about the diſpoſing of the King; It was freely granted by the Parliament to the Scots, that they might carry him if they pleaſed to Edenburgh, but that they refuſed, affirming that by his preſence in an unſetled Kingdome, new commotions might ariſe, they rather deſired that he might be carried into the Southern parts of England, and live in ſome of his houſes neer London, which they thought moſt convenient for treating of a peace, ſo that in all that whole debate, they ſeemed rather to contend not who ſhould have the King, but who ſhould not have him.

But before the Scots entred upon this Treaty about the Perſon of the King, they had agreed with the Parliament upon terms for their marching out of England, by which agreement they were to have two hundred thouſand pounds paid in preſent upon their delivery of Barwick, Carliſle, and Newcaſtle to the Parliament of England, and two hundred thouſand more ſecured to them upon the publick Faith of the Kingdome.

The firſt payment of this money was made at Newcaſtle according to the compact, & thereupon they delivered the King to the Earls of Pembrook and Denbigh, the Lord Montague, Sir James Harrington, Sir John Holland, Sir Walter Earl, Sir John Cook, Mr. Crew, and Major General Brown, who were Commiſſioners appointed by the Parliament to receive him, and with theſe on the 8 th of February the King ſet forward towards his Houſe at Holdenby in Northamptonſhire, where he arrived on the 16 th. of the ſame moneth, the Scots two days before the Kings departure marched from Newcaſtle, which was poſſeſt by a Garriſon of Engliſh, and a few days after, they alſo put Barwick and Carliſle into the Parliaments hands, aud marched quietly home to Scotland. The King at Holdenby was kept ſo cloſe, that none of his domeſtick Servants that had attended him ſince he left London, nor any of his Chaplains were ſuffered to have acceſs unto him. And the Parliament having 1646. having now the King in their poſſeſſion, and all his Armies and Garriſons ſubdued by their forces, they began to be much divided amongſt themſelves, under the names of Presbyterians and Independants.

Presbyterians deſcribed.

The firſt whereof who were the major part in both Houſes were, thoſe who in compliance with the Scots thought themſelves obliged by the Covenant to ſet up the Presbyterian Diſcipline of Geneva, as it was exerciſed in Scotland under the Government of Congregational, Claſſical, Provincial and National Aſſemblies (to whom the City of London very much adhered) but the others diſliked that ſort of Government as too rigorous, imperious and concluſive, holding that Churches ſhould not be ſubordinate as Parochial to Provincial, and Provincial to National, but coordinate, without ſuperiority; and from hence they were called Independents: whereof the firſt eminent appearance was in the Aſſembly of Divines, which met in the year 1643 at Weſtminſter to conſult about matters of Religion; for the major part of theſe being Presbyterians, were in conſideration of a Directory and Model of that Government to be propoſed to the Parliament, when five of their Members, viz. Thomas Goodwin, Philip Nye, Sidrach Simpſon, Jeremiah Burroughs, and William Bridge made ſome oppoſition, and deſired Toleration to be indulged to them, that they might not be concluded by the Votes of the Aſſembly, but the reſt of the Members oppoſed their Toleration, and ſome moved their ejection out of the Aſſembly, except in convenient time they would comply therewith, whereupon the Diſſenters appealed from the Aſſembly, and preſented an Apologetical Narrative to the Parliament, wherein they petitioned for ſome favour to them, whoſe Conſciences could not joyn with the Aſſembly in all particulars, concluding, That they purſued no other intereſt or deſign but a ſubſiſtance in their own land, as not knowing where elſe with ſafety, health, and livelihood to ſet their feet on earth.

The firſt ſect of Independents.

An Aſſembly of Divines ſit at Weſtminſter

Upon this Petition they found ſuch favour, that they were ſecured from further trouble; and from this beginning they grew to ſo great an increaſe, that they had the beſt preferments left in the Church, and opened and ſhut the door of preferment to others.

Lieutenant General Cromwel and Commiſſary General Ireton, and the greateſt part of the Army, conſiſting now of men of ſeveral Sects of Religion, did much favour theſe Independents, who to ingratiate themſelves with them (though in their Confeſſion of Faith and Doctrine they wholly agreed with the Presbyterian) held out a Liberty of Conſcience to all other Sects in the profeſſion of their Faith and exerciſe of their Religion.

1647. This inclination of the Army to the Independents made the Presbyterians, who were the major part of the Parliament, very watchful over their actions, and obſerving that the Army at their Courts of War laid hold on all pretences of ſcandals & crimes to disband & caſhier Presbyterians, that Independents might be put in their places, reſolved to disband all of them except five thouſand Horſe, a thouſand Dragoons, and five Companies of fire-locks; for people they wanted not a good pretence, that the people might be eaſed thereby of a great part of the Taxes impoſed upon them for their maintenance, and that ſome of them might be ſent into Ireland, where there was a want of Engliſh Souldiers. And for this purpoſe they borrowed two hundred thouſand pounds of the City of London. The head-Quarters of the Army was at St. Edmund-Bury in Suffolk, when theſe matters were debated in Parliament; but by the intelligence they kept at Weſtminſter nothing thereof was concealed from them, and by the Independent party in the Houſe (as it was commonly ſaid) they were ſo practiſed on, that they were reſolved not to disband, yet when ſomething of this was ſuggeſted in the Houſe of Commons; Cromwel with his hand upon his breaſt, ſaid, In the preſence of God before whom he ſtood, that he knew the Army would disband and lay down their Arms at their doors whenſoever they ſhould command them. Upon this aſſertion, Orders of both Houſes for disbanding were ſent to the Army with inſtructions for determining the Accompts of the Souldiers, but inſtead of obedience to theſe Orders a Councel of Officers met at St. Edmunds-Bury to conſider thereof, began to debate of the matter with much diſſatisfaction, and two Souldiers out of each of ſixteen Regiments of Horſe and Foot, as Agitators or Agents of their reſpective Regiments were allowed to meet alſo in a kind of Councel on the ſame buſineſs, and both of theſe Aſſemblies agreed upon the ſame things in ſubſtance, namely, againſt di,banding; and in a Petition to the General, they deſired the Army might be ſpeedily drawn to a Rendezvouze, and that he would uſe his utmoſt to endeavour that it be not disbanded till publique Grievances ſhould be redreſſed, and all ſuch perſons called to accompt who had been intenders, contrivers, or promoters of their deſtructions (for ſo they termed thoſe of the Parliament that voted them to be disbanded.) Theſe requeſts of the Officers and Souldiers produced a General Rendezvouze of the Army at Newmarket on the fourth of June, and the Agitators the day before privately ſent Cornet Joyce with a party of Souldiers to ſeize on the King (as will be mentioned hereafter) and at this Rendezvouze they aſſociated themſelves together as a kind of diſtinct body from the reſt of the Kingdom, and ſubſcribed a ſolemn Ingagement of their reſolution, wherein they to this purpoſe expreſſed themſelves, (viz.)

The Armies Ingagement.

We the Officers and Souldiers of the Army ſubſcribing hereunto, do hereby declare, agree, and promiſe to, and with each other, that we ſhall not willingly disband nor divide, nor ſuffer our ſelves to be disbanded or divided, until we have ſecurity, that we as private men, as other the free born people of England ſhall not remain ſubject to the like oppreſſions and injuries as have been attempted, and ſhall have ſuch ſatisfaction and ſecurity as ſhall be agreed upon by a Councel to conſiſt of thoſe General Officers of the Army, who have concurred with the Army in this reſolution (for many moderate men upon theſe diſcontents left them) with two Commiſſion Officers and two Souldiers for each Regiment, of ſuch likewiſe as ſubſcribed to this Agreement. But whilſt theſe contrivances were acted at the head-Quarters, there was a large Petition framed in the County of Eſſex againſt the 1647. Army; upon this Cromwel goes to Walden where the head-Quarters of the Army then was, on pretence of quieting the diſtempers thereof, but nothing was effected; and in the moneth of May, they preſented a Petition to their General, wherein they deſired to be ſatisfied, not only for their pay as Souldiers, but that a Proviſion might be made for their Indempnity, and ſeveral other things relating to Publike ſettlement: of which Petition great complaint was made by the Preſbyterians; yet they reſted not here, but were very active in framing another to be preſented to the Parliament. But the Parliament ſhewed their high diſlike of that petition and their approbation and eſteem of their good ſervice who firſt diſcovered it: but declared, if the Subſcribers would forbear to proceed any further therein, they ſhould be retained in the Parliaments good opinion, and that thoſe who ſhall continue in the preſent diſtempers, ſhall be proceeded againſt as enemies to the State.

The King brought from Holdenby to the Army by Cornet Joyce.

Theſe and ſome other alterations wrought at laſt ſo far, that on the 4*th.* of June a party of Souldiers commanded by Cornet Joyce, came ſomewhat late to Holdenby, and deſired to ſpeak with the King, which being granted, he told him, he was come by command of the Army to remove him from that place; and ſo the next day after Dinner he carried him towards the Army. But on the 6*th.* of June the General ſent a Letter to the Parliament, to certifie that he knew nothing of the Party that attended the King, profeſſing that his remove was without his conſent, or his Officers about him, but the Party that did it, told him that the reaſon thereof was from an apprehenſion of ſome ſtrength gathered to take him away, thereby to make a new War, the plot and plotters whereof they were able to prove when called thereunto: when this was known, it was ordered by both Houſes of Parliament.

The Armies Repreſentation to the Parliament.

1. That the King ſhould reſide at Richmond.
2. That he ſhould be attended by the ſame perſons that he was at Holdenby.
3. That Roſſiters Regiment ſhould guard him.

But the Army in ſtead of complying herewith, ſent a Repreſentation to the Parliament wherein they propoſed.

That the two Houſes might be ſpeedily purged of ſuch as ought not to ſit there.

That ſuch who abuſed the Parliament and Army, and endangered the Kingdom might be ſpeedily diſabled from doing the like or worſe.

That ſome determinate period of time might be ſet to this and future Parliaments, according to the Act for Triennial Parliaments.

That proviſion might be for ſucceeding Parliaments not to be adjournable or diſſolvable by any power but by their own conſent during their reſpective period, and then to determine themſelves.

That the freedom of the people to preſent grievances by Petition to Parliament may be vindicated.

That the exorbitant power of Countrey Committees may be taken away.

That the Kingdom may be ſatisfied in the Parliaments accompts for their vaſt ſums received, and alſo in divers other things wherein the Commonwealth have been long abuſed.

That after ſuch Delinquents as have been of the Kings Party have compounded for their Delinquencies and paid their Compoſitions, an Act of Oblivion may be paſſed. 1647.

And immediately after this Repreſentation, there was brought to the Parliament from the General and his Councel of Officers, an Impeachment againſt eleven Members of the Houſe of Commons, (viz.) Denzil Hollis, Eſq; Sir William Lewis, Sir William Waller, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir John Clotworthy, Sir John Maynard, Major General Maſſey, Mr. Glyn Recorder of London, Anthony Nicols, Eſq; Colonel Edward Harley, and Colonel Water Long, for things done for the moſt part in the Houſe, whereof one of the chief was, That by their power in the Houſe, they cauſed the Ordinance for disbanding the Army to paſs. The impeached members declared themſelves ready to anſwer any crime that could be objected againſt them, but the Officers of the Army requeſted that they might be forthwith ſuſpended from any longer ſitting and acting as Members: but this was denied as a thing judged at this time too high, and too much againſt the priviledge of Parliament; but when the Army iterated their deſire, thoſe accuſed Members by leave of the Houſe made a voluntary ſeceſſion for ſix moneths. Concerning that Order of Parliament, That the King ſhould go to Richmond, the General deſired to be excuſed, intreating them not to command that till things were more quiet, and that they would appoint no reſidence for the King nearer to London, than they would allow the Quarters of the Army to be: after which the King was conveyed to Royſton, thence to Hatfield, not long after to Cauſam while the Army Quartered at Reading, from whence when the General with his Army marched to Bedford, the King went to the Earl of Bedfords houſe near Oaborn, and during all this time he was received with all poſſible demonſtrations of love and duty, and ſome of his Chaplains were licenſed to repair to him, and read the Book of Common Prayer, as in former times, and the way was open to all thoſe of his own party who deſired to ſee him. 1647.

Eleven Members impeached by the Army.

The City of Londons Militia as it was ſetled by Ordinance of the 4*th.* of May was in the managing of Presbyterians, who were very active and induſtrious in compleating their Companies both of the Trained Bands and Auxiliaries, which was rumoured by the Independents as a very dangerous Conſpiracie againſt the Army, and the General in a Letter to the Parliament of the 10*th* of June, requeſted, That the Militia of the City might be put into the hands of perſons better affected to the Army: Upon which Letter the Commons upon the 22*th.* of July Voted the repealing the ſaid Ordinance of the 4*th.* of May, and a new Ordinance for reviving the old Militia was preſently paſſed.

The Petition of the City againſt the Vote for taking the Militia out of their hands.

The unexpected news of this changing their Militia cauſed the City to meet in Common-Councel, where becauſe the repealing the former Ordinance was upon no other ground than the Armies deſires, they reſolved to Petition the Houſe of Commons againſt it, which they did on the 26*th.* of July by the Sheriffs and ſome of the Common-Councel; but ſo it hapned, that about a thouſand Apprentices came down two or three hours 1647. hours after with another Petition, therein complaining, That to order the Cities Militia was the Cities Birth-right, belonging to them by Charters confirmed by Parliament, for defence whereof they had adventured their lives as far as the Army, and desired the Militia might be put again into the same hands in which it was put, with the Parliament and Cities consent by Ordinance of the 4 th. of May. Upon reading of which Petition, the Lords revived the Ordinance of the 23 th. of July, and renewed that of the 4 th. of May, by a new Ordinance of the 26 th. of July, which they presently sent down to the Commons for their consents, where some of the Apprentices in a childish heat were over-clamorous to have the Ordinance passed, refusing to let some Members pass out of the House, so that at last it passed in the affirmative about three in the afternoon, and most of the Apprentices departed, but after this some disorderly persons when the House was rising, took the Speaker and thrust him again into his Chair, detaining both him and the rest of the Members, until they enforced from them a Vote, That the King should come to London.

After this disorder the two Houses adjourned for four days, and many private Cabals were held what to do, and those that favoured the Army went thither, so that on the fourth day both the Speakers being absent, new Speakers were chosen, the Lord Hunsdon for the Peers, and Mr. Henry Pelham a Barrister for the Commons, by whom it was that day voted,

The Speakers and divers Members fly to the Army.

1. That the King should come to London.

2. That the Militia of London should be authorised to raise forces for defence of the City.

3. That power should be given to the same Militia to chuse a General for those Forces.

It was likewise Ordred, That the aforesaid eleven Members impeached by the Army should return to their seats in Parliament. The Citizens armed with these Orders, presently proceeded to the raising of Forces, which were to be under the Command of Sir William Waller, Major General Massey, and Colonel Poyntz, who were each of them busie in listing of Souldiers; but Waller who was a person of good experience and foresight, seeing great numbers of Reformed Officers and Souldiers lately disbanded flocking to them, advised that they should immediately seize on all the serviceable Horses in and about London, to the number of six thousand, and bring them in Tuttle-fields, where Saddles, Bridles, and Arms might be provided ready, and they would then have quickly Souldiers to mount them, and in four and twenty hours time they might have a Body of Horse to joyn with the City Regiments, strong enough to oppose the Army if they should attempt any thing against the Parliament and the City: and of this the Army were in great fear, but some of their friends in the Common Councel did so distract their consultations, that it appeared impossible for them suddenly to raise any forces to withstand the Army, who by this time upon intelligence hereof made their approaches towards London; whereupon the Aldermen and Common Councel were so terrified that they sent to the General for a pacification, which by the consent of the Members of Parliament then with him, was granted to them upon these conditions: 1647.

The City submits to the Army.

1. That they should desert the Parliament now sitting, and the eleven impeached Members.

2. That they should recal their Declaration lately divulged.

3. They should relinquish their present Militia.

4. They should deliver up to the General all their Forts, and the Tower of London.

5. They should disband all the forces they had raised: And do all things else which were necessary for the Publike tranquility; all which things none of them daring to deny, were presently ratified.

In the mean time the Lords and Commons who had left London, consulting with the General and chief Commanders of the Army made an Order, That all Acts and Decrees that had passed on the 26 th. of July and since should be accounted null and void, and that they did adhere to the Declaration of the General and Councel of the Army. It was likewise decreed, that the General with his Army should march to London: and on the 6 th. day of August he with his Army came to Westminster, and with him the Speakers of both Houses, together with the rest of the Lords and Commons, whom he restored all to their former Seats. Both the Speakers in the name of the whole Parliament, gave solemn thanks to the General, and made him Commander of all the Forces in England and Wales, & Constable of the Tower of London: and a moneths pay was likewise given as a gratuity to the Army. The next day General Fairfax, Lieutenant General Cromwel, Major General Skippon and the rest of the Commanders with the whole Army marched through London from the Western part thereof to the Tower, and at the Tower the General made Colonel Tichburn, an Alderman of the Independent faction to be Lieutenant of the Tower, and to humble the City, the Militia's thereof were by Order of Parliament divided, and authority given to Westminster, Southwark, and the Hamlets about the Tower to exercise and command their own Militia's.

The General comes with his Army to Weltminster

The Members of Parliament in this manner restored, and the Militia of London setled to the Armies good liking, the General marched out of London, and Quartered his Army in the Towns and Villages adjacent, only leaving some Regiments about Whitehal and the Mews to guard the Parliament, his head-Quarters being at Putney; and the King about the middle of August was brought to the most stately of all his Pallaces, Hampton-Court.

The King brought to Hampton-Court.

But now the Members that were brought in by the Army, thought it necessary for the strengthning of their factions to proceed against all such of both Houses, of Parliament and others that were in any measure active in the late troubles, and therefore Sergeant Glyn was outed of his Office of Recorder of London, and one Steele a Barrister of Grays-Inn admitted in his place, and Hollis, Waller, Clotworthy, Long, Massey, and Nichols were summoned to attend the House on the 16 th. of October; and the Earls of Lincoln, Suffolk, 1647.

Suffolk, and Middlesex, with the Lords Willoughby of Parham, Berkley, Hunsdon, and Maynard, were impeached of Treason, and committed to the Black-Rod, and Sir John Mainard of the House of Commons, and Sir John Gray Lord Mayor of London, with four Aldermen, Adams, Langham, Culham, and Bunch, were also impeached and committed to the Tower, where we shall leave them for some time, and look to the affairs of Ireland during these occurrences.

Several Members and Citizens committed for acting in the late troubles.

The Affairs of Ireland.

The Irish when the cessation of arms was concluded with them at Singiston in the year 1643. seemed very desirous of a peace, but by their ill observation of the articles of cessation, their reality therein was much suspected; for they were so far from ceasing from acts of hostility during that short term of a year as they had agreed to, that they often pillaged and plundered the English, imprisoning or murdering their persons, and particularly at the Castle of Wicklow, which they surprized, and put all the men, women and children therein to the sword; yet after this Treaty, they had the confidence to send Commissioners to the King to supplicate, that before the expiration of the cessation, a peace might be concluded with them, but he referred them back to his Lieutenant Ormond, and he considering the necessity of the Kings affairs, and his present inability to prosecute that War, would willingly have reduced things to a pacification; but the Irish having correspondence with the Spanish and French upon the interest of the Romish Religion, spun out out all treaties with tedious delaies, in hopes of supplyes of men and money to be sent to them, so that in two years nothing was effected therein; and moreover, whilst they treated with Ormond, they under-hand were upon terms of agreement with the Earl of Glamorgan, eldest Son to the Marquesse of Worcester, who by a pretended Authority from the King to authorize him thereunto, granted them such conditions for the advancement of the Popish Religion, as would have extirpated the English Clergie in that Kingdom; but Ormond upon notice hereof, seized on Glamorgan, and clap'd him into the Castle of Dublin, and (the King utterly disowning the authority he pretended to have) he was accused by the Lord Digby (then in Ireland) of Treason; yet whilst these things were transacting, the condition of the English was not better'd, but rather much impaired; and all the strengths in the Province of Lemster except Drogedah and Dublin, were possessed by the Irish, so that about the time the King went to the Scots Army near Newark, Ormond concluded a Peace with them, and upon conditions very advantageous to the Natives; but nevertheless, all of them would not submit to it: For the Popes Nuntio had drawn a great party of the most zealous of their Religion to protest against it, as a peace wherein there was not sufficient security for the free exercise of the Roman Catholick Religion; Ormond thought to profit himself of that division, and made himself ready to joyn with those that adhered to the peace to suppress the others, not doubting upon his successe herein, to be master of such a force as might make the Kings terms in England easier to him: But in the midst of all these hopes, when he was ready with a party to march to Kilkenny to joyn with his new friends, he was inform'd of a design against his person, which was related to him with such circumstances, that he was confident of the truth thereof, and if he had not retreated to Dublin, he and his party had been lost; In this extremity he thought it better to put Dublin and the Forts yet in English hands, in the Parliament of England's power, than suffer them to be possess'd by the Irish, and brought under a forein jurisdiction, in order whereunto, he sent to two Captains of the Parliament Ships then riding neer Dublin, and imparted to them his desires of complying with the Parliament, if the King would give his assent thereunto, and obtain'd of them ammunion and powder for his present supply; and in further prosecution of that overture, having the Kings commands for so doing, he capitulated with the Parliament Commissioners, and yielded up Dublin, and what remained under his Government to their authority; who immediately sent thither Colonel Jones with 1450 Horse & Foot, who on the 17 th. of June took possession of Dublin, and from that time such supplies were sent to re-inforce the English, that every week produced news of Victories over the Irish.

A Peace concluded in Ireland by the Marquesse of Ormond.

Dublin put into the hands of the Parliament of England.

Whilst the King remained at Hampton-Court, he seemed not at all a restrained man, but as a Prince living in the splendor of a Court, so freely to his presence were all sorts of people admitted to kiss his hands, and do all obeysances whatsoever; nor did the people from London only and the adjacent Towns resort to the King, but his Chaplains and such of his Servants who by order of Parliament had been forbidden, as Mr. Ashburnham, and Sir John Berkley, now by permission of the Army had safe recourse to him: The Marquesse of Ormond likewise attended him there with an account of the Irish affairs, and was with much kindness received by him, and about the beginning of October, the Duke of Richmond, the Marquess of Hartford, the Earls of Southampton and Dorset, and the Lord Seymour repaired to him; but the Parliament were displeased at this liberty, whereupon those Lords being told of it, after two daies stay at Hampton Court returned to their Houses: On the seventh of September propositions agreed upon by both Houses of Parliament (the Commissioners of the Kingdom of Scotland concurring also) were sent to the King at Hampton-Court, to which they requested his Answer in six daies; The Commissioners appointed for this business by the Parliament of England were, the Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Mountague, Sir James Harrington, Sir John Cook, Sir John Holland, and Major Generall Brown; and for the Kingdoms of Scotland, the Earl of Lauderdale, and Sir Charles Erskins. Two daies after their arrival, the King gave the Commissioners a message in writing to the two Houses of Parliament in answer to the Propositions; which was to this effect, (viz.)

Propositions sent from the Parliament to the King at Hampton-Court.

"That having perused the propositions now
"brought to him, he found them the same in ef"fect which were offerd to him at Newcastle, to "some of which as he could not consent without "violation of his conscience and honour, so nei"ther can he agree to other now; conceiving
"them in many respects more disagreeable to the present

The Kings answer to the propositions.

1647. "condition of affairs, than when they were formerly preſented to him, and having ſeen the "propoſals of the Army to the Commiſſioners "from the two Houſes, reſiding with them, to "which, as he conceives, they are no ſtrangers, "ſo he believes they will think with him, that "they much more conduce to the ſatisfaction of "all intereſts, and may be a fitter foundation for "laſting peace than the propoſitions at this time "tendred to him, and therefore he propounds "that Commiſſioners may be ſent from the Par-"liament and the Army for a perſonal treaty up-"on them, and ſuch others as he ſhall make, "that a firm peace may be ſetled.

This Anſwer was not very pleaſing to the Parliament, and it was by many thought, though the Armies propoſals had the conſent of the General and his Counſel of Officers, yet the agitators who influenc'd the body of the Souldiery, were not aſſenting to them; nevertheleſs, the Scotch took great offence at them, and affairs were thereby much perplexed more than before; but for the better underſtanding of theſe affairs, we ſhall relate ſuch of the Armies propoſals as were of moſt conſequence, and moſt acceptable to the King.

The Armies Propoſa's to the King.

1. "That an Act be paſſed to take away all "coercive Power, Authority, and Jurisdiction of "Biſhops, and all other Eccleſiaſtical Officers "whatſoever, extending to any civil penalties "upon any, and to repeal all Laws whereby the "Civil Magiſtracy hath been, or is bound upon "any Eccleſiaſtical cenſure to proceed (ex offi-cio) unto any civil penalties againſt any per-"ſons ſo cenſured.

2. "That there be a repeal of all Acts or "Clauſes in any Act, enjoyning the uſe of the "Common Prayer, and impoſing any penalties "for neglect thereof, as alſo of all Acts or Clau-"ſes in any Act impoſing any penalties for not "coming to Church, or for meeting elſewhere, "for prayer, or other religious duties, exerciſes "or ordinances, and ſome other proviſion to be "made for diſcovering of Papiſts, and Popiſh "Recuſants; and for diſabling of them and all "Jeſuites and Prieſts from diſturbing the State.

3. "That the taking of the Covenant be not "enforced upon any, nor any penalties impoſed "upon the refuſers, whereby men might be con-"ſtrained to take it againſt their judgement or "conſciences; but all orders or ordinances ten-"ding to that purpoſe to be repealed.

4. "The things here before being provided, "for ſetling and ſecuring the Rights, Liberties, "Peace and Safety of the Kingdom, his Maje-"ſties Perſon, his Queen, and Royal Iſſue may "be reſtored to a condition of ſafety, honour and "freedome in this Nation, without diminution to "their perſonal Rights, or further limitation to "the Exerciſe of the Regal Power then accord-"ing to the particulars before going.

5. "That a leſſer number out of the perſons "excepted in the two firſt qualifications of the "Parliaments late propoſitions to the King, not 1647. "exceeding five for the Engliſh (being nomi-"nated particularly by the Parliament, who to-"gether with the perſons in the Iriſh Rebellion "in the third qualification) may be reſerved to "the further Judgement of the Parliament, as "they ſhall find cauſe. All other excepted per-"ſons to be remitted from the exceptions, and "admitted to compoſition.

6. "That the rates of all future compoſitions "may be leſſened and limited not to exceed "the ſeveral propoſitions hereafter expreſſed re-"ſpectively: That is to ſay, 1. For all perſons "formerly excepted not above a third part. "2. For the late Members of Parliament under "the firſt branch of the fourth qualification in "the propoſitions, a fourth part. 3. For other "Members of Parliament in the ſecond and third "branches of the ſame qualification, a ſixth part. "4. For the perſons nominated in the ſaid fourth "qualification, and thoſe included in the tenth "qualification, an eighth part; and that Real "debts either upon Record, or proved by Wit-"neſſes, be conſidered, and abated in the valua-"tion of their Eſtates in all the caſes afore-"ſaid.

7. "That thoſe who ſhall hereafter come to "compound, may not have the Covenant put up-"on them, as a condition without which they may "not compound; but in caſe they ſhall not wil-"lingly take it, they may paſs their compoſition without it.

8. "That the Perſons and Eſtates of all Eng-"liſh not worth two hundred pounds in Lands or "Goods, be at liberty, and diſcharged, and that "the Kings menial Servants, that never took up "Arms, but only attended his Perſon, according "to their Offices, may be freed from compoſi-"tion, or to pay (at moſt) but the proportion of "one years Revenue, or a twentyth part.

9. "That in order to the making and perfe-"cting of compoſitions for delinquency at the "rates aforeſaid, the Rents, Revenues, and other "dues and profits of all ſequeſtred Eſtates what-"ſoever (except the Eſtates of ſuch perſons who "ſhall be continued under exception as before) "be from henceforth ſuſpended and detained in "the hands of the reſpective Tenants and Oc-"cupiers, and others from whence they are due "for the ſpace of ſix moneths following.

10. "That the faith of the Army, or other "Forces of the Parliament given in Articles up-"on ſurrenders to any of the Kings party, may "be fully made good, and where any breach "thereof ſhall appear to have been made, full re-"paration and ſatisfaction may be given to the "parties injured, and the perſon offending being "found out, may be compell'd thereunto.

11. "That there may be a General Act of "Oblivion to extend unto all (except the per-"ſons to be continued in exception as before) to "abſolve from all treſpaſſes, miſdemeanors, &c. "done in proſecution of the War, and from all 1647. "trouble or prejudice, for or concerning the same, "and to restore them to all priviledges belonging "to other Subjects.

The resentment of the Scots at these Proposals, which was touched at before, was chiefly manifested in a Remonstrance about this time made by the Commissioners of the General Assembly met at Edenburgh the 13 th. of October, to their Committee of Estates; wherein amongst other things they declared;

The Scots Remonstrance.

That his Majesty waving the Propositions of both Kingdoms, and pressing the Proposals of the Army, to be the subject of a Treaty, doth much increase the danger of Religion, seeing these Proposals, as they omit and abandon the former desires of both Kingdoms in point of Religion, so they cannot accord (as the words stand) the continuance of Prelacie, the toleration of Heresie and Sects, and the taking away the Ordinance injoyning the taking of the Covenant.

And a little further they thus express themselves.

These dangers of Religion we have insisted on as being most proper for us to speak to, but not as if we were insensible of the great danger of the Kings person, and of Monarchical Government, for preserving of which, according to our Covenant, our prayer and best endeavours shall not be wanting, and now the danger of Religion is so great and the grounds of our fears and apprehensions so pregnant, we earnestly beseech and humbly obtest your Lordships in the bowels of Jesus Christ, and by the Vows of God which are upon you, that as your Lordships desire God and your own Consciences and posterity, may not afterwards charge upon you the Ruine of Religion, King, and Kingdoms, so your Lordships may be very tender and conscionable that no such design be entertained or get place amongst you, as tendeth to the disabling of this Church and Kingdom from an effectual prosecuting and promoting the ends of the Covenant, or to the strengthning and enabling the enemies thereof by affording them the opportunity which they wait for to disturb the peace, and destroy the present Reformation: these and no better effects can be looked for, if the Army in this Kingdom, which hath been so blessed of God, and so faithful to you, shall be disband before this cause of God, which so much concerneth his Glory, the reformation and defence of Religion, the peace and safety of this Kingdom, the honour and happiness of the King be setled upon a firm foundation.

The Earl of Lauderdale attended the King at Hampton-Court, and gave him full information of all these matters, and so far represented to him the uncertainty of his condition in reference to the Army, which became now by the practises of some busie men very ungovernable, that he began to incline rather to the Scots; and the Commissioners of Scotland residing at London sent Letters to the Parliament dated November the 5 th. in which they pressed very much that the King might come to London and treat personally with the Parliament about the things controverted; urging for reasons thereof, because the King had been taken from Holdenby against his will, and without the consent of the Parliament, by the violence of the Souldiers, and still remained under the power of an Army, not in that freedom which was thought fit for a King, treating about a business of so great moment; but if it might not be thought convenient for his coming to London, that he may continue at Hampton-Court, so he be not under the power of the Army, but in such a condition as the Commissioners of both Parliaments might have a free recourse to him. 1647.

The Scots Commissioners Letter to the Parliament.

The Agitators were much allarmed at this interposition of the Scots, and their keeping up their Army in Scotland, and from hence they became more violent than before in their practises against the King, which they expressed in several proposals to the General Councel of Officers: and about this time in one of their debates at a General Councel at Putney it was proposed.

Whether it were safe either for the Army or the people to suffer any power to be given to the King: and in the discussion of this, it was said openly in the Councel, Monstrous passages against the King at a meeting of the Officers at Putney.

That they had gone about to wash a Black-a-moor white whether he would or not, and to set up a Power which God would destroy; that the power of Kings was a burthensome stone that would destroy whosoever should fall upon it:

That the reason of their distractions in Councels was from a compliance to save that man of Blood (meaning the King) and those principles of Tyranny which God from Heaven by his many successes had manifestly declared against.

Cromwel and Ireton (who yet wished well to the King) did what they could to oppose these proceedings, but the stream was too strong against them, & the King having from time to time notice of these agitations, thought it not imprudent to provide (ere it should be too late) for his own safety, and by advice of Sir John Berkly, Colonel Legg, and Mr. Ashburnham (who he then much trusted) he resolved to attempt to get to Jersey; and for the effecting thereof a Ship was provided somewhere about Southampton for his transportation; but before he took this resolution he thought fit to retract an Engagement made by Mr. Ashburnham on his behalf not to depart from the Army without their consent, which we shall relate in Mr. Ashburnhams own words:

Ashburnhams Letter from Carisbrock to the Speaker dated November 29. 1647 Printed for R. Royston.

When the differences of the Army grew great, and an active and powerful party thereof dayly menacing violence to his Majesties person; his Majesty commanded me to retract the Engagement which I had formerly given, alleadging that Colonel Whalley affirmed to him, that the Officers of the Army had so little power to preserve him, as that they were scarce able to keep themselves from affronts; whereupon having found Colonel Whalley walking by the river side near Hampton-Court, I told him that I came to withdraw that word which I had given him for his Majesty not leaving the Army without their consent, the Colonel said, why then the King doth so to: and I told him you are to understood it so. He added, it was fairly done, and he would take notice of it accordingly. This being done and the Ship and Horses and other convenience for the Kings escape in preparation, he resolved to take the first opportunity he could to get his liberty, but hearing of some passages at the meeting of the Officers at Putney on 1647. on the 11 th. of November, tending to the destruction of his person: (where Colonel Harrison made a long narration concerning some things that lay upon his Spirit, in relation to the King, Lords, &c. saying, That the King was a man of Blood, and therefore the Engagements to him were taken off, and that they were to prosecute him: and that on the same day the Agitators of nine Regiments and the Generals Life-Guard, had prepared a Letter of the same strain by way of narrative to all the Souldiers of the Army to draw them to a general Rendezvouze to declare against any settlement with the King) he resolved that evening to remove himself, and accordingly about eight a Clock at night he got away, having Horses laid ready to receive him on the other side of the River; and about nine a Clock, whilst the Commissioners of Parliament and Colonel Whalley (who commanded the Guard) expected when he should come out of his Chamber to Supper, and wondred at his long stay, at last some of them going in, and not finding the King, they found his Cloak left there, and a Letter written with his own hand to the Commissioners to be by them communicated to both Houses of Parliament, Cromwel about midnight dispatched a Letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons with notice of the Kings departure: In the Kings letter to the Parliament, after he had discoursed somewhat about Captivity, & the sweetness of Liberty, he protested (as before God) That he had not taken this design of withdrawing himself to disturb the publique peace, or any Treaty tending to the establishment thereof, but only to preserve his own safety, against which he understood there was a treasonable Conspiracie. But towards the end of the Letter he useth these words, Now as I cannot deny but that my personal security is the urgent cause of this my retirement, so I take God to witness, that the publique peace, is no less before mine eyes: and I can find no better way to express this my profession, (I know not what a wiser man may do) then by desiring and urging that all chief interests may be heard, to the end each may have just satisfaction; as for example, the Army (for the rest though necessary, yet I suppose are not difficult to consent) ought (in my Judgment) to enjoy the liberty of their Consciences, and have an Act of Oblivion or Indemnity, (which should extend to the rest of all my Subjects, and that all their Arrears should be speedily and duly paid, which I will undertake to do, so I may be heard, and that I be not hindred from using such lawful and honest means as I shall chuse: To conclude, let me be heard with freedom, honor and safety, and I shall instantly break through this Cloud of retirement, and shew my self to be Pater Patriæ.

The King escapes from Hampton-Court.

The Kings Letter to the Parliament at his departure from Hampton Court.

The Parliament were at first surprized with this unexpected news of the Kings departure, and they dispatched Messengers to all Sea-ports to prevent his going out of the Kingdom, and upon a rumour that he was concealed in London, they ordred, That if any man should closely detain the the Kings person, and not reveal it to the Parliament, he should be punished with the loss of his estate and life: But in the midst of this confusion, a Letter came to the Lords from Colonel Hammond Governour of the Isle of Wight, dated at Cowes the 13 th. of November, wherein he acquainted them, That being that morning on his way from Carisbrook-Castle to Newport, Mr. Ashburnham and Sir John Berkely overtook him and after a short discourse told him, the King was near, and that he would be with him that night, & was come from Hampton-Court, upon information, that there were some who intended to destroy him, and that he could not with safety continue any longer there, and finding his case thus, he chose rather to put himself in his hands being a Member of the Army (which he said he would not have left could he have had security to his person) than to go to any other place, and therefore weighing the great concernment that the person of the King was of, he resolved to use his utmost endeavours to preserve his person from any such horrid attempts, and to bring him to a place of safety; hereupon he went over the water, and found the King near the water side, and by his own desire he brought him to the Isle of Wight.

1647.

The King is brought to the Isle of Wight, At the Countess of Southamptons-house.

The Parliament were well pleased to hear of the Kings being at Cowes, and ordred thereupon on the 16 th. of November.

1. That he should continue there and in the Castle.

2. That none that have born arms against the Parliament but Inhabitants that have compounded, shall remain in that Island.

3. That no Delinquent or Foreiner should be admitted to come to him without leave of the Parliaments of England and Scotland, and that Propositions should be speedily sent to him.

4. That five thousand pounds shall be advanced for his accommodation: And,

5. That it should be considered who should attend his person.

In the little space of time betwixt the Kings departure from Hampton-Court, and his arrival at Cowes-Castle in the Isle of Wight many great distempers appeared in the Army, which had been growing some while before, on this occasion. The Agitators having some jealousie, that Cromwel and Ireton and the rest of the General Officers designed to establish the King (and being acted and guided by divers persons not of the Army that were for a total subversion of Monarchical Government) possessed the Souldiers with much prejudice against them, as that they had faln from their Principles, and were in their proceedings false and treacherous both to the Army and Kingdom, and by several insinuations of this kind which they dispersed in printed papers they had made great factions and parties in the Army and much divided the Souldiers from the Officers, and both Officers and Souldiers amongst themselves: these disorders and discontents were much encreased by the repair of the Agitators to the head Quarters, where they assembled as a kind of Representative Councel, and debated divers matters of great concernment: But the General doubting the event of these practises, and being willing to quiet the discontents then growing amongst the Souldiers, in the first place, dismissed the Agitators to their several Regiments, and sent also most of the Officers then at the Head-Quarters to their respective and particular char-

1647. ges, to endeavour to satisfie and compose those discontents and divisions; and about a fortnight after he contracted the quarters of the Army, intending to draw them to several Rendezvouzes; the first whereof was to be in a place called Corkbush Field betwixt Hartford and Ware on the 15*th*. day of November; But as soon as the Agitators had notice of these orders, they and their associates laboured to hinder the execution thereof, and to draw divers Regiments from the Quarters and Rendezvouzes, to which they were ordered unto, to the first Rendezvouze neer Ware; whereupon the General the day before called a Councel of War at Hartford, and there agreed upon a Remonstrance, and engagement which was to be read at the Rendezvouze at the head of every Regiment, and subscribed by the Officers and Souldiers; But the next day when the Army was drawn together, many of the Souldiers of five whole Regiments mutined against their Officers, and wore certain marks of distinction to be known by from the rest, nor was this done in so tumultuous a manner as usually mutinies are made, but with some kind of order, and had proved very dangerous, if Cromwell and Ireton, and some of the rest of the Officers had not been very active in seizing on some of the principal Mutineers, in the doing whereof, one or two were shot to death before the Troops were reduced to order and good obedience; but though the present distemper was thus ended, great animosities remained, most of the Mutineers and the Officers that favoured them, were tryed at Court Martials, and cashiered, or otherwise punished, but Cromwell and Ireton, and their factions, were after this (to keep their credit with the Army) to alter their Counsels, which brought great misery to the Kingdome, as will be shewn hereafter.

The Souldiers mutiny against their Officers.

The principal of them shot to death.

Whilst the Parliament were deliberating about propositions to be sent to the Isle of Wight to the King; a Letter came to them from him dated the 18*th*. of November, super-scribed, To the Speaker of the Lords House to be communicated, also to the House of Commons, which was read in both Houses. In which he delivered his sense and opinion concerning many things contained in the former propositions to him, especially concerning the abolition of Episcopacy, which he said, "He "could not consent to either as a Christian or a "King, because he looked upon it as Apostolical, "and had sworn at his Coronation to maintain "it; but yet he was willing that Presbyterie "should be authorized for three years, and in the "mean time, a free debate had between the Di-"vines assembled at Westminster, and twenty "that he should appoint for the future settlement "of Church Government; he was also willing "that the Parliament should dispose of the Mili-"tia, and have the choice of his Privy Counsel-"lors during his Reign, provided they would "have it by Grant in Letters Patent from him, "and that it might return to his Successors: He "gave touches also concerning the payment of "the arrears of the Souldiers, and the other mat-"ters, of all which he said, he hoped that he "should satisfie the Parliament with his reasons, "if he might personally treat with them. There-"fore he desired earnestly to be admitted with "honour, freedome and safety, to treat personal"ly at London." The Commissioners of Scotland likewise with great vehemency press'd, that the desire of the King might be granted; insomuch, that after a long debate on the six and twentyth of November, it was concluded, that four previous propositions being drawn up into the form of Acts, should be sent to the King in the Isle of Wight to sign; which when he had signed, he should be admitted to a personal Treaty at London. 1647.

Four Acts sent to the King to be signed.

The four previous Acts were these;

1. An Act for raising, setling, and maintaining Forces by Sea and Land within the Kingdom of England and Ireland, and Dominion of Wales, &c.

2. An Act for recalling of all Declarations, Oaths, and Proclamations against the Parliament, or those who have adhered to them.

3. An Act, That those Peers who were made after the Great Seal was carried from the Parliament, may be made uncapable of sitting in the House of Peers.

4. That Power may be given to the Two Houses to adjourn themselves as they shall think fit.

The first of these Acts was concerning the Militia, which devested the King, his Heirs and Successors of the power thereof for ever; for though it seem'd to be but for twenty years, yet it saith, That neither the King nor his Heirs or Successors, nor any other shall exercise any power over the Militia by Land or Sea, but such as shall act by Authority and Approbation of the Lords and Commons: It gives also an unlimited power to the two Houses to raise what Forces, and what number for Land and Sea, and of what persons (without exceptions) they please, and to imploy them as they shall judge fit, and to raise what Money they please for maintaining them. The titles of the other Acts do sufficiently discover the nature of them, and therefore we shall not inlarge upon them: The Commissioners of Scotland would in no wise give their consent that these four Acts should be imposed on the King before he treated at London; and in a large declaration they protested against it, notwithstanding which, they were sent by the Earl of Denbigh, the Lord Mountague, Mr. Lisle, Mr. Goodwin, Mr. Bunkly, and Mr. Kemp Commissioners from both Houses of Parliament, and on the 24*th*. of December they were presented to the King at Carisbrook Castle; but he willing to satisfie all interests, and finding the Scots openly to protest against them, refused to give his assent to any Acts till the whole peace should be concluded; and the Commissioners returned to London with his denyal. The Army after the Rendezvouz neer Ware, had another some daies after neer Kingston, and from thence they march'd to Windsore, where the head-quarters for some time remained, and the chief Officers had many consultations about the present transactions betwixt the King and the Parliament; for Cromwell and Ireton finding the Interest of the Scots was likely to be

The King refuseth to give his Assent to them.

1647. be joyn'd with that of the King, and that the City of London was very favourable to them, they feared a downfall to their greatneſs, if they did not prevent the progreſſe thereof, and ſtrengthen themſelves by drawing the inferior Officers and Souldiers who were much acted by the late mutinies againſt the King and his Government, to have a good opinion of them; to effect which, as a pretence to procure a unity in the Army, a Faſt was ſolemnly kept amongſt the Officers, and a whole day ſpent in Prayer and Preaching, and at the cloſe thereof, all thoſe Priſoners that were committed for the mutiny at Ware, at the mind of God, were ſet at liberty, when as one well knowing in thoſe affairs, publiſhed; * They had without doubt reſolv'd it before as the only expedient to re-imbalm their loſt reputation; for if the King would have taken their price, to let Cromwell and Ireton Rule and Reign under him, no doubt but he might have come in, but becauſe the Scots feared if he came in by theſe Grandees of the Army, they and he might joyn together to chaſtiſe them for all their old former provocations, and therefore out of meer ſafety (it may be) they outbid the Grandees to gain the Kings affection, which made them mad.

* John Lilburne in a Book called England's Freedome, Souldiers Rights, pag. 59.

Thus much is related in a print, and to manifeſt this practiſe, Cromwell and Ireton being preſent in the Houſe of Commons when the Kings Anſwer was read, Ireton ſaid; That the King had denyed ſafety and protection to his people by denying the four Bills; That ſubjection to him was but in lieu of his protection to his people; this being denied, they might well denye any more ſubjection to him, and ſettle the Kingdom without him: That it was now expected after ſo long Patience, they ſhould ſhew their Reſolutions, and not deſert thoſe valiant men who had engaged for them beyond all poſſibility of retreat, and would never forſake the Parliament, unleſs they forſook them firſt; and in the concluſion he preſs'd for a Queſtion to be put, That no more addreſſes or applications ſhould be made to the King: This diſcourſe was received with much admiration of many that had obſerv'd the late motions of the Army, and read their declarations, who knew how contrary this his ſpeech was from what he had often before aſſerted on behalf of the King, and that moſt of theſe declarations were penn'd by him, in one of which were theſe words: * We do clearly profeſs, we do not ſee how there can be any Peace to the Kingdom firm or laſting, without a due conſideration of, and proviſion for the Rights, Quiet, and Immunity of his Majeſties Royal Family, and his late Partakers; And in many others there were the like expreſſions, beſides what was contained in the Armies propoſals before recited; but now, Thoſe that choſe by Arms to compaſs their ends upon the King, began too late to diſcover, That the Government by an Army would introduce at laſt (as in the Romane State it did) The Army to be Maſters of Government. This debate of non-addreſſes was very long in agitation, for it continued from nine in the morning till ſeven at night, and when the Houſe was ready for a queſtion, Cromwell ſpake to this purpoſe;

Ireton's Speech in the Houſe of Commons.

* Remonſtrance from Sir Thomas Fairfax, and the Army under his command at St. Albans, June the 23. 1647. pag. 64.

Cromwells Speech in the Houſe.

That it was now expected the Parliament ſhould govern and defend the Kingdom by their own power and reſolutions, and not teach the People any longer to expect ſafety and government from an obſtinate man, whoſe heart God had hardened; That thoſe men who had defended the Parliament from ſo many dangers with the expence of their blood, would defend them herein with fidelity and courage againſt all oppoſition. Teach them not by neglecting your own and the Kingdoms ſafety (in which their own is involved) to think themſelves betrayed, and left hereafter to the rage and malice of an irreconcilable enemie, whom they have ſubdued for your ſake; and therefore are likely to find his future government of them inſupportable, and fuller of Revenge than Juſtice, leſt deſpair teach them to ſeek their ſafety by ſome other means than adhering to you, who will not ſtick to your ſelves, and how deſtructive ſuch a reſolution in them will be to you all, I tremble to think, and leave you to Judge: And to enforce this Speech, at the later end thereof, in a kind of menacing manner, he laid his hand upon his ſword; and in the end, a Declaration, and Votes were paſſed, which were after much debate aſſented to by the Lords, in theſe words:

1647.

The Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, after many Addreſſes to his Majeſtie for the preventing and ending this unnatural War, raiſed by him againſt the Parliament and Kingdome, have lately ſent four Bills to his Majeſty, which did contain only matter of ſafety and ſecurity to the Parliament and Kingdom, referring the compoſure of other differences to a perſonal Treaty with his Majeſty, and having received an abſolute Negative, do hold themſelves obliged to uſe their utmoſt endeavours, ſpeedily to ſettle the preſent Government in ſuch a way, as may bring the greateſt ſecurity to this Kingdom, in the enjoyment of the Laws and Liberties thereof. And in Order thereunto, and that the Houſes may receive no delay nor interruptions in ſo great and neceſſary a work, they have taken theſe Reſolutions, and paſſed theſe Votes following, viz.

The Parliament vote that no more addreſſes ſhould be made to the King.

The Lords and Commons do declare, That they will make no further Addreſſes or Applications to the King.

Reſolved, &c. By the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, That no Application or Addreſs be made to the King by any perſon whatſoever without the leave of both Houſes.

Reſolved, &c. By the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, That the perſon or perſons that ſhall make breach of this Order, ſhall incur the penalty of High Treaſon.

Reſolved, &c. That the Lords and Commons do declare, That they will receive no more any meſſage from the King: and do enjoyn, That no perſon whatſoever do preſume to receive or bring any Meſſage from the King to both or either of the Houſes of Parliament, or any other perſon.

Within few days after theſe Votes of Parliament were publiſhed; and in compliance with them, a Declaration of the General, and General Councel of the Army was made, and preſented to the Parliament, in the cloſe whereof it was thus expreſſed:

1648. We do freely declare for our ſelves and the Army, That we are reſolved, through the Grace of God, firmly to adhere with, and ſtand by the Parliament in the things Voted, concerning the King, and in what ſhall be further neceſſary for proſecution thereof, and for ſetling and ſecuring of the Parliament and Kingdom, without the King, and againſt him or any other that ſhall hereafter partake with him.

The Declaration of the Army.

The Parliament alſo made a publique Declaration about the beginning of February with many invective arguments in it againſt the King, laying open all thoſe errors of his Government together, which they had with virulencie and malice formerly publiſhed in parcels; but the more ſober part of the people knew too well by what arts the Councels which produced theſe actions were framed to be perſwaded by them, and ſo great were the diſcontents in the City of London and the ſuburbs thereof that part of the Army was quartered about Weſtminſter, the Mews and other places of the City for fear of Inſurrections; and the moneth before theſe high tranſactions, 7 Lords & 13 of the Houſe of Commons were choſen out of both Houſes to ſit as a Committee in Derby-Houſe (where the Committee of both Kingdoms of England and Scotland had ſitten before) who were impowred to ſuppreſs tumults and inſurrections, and to that purpoſe to raiſe forces as they ſaw occaſion; the names of theſe were, the Earls of Northumberland, Kent, Warwick, and Mancheſter, and the Lord Say, Wharton and Roberts, and of the Commons, Sir Henry Vane Senior, Sir Henry Vane Junior, Sir William Armin, Sir Arthur Hazlerig, Sir Gilbert Gerard, Sir Sir John Evelin, Lieutenant General Crommel, Nathaniel Fines, William Pierpoint, and Oliver St. Johns Eſquires, Mr. Crew, Mr. Brown and Mr. Wallop, theſe were pretty equally made up of Presbyterians and Independents; but the later ſeemed to be moſt prevalent by the influence of of the Army, but they were leſs violent in their actings, than otherwiſe they would, that they might not too much exaſperate the Scots, for their Commiſſioners had about this time, repeating the four Votes againſt the King, propounded to know, Whether the Houſes by their Votes, That no perſon whatſoever do preſume to make, or receive any application or addreſs to, or from the King, would debar the Scots to make or receive any addreſſes to, or from him, and ſo put an incapacity upon him to perform Acts of Government towards them: this Meſſage cauſed great debate, but at laſt it was conſented to, That the Scotch Commiſſioners might make addreſſes to the King: But theſe carriages in the Houſe of Commons made the Army and their Independent friends conſult how to ſuppreſs or terrifie the Presbyterians, who in that Houſe notwithſtanding all the Military means, were yet the major part, though leaſt active; and to effect this, about the beginning of March the Lords ſent a Meſſage to the Commons (which had been ſix months before rejected) to deſire their concurrence to an Ingagement of thoſe Members that fled to the Army, To live and die with the Army, which after eight hours debate was carried by nine voices in the affirmative, when there were near two hundred preſent, after many Presbyterians, who were awed by th threats of ſome of the Armies Creatures, had left the Houſe becauſe it was late, not daring to Vote in the Negative: and it was inſinuated that if they had not approved of the Ingagement, a new charge would be exhibited by the Army to the Lords againſt the principal oppoſers; which prevailed upon the weakneſs of many, though the wiſer ſort believed not they durſt attempt any ſuch thing; for many arguments at this time were publiſhed againſt thoſe proceedings, very well received by the people, ſome of which went ſo high as not to allow the Lords any Judicature over the Commons; but others agreed, That that the Houſe of Peers was a Court of Judicature, but not without the Kings ſpecial Authority granted to them either by his Writ, or by his Commiſſion; and the Lords by the four Votes before mentioned, having denied all further addreſſe or application to the King, had cut off from themſelves that fountain from which they derived all their power. During theſe practiſes, to encreaſe and ſtrengthen the Independent party, the diſcontents of the people were much augmented in all places, againſt the Parliament and Army for their ſeverity againſt the King; for upon his denial to aſſent to the four Bills or Acts lately ſent to him, the Governor removed moſt of his Servants from him, and reſtrained him to the Circuit of the Caſtle within the Walls, and though he did it at firſt without the Authority of the Parliament, yet they afterwards approved of the action. Thoſe in the Iſland being neereſt to the view of this uſage, were very much offended with it, and one Captain Burleigh lately an officer in the Kings Army and an Inhabitant there, beat up a Drum in Newport to draw ſome Souldiers together to reſcue the King, but being too haſty in the attempt, his endeavours were fruſtrated, and he himſelf was taken priſoner, and thoſe that took part with him ſuppreſt: he was after ſome time ſent in cuſtody to Wincheſter, where by a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer directed to Sergeant Wild of Worceſterſhire the then Chief Baron and others; he was tried and condemned of High Treaſon, and on the 10 th. of February injuriouſly executed for the ſame.

Hiſt. Indep. 61, & 62.

The Parliament publiſhes a Declaration.

The Committee of Derby houſe new impowred.

The Scots Commiſſioners allowed to make addreſſes to the King.

The Parliament paſs an Ingagement.

The King ſuffers a more cloſe reſtraint.

Captain Burleigh ſuffers for endeavoring the Kings reſcue.

He is ſo diſtinguiſhed from another loyal perſon of his name, late Recorder of London and now a learned Judge.

The King in this condition ſet forth a declaration to all his Subjects, which inlarged their compaſſion towards him, and in that towards the end he thus expreſſeth himſelf (viz.)

The King puts forth a Declaration

"By what means or occaſion I am come to this "relapſe in my affairs, I am utterly to ſeek, eſpe- "cially when I conſider that I have ſacrificed to "my two Houſes of Parliament (for the peace "of my Kingdom) all, but what is much more "dear to me than my life, my Conſcience and "Honor, deſiring nothing more, than to perform "it in the moſt proper and natural way, A perſo- "nal Treaty; but that which makes me moſt at a "loſs is, the remembring my ſignal compliance "with the Army and their Intereſts, and of what "importance my compliance was to them, and "their often repeated profeſſions and engage- "ments for my juſt rights in general, at New- "Market, and Saint Albans, and their particular "explanations of theſe generals by their voted "and revoted propoſals which I had reaſon to "underſtand ſhould be the utmoſt extremity would 1647. "would be expected from me, and that in some"thing therein I should be eased, (here-

"in appealing to the consciences of some of the "chiefest Officers in the Army, if what I have "said, be not punctually true) and how I have "failed of their expectations, or my professions
"to them, I challenge them, and the whole
"World, to produce the least colour of reason;
"And now, I would know what it is that is de"sired: Is it peace? I have shewed the way,
"(being both willing and desirous to perform
"my part in it) which is a just complyance with
"all chief interests: Is it plenty and happinesse,
"they are the inseparable effects of Peace? Is "it security? I, who wish all men would for"get and forgive like me, have offered the Mi"litia for my time: Is it liberty of Conscience?
"He who wants it, is most ready to give it: Is it
"the right Administration of Justice? Offices
"of Trust are committed to the choice of my "two Houses of Parliament: Is it the Arrears
"of the Army? upon a settlement they will cer"tainly be paid with much ease, but before, there "will be found much difficulty, if not impossi-
"bility in it.

"Thus, all the World cannot but see my real
"and unwearied endeavours for Peace, the
"which, (by the Grace of God) I shall neither
"repent me of, nor never be slackned in, not"withstanding my past, present, or future suffer"ings. But if I may not be heard, let every one
"judge, who it is that obstructs the good I would "or might do; What is it that men are afraid to "hear from me? It cannot be reason, (at least,
"none will declare themselves so unreasonable
"as to confesse it) and it can less, be impertinent
"or unreasonable discourses; for thereby peradd-
"venture I might more justifie this my Restraint,
"than the causers themselves can do; so that of "all wonders, this yet is the greatest to me:
"But it may be easily gathered hence, how these "men intend to govern, who have used me thus.
"And if it be my hard fate to fall together with "the liberty of this Kingdome, I shall not blush
"for my self, but much lament the future mise-
"ries of my people, the which I shall still pray
"God to avert, what ever becomes of me.

During the time of these restraints, he betook himself to meditation, and then composed that most excellent Book, entituled, Εικων Βασιλικη, or, The Portraiture of His Sacred Majesty in His Solitudes and Sufferings.

The Parliament send Visitors to Oxford.

About the moneth of June last, The Parliament sent visitors to the University of Oxford, but their authority was not submitted to by the Members thereof, who alledged that they could not acknowledge any visitors but the King, or his immediate substitute, without manifold perjuries: but about the 27*th.* of April this year, The Earl of Pembroke being lately before by Vote or Ordnance of the two Houses, made Chancellor of the University, resorted thither with some others that were with him made Visitors, and being armed with the authority of a vote of the Lords and Commons to expell all such Masters, Fellows, and Officers of Colledges, as refused to submit to their power. The next day after his arrival, he went to Christ-Church Colledge, and there by force removed the Dean, and all the Canons and Students that did not comply with him, and take the Covenant, and put others in their places, and in the like manner he proceeded in the Colledges of All-Souls, St. Mary Magdalen, and New-Colledge, and in all other Colledges and Halls, by displacing those that did not submit, and putting others in their places.

1648.

Oxford visited by the new Chancellor.

This Summer the King, though a Prisoner, was as formidable as ever since the beginning of his troubles, and many of the more moderate of his Subjects of both Kingdoms, which before had joyned in Arms against him, began to look upon his estate with consideration, and they and others attempted by force to try their fortunes on his behalf; And first, an Insurrection was made in London, where some Apprentices in More-fields set upon a part of the Trained-Band who were there keeping Guard, and over-powred them, by which successe their numbers hourly increased, and they divided themselves into two or three bodies, one whereof (which was the most considerable) having born before them an Ensign which they took from the Trained-Bands, march'd towards White-Hall, but being without any Arms but Sticks, a Troop of Horse from the Mews charg'd and dispersed them; yet at night they joyned again, and surprized Newgate and Ludd-gate, and shut up the Gates thereof, and seized a Drake-piece from the Lord Mayors House, which they planted within Ludd-gate, being animated hereunto by some of the Army, to make their Conquest of them more Remarkable: The morning following, they laboured to get Arms, and brake open some Salemens Houses of Ammunition, and mastered the Magazine at Leaden-Hall, crying out in a tumultuous manner, For God and King Charles; but the next day General Fairfax entred Aldersgate with two Regiments, and marched to Leaden-Hall-street, and there charged this undisciplin'd multitude; who after a short Skirmish, were utterly dispersed, with little or no loss to the Assailants.

An Insurrection of the London Apprentices

In South-Wales, about this time, Colonel Poyer Governor of Pembroke Castle, refused to yield up his Charge (though commanded thereunto) but the better to countenance his intention, his first pretences were to have the Arreares of him and his Souldiers paid to him, but this produced some expostulatory Letters betwixt him and the Parliament, and in the mean time he fortified the Castle, and stored it with provision for a defence, and Major General Laughorn, for the same reason, refused to disband his men, and so both resolved to run the same fortune. Laughorn surprized Tenby Castle with the Parliament Commissioners therein; and for the support of their Souldiers, they raised contribution from the neighbouring parts, and declared for the King, to whom one Colonel Powel, a valiant Souldier of that Countrey, joyned. Colonel Horton was sent by Fairfax Commander in chief against them, with thirty Companies of Horse and Foot, who sent out Adjutant General Flemming to charge them, who when he came neer, went to gain a Pass from Poyer, which he found quitted to his hands, and going on improvidently, he fell into an Ambuscade which Poyer had laid, whereby his men were disor-

Poyer and Laughorn refuse to submit to the Parliament.

1648 disordered, and he with some few of them compell'd to shelter in a neighbouring Church, but perceiving himself unable to hold it out, he died (as it is thought) by his own Sword, and the rest were taken Prisoners: This success was attended with the surprize of Chepstow Castle, which was taken by Sir Tho. Keymish for the King in the Governors absence. And now Fairfax thought a greater Force was required than those with Horton to reduce South-Wales, and therefore Cromwell himself, was ordered to march with a strong power into that Countrey; but when the news of his advance came to Laughorn, he thought it best to fight Horton before his coming, and the other as willingly marched to meet him, and neer St. Fragons on the eighth of May, the two Armies came in sight of one another, Laughorn had many more than the other, but not well armed nor disciplin'd, and for that he did not so soon expect Horton, the conquest was the easier; for as soon as his men were charged, after a little resistance, Horton's men obtained a Victory, in which they killed and took 1500 Officers, and 3000 Common Souldiers, Laughorn himself, and Powel, escaped by flight, Lieutenant General Cromwel entred Wales shortly after this, and stormed Tenby Castle, which yielded upon mercy, and Chepstow Castle was retaken by Colonel Ewer, and from thence he marched to besiege Pembroke Castle: Sir John Owen, whilst Cromwell besieged Pembroke Castle, got together some Forces in North-Wales for the King, which the Sheriff would have suppressed, but being too weak, was defeated, & taken Prisoner by him; but shortly after, the same fortune befell Owen himself, by the Forces of Major General Mitton. Pembroke Town and Castle held out couragiously for a long time, but at length were so distressed, that they willingly would have surrendred, if they could have had any other Conditions, than to yield upon discretion; and to force them thereunto, Cromwell gave a furious assault to the place, which the besieged resolutely endured: But upon News that Duke Hamilton was preparing to march into England with an Army of Scots, he became inclinable to give them better terms, and thereupon the Town and Castle was delivered up to him July 13*th*. on these terms (viz.) Powell, Laughorn, Poyer, and three other principal Actors, to submit to the Parliaments mercy: the other Commanders, Knights and Gentlemen, to depart the Kingdom within six weeks, for two years, the rest to return to their respective dwellings, and the Townsmen to enjoy their freedome and Liberties: Those that submitted to mercy, were afterwards tried as Traytors, notwithstanding the Princes Letter in their behalf to General Fairfax; But his cruel favour was extended towards them, that they should cast lots for their lives, and so only Poyer suffered.

Chepstow Castle taken for the King

Laughorn defeated by Horton.

Tenby Castle stormed by Cromwel, and Chepstow Castle retaken.

Sir John Owen routed by Major General Mitton.

Pembroke Town and Castle delivered up to Cromwel.

April 20. The Duke of York, disguised in Womens Apparel, made his Escape from St. James's by Water, and landed at Dort in Holland, by help of one Mr. Bampfeild, sent over purposely on that design by the Queen.

The Duke of York escapes to Holland.

Whilst some by Arms were endeavouring to free their Countrey, others attempted by Petitions in a mild way to obtain that by favour, which would not without great hazard and effusion of blood be procured by force: The County of Essex was the first that began, who supplicated the Parliament, that the Army might be paid and disbanded, and the King admitted to a personal Treaty; Surry followed, and desired the like, but in higher Terms, and being numerous, a quarrel was made with the Souldiers of Westminster, who came to keep guard against them, words were first the weapons used, but from thence they came to blows, and some hurt was done on both sides, but night parted the Fray: The City of London succeeded next, and petitioned to the same effect, and also requested, that those Prisoners who stood committed for their former difference when the Parliament went to the Army, might be released, as shortly after they were; and upon the Cities constant profession to adhere to the Parliament, their Militia was restored, and Major General Skippon was appointed Major General thereof, and of all the Forces within the late Lines of Communication; the Lieutenant of the Tower put in by the Army, was also discharged, and Mr. West a Citizen, surrogated in his place; and because alarms of insurrections came from all parts, the General was easily intreated to draw off all the Forces he had from White-Hall and the Mews, and any other parts of London, or the late Lines of Communication upon the Cities promise to order a Guard for the Parliament, which they readily performed, and setled six hundred pounds yearly on their Major General for his entertainment.

Petitions brought from the Parliament, from Essex, and other Counties.

The Kentish men finding those of Surrey so ill treated when they came in a peaceable manner to Petition the Parliament, resolved to make their demand with Swords in their hands, and to that purpose a numerous body of them were drawn together, against whom the Lord Fairfax (for so he was now by his Fathers death) marched with six thousand Foot, and two thousand Horse, the Kentish were ten thousand, but unadvisedly they parted their Forces, and sent away a Brigade to besiege Dover Castle, the General advanced, and defeated some of them between Cranford-Heath and Gravesend, and from thence he sent Major Husbands before, who gained a passage over a Bridge at Northfield, and took some Prisoners; Fairfax followed, marching in a full body, expecting the Kentish, (who hovered in sight of him) would have engaged, but they were not prepared for it, and so without any resistance, he came neer Maidstone, in which the Kentish men were drawn up into a Body, and had planted some great Guns, and barrocadoed the avenues of the Town.

The Kentish men in arms

Fairfax having his Army by this time encreased to ten thousand, on the second of June at seven a clock at night storm'd the Town twice, and was both times repulsed, but the third time he got entrance, yet then the fight was more perillous than before, whilst the Assailants had to do not only with those who manned the Streets, but were also galled with continual shot from the Houses, getting all by inches, nor could they master the Town till after six hours fight, and much losse on their own side: But of the Kentish, two hundred were slain, and above one thousand and three hundred taken Prisoners, with four hundred Horse, and eight pieces of Ordnance, and good Booty; and presently upon this, Rochester was also quitted

1648. ted to the Generals Mercy; many of the Kentish men after this defeat kept still in a body and marched towards London, and rendezvouz'd upon Black-heath, whither some resolute persons repaired to them from London, and the Earl of Norwich at the head of them gave them the best encouragement he could; but the Kentish-men perceiving their succours to come short of what they expected, they quitted their Commanders apace, and returned home; Norwich with five hundred men crossed over Greenwich ferry into Essex, in which County the Committee-men were already secured by some that were for the King there, and Sir Charles Lucas having gotten together two thousand Horse and Foot joyned with Norwich, who seized the Earl of Warwicks Armory, and possessed themselves of Colchester, which now became a Seat of War, and the Country people flocked in unto them, and many also came from London, and the Lord Capel and the Lord Loughbrough from Hartford-shire, but General Fairfax leaving Colonel Rich, and Colonel Hewson to take in those places which held out in Kent, which himself had not time to reduce, crossed over into Essex after the Enemy, and came before Colchester, which he immediately surrounded with a potent Army; neither were these endeavors for the King only confined to the Land, but a considerable part of the Navy Royal encouraged by Captain Batten formerly Vice-Admiral to the Earl of Warwick, was put into the power of the Prince of Wales, to be used for the Kings service, and with these the Prince with his Brother, Prince Rupert and the Earl of Brainford, the Lords Hopton, Wilmot, Willoughby, and Culpepper with others of Quality came into Yarmouth-road, he had on board about two thousand Souldiers, and these he would have landed, but hearing of Colonel Scroops coming against him with a party of Horse and Foot more in number, he sailed from thence to the Downs in Kent, seizing what Merchant Ships and goods he could meet withal; Deal Castle was at this time besieged, for relief whereof the Prince would needs attempt something, and therefore he set five hundred men ashore, who at first charged handsomly, but being over-numbred, were beaten, and several of them were slain and taken, but the rest got aboard again: Soon after this, Sandwich, Deal, and Weymore Castles were yeelded up, and the whole County of Kent fully subdued. Whilst the Prince anchored in the Downs, the States of Scotland invited him to them, and engaged the Publike Faith of that Kingdom, for his well-being in Honour, freedom, and safety with them, or with their Army then in England, and to remove from them, or their Army, when, or whither he pleased. But he having written to the House of Lords for promoting the Treaty with the King, and in vain summoned the Earl of Warwick (Admiral for the Parliament) to submit to him as highest Captain General under the King, and beginning to stand in need of Provision, went with his Fleet into Holland.

Routed at Maidstone by General Fairfax.

Colchester besieged.

Part of the Navy revolt to Prince Charles.

A party of his landing in Kent are beaten.

The States of Scotland invite the Prince of Wales to them.

The Earl of Holland takes up arms for the King.

But the Earl of Holland being commissioned from the Prince, Heads a fresh Insurrection, just as it were in view of the Parliament at Kingston upon Thames, his chief Associates were the Duke of Buckingham, and his Brother the Lord Francis Villiers, and the Earl of Peterborough; July 2. they rendezvouzed neer Kingston, and had five hundred Horse, and some Foot upon the Heath thete, and from thence they marched to Darking, and would have possessed Rygate, but were prevented; for Colonel Rich and Major Gibbons marched towards them, and thereupon they retreated towards Kingston, and being closely pursued, they sent away their foot before to secure their Retreat to the Town, and made a stand between Ewel and Nonsuch Park, where the Pursuers overtook and engaged them; the fight was short and smart, wherein the Lord Francis Villiers (refusing Quarter) was slain with a Son of Sir Kenelm Digby, and others, and the rest put to flight, and many Prisoners of note were taken, the Earl of Holland got into Kingston, but staid not long there, but fled with all speed to Saint Needs in Huntingtonshire, where he was totally subdued, and taken by Colonel Scroop, and sent Prisoner to Warwick Castle, and Dalbier was there killed, but the Duke of Buckingham retired towards Lincolnshire, and escaped beyond Seas; Colchester yet held out couragiously, making frequent Sallies upon the Besiegers with indifferent Success and good hopes of relief from the North; for the Parliament of Scotland had sat ever since the second of March, and were much disgusted at the English proceedings in reference to the King, which was not a little encreased by the report of their Commissioners now returned, so that notwithstanding that the Parliament of England made them fair offers concerning the payment of the money due upon account of their Auxiliary Armies, both in England and Scotland, and on the four and twentieth day of July passed an Ordinance to establish the Presbyterian Government in England and Ireland (viz.) under Classical Provincial, aad Parochial Assemblies: yet all would not serve, for they had framed a Committee of Danger, to consult of their affairs in relation to England; the Major part whereof being of Hamiltons faction, Voted a War. And the Scots published a Declaration, wherein they proposed:

1648.

He is routed and the L. Francis Villiers slain.

The Earl taken at St. Needs.

An Ordinance for establishing the Presbyterian Government in England.

That the King may come to London, or some of his Houses near, and that with safety.

That reparation be made for his carrying away, or satisfaction by punishing them that did it.

That the Army under the Lord Fairfax be disbanded.

That Presbytery be setled, and Sectaries punished.

That all Members of the House be restored.

The Scots Declaration.

These actings drew many of the Kings party from the Northern parts to Edenburgh, and Wogan a Captain in the English Army marched to them with his Troop, and fifty foot, and two Companies of Foot landed out of Ireland at Chester, and marched thither also: moreover Barwick was surprized by some Royallists, and Sir Thomas Glemham and Sir Philip Musgrave raised forces for the King in Westmerland and Cumberland with which they seized on Carlisle, and with them joyned Sir Marmaduke Langdale, with some Horse, being Commissioned to be Genetal of the Barwick and Carlisle surprized.

1648. Sir Marmaduke Langdal made Gen. of the English forces for the King.

English forces for the King, with which now encreased to three thousand, he coasted about the Northern Counties.

The Scots enter England under D. Hamilton and joyn with Langdale.

July the thirteenth, a Scots Army under Duke Hamilton entered England, the Van was brought up by the Duke himself, the Main Body by Major General Middleton, and the Rear by the Earl of Calender, these joyned with Langdale, and fell upon Major General Lambert near Appleby, and forced him to retire into the Town, from thence he retreated to Kirkby-Steven and after to Bowes, leaving some of his forces behind him, to defend the Castle, which was besieged and taken August 7. by Sir Philip Musgrave, Colonel Boynton Governour of Scarbrough Castle declared for the King, and Pomfret Castle was taken by Major Morris; in Tinmouth Castle, Lieutenant Colonel Henry Lilburne declared for the King, but the Castle was suddenly retaken by Sir Arthur Haslerig.

The Scots staid some time at Kendal in Westmerland, and Major General Lamberts Army encreased dayly with additional forces, and Lieutenant General Cromwel having quieted Wales, marched to joyn with him, and in his way took Pomfret Town, but not the Castle; Hamilton left Kendal and marched into Lancashire, intending for London, which the English Army resolved to hinder, and therefore marched to Preston, where Hamilton and Langdale lay with their forces, reported to be twenty thousand strong, Cromwel and Lambert now joyned were reckoned to have five thousand Horse and Dragoons, and seven thousand Foot. August the 17 th. both Armies faced one another, Major Smithson Commanded the forlorn of the English, who charged furiously on the Scots Van, and routed them, and alarmed the whole Army, and so the Battels joyned on a Moor two miles East of Preston and the fight was very hot for two hours, and then the Scots gave ground, which incouraged the English to pursue them, and that so fiercely, that they were forced to divide, one part being a Body of three thousand Horse, moved towards Lancaster, and was followed and dispersed by Colonel Twisleton and Colonel Thornlow (who took multitudes of them prisoners;) and the other part Horse and foot marched over the River Rible, whom the Main of the English Army followed, and at Rible-Bridge the Scots made a stand, defending the pass stoutly for two hours, even to the push of Pike, but were then constrained to retire. The next morning the Scots draw up on a Hill on the side of Preston, whence being forced by the English, they fled in great disorder to Wiggon, which they plundered, and the next morning after marched towards Warrington (the English pursuing all the way) near Warrington the Scots taking advantage of a Pass, made another halt, but were again beaten with the loss of a thousand men, and were pursued to the very Bridge, where the foot in number 4000. being deserted by the Horse, laid down their Arms and submitted to mercy; Hamilton got away with three thousand Horse to Nantwitch, where the Country being up in Arms seized upon most of them; Lieutenant General Cromwel marched towards Cumberland, to meet Monroe who was marching with a Reserve of Scots, giving order to all the Parliament Commanders in these Counties to follow the flying Scots, by some of whom Major General Middleton who commanded four hundred Horse was defeated and taken prisoner, and the rest dispersed: Hamilton himself was met with at Utoxeter, and made to submit to mercy by the Lord Gray of Groby, who sent him prisoner to Ashby de la Zouch: in this days fight, the English took more prisoners than their own whole Army amounted to, the Scots Ensigns, Cornets, and Colours taken were afterward hung up in Westminster-Hall, Sir Marmaduke Langdale was apprehended in an Inn: Cromwel improved his success, and came to Durham, to look out Monroe supposed to be about six thousand strong, but the stricter Presbyterian party in Scotland having now recovered the Sword, ordered him to return, which he obeyed more for fear of the English, than obedience to them, and joyning with the Earl of Lanerick, both together they made eight thousand Horse and foot; to oppose whom, the Anti-Hamiltonians provided an Army, whereof the Earl of Argile was Commander in Chief and David Lesley Lieutenant General, but being too weak to fight them, Cromwel entred Scotland by their invitation, and to smooth his way, he published the following Declaration.

Hamilton taken prisoner by the L. Grey of Groby.

Cromwel enters Scotland.

The Scots Army defeated by Lt. Gen. Cromwel.

His Declaration.

Whereas we are marching with the Forces of the Parliament of England into the Kingdom of Scotland, in pursuance of the remaining part of the Enemy, who lately invaded the Kingdom of England, and for the recovery of the Garrisons of Barwick and Carlisle: These are to declare, that if any Officer or Souldier under my Command shall take, or demand any moneys, or shall take any Horses, Goods, or Victuals without Order, or shall abuse the people in any sort, he shall be tried and punished with death by a Court Martial.

To him Argile, Lowden, Leven, and other of the Scotch Nobility repaired, and contracted with him for subduing of the publike Enemy: and so much feared was he in Scotland, that the following Agreement was consented to by them.

First, That the Armies under Argile, and the other under Lanerick and Monroe with all the forces in any of the Garrisons in Scotland be disbanded, and Barwick and Carlisle be delivered to the English.

Secondly, That the settlement of Religion at home, and promoting Reformation abroad, be ordered by the determination of the General Assembly, and all Civil differences be referred to a Parliament speedily to be called.

Thirdly, That no party that were in the last Ingagements against England, be of the new Parliament, or of the General Assembly. And so he returned into England after he had been invited to Edenburgh to Feasts and Banquets, and highly caressed by the States of Scotland with all expressions of Honour: and in Yorkshire as he marched homewards, he was desired to reduce Searbrough and Pomfret Castles, which was then promised, but not till some time after effected; Colchester had endured a tedious Siege, and was now brought to such scarcity of provision that the besieg'd had not Horse-flesh enough to serve them one day (that being the food which they had fed on almost 1648. most a fortnight, and not purchaſed without much blood ſpilt in divers Sallies for dead Horſes,) and now perceiving all hopes of ſuccour utterly fruſtrated, they were neceſſitated to yeeld upon theſe Conditions following:

Colcheſter yeelded upon conditions.

The Common Souldiers to depart with life, and the Officers to remain at the Generals diſpoſal, and he to exempt from mercy whom he pleaſed; the remainder to be remitted to the Parliaments mercy, and the Town to raiſe fourteen thouſand pounds to preſerve it from Plunder.

The Priſoners of Quality were the Earl of Norwich, Capel, and Loughborough, eleven Knights, Twelve Colonels, eight Lieutenant Colonels, nine Majors, thirty Captains, and ſixty five Gentlemen, the private Souldiers were about three thouſand; three of the Knights were condemned to die by a Court-Marſhal (viz.) Sir Charles Lucas, Sir George Liſle, and Sir Bernard Gaſcoin a Florentine; but the laſt was reprieved becauſe a ſtranger, and the other two ſhot to death, the firſt having (as the † General ſaid in his Letter to the Parliament falſified his word with him) the ſecond directed the ſhooting of poyſoned Bullets againſt the Laws of Arms.

Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Liſle ſhot to death.

† This was alleadged but never proved.

And ſo General Fairfax after much loſs of time and men, and difficult ſervice for a quarter of a year) took poſſeſſion of the Town of Colcheſter, Auguſt the 27 th. after which he marched up and down the Counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridge, and Hartford to ſettle peace, and viſit the Garriſons, and then returned to St. Albans his Head-Quarters: and thus we have briefly deſcribed the Military actions of this year; and whilſt the Army was buſied in fighting, the Parliament were taken up with Petitions from the ſeveral Counties for a Treaty with the King; the City of London among the reſt had preferred one, & withal deſired as in one before, the releaſe of their impriſoned Citizens, which were the Aldermen Langham and Bunch, and Sergeant Glyn their Recorder, to which the Houſes readily conſented, and likewiſe repealed their Orders againſt the Earls of Suffolk and Middleſex, and the Lords Berkly, Hunſden, Maynard, Willoughby of Parham, and the eleven Members, for they became very well inclined to peace with the King, now they were freed from the inſolencie of the Army by their diſtance from them, and a Treaty was reſolved on, and the Earl of Middleſex, Sir John Hipſley, and Mr. Bulkley were ſent to the King, to let him know this their reſolution: who returned with his ready compliance thereunto; upon which the Parliament Voted.

Petitions from City and Country for a Treaty with the King.

The Vote of Non-Addreſſes recalled.

That the Votes of Non-Addreſſes ſhould be recalled.

That ſuch perſons as he ſhould ſend for, as neceſſary to him in the Treaty be admitted.

That he be in the ſame ſtate of freedom as at Hampton-Court, with ſuch Servants as he deſired.

That five Lords and ten Commons be choſen Commiſſioners to Treat with the King, and the place to be Newport in the Iſle of Wight. And that the King be admitted to invite the Scots thereunto to Treat only concerning that Kingdom.

Which Votes were ſent down to the King, who was to Treat perſonally with theſe Commiſſioners (viz. the Earls of Northumberland, Salisbury, Pembrook, and Middleſex, and the Lord Say, for the Houſe of Lords; and the Lord Wainman, Mr. Pierpoint, Sir Henry Vane the younger, Sir Harbottle Grimſton, Sir John Pots, Mr. Brown, Mr. Crew, and Mr. Bulkley for the Houſe of Commons, and with theſe were joyned Mr. Hollis and Mr. Glyn. 1648.

The Commiſſioners ſent with Propoſitions to the King.

Munday September the eighteenth the Treaty began: The Propoſitions were in number eleven.

The firſt was for calling in all the Kings Declarations, which he aſſented to, with this Proviſo, That neither of this Conceſſion, nor any other of his, advantage ſhould be taken, unleſs the whole were concluded.

The 2 Propoſition was, concerning the ſettlement of the Church, in reference to which he condeſcended to ſettle the Directory, and to paſs an Act to confirm the Aſſembly, and to eſtabliſh the Presbyterian Government for three years, reſerving Liberty to Himſelf and his Party to uſe the old form: But would not agree to the utter aboliſhing of the Epiſcopal Hierarchy, nor the ſelling of their Lands.

The third Propoſition was, for ſetling the Militia in the hands of the Parliament for twenty years, ſolely, to which he aſſented.

Likewiſe to the fourth, for making void the Ceſſation of Ireland, and remitting the Government of it both Civil and Military to the two Houſes at Weſtminſter.

And to the fifth and ſixth, for nulling all Honors and Titles ſince the carrying away of the Great Seal, and for payment of Publike Debts.

The 7 th. Propoſition concerning Delinquents, to whom the Parliament propoſed great ſeverity; the King moderated thus, he was contented that they ſhould be fined, and prohibited acceſs to Councel or Court without the Parliaments conſent, that they ſhould be deprived for three years of their right of ſitting in Parliament, and brought to Tryal (if the two Houſes ſhould think fit) to ſuffer according to the merit, whereof they ſhould be legally convicted: But he would by no means hear of branding them with Treaſon, nor taking away either Lives or Poſſeſſions from any, but ſuch as after a legal Tryal ſhould be found guilty of breaking the eſtabliſhed Laws of the Land.

The eighth, for impowring the Parliament to confer all Officers of the Kingdom, and the Chief Magiſtrates for twenty years he agreed to; and to

The ninth, for confirming the new Great Seal, with all Grants and Commiſſions ſealed by it. And to

The tenth, for ratifying all Priviledges, Grants, and Charters and Immunities to the City of London, with power to diſpoſe of the Tower, and their own Militia to be confirmed to them: and the Ci-

1648. tizens to be exempted from Military ſervice out of the Liberties of the City, unleſs at the Parliaments appointment.

The laſt was for total exterminating the Court of Wards, which was alſo conſented to, ſo as an hundred thouſand pounds might be yearly paid to the King by way of compenſation for it.

The Earl of Ormond had gotten back into Ireland, and raiſed forces there in oppoſition to the Parliament by the Kings Commiſſion, but the King aſſured the Commiſſioners, That if the Treaty ſhould take effect, the Iriſh affairs ſhould be managed at the diſcretion of the houſes only.

The Parliament Vote a full agreement with the King.

The King having thus far complied with the Parliament, they likewiſe at his deſire Voted:

That he be in Honour, freedom, and ſafety, according to the Laws.

Secondly, That he have his Revenue as before, excepting the deductions for ſuch Forts and Garriſons, as were of old accuſtomed to be maintained.

Thirdly, That he have compenſation of the Court of Wards.

Fourthly, That an Act of Oblivion be paſt with ſuch exceptions and limitations as ſhould be agreed on by both Houſes.

Moſt men thought now that the King and Parliament would have united, and ſo in all likelihood they had, nothing being in difference but only the buſineſs of Epiſcopacie. But whilſt the King was treating for Peace at the Iſle of Wight with the Commiſſioners of Parliament, the Officers of the Army were contriving at Windſor the deſtruction of both, and many private meetings were had both there, and at London, by the Levellers and ſome of their Independant friends about a frame of Government to be repreſented to them, the reſult whereof was,

The Officers of the Army have many meetings about a new frame of Government.

That ſome perſons ſhould be choſen by the Army to repreſent the whole Body, and that the well-affected in every County (for ſo they diſtinguiſhed their Party) ſhould chuſe one perſon to repreſent them: and thoſe to meet at the Head-Quarters.

That theſe perſons ought not to exereiſe any Legiſlative power, but only to draw up the Foundations of a juſt Government, and to propound them to the well-affected people in every County to be agreed to; which Agreement ſhould be above Law, and therefore the bounds, limits, and extent of the peoples Legiſlative Deputies in Parliament, contained in the Agreement ſhould be drawn up into a formal contract, to be mutually ſigned by the well-affected people, and their ſaid Deputies upon the days of their elections reſpectively.

To prevent confuſion, the Parliament may not be by force immediately diſſolved, but the day of its diſſolution be inſerted in the Agreement, by vertue whereof it ſhould be diſſolved.

That this way of Settlement ſhould be mentioned in a Remonſtrance from the Army.

When theſe Propoſals were tranſmitted to the Army, the matter thereof was very well approved of by the Chief Officers; but Colonel Harriſon told the Agents imployed to them: 1648.

Colonel Harriſons Speech to the Agents.

That they could not ſtay ſo long from going to London, as to perfect an agreement for ſuch a Settlement, and without their ſpeedy going (ſaid he) we are unavoidably deſtroyed; we fully underſtand that the Treaty betwixt the King and the Parliament is almoſt concluded upon, at the concluſion whereof we ſhall be commanded by King and Parliament to disband, the which if we do, we are unavoydably deſtroyed for what we have done already, and if we do not disband, they will by Act of Parliament Proclaim us Traytors, and declare us to be the only hinderers of ſetling peace in the Nation, and then we ſhall never be able to fight with both Intereſts of the King and the Parliament. So that he and the Officers with him declared the firſt thing the Army was to do, was to cut off the Kings head, and force & throughly purge (if not diſſolve) the Parliament. The Agents did not diſapprove of this horrid reſolution, but preſſed againſt the doing it without firſt giving ſecurity to the Nation (to uſe their own words) for the future ſettlement of their liberties and freedoms, eſpecially in frequent, free, and ſucceſſive Repreſentatives. The dire effects of theſe Councels will follow in the ſequel of this Hiſtory: in proſecution whereof, the Army ſent up a Petition to the Parliament to try their tempers:

The Army petition for Juſtice againſt the King.

For a ſcrutiny to be taken for diſcovery of the Contrivers and Actors in the late bloody Wars, and that ſpeedy Juſtice ſhould be done upon them. That the ſame fault may have the ſame Juſtice and puniſhment in the perſon of the King or Lord, as in the perſon of the pooreſt Commoner: that ſuch as ſpeak or act in the Kings behalf (till he be acquitted of ſhedding innocent blood) be proceeded againſt as Traytors. When this would not do, they framed their Remonſtrance in bolder termes which they ſent to the Parliament by ſix Officers incloſed in a Letter from the General, dated the 10 th. of November.

Their Remonſtrance to the ſame effect.

Requiring, That the King be brought to Juſtice as the Capital cauſe of all the evils of the Civil War.

Secondly, That a peremptory day be ſet for the ſummoning the Prince of Wales, and Duke of York, and if they refuſed to come to declare them incapable of Government or Succeſſion, and to ſtand exiled as Traytors, and if they rendred themſelves, yet to be proceeded againſt for ſatisfaction, and that the Revennes of the Crown be ſequeſtred.

Thirdly, That publick Juſtice be done againſt the Actors in the late Wars.

And laſtly, They concluded, deſiring their Arrears with the old pretence of eaſing the Country of free Quarter; and requeſt that a Period may be put to this Parliament, and a care taken to elect new Repreſentatives, and that no King ſhould be admitted for the future, but upon election of and upon truſt for the people, to be limited by the Repreſentatives, &c.

In the mean time, General Fairfax commanded Colonel Hammond by his Letters to deliver up his charge of the Kings perſon to Colonel Ewer, by 1648. by whom the King was conveyed out of the Isle of Wight to Hurst-Castle the 30 th. of November. But the Parliament declared their ill resentment of this action, and Voted, That the seizing upon the person of the King, and carrying him prisoner unto Hurst-Castle was without the advice and consent of the Houses.

Col. Ewre put in place of Hammond.

And thus the Treaty was violently broken off, yet the Lords Voted the Kings Concessions a sufficient ground for Peace, and forthwith adjourned, and the Major part of the Commons Voted the same. But the Army being now come up to London, and Quartered at White-Hall, St. James, the Mews, and several Villages near, they resolved to hinder these proceedings, and therefore discharged the Trained Bands from being a Guard to the Parliament, and Ordered Colonel Prides and Riches Regiment to supply their places, by whom above forty Members coming to the House, were seized and committed to Guards in several Inns in Westminster, and the parts adjoyning; and not satisfied with this, they accused Major General Brown, and ninety odd Members for inviting in the Scots the last Summer, and therefore required they might be excluded the House: At these proceedings the Commons (being displeased) adjourned for four or five days, in which space the Army was busied in compleating their Model of Government, wherein it was amongst other things proposed:

Divers Members of Parliament excluded by the Army.

The Parliament adjourn.

That the present Parliament should be dissolved the last of April next: And that the Representatives of the whole Nation should consist of three hundred persons, half which number should suffice to make an Act of Law, and that in the Intervals of Parliament a Councel of State should govern.

The Model of Government proposed by the Army.

And this Declaration, together with half a score of Modifications, they stiled, The Agreement of the People; which was afterwards presented to the House of Commons by Sir Hardress Waller, and sixteen Officers when the House new moulded by the Army, met again (for besides those that they forced out, a great number absented themselves) and to testifie their submission to the Army, they restored the Votes of Non-Addresses, and repealed those which approved of the Kings Concessions, and Voted, That no Message be received from the King upon pain of Treason; That the General should take care of his person: and that the Councel of War should draw up a Charge of Treason against him; which manifested that impious intention to destroy him, which before they had determined: But before this open and avowed acting, some secret practices were designed upon his life, as appeared in the Letters and informations of one Dowcet and Osburn against Captain Rolph, who commanded a Company of the Guards about the King, whom Osburn particularly accused to have projected his death, by poyson or pistol, and not without the privity of Colonel Hammond and some Chiefs of the Army that incited him thereunto: and though great endeavours were used to obstruct any proceedings in the business, yet the clamour of people was so great, that they were forced to commit him to prison, and subject him to trial; but by the stickling of some of the prevailing party in his behalf, the Indictment against him was found Ignoramus by December the tenth, the King was brought from Hurst-Castle with a strong Guard to Winchester, next day to Farnham, and the next day to Windsor: In the mean time the two Houses differed among themselves; the Commons asserted, That it is Treason for the King to levie War against the Commonwealth, and drew up an Ordinance for his Trial as a Traytor; and the Lords denied that the King can commit any Treason against the Commonwealth, and therefore rejected the Ordinance of the Commons, and declared, That no Act of the Commons is binding without their consent; and adjourned for a fortnight, upon which the Commons Voted, That all Members and others appointed to act in any Ordinance with Peers, are impowred and enjoyned to sit, act, and execute notwithstanding the Peers joyned not therein; and so earnest were both the Commons and the Army about the Kings Trial, that the Queen desiring to see her Husband before his Arraignment, could not obtain a Pass for her secure coming and returning.

The King removed from Hurst-Castle.

The two Houses clash

January the sixth, the Ordinance for the Kings Trial was turned into an Act of the Commons alone, and ingrossed, and Proclamation was made two days after in Westminster-Hall, Cheapside, and the old Exchange for Witnesses to come in against him, and Commissioners were appointed about it; and now the City (or rather a contemptible party therein, suborned to that purpose) petitioned the House for Justice against the King. And Hillary Term, beginning January the twenty third was adjourned till fourteen days after, to give place to the proceedings against him.

January the nineteenth, the King was brought from Windsor to St. James's House, and all things were prepared for his fatal Tragedy, in which the Commons proceeded notwithstanding the dissent of the House of Lords, and the Remonstrance of the Parliament of Scotland, now convened against it: The Act of Parliament which directed the Trial of the King, appointed a new Tribunal, called the High Court of Justice, who were impowred to convene, hear, Judge, and Execute Charles Stewart King of England. His Title in Writs they abrogated, and ordered the great Seal of England to be broken, and a new Seal to be made with the Cross for England, and the Harp for Ireland thereon, and these words, The Great Seal of England, and on the Reverse, the Picture of the House of Commons sitting with these words, In the first year of freedom by Gods blessing restored, 1648.

A high Court of Justice erected for the Trial of the King.

A new great Seal made.

Thus this great, though unfortunate Prince, Monarch of three mighty Kingdoms, was now through the inscrutable Providence of the Omnipotent disposer of all things, subjected to the miserable condition of a calamitous prisoner to his own Subjects, by whom he was tried, condemned, and lastly executed, yet not without a sharp retaliation (however late) upon the heads of the greatest part of those that were the chief contrivers and actors of so abhorred a fact, as in the sequel of the Story will appear.

Of

Of his Taxations.

KIng James dying, left his Son a large Dominion, but a poor Exchequer, which was the occaſion that his Taxations were more frequent than before in his Fathers Reign.

In his firſt year, the Parliament at their firſt Seſſion granted him two Subſidies from Proteſtants, and four from Popiſh Recuſants, and from the Clergie three; and till the Parliament took order therein, he continued the levies as in his Fathers time of Tonnage, Poundage, and other ſums by way of impoſt upon Merchandiſe imported and exported.

In his ſecond year he engaged in a War with France, and for the relief of Rochell, he raiſed neer two hundred thouſand pounds by Loan.

In his third year, in a Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, they gave him five Subſidies.

In his ſixth year, he revived an antient * Cuſtome or Uſage by which all that were qualified by the Law for Knighthood, were to take upon them that order, or to make fine for reſpite of the ſame, whereby a hundred thouſand pounds was brought into the Exchequer.

* See Coke, Second Book of Inſtitutes, fol. 593. Statute de militibus.

In his ninth year, by the advice of his Attorney-General, and other his Councel learned in the Laws, ſeveral Writs were iſſued under the great Seal of England; for the charging of the Ports, Towns, Cities, Boroughs, and Counties of this Realm reſpectively, to provide and furniſh Ships for the defence of the King and the Kingdom, whereby great ſums were raiſed. And in a Parliament holden in Ireland, the Deputy obtained ſome Subſidies for the payment of the Army of that Realm, and the encreaſe of his Majeſties Revenue there.

In his ſixteenth year, the Earl of Strafford obtained of the Iriſh Parliament the grant of four Subſidies: And the Convocation of Biſhops in England gave him an ample Benevolence of four Shillings in the pound for ſix years, to be aſſeſſed on all the Clergie in England, towards the carrying on of a War with Scotland then begun.

And in the ſame year, The Parliament of England then aſſembled, granted to him four entire Subſidies for relief of his Army then raiſed againſt the Scots, and for relief of the Northern parts of the Kingdom then much burthened by an Army of the Scots quartering in thoſe parts, who impoſed great Taxes on the Inhabitants where they lay for their maintenance.

In his ſeventeenth year, the ſame Parliament granted two Subſidies for the further relief of his Majeſties Army, and the Northern parts of the Kingdom; and likewiſe a Subſidie of Tonnage and Poundage, and other ſums of money payable upon Merchandiſe exported and imported, from the twenty fifth of May to the fifteenth of July following, and when that Act was expiring, they granted another for the ſame duties from the fifteenth of July to the tenth of Auguſt following; and by five other ſubſequent Acts, the Parliament granted the like Subſidie and Impoſition upon Merchandiſe to the third of May, 1642. And the ſaid ſeventeenth year, ſeveral ſums of money were by Act of Parliament charged upon perſons according to their Ranks, Dignities, Offices, Callings, Eſtates and Quality, by way of Pole, for the ſpeedy disbanding two Armies then in the bowels of the Kingdom.

This year alſo a Contribution and Loan was granted for the relief of Ireland, where a bloody Rebellion had broken forth the year before.

And in his eighteenth year, an Act paſſed for raiſing and levying of moneys for the neceſſary defence and great affairs of the Kingdoms of England and Ireland, and for the payment of Debts undertaken by the Parliament.

Theſe were all the Taxations either by Loan or otherwiſe raiſed by Royal Authority during the Kings Reign. But the War which the Parliament raiſed without his Authority, and againſt it, was ſupported and maintained by great and vaſt ſums of money illegally levied on the Subjects by Contribution, Aſſeſſments, and Exciſe, which cannot be properly here inſerted; and we wiſh the memory of ſuch unjuſt proceedings, may be for ever effaced.

Of the Laws made in His Reign.

HAving under the head of Taxations ſet down ſuch Acts of Parliament as granted money to the King, we ſhall herein make no further mention of them in the enumeration of the other Laws enacted during his Reign.

In the Parliament holden in his firſt year, an Act was made for puniſhing abuſes on Sundaies; and

An Act to enable the King to make Leaſes of Lands parcel of his Dutchy of Cornwall; and

An Act for eaſie obtaining Licenſes of Alienation, and in the pleadings in the Exchequer or elſewhere; and

Affairs of the Church in his Time.

THE King was a Zealous Proteſtant according to the profeſſion of the Church of England; for the peace and defence whereof, he laboured much all the time of his Reign, though the malice and ignorance of the enemies thereof much obſtructed his pious indeavours.

In his firſt Year, ſome differences were revived about the Tenents of Arminius, which began in the later end of his Fathers Reign, and were heightned by the Commons Houſe of the Parliament then newly aſſembled, the members whereof generally favoured the oppugners of thoſe points, and the controverſie was the more remarkable, becauſe it divided the Biſhops themſelves, but thoſe of that Order that were reputed Arminians, did not own themſelves to be ſuch, but maintained, That what they held, was ever the Doctrine of the Church of England contained in the 17th. Article thereof, and the like was aſſerted by thoſe that oppoſed thoſe Tenents, ſo that both made claim to that Article, and about the Expoſition thereof, and the conſequences from thence derived, the peace of the Church was not a little 1648. little disquieted, to put some stop to this growing evil, a conference was this year kept in York-House betwixt Dr. Buckbridge Bishop of Rochester, and Dr. White Dean of Carliste on the one side, and Doctor Morton Bishop of Coventry, and Doctor Preston on the other about these points, and chiefly about the possibility of one elected to fall from Grace; and the success of this and of another in the same kind answered neither the intention nor expectations of such as procured them; but the King taking notice of these Arminian Controversies, by his Declaration a while after published, forbad any in preaching or writing to meddle with those high points, as tending more to destruction then edification of the people.

A Conference at York-house for ending the Controversies of Arminians and Calvinists.

The Kings Declaration against medling with these Controversies.

In his fourth year at the confirmation of Mr. Richard Mountague to be Bishop of Chichester, which was in Bow-Church, according to the usual custome in such cases all persons were summoned to appear, to shew cause why the Elect there present should not be confirmed; whereupon one William Jones a Stationer of London excepted against Mr. Mountague as unfitting for the Episcopal Office, because lately Questioned by the Parliament for a Book he had writ, wherein they said were many dangerous opinions of Arminianism and Popery (yet upon examination thereof) some sharp and invective expressions were the greatest offences in it, but exceptions were taken at the exceptions of Jones, though the reason thereof appears not otherwise than what is alleadged in the Record by Dr. Rives (substitute at that time for the Vicar General) Quod nullo modo legitime comperuit, nec aliquid in hac parte juxta Juris exigentiam diceret, exciperet, vel apponeret, so that the Bishop was confirmed, and immediately after he sued out a Pardon under the great Seal of England for all Errors before committed, either in speaking, writing, or printing, whereof he might hereafter be Questioned.

Bishop Montague at his consecration excepted against.

In the same year one Richard Smith a Secular Popish Priest, titular Bishop of Chalcedon, in partibus Infidelium, acted, and exercised Episcopal Jurisdiction in Lancashire, with his Miter and Crosier, conferring Orders on divers Priests, and in granting and administring confirmation, which much disturbed the Peace of the Church of England, and made disorders amongst their own party; for Nicholas Smith a Jesuite wrote bitterly against him, urging that a Bishop over the English Catholikes was useless in times of persecution (as he called it) there being but two peculiar performances of a Bishop (viz.) ordination and confirmation; for the former it might be supplied by forein Bishops, since the English Papists were most bred abroad; and for the later he offered out of Thomas Aquinas and other Divines, that by Commission from the Pope a Priest, though no Bishop, might confirm; he added likewise, that a Bishop was burthensome to the English Church, considering that the present pressures of those of that Religion needed now no unnecessary expences.

The contest between the Jesuits and Secular Priests.

These and the like objections were answered by Doctor Kellison, Rector of the English Colledg at Doway, and many other Secular Priests, which occasioned great animosities betwixt the Regular and Seculars; but the King to shew his dislike of the Bishops presumptions, by his Proclamation, promised an hundred pounds to be paid to any that should apprehend him, besides all the profits that accrewed to the Crown, from the person who entertained him, which frighted him into France, as was mentioned before in the History.

In his sixth year Davenant Bishop of Salisbury was questioned for breach of the Kings Declaration, by falling on some points in his Sermon before the King touching the Arminian controversies which were forbidden therein; but by his modest and discreet answers, he was acquitted; though in the same year Thorn and Ford two Masters of Arts of Oxford were expelled the University for being judged offenders against the same Declaration.

Bishop Davenant questioned, and Thorn and Ford expelled the University for offending against the Kings declaration.

In his ninth year the Sabbatarian Controversie was revived by one Theophilus Bradbone a Minister of Suffolk, which first began in the year 1595. occasioned by a Book put forth that year by one Dr. Bound, for before that time (as in Geneva at this day) no civil recreations were denied to any of the people at such times as they were not exercised in their publique devotions at Church; in Bounds Book these following opinions were maintained.

The Controversie about the Sabbath revived.

The sum of Dr. Bounds Book concerning the Sabbath.

1. "That the Commandment of sanctifying "every seventh day, as in the Mosaical Deca- "logue is moral and perpetual.

2. "That whereas all other things in the Jew- "ish Church were taken away (Priesthood, Sa- "crifices, and Sacraments) this Sabbath was so "changed, that it still remaineth.

3. "That there is great reason why we Christians "should take our selves as streightly bound to rest "upon the Lords Day, as the Jews were upon "their Sabbath, it being one of the moral Com- "mandments, for before all were of equal Autho- "rity.

4. "The rest upon this Day must be a notable "and singular rest, a most careful, exact, and pre- "cise rest, after another manner than men are ac- "customed.

5. "Scholars on that Day are not to study the "Liberal Arts, nor Lawyers to consult the Case, "nor peruse mens Evidences.

6. "Sergeants, Apparitors, and Sumners to "be restrained from executing their Offices.

7. "Justices not to examine causes for the "conservation of the Peace.

8. "That ringing of more Bells than one that "day is not to be justified.

9. "No solemn Feasts, nor Wedding-dinners "to be made on that day (with permission not- "withstanding of the same to Lords, Knights, and "Gentlemen of Quality.)

10. "All honest recreations and pleasures "lawful on other days (as shooting, fencing, bow- "ling) on this day to be forborn.

11. "No man to speak or talk of pleasures, or "any other worldly matter.

The Doctrine was at first very well received because of the piety of such persons as maintained it in their publique Writings; but a while after ter it was opposed, as galling mens necks with a Jewish yoke against the liberty of Christians; and further, it was urged that Christ as Lord of the Sabbath had removed the rigour thereof, and allowed men lawful recreations.

That this Doctrine puts an unequal lustre on the Sonday, on set purpose to eclipse all other holy days, to the derogation of the Authority of the Church, and that this strict observance was set up out of faction to be a Character of difference to brand all for Libertines who did not entertain it; so that Archbishop Whitgift called in all such Books as were written on this Subject. But Bradbone who revived this matter at this time was questioned for it by the High Commission Court, whose well tempered severity so prevailed upon him, that submitting himself to a private conference, and perceiving the unsoundness of his own principles, he became a convert, conforming himself quietly to the Church of England ever after.

Bradbone retracts his opinion of the Sabbath,

Just in this conjuncture of time the King being troubled with Petitions on both sides by the strict and the more moderate observers of the Lords Day, thought good to follow his Fathers Royal example upon the like occasion in Lancashire, where in his Progress in the 14*th.* year of his Reign taking notice that some Preachers perswaded the people to so rigorous observation of the Sabbath, that it was unlawful therein to dress meat, sweep their Houses, kindle the fire, or the like, and that the Popish Priests took advantage thereby to pervert many to Popery, perswading them that the Protestant Religion was so rigorous, that no lawful liberty was allowed therein, the year after he set forth a Declaration to this effect, That for his good peoples lawful recreations, His pleasure was, that after the end of Divine Service, they should not be disturbed, letted or discouraged from any lawful actions, such as dancing either of men or women, or for men leaping, vaulting, or any such harmless Recreations; nor from having May-Games, Whitsun-ales, or Morrice-dances, and setting up of May-Poles, or other sports therewith used, so as the same be had in due and convenient time, without impediment, or let of Divine Service, and that women should have leave to carry rushes to the Church for decoring of it, according to their old custome: withal prohibiting all unlawful Games to be used on the Sundays only, as Bear-baiting, Bull-baiting, Interludes, and Bowling (at all times in the meaner sort of people prohibited.)

A Declaration for toleracting sports on the Lords-Day.

In his tenth year by the procurement of Laud Bishop of London, all such Impropriations in Ireland as were in the Crown, were by the King restored to the Church, and at a Convention in that Kingdom concurrent with a Parliament then in being, the 39 Articles of the Church of England were there received for all to subscribe unto.

Impropriations in Ireland restored to the Church, and the 39 Articles received.

In his 13*th.* year the same Bishop of London being some time before translated to the See of Canterbury, and himself a strict observer of the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, did in his Metropolitan Visitation more rigorously than before press conformity thereunto, which occasioned many differences in the Church about Divine Worship, (viz.) about the holiness of Churches, bowing at the Name of Jesus, and the manner of Adoration in Gods House, which last was by the Conformists practised to be towards the Communion Table, as the most remarkable place of God's presence, others would not admit of the name of Table, but have it Altar; and then a great controversie was raised about the placing of it, some would have it constantly fixed with the sides East and West, ends North and South, and a gradual advance next the East wall of the Chancell, citing a Canon, and the practice of the Kings Chappel for the same; whilst others pressed Queen Elizabeths Injunctions (allowing it at other times to stand in the Chancel) but to be set in the Body of the Church when the Sacrament is celebrated thereon: Many were the Books writ pro and con of these matters to the great rent and division of the Church, and such heat about this Altar, and other differences on both sides was kindled that had almost sacrificed their mutual charity thereon: amongst the writers in the controversie of this time, there were three that writ most bitterly against Bishops and the established Discipline of the Church, Mr. Henry Burton a Minister, Dr. John Bastwick a Doctor of Phisick, and Mr. William Prynne a Barrister of Lincolns-Inn, who were severely censured for their offences, as hath been before mentioned in the History of the Kings Reign.

Differences about Ceremonies.

In the same year or the year after, the Book of Service or new Lyturgy was sent into Scotland to be used in that Kingdom, the circumstances whereof, and the miseries thereby occasioned are likewise related in the foregoing History.

In his fourteenth year on the 13*th.* of April a Parliament assembled at Westminster, and with the Parliament a Convocation began, but the Parliament being after a moneth dissolved, the King nevertheless continued the Convocation under the Title of a Synod, which was authorized under the great Seal of England, the Acts of this Synod were scarce any time in use, so that we shall here only insert the Titles of the 17 Canons that passed therein:

The Acts of the Synod.

1. "Concerning the Regal Power.
2. "For better keeping of the day of his "Majesties most happy Inauguration.
3. "For suppressing of the growth of Pope-"ry.
4. "Against Socinianism.
5. "Against Sectaries.
6. "An Oath injoyned for the preventing of "all Innovations in Doctrine and Government.
7. "A Declaration concerning some Rites "and Ceremonies.
8. "Of Preaching for Conformity.
9. "One Book of Articles of inquiry to be "used at all Parochial Visitations.
10. "Concerning the conversation of the "Clergy.
11. "Chancellors Patents.
12. "Chancellors alone not to censure any of "the Clergy in sundry cases.
13. "Excommunication and Absolution not "to be pronounced but by a Priest.
14. "Concerning the Commutations and dis-"posing of them.
15. "Touching concurrent Jurisdictions.
16. "Concerning Licences to Marry.
17. "Against vexatious Citations.

As to the Oath concluded in the Synod, which was a subject of so much discourse at that time, and after in the succeeding Parliament that the Members of the Synod and the whole Episcopal Clergy suffered much thereby, it is here set forth at large according to the true tenor thereof.

The Oath concluded on by the Synod.

"I A. B. do swear, that I do approve the "Doctrine and Discipline or Government esta-"blished in the Church of England, as contain-"ing all things necessary to salvation: And that I "will not endeavour by my self, or any other, direct-"ly or in directly to bring in any Popish Doctrine "contrary to that which is so established; nor will "I ever give my consent to alter the Government "of this Church, by Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, "and Archdeacons, † &c. as it stands now esta-"blished, and as by right it ought to stand, nor "yet ever to subject it to the usurpations and su-"perstitions of the See of Rome. And all these "I do plainly, and sincerely acknowledge and "swear, according to the plain and common sense "and understanding of the same words, without "any equivocation or mental evasion, or secret "reservation whatsoever. And this I do heartily "willingly, and truly, upon the faith of a Chri-"stian. So help me God in Jesus Christ.

† The &c. much cavelled at.

As soon as these Canons were published, various were mens censures upon them, and many objections were raised against them, because they were generally condemned as illegally passed to the prejudice of the Fundamental Liberty of the Subject, though their sitting was justified by the opinions of the ablest of the Kings learned Councel in the Laws; but against the Oath many exceptions were made, some of which we shall insert.

For these and other reasons.

1. Because the (&c.) did leave the Oath so loose, that neither the makers nor the takers thereof understood the same.

Secondly, These words were disliked (viz.) (we will never give consent to alter this Church Government,) as if the same were intended to abridge the Liberty of King and State in future Parliaments and Convocations. Goodman, Bishop of Gloucester the day before the ending of the Synod repaired to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and acquainted him that he could not with his Conscience subscribe these new Canons, and thereupon he was by the King committed to the Gate-house, and it appeared afterward that he scrupled some passages about the Corporeal presence.

Bishop Goodman committed to the Gate-house.

In Scotland the distempers were so great about the Service Book sent thither, that the King raised an Army to reduce them to obedience: And from this beginning many and great calamities ensued in the Church and State in the few remaining years of this Kings Reign.

The Liturgy and shortly after Episcopacie it self were both abrogated by those that usurped the Government of the Kingdom, and (which is the more to be lamented) many Ministers of the Gospel in England, who were reputed learned and pious men, and had conformed to the established Doctrine and Discipline of the Church, to the scandal of Religion, joyned with those that opposed the Kings just Authority, and the Laws, and by their preachings and writings excited the people to an unlawful and unnatural War, on pretence of Reformation of Religion, forgetting, That not Guns and Swords, but Prayers and Tears ought to be the Arms of the Church; and then came in that flood of Errors that does yet too too much obscure the beauty thereof; for hitherto though some differences arose in Discipline, yet so far was there unity amongst us, that the Ministers in the common grounds of Religion and of the Ministry were all one, and all preached one Faith and substance of Doctrine; but we shall no further inlarge on these things which will make matter for an intire History of it self to describe.

Works of Piety done by this King and others in his Reign.

Pembroke Colledge in Oxford was erected and built in the place where formerly Broadgates-Hall stood, at the Charge of Thomas Tisdale of Glympton in the County of Oxford, who gave five thousand pound thereunto; and Richard Wightwick Rector of East Isle in Berkshire gave to it Lands of the yearly value of an hundred pounds, and hereupon King James in the later end of his Reign gave his licence for the building the Colledge, and granted to it a Charter of Mortmain of seven hundred pounds a year; but the Colledge was not built till the first year of this Kings Reign, and he gave to it the perpetual Patronage of the Church of St. Aldates near adjoyning. Sir Foulk Grevil, Lord Brook, founded a History Professorship in the University of Cambridge, and gave an hundred pound a year thereunto for ever; and Sir Thomas Adams a competently learned and worthy Citizen, and sometime Lord Major of London, erected and endowed an Arabick Professorship in the same University.

Pembroke Colledge in Oxford built and endowed.

An Arabick Professorship erected and endowed there.

Anthony Blencow sometime Provost of Oriall-Colledge in Oxford, gave twelve hundred pounds towards the re-edifying of the Front of that Colledge, and by his example some other Benefactors did so largely contribute, as to new build the whole Colledge, which from a very old and decayed Building, is now as handsome a uniform pile as any in that, or any other University in Europe.

Oriel Colledg in Oxford new built.

The Queen Henrietta Maria wife to this King of her great goodness and love to Learning, procured of the King her Husband the perpetual Patronage of several good Parsonages in Hantshire to be granted to Queens Colledge in Oxford; and the King out of his care to have the Inhabitants of Jersey and Guernsey well educated, gave some Fellowships in Jesus Colledge and Pembroke Colledge in Oxford, to the Natives of those Islands.

The King and Queen great Benefactors to Jesus and Queens Colledge in Oxford.

Sir William Paddy Knight, Doctor in Phisick gave two perpetual Parsonages to St. Johns Colledge in Oxford, and beautified the Chappel thereof, and endowed some singing men and Choristers to make a Quire therein; and William Land Archbishop of Canterbury built a new Court in the same Colledge, a very elegant Fabrick, and was otherwise a good Benefactor thereunto, he also enlarged the publique University Library, and purchased to it at a great price many Ma-manuſcripts of the Eaſtern Languages; and by that Example, Sir Kenelme Digby a Valiant and Learned Knight, gave a numerous Collection of Choice and Excellent Books to it.

Clare-Hall in Camb. new built.

The antient Hall of Clare-Hall in Cambridge, and many lodgings there were built at the charge of Barnaby Oky, Proctor of the Univerſity, and Fellow thereof, and ſome other Benefactors (procured chiefly by his Sollicitation,) which is for ſo much of it, as handſome a building as any in England.

St. Pauls repaired.

The King was very ſollicitous to repair the antient Cathedral Church of St. Paul in London, which was much decayed with age, and adviſed with Arch-Biſhop Land, and ſome others of his Councel, how to effect ſo pious and ſo noble a purpoſe, which was after ſome time reſolv'd on, and he himſelf at his own charge repaired ſome part thereof, and by his inducement, Sir Paul Pindar, a wealthy and worthy Citizen, and many others, contributed lagely thereunto, ſo that the work went on very faſt, and had not the Civil Wars made an interruption to it; in few years St. Pauls Church would have been made the moſt magnificent Structure of Europe.

Mr. John Eggor erected and endowed a Free-School in the Pariſh of Alton in Hantſhire, which was confirmed by Act of Parliament.

A new Church built at Plymouth. The like at Edenburgh.

The King alſo, by his Letters Patents, gave power to the Town of Plymouth to erect a new Church there. The Citizens of Edenburgh in Scotland alſo built a new Church in that City called the Fronekirk, and covered it with plates of Copper; and one Heriat a Citizen of that City founded an Hoſpital there, which is one of the moſt beautiful buildings of that Kingdom. There were many Free-Schools beſides thoſe here mentioned, and many Alms-houſes erected in ſeveral parts of England, and ſome Hoſpitals; but we have not now ſo particular information thereof, as to make mention of them in this place, but by what has been here expreſſed, we may ſee the pious and charitable effects of the juſt ſecurity & peace of the firſt fifteen years of the Kings Government, which is all the time he reigned freely, and without oppoſition.

Of Caſualties hapning in his Time.

The Plague breaks out in London.

IN his firſt year, the Plague broke out in London more dangerouſly than in the beginning of his Fathers Reign, inſomuch that the King was fain to adjourn the Parliament, becauſe of the thin appearance of the Members by reaſon of the Contagion.

Earthquakes

In his ſecond year, was great Earthquakes in many parts of the Kingdom.

A Star appears at Noon a little after Prince Charles his Birth.

In his ſeventh year, May the 29 th. a ſtar appeared viſible at Noon, the Sun ſhining clear at what time the King rode to St. Pauls Church to give thanks for the Queens ſafe delivery of her ſecond Son Prince Charles.

The great Fire at London-Bridge.

In his eighth year, a fire brake out on London-Bridge, by which moſt of the houſes which were built upon it (which when they were all ſtanding, made up a very beautiful ſtreet) were burnt down to the ground.

In his ſixteenth year, the Earl of Haddington in Scotland, having recovered ſome pieces of Ordnance which the Garriſon of Bernick had ſeized at Dunce, return'd back to Douglaſs, where ſitting merry at Dinner, with about twenty Knights and Gentlemen, on a ſudden the Magazine of Powder that lay in a vaulted Room, took fire by accident, whereby the Earl and his company were blown up.

A ſad Accident at Douglaſs in Scotland.

A Pond in Cambridge blood-red.

The ſame ſame year likewiſe, a Pond in Cambridge became red as blood, the water whereof being taken up in Baſons, retained ſtill the ſame colour. Many ſights alſo were ſeen in the Air, as Armies fighting one againſt the other, which were looked upon as the ſad preſages of the enſuing Wars: Neither is that ſtrange Thunder and Lightning unworthy of mention which hapned at Withecombe in the County of Devon in the fourteenth year of his Reign, where a Ball of fire was ſeen to come into the Church in the time of Divine Service, whereby three perſons were killed, and threeſcore and two hurt, divers of whom had the linings of their clothes burnt, though their outward Garments were not ſo much as ſinged, and moſt of the ſeats were turned up-ſide down, and the Pillars, Steeple, and Church, more endamaged than the expence of three hundred pounds could repair.

Strange Thunder at Withecomb

Of His Wife and Children.

HE married Mary the Daughter of Henry the fourth King of France, whoſe Marriage was ſolemnized in the year, 1625. being the firſt year of his Reign; He had Iſſue by her, four Sons, and as many Daughters; the eldeſt Son born before the time, was baptized Charles, and lived not above two hours: His ſecond Son born May the twenty ninth, 1630. was alſo named Charles, and afterwards created Prince of Wales. And in the year, 1660. Reſtor'd (after many years ſeclufion in forein Countries) with the univerſal Congratulation of his Subjects to his Fathers Throne, happily bleſt with the Regal Vertues of ſo Illuſtrious a Monarch: His third Son was born October the 13 th. 1633. and was baptized James, and created Duke of York, a Prince of Invincible Courage, and Heroick Valour, as his Actions in France and Flanders, yet freſh in memory, have given ſufficient Teſtimony: His fourth and laſt Son was born the twentyth of July, 1640. and Chriſtened Henry, afterwards created Duke of Glouceſter; He ſince his Brothers happy Reſtauration, deceaſed on the 13 th. of September, 1660. thereby bereaving the World of thoſe fair hopes which had been generally conceived of his Noble and Princely Endowments. His Eldeſt Daughter Mary, was born November the 4 th. 1631. and afterwards married to William of Naſſaw, Prince of Orange, by whom he had one Son named William, Heir and Succeſſor to his Father in his Dignities; ſhe quickly followed her Brother the Duke of Glouceſter, viz. the 24 th. of December, 1660. her loſs being very much bewailed, eſpecially by any who had Relation to her ſervice, as being a Princeſſe of univerſal goodneſs, Charity and Bounty. His ſecond Daughter Elizabeth, was born the 28 th. of December, 1635. She dyed at Carisbrook in the Iſle of Wight, September the 8 th. 1650. for meer Grief (as it is not without reaſon believ'd) of her Fa-

1648. thers unfortunate Death: And his third Daughter Anne, was born the seventeenth of March, 1636. who also dyed very young: His fourth and last Daughter, was born June the 16*th*. 1644. at Exeter, from whence she was brought up to St. James's, but afterwards conveyed into France by her Governesse the Lady Dalkeith; She was married to the Duke of Anjou, Brother to Lewis the fourteenth, the present King of France; a Princess she is of incomparable Beauty, and Gallantry of Spirit.

Of his Death and Burial.

HIs death was strange and unparallell'd, we read of many Kings who came to violent ends, but never any that was so formally and solemnly murdered, by a publick Tryal and Execution, which was done in the manner following.

The Trial of his Majesty. Bradshaw President of the High Court of Justice.

On Saturday, January the 20*th*. 1648. The wicked High Court of Justice sate in Westminster Hall, whereof John Bradshaw of Grayes-Inne was President, he had a Mace and Sword carried before him, and twenty habited like Gentlemen for his Guard, under the Command of one Colonel Fox (formerly a Brasier or Tinker) when the pretended Court was sate, and O yes made, and silence commanded; The Act of the Commons for erecting the said Court was read, in these words.

The Commons Act for erecting the High Court of Justice for Tryal of the King.

"Whereas it is notorious, That Charles Stewart the now King of England, not content with "the many incroachments which his Predecessors "had made upon the People in their Rights and "Freedom, hath had a wicked design to subvert "the ancient and fundamental Laws and Liberties of this Nation, and in their place to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government, "and that besides all evil ways to bring his design "to pass, he hath prosecuted it with fire and "Sword, and levied and maintained a Civil War "in the Land against the Parliament and Kingdom, whereby this Countrey hath been miserably wasted, the publike Treasure exhausted, "Trade decayed, thousands of people murdered, "and infinite of other mischiefs committed, for "all which high offences the said Charles Stewart "might long since have been brought to exemplary & condign punishment: Whereas also the "Parliament well hoping that the restraint and "imprisonment of his person, after it had pleased "God to deliver him into their hands, would "have quieted the distempers of the Kingdom, "did forbear to proceed judicially against him, "but found by sad experience that such remissness served only to encourage him and his complices in the continuance of their evil practises, "and raising new commotions, Rebellions, and "Invasions: for prevention of the like and "greater inconveniences, and to the end no chief "Officer or Magistrate may hereafter presume "Traiterously and malitiously to imagine or contrive the enslaving or destroying of the English "Nation, and to expect impunity; Be it enacted and ordained by the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, That † J. B. O. C. M. G. I. M. G. I. &c.

† Here the Commissioners names were inserted.

"shall be, and are hereby appointed Commissioners and Judges, for the Hearing, Trying, and "Judging of the said Charles Stuart, and the "said Commissioners, or any twenty or more of "them shall be, and are hereby Authorized and "constituted an High Court of Justice, to meet "at such convenient times and places as by "the said Commissioners, or the major part, or "twenty or more of them under their hands and "Seals shall be appointed and notified by publike "Proclamation in the great Hall, or Palace-Yard "of Westminster, and adjourn from time to time, "and from place to place, as the said High "Court, or the major part thereof, meeting shall "hold fit, and to take order for the charging of "him the said Charles Stuart with the Crimes a"bove-mentioned, and for the receiving his per"sonal Answer thereunto, and for examination of "Witnesses upon Oath (if need be) concern"ing the same; and thereupon, or default of such "Answer to proceed to final Sentence, accord"ing to Justice, and the merit of the Cause, to "be executed speedily and impartially. And the "said Court is hereby Authorized and required "to chuse and appoint all such Officers, Atten"dants, and other circumstances, as they, or the "major part of them shall in any sort judge ne"cessary or useful for the orderly and good ma"naging of the premisses, and Thomas Lord Fair"fax the General, with all Officers of Justice, "and other well-affected persons are hereby Au"thorized and required to be aiding and assisting "unto the said Commissioners in the due execu"tion of the Trust hereby committed unto them, "provided that this Act, and the Authority here"by granted, do continue for the space of one "moneth from the date of the making hereof, "and no longer.

After the reading of the Act, the Court was called, and the Commissioners, whose names are here inserted, appeared and answered to their names; there were many more nominated in the Act, but because they acted not in this infamous Court, we shall forbear to record their names to posterity.

Mr. King, Cryer of the Court.

The Court being thus ſate and called over, the the King was brought to the Bar by Colonel Hacker with Halberdeers, the Mace of the Court conducting him to his Chair within the Bar where he ſat, and then the Preſident Bradſhaw ſaid to the King,

Charles Stuart King of England, The Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament being ſenſible of the great Calamities brought upon this Nation, and of the innocent blood ſhed (which are referred to You as the Author of it) according to that Duty which they owe to God, the Nation, and Themſelves, and according to that Power and fundamental truſt repoſed in them by the People, have conſtituted this High Court of Juſtice, before which you are now brought, and you are to hear your Charge, upon which the Court will proceed.

Solicitor Cook. My Lord, in behalfe of the Commons of England, and of all the people thereof, I do accuſe Charles Stuart here preſent of High Treaſon, and Miſdemeanors, and I do in the name of the Commons of England deſire the Charge may be read unto him.

The King. Hold a little.

Preſident. Sir the Court commands the Charge to be read, afterward you may be heard.

The Charge was read as followeth.

The Charge read.

That the ſaid Charles Stuart, being admitted King of England, and therein truſted with a limitted Power to govern by, and according to the Laws of the Land, and not otherwiſe, and by his Truſt, Oath, and office, being obliged to uſe the power committed to him, for the good and benefit of the people, and for the preſervation of their Rights and Liberties, yet nevertheleſs out of a wicked deſign to erect and uphold in himſelfe an unlimitted and tyrannical power, to rule according to his will, and to overthrow the Rights and Liberties of the people; and to take away, and make void the foundations thereof, and of all redreſs and remedy of miſ-government, which by the Fundamental Conſtitutions of this Kingdom were reſerved on the peoples behalf, in the right and power of frequent and ſucceſſive Parliaments or National-Meetings in Councel, He, the ſaid Charles Stuart, for accompliſhment of ſuch his deſigns, and for the protecting of himſelfe and his adherents, in his and their wicked practices, to the ſame end hath Traiterouſly and malitiouſly levied War againſt the preſent Parliament, and the people therein Repreſented.

Particularly, upon or about the thirtieth day of June, in the year of our Lord, one thouſand ſix hundred forty and two, at Beverly in the County of York; and upon, or about the thirtieth day of July, in the year aforeſaid, in the County of the City of 1648. of York; and upon, or about the twenty fourth day of Auguſt in the ſame year, at the County of the Town of Nottingham, (when, and where he ſet up his Standard of War;) and alſo on, or about the twenty third day of October, in the ſame year, at Edgehill, and Keinton-field, in the County of Warwick; and upon, or about the thirtieth day of November in the ſame year, at Brainford in the County of Middleſex; and upon, or about the thirtieth day of Auguſt, in the year of our Lord One thouſand ſix hundred forty and three, at Caveſham-Bridge near Redding in the County of Berks; and upon, or about the thirtieth day of October in the year laſt mentioned, at, or near the City of Glouceſter: and upon, or about the thirtieth day of November, in the year laſt mentioned at Newberry in the County of Berks; and upon, or about the one and thirtieth day of July, in the year of our Lord One thouſand ſix hundred forty and four, at Cropredy-Bridge, in the County of Oxon: and upon, or about the thirtieth day of September, in the year laſt mentioned, at Bodmin, and other places near adjacent, in the County of Cornwall; and upon, or about the thirtieth day of November, in the year laſt mentioned, at Newberry aforeſaid; and upon, or about the eighth day of June, in the year of our Lord One thouſand ſix hundred forty and five, at the Town of Leiceſter; and alſo upon the fourteenth day of the ſame moneth, at Naſeby-field in the County of Northampton. At which ſeveral times and places, or moſt of them; and at many other places in this Land, at ſeveral other times within the years afore mentioned: And in the year of our Lord One thouſand ſix hundred forty and ſix, He, the ſaid Charles Stuart, hath cauſed and procured many thouſands of the Free-people of the Nation to be ſlain, and by Diviſions, Parties, and Inſurrections within this Land by Invaſions from Forein parts, endeavoured and procured by him, and by many other evil ways, and means; He, the ſaid Charles Stuart, hath not only maintained and carried on the ſaid War both by Land and Sea, during the years before mentioned, but alſo hath renewed, or cauſed to be renewed, the ſaid Warre againſt the Parliament, and good people of this Nation, in this preſent year, One thouſand ſix hundred forty and eight, in the Counties of Kent, Eſſex, Surrey, Suſſex, Middleſex, and many other Counties and places in England and Wales, and alſo by Sea; and particularly, He, the ſaid Charls Stuart, hath for that purpoſe given Commiſſions to his Son the Prince, and others, whereby beſides multitudes of other perſons, many ſuch, as were by the Parliament intruſted and imployed for the ſafety of the Nation, being by him or his Agents corrupted, to the betraying of their truſt, and revolting from the Parliament, have had entertainment and Commiſſion, for the continuing and renewing of War and Hoſtility, againſt the ſaid Parliament and people, as aforeſaid. By which cruel and unnatural Wars, by Him, the ſaid Charles Stuart, levied, continued, and renewed, as aforeſaid, much Innocent Blood of the Free-people of this Nation hath been ſpilt, many Families have been undone, the publick Treaſury waſted and exhauſted, Trade obſtructed and miſerably decayed, vaſt expence and damage to the Nation incurred, and many parts of the land ſpoiled, ſome of them even to deſolation.

And for further proſecution of his ſaid evil deſigns, He, the ſaid Charles Stuart, doth ſtill continue his Commiſſions to the ſaid Prince and other Rebels and Revolters, both Engliſh and Foreigners, and to the Earl of Ormand, and to the Iriſh Rebels and Revolters, aſſociated with him, from whom further Invaſions upon this Land are threatned, upon the procurement and on the behalf of the ſaid Charles Stuart.

All which wicked deſigns of War, and evil practices of him the ſaid Charles Stuart have been, and are carried on, for the advancing and upholding of the perſonal Intereſt of will and power, and pretended Prerogative to himſelf, and his Family, againſt the publick Intereſt, common Right, Liberty, Juſtice, and peace of the people of this Nation, by, and for whom He was intruſted, as aforeſaid.

By all which it appeareth, That He, the ſaid Charles Stuart hath been, and is the Occaſioner, Author, and Contriver of the ſaid unnatural, cruel, and bloody Wars, and therein guilty of all the Treaſons, Murthers, Rapines, Burnings, Spoils, Deſolations, Damage and Miſchief to this Nation, acted or committed in the ſaid Wars, or occaſioned thereby. And the ſaid John Cooke, by proteſtation (ſaving to himſelf on the behalf of the people of England, the liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any other Charge againſt the ſaid Charles Stuart, and alſo of replying to the Anſwers which the ſaid Charles Stuart ſhall make to the premiſſes, or any of them, or any other charge that ſhall be ſo exhibited) doth for the ſaid Treaſons and Crimes, on the behalf of the ſaid people of England, Impeach the ſaid Charles Stuart; as a Tyrant, Traytor, Murtherer, and a publick and implacable Enemy to the Common-wealth of England: and pray, That the ſaid Charles Stuart, King of England, may be put to Anſwer all and every the premiſſes, that ſuch proceedings, Examinations, Tryals, Sentence, and Judgement may be thereupon had, as ſhall be agreeable to Juſtice.

The King ſmiled often during the reading of the Charge, eſpecially at theſe words: Tyrant, Traytor, Murderer, and publick Enemy of the Common-wealth.

Preſident. Sir, You have now heard your Charge, You find that in the cloſe of it, it is prayed to the Court in behalf of the Commons of England, that you anſwer to your Charge, which the Court expects.

King. I would know by what power I am called hither; I was not long ago in the Iſle of Wight, how I came there, is a longer ſtory than I think fit at this time for me to ſpeak: But there I entred into a Treaty with both Houſes of Parliament, with as much faith as is poſſible to be had of any people in the World: I treated there with a number of Honourable Lords and Gentlemen, and Treated honeſtly and uprightly; I cannot ſay, but that they did very nobly with Me, We were upon a concluſion of the Treaty: Now I would know by what lawful Authority (there are many unlawful Authorities, Thieves and Robbers on the Highway) I was brought from thence, and carried from place to place, (and I know not what) and when I know by what lawful Authority, I ſhall anſwer.

Remember

1648. Remember I am your King, your lawful King, and what ſins you bring upon your own heads, and the Judgement of God upon this Land, think well upon it, think well upon it I ſay, before you go on from one ſin to a greater, therefore let me know by what lawful Authority I am ſeated here, and I ſhall not be unwilling to Anſwer. In the mean time, I ſhall not betray my Truſt: I have a truſt committed to me by God, by old and lawful deſcent; I will not betray it to Anſwer to a new unlawful Authority.

Bradſhaw Preſ. If you had been pleaſed to have obſerved what was hinted to you by the Court at your firſt coming hither, you would have known by what Authority: which Authority requires you in the name of the people of England, of whom you are Elected King, to anſwer them.

King. I deny that.

Bradſhaw. If you acknowledge not the Authority of the Court, they muſt proceed.

King. I do tell them ſo, England was never an Elective Kingdom, but an Hereditary Kingdom for neer theſe thouſand years: Therefore let me know, by what lawfull Authority I am called hither, I do ſtand more for the Liberty of my People than any here that come to be my pretended Judges; and therefore let me know by what lawful Authority, and I will anſwer, otherwiſe I will not Anſwer.

Bradſhaw. Sir, How really you have managed your truſt, is known; your way of anſwer is to interrogate the Court, which beſeems not you in this Condition, you have been told of it twice or thrice.

King. Here is Lieutenant Colonel Cobbet, ask him, if he did not bring me from the Iſle of Wight by force: I do not come here as ſubmitting to the Court; I will ſtand as much for the priviledge of the Houſe of Commons rightly underſtood, as any man here whatſoever; I ſee no Houſe of Lords here that may conſtitute a Parliament, and (the King too) ſhould have been. Is this the bringing the King to his Parliament? Is this the bringing an end to the Treaty on the publick Faith? Let me ſee a lawful Authority warranted by the Word of God, the Scriptures, or by the conſtitutions of the Kingdom. I will not betray my Truſt, nor the Liberties of the People; I am ſworn to keep the Peace by that duty I owe to God and my Countrey, and I will do it to the laſt breath in my Body. As it is a ſin to withſtand lawful Authority, ſo it is to ſubmit to a Tyrannical, or any otherwiſe unlawful Authority.

Bradſhaw. The Court expects your final Anſwer, and will adjourn till Monday next: We are ſatisfied with our Authority that are your Judges, and it is upon Gods Authority and the Kingdoms; and that peace you ſpeak of, will be kept in doing Juſtice, and that's our preſent work. So the Court adjourned, and the King was conducted back; They had ſo contrived it, that divers ſchiſmatical Souldiers and fellows were placed round about the Court, to cry Juſtice, Juſtice, when the King was remanded, thinking all the reſt of people would have bleated to the ſame tune, but they (almoſt all) cryed God bleſs him, and were (ſome of them) well cudgelled by the Souldiers for not reviling and exclaiming after the mode of the Army; yet the Court took no notice hereof: ſo far was his Majeſty already fore-judged and condemned to ſufferings. 1648.

Monday, January the 22 th. The King was brought again to his Tryal:

The ſecond daies Tryal of his Majeſty.

Sollicitor Cook. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I did at the laſt Court, in behalf of the Commons of England, exhibite, and give into this Court a Charge of High Treaſon, and other high Crimes againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, whereof I do accuſe him in the name of the people of England, and the Charge was read unto him, and his Anſwer required: My Lord, He was not then pleaſed to give an Anſwer, but inſtead of Anſwering, did diſpute the Authority of this High Court: My humble motion to this High Court in behalf of the Kingdom of England is, That the Priſoner may be directed to make a poſitive Anſwer, either by way of Confeſſion, or Negation, which, if he ſhall refuſe to do, That the matter of Charge may be taken pro confeſſo, and the Court may proceed according to Juſtice.

Bradſhaw. Sir, You may remember, at the laſt Court you were told the occaſion of your being brought hither, and you heard a Charge read againſt you, &c. You heard likewiſe what was prayed in behalf of the people, That you ſhould give an Anſwer to that Charge: You were then pleaſed to make ſome ſcruples concerning the Authority of this Court, and ſaid, you knew not by what Authority you were brought hither; you did divers times propound your Queſtions, and were as often Anſwered, That it was by Authority of the Commons of England Aſſembled in Parliament, that did think fit to call you to account for thoſe High and Capital Miſdemeanors, wherewith you were then Charged. Since that the Court hath taken into conſideration what you then ſaid, they are fully ſatisfied with their own Authority, and they hold it fit you ſhould ſtand ſatisfied therewith too; And they do require that you do give a poſitive and particular Anſwer to this Charge exhibited againſt you: they expect you ſhould either confeſs or deny; if you do deny, it is offered in the behalf of the Kingdom to be made good againſt you; Their Authority they do avow to the whole World, and the whole Kingdom are to reſt ſatisfied therein, and you are to reſt ſatisfied in it; and therefore you are to give a poſitive Anſwer.

King. "When I was here laſt, it's true, I made "that Queſtion, and truly, if it were only my "own particular caſe, I would have ſatisfied "my ſelf with the Proteſtation I made here the "laſt time, againſt the Legality of this Court, and "that a King cannot be tryed by any Superior Ju-"riſdiction upon earth: but it is not my caſe a-"lone, it is the freedome and the liberties of the "people of England, and (do you pretend what "you will) I ſtand more for their Liberties than "you; for if power without Law may make Laws, "and may alter the fundamental Laws of the "Kingdome, I do not know what ſubject he is in "England that can be ſure of his life, or any thing "that he calls his own; Therefore, when I came "hither, I did expect particular Reaſons to know "by what Law, what Authority, you proceed a-"gainſt me here, and therefore I am a little to ſeek

1648. "ſeek what to ſay to you in this particular, be-
"cauſe the Affirmative is to be proved, the Ne"gative (often) is very hard to do; I ſhall tell
"you my Reaſons as ſhort as I can: All proceed"ings againſt any man whatſoever. ——

Here the King was by Bradſhaw interrupted.

Bradſhaw. Sir, I muſt interrupt you, what you do, is not agreeable to the proceedings of any Court of Juſtice: You are about to enter into argument and diſpute concerning the Authority of this Court before whom you appear as a Priſoner, and are charged as a High Delinquent; you may not diſpute the Authority of this Court, nor will any Court give way unto it, you are to ſubmit to it, &c.

King. Under favor, I do plead for the liberty of the people of England more than you do; and therefore if I ſhould impoſe a belief upon any man without Reaſons given, it were unreaſonable.

Bradſhaw. Sir, I muſt interrupt you: you may not be permitted, you ſpeak of Law and Reaſon, and there is both againſt you: Sir, the Vote of the Commons of England Aſſembled in Parliament, is the reaſon of the Kingdom, and they are thoſe that have given you that Law, according to which you ſhould have Ruled and Reigned: Sir, it will be taken notice of, that you ſtand in contempt of the Court, and your contempt will be recorded accordingly.

King. I do not know how a King can be a Delinquent, but by all Laws that ever I heard, all men may put in Demurrers againſt any Proceedings, as illegal: and I do demand that, if you deny that, you deny Reaſon.

Bradſhaw. Sir, Neither you, nor any man are permitted to diſpute that point, you are concluded; You may not demur to the Juriſdiction of the Court, if you do, I muſt let you know, that they over-rule your Demurrer, they ſit here by the Authority of the Commons of England, and all your Predeceſſors and You, are reſponſible to them.

King. I deny that, ſhew me one Preſident.

Bradſhaw. Sir, You are not to interrupt while the Court is ſpeaking to you, this point is not to be debated by you; if you offer it by way of Demurrer to the Juriſdiction of the Court, they have conſidered of their Juriſdiction, they do affirm their own Juriſdiction.

King. I ſay Sir, by your favour, That the Commons of England were never a Court of Judicature, I would know how they came to be ſo.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you are not to be permitted to go on in that ſpeech, and theſe diſcourſes.

Then the Clerk of the Court read as followeth.

Charles Stuart, King of England, you have been accuſed in the behalf of the people of England of High Treaſon, and other high Crimes, the Court hath determined that you ought to anſwer the ſame.

King. I will anſwer the ſame ſo ſoon as I know by what Authority you do this.

Bradſhaw. If this be all you will ſay, then Gentlemen, you that brought the Priſoner hither, take charge of him back again.

King. I do require that I may give my Reaſons why I did not anſwer, and give me time for that. 1648.

Bradſhaw. Sir, It is not for Priſoners to require.

King. Priſoners: Sir, I am not an ordinary priſoner.

Bradſhaw. The Court have affirmed their Juriſdiction, if you will not anſwer, we ſhall give Order to record your fault.

King. You never heard my Reaſons yet.

Bradſhaw, Sir, your Reaſons are not to be heard againſt the higheſt Juriſdiction.

King. Shew me that Juriſdiction where Reaſon is not to be heard.

Bradſhaw. Sir, we ſhew you it here, the Commons of England, and the next time you are brought, you will know more of the pleaſures of the Court, and it may be their final determination.

King. Shew me where ever the Houſe of Commons was a Court of Judicature of that kind.

Bradſhaw. Serjeant, take away the Priſoner.

King. Well Sir, Remember that the King is not ſuffered to give in his Reaſons for the liberty and freedom of all his Subjects.

Bradſhaw. Sir, You are not to have liberty to uſe this Language, how great a friend you have been to the Laws and Liberties of the people, let all England, and the world judge.

King. Sir, Under favour, it was the Liberty, Freedom, and Laws of the Subject that ever I took, I defended my ſelf with Arms, I never took up Arms againſt the people, but for the Laws.

Bradſhaw. The command of the Court muſt be obeyed, no Anſwer will be given to the Charge, ſo the King was guarded forth to Sir Robert Cottons, and the Court adjourned to the Painted-Chamber, Tueſday twelve a Clock.

Tueſday, January 23 th. The Court ſat again, ſeventy three Commiſſioners of thoſe before named were preſent. The third daies Tryal of his Majeſty.

The King brought into the Court, ſits down.

Solicitor Cook. "May it pleaſe your Lordſhip,
"my Lord Preſident, This is now the third time
"that by the great grace and favour of the Court,
"the Priſoner hath been brought to the Barr, be"fore any Iſſue joyned in this cauſe. My Lord, I "did at the firſt Court exhibite a charge againſt
"him, containing the higheſt Treaſon that ever
"was wrought on the Theater of England, That
"the King of England truſted to keep the Law,
"that had taken an Oath ſo to do, that had Tri"bute paid him for that end, ſhould be guilty of "a wicked deſign to ſubvert and deſtroy our Laws,
"and introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Go"vernment, and in defiance of the Parliament
"and their Authority, ſet up his Standard for "War againſt the Parliament and People: And "I did humbly pray in behalf of the people of "England, That he may ſpeedily be required to "make an Anſwer to the charge; But, my Lord,
"inſtead of making any anſwer, he did then diſ-
"pute the Authority of this High Court, your
"Lordſhip was pleaſed to give him a further day
"to put in his Anſwer, which day being yeſter-
"day, I did humbly move, That he might be re"quired to give a direct and poſitive Anſwer either

1648. "ther by denying, or confeſſing of it; But, my "Lord, he was pleaſed to demur to the Juriſdi-"ction of the Court, which the Court did then "over-rule, and command him to give a direct "and poſitive Anſwer: My Lord, beſides this "great delay of Juſtice, I ſhall now humbly "move your Lordſhip for ſpeedy Judgment a-"gainſt him: I might preſs your Lordſhip upon "the whole, That according to the known rules "of the Laws of the Land, if a Priſoner ſhall "ſtand contumacious in contempt, and ſhall not "put in an iſſuable Plea, guilty or not guilty of "the charge given againſt him, whereby he may "come to a fair Tryal, that by an implicit con-"feſſion it may be taken pro confeſſo, as it hath "been done to thoſe who have deſerved more fa-"vour than the Priſoner at the Barr hath done. "But beſides, my Lord, I ſhall humbly preſs your "Lordſhip upon the whole fact, That the Houſe "of Commons, the Supreme Authority and Ju-"riſdiction of the Kingdom, they have declared, "That it is notorious, that the matter of the "charge is true, as it is in truth, my Lord, as "clear as chryſtal, and as the Sun that ſhines at "Noon-day, which if your Lordſhip and the "Court be not ſatisfied in, I have notwithſtand-"ing in the peoples behalf, ſeveral Witneſſes to "produce, and therefore I do humbly pray, "(and yet I confeſs, it is not ſo much I, as "the innocent Blood as hath been ſhed: (the "cry whereof is very great) for Juſtice and "Judgment) and therefore I do humbly pray, "that ſpeedy Judgment be pronounced againſt "the Priſoner at the Barr.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you have heard what is moved by the Council on behalf of the Kingdom againſt you, you were told over and over again, That it was not for you, or any other man to diſpute the Juriſdiction of the Supreme and Higheſt Authority of England, from which there is no Appeal, and touching which there muſt be no diſpute: yet you did perſiſt in ſuch carriage, as ſhews you have no manner of obedience, nor did you acknowledg any Authority in them, nor the high Court that conſtituted this High Court of Juſtice: Sir, I muſt let you know from the Court, that they are very ſenſible of theſe delays of yours, and that they ought not (being thus Authorized by the Supreme Court of England) to be thus trifled withal, and that they might in Juſtice, and according to the Rules of juſtice, take advantage by theſe delays, and proceed to pronounce Judgment againſt you, yet nevertheleſs they are pleaſed to give direction, and on their behalf, I do require you, that you make a poſitive Anſwer unto this charge that is againſt you, in plain terms, (for Juſtice knows no reſpect of perſons) you are to give your poſitive and final Anſwer in plain Engliſh, whether you be guilty or not guilty of theſe Treaſons laid to your charge.

King. When I was here yeſterday, I did deſire to ſpeak for the Liberties of the people of England, I was interrupted, I deſire to know yet, whether I may ſpeak freely or not.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you have had the reſolution of the Court upon the like Queſtion the laſt day, and you were told, that having ſuch a charge of ſo high a nature againſt you, your work was, that you ought to acknowledge the Juriſdiction of the Court, and to anſwer to your charge, when you have once anſwered, you ſhall be heard at large, make the beſt defence you can: But Sir, I muſt let you know from the Court (as their commands) That you are not to be permitted to iſſue out into any other diſcourſes, till ſuch time as you have given a poſitive anſwer concerning the matter charged upon you.

King. For the Charge I value it not a ruſh; it is the Liberty of the people of England that I ſtand for, for me to acknowledge a new Court that I never heard of before, I that am your KING, that ſhould be an example to all the people of England, to uphold Juſtice, to maintain the old Laws, indeed, I do not know how to do it: you ſpoke well the firſt day that I came here, (on Saturday) of the Obligations that I had laid upon me by God, to the maintenance of the Liberties of my people, the ſame Obligation you ſpake of, I do acknowledge to God, that I owe to him and to my people, to defend as much as in me lies, the antient Laws of the Kingdom, therefore until that I may know that this is not againſt the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, I can put in no particular Anſwer, if you will give me time, I will ſhew you my Reaſons, and this ——

Here the King was interrupted.

Here being interrupted, The King ſaid again, By your favour, you ought not to interrupt me; How I came here, I know not, there's no Law for it to make your King your Priſoner; I was in a Treaty upon the publike Faith of the Kingdom, made to me by the two Houſes of Parliament, that was the Repreſentative of the Kingdom, and I had almoſt made an end of the Treaty when I was hurried away, and brought hither, and therefore ——

And here again.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you muſt know the pleaſure of the Court.

King. By your favour, Sir.

Bradſhaw. Nay Sir, by your favour, you may not be permitted to fall into thoſe Diſcourſes; You appear as a Delinquent, You have not acknowledged the Authority of the Court, the Court craves it not of you, but once more they command you to give your poſitive Anſwer. Clerk, do your Duty.

King. Duty Sir!

The Clerk then reads.

"Charles Stuart, King of England, you are "accuſed in behalf of the Commons of England, "of divers high crimes and Treaſons, which "charge hath been read unto you; The Court "now requires you to give your poſitive and fi-"nal Anſwer, by way of confeſſion or denial of "the charge.

King. Sir, I ſay again to you, ſo that I may give ſatisfaction to the people of England of the clearneſs of my proceedings, not by way of anſwer, not in this way, but to ſatisfie them that I have done nothing againſt that Truſt that hath been committed to me, I would do it, but to acknowledge a new Court againſt their Priviledges, to alter the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, Sir, you muſt excuſe me.

Bradſhaw. Sir, This is the third time that you have publikely diſavowed this Court, and put an affront upon it, how far you have preſerved the Priviledges of the people, your actions have ſpoken; but truly Sir, mens intentions ought to be 1648. known by their actions, you have written your meaning in Bloody characters throughout the whole Kingdom: But Sir, you understand the pleasure of the Court: Clerk, Record the default, and Gentlemen, you that took charge of the Prisoner take him back again. So the King went forth with his Guards, and the Court adjourned to the Painted-Chamber, the Cryer (as at other times) crying, God bless the Kingdom of England.

The fourth and last days Trial of his Majesty.

Saturday, 27th. January 1648. the Court sat again in Westminster-Hall, the President was in his Scarlet Robes, after him 67 Commissioners answered to their Names; the King came in, in his wonted posture with his Hat on, a company of Souldiers and seditious persons were placed about the Court to cry for Justice, Judgment, and Execution; the people not daring to cry, God bless Him, for fear of being again beaten by the Souldiers.

Bradshaw. Gentlemen, It is well known to all or most of you here present, that the Prisoner at the Bar hath been several times convented and brought before this Court to make answer to a Charge of High Treason, and other Crimes exhibited against him, in the name of the People of England, to which Charge being required to Answer, He hath been so far from obeying the Commands of the Court, by submitting to their Justice, as he began to take upon him Reasoning, and debated unto the Authority of the Court, and to the Highest Court that appointed them to Try and Judg Him; but being over-ruled in that, and required to make His Answer, He still continued contumacious, and refused to submit to answer. Hereupon the Court (that they may not be wanting to themselves, nor the trust reposed in them, nor that any mans willfulness prevent Justice) they have considered of the Charge and of the contumacie, and of that confession which in Law doth arise on that contumacie; they have likewise considered the notoriety of the Fact, charged upon this Prisoner, and upon the whole matter, they are resolved, and have agreed upon a Sentence to be pronounced against him, but in respect he doth desire to be heard before the sentence be read, and pronounced, the Court hath resolved to hear Him: Yet Sir, thus much I must tell you beforehand (which you have been minded of at other Courts) that if that which you have to say, be to offer any debate concerning the Jurisdiction, You are not to be heard in it, you have offered it formerly, and you have struck at the Root, that is, the Power and Supreme Authority of the Commons of England, which this Court will not admit a debate of, and which indeed is an irrational thing in them to do, being a Court that Act upon Authority derived from them. But Sir, if you have any thing to say in defence of your self concerning the matter charged, the Court hath given me in Commands to hear you.

King. Since I see that you will not hear any thing of debate, concerning that which I confess I thought most material for the Peace of the Kingdom, and for the Liberty of the Subject, I shall wave it, but only I must tell you, that this many a day all things have been taken away from me, but that that I call dearer to me than my life, which is my Conscience and mine Honour: And if I had a respect of my life, more than the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of the Subject, 1648. certainly I should have made a particular defence for my life, for by that, at leastwise, I might have delayed an ugly Sentence, which I believe will will pass upon me; therefore certainly Sir, as a man that hath some understanding, some knowledg of the world (if that true zeal to my Countrey had not overborn the care that I have for my own preservation) I should have gone another way to work than that I have done. Now Sir, I conceive that a hasty Sentence once passed may sooner be repented of, than recalled; and truly, the self same desire that I have for the peace of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of the Subject, more than my own particular ends, makes me now at last desire, that I having something to say that concerns both, I desire before Sentence be given, that I may be heard in the Painted-Chamber before the the Lords and Commons, this delay cannot be prejudicial to you; whatsoever I say, if that I say be no reason, those that hear me must be Judges, I cannot be Judge of that that I have to say. If it be reason, and really, for the welfare of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of the Subject of the Subject, I am sure it's very well worth the hearing; therefore I do conjure you, as you love that which you pretend (I hope it's real) the Liberty of the Subject, and peace of the Kingdom, that you will grant me this hearing before any Sentence passed; but if I cannot get this Liberty, I do protest that your fair shews of Liberty and Peace are pure shews, and that you will not hear your King.

The President said, This was a declining the Jurisdiction of the Court, and delay: yet the Court withdrew for half an hour, advised upon it, and sat again.

Bradshaw said to the King, That the Court had considered what he had moved, and also their own Authority.

The return from the Court, said he, is this, That they have been too much delayed by you already, and they are Judges appointed by the Highest Authority, and Judges are no more to delay, than they are to deny Justice, and notwithstanding what you have offered, they are resolved to proceed to Sentence, and to Judgment, that is their unanimous resolution.

The King pressed again and again, that he might be heard by the Lords and Commons in the Painted-Chamber, with great earnestness, and was as often denied by Bradshaw: at last, the King desired that this motion of his might be entred.

Bradshaw began in a long Speech to declare the Grounds of the Sentence, much aggravating the Kings offences, aud misapplying both Law and History to his present purpose. When Bradshaw had done speaking, Broughton the Clerk read the Sentence drawn up in Parchment to this effect.

The Sentence against his Majesty.

"That whereas the Commons of England in "Parliament had appointed them an High Court "of Justice for the Tryal of Charles Stuart King "of England, before whom he had been three "times convented, and at the first time a Charge "of High Treason and other high Crimes and Mis-

1648. "Misdemeanors was read in behalf of the King-
"dome of England, &c. which Charge being "read unto him as aforesaid; He the said Charles
"Stuart was required to give his Answer, but he "refused so to do, and so expressed the several "passages at his Tryal in refusing to Answer;
"for all which Treasons and Crimes, this Court
"doth adjudge, That he the said Charles Stuart
"as a Tyrant, Traytor, Murtherer, and publick
"Enemie, shall be put to death, by severing of "his Head from his Body.

After the sentence read, the President said, This Sentence now read and published, it is the Act, Sentence, Judgement and Resolution of the whole Court: Here the whole Court stood up, as assenting to what the President said?

King. Will you hear me a word, Sir.

Bradshaw. Sir, You are not to be heard after the Sentence.

King. No Sir?

Bradshaw. No Sir, by your favour, Sir. Guard, withdraw your Prisoner.

King. I am not suffered to speak, expect what Justice other people will have.

The King not being admitted to reply, was taken by his Guards to Sir Robert Cottons house, and the Court rose; as he passed down the stairs the Souldiers scoffed at him, and cast the smoak of their Tobacco (a thing very distastful to him) in his face, and strewed the pipes in his way, and one more insolent than the rest, spit in his face, which he in great patience took no further notice of, than to wipe the spittle away; and as he passed further, hearing some of them, by the instigation of their Officers cry out Justice, Justice, and Execution, he said, Alas poor Souls, for a piece of money, they would do so for their Commanders.

A Committee is appointed to consider the time and place for the Kings execution.

The Court after the Judgment given, went into the Painted-Chamber, and appointed Sir Hardress Waller, Ireton, Harrison, Dean, and Okey to be a Committee to consider of the time and place for the execution: The King hearing thereof, requested an Officer of the Army to go to them, to desire that he might see his Children before his death, and that Doctor Juxon the Bishop of London might be admitted to assist him in his private Devotion, and receiving the Sacrament; both which were granted to him upon a motion to the Parliament.

The King at his Tryal (as you have read) pressed earnestly to have his Reasons heard against the Jurisdiction of the Court, but was often denyed, but that the weight of them may not be suppresst for a further manifestation of the impiety of his unjust Judges, we shall here insert them, faithfully transcribed out of the Original Copy under the Kings own hand.

The reasons the King intended to have given at his Tryal against the proceedings of the Court.

Having already made my Protestations not only against the illegality of this pretended Court, but also that no earthly Power can justly call me (who am your King) in Question as a Delinquent, I would not any more open my mouth upon this occasion more than to refer my self to what I have spoken, were I alone in this case concerned: But the Duty I owe to God in the preservation of the true Liberty of my people, will not suffer me at this time to be silent: for, how can any Free-born Subject of England call life, or any thing he possesseth his own, if Power without right daily maketh new, and abrogate the old Fundamental Law of the Land, which I now take to be the present case; Wherfore when I came hither, I expected that you would have endeavored to have satisfied me concerning these grounds, which hinder me to answer to your pretended Impeachment; but since I see that nothing I can say will move you to it (though Negatives are not so naturally proved as Affirmatives) yet I will shew you the Reason why I am confident you cannot Judg me, nor indeed the meanest man in England, for I will not (like you) without shewing a Reason, seek to impose a Belief upon my Subjects.

There is no proceeding just against any man but what is warranted either by God's Laws, or the Municipal Laws of the Countrey where he lives. Now, I am most confident, that this days proceeding cannot be warranted by God's Law, for on the contrary, the Authority of obedience unto Kings, is clearly warranted, and strictly commanded both in the Old and New Testament, which if denied, I am ready instantly to prove, and for the Question now in hand, there it is said, That where the word of a King is, there is power, and who can say unto him, what doest thou, Eccles. 8. 4. Then for the Laws of the Land, I am no less confident, that no learned Lawyer will affirm that an Impeachment can lie against the King, they all going in his Name: and one of their Maxims is, That the King can do no wrong. Besides the Law, upon which you ground your proceedings, must either be old or new; if old, shew it; if new, tell what Authority warranted by the Fundamental Laws of the Land hath made it, and when; but how the House of Commons can erect a Court of Judicature, which was never one it self (as is well known to all Lawyers) I leave to God and the world to judge: And it were full as strange that they should pretend to make Laws without King or Lords House, to any that have heard speak of the Laws of England.

And admitting, but not granting, that the People of Englands Commission could grant your pretented power, I see nothing you can shew for that; for certainly you never asked the question of the tenth man of the Kingdome, and in this way you manifestly wrong even the poorest Plow-man, if you demand not his free consent, nor can you pretend any colour for this your pretended Commission, without the consent at least of the major part of every man in England, of whatsoever quality or condition, which I am sure, you never went about to seek, so far are you from having it. Thus you see, that I speak not for my own right alone, as I am your King, but also for the true liberty of all my Subjects, which consists, not in sharing the power of Government, but living under such Laws, and such Government as may give themselves the best assurance of their Lives and propriety of their Goods. Nor in this must, or do I forget the Priviledges of both Houses of Parliament, which this daies proceedings doth not only violate, but likewise occasion the greatest breach of their publick Faith (I believe) that ever was heard of, with which I am far from charging the two Houses, for all the pre-1648. tended Crimes laid againſt Me, bear date long before this late Treaty at Newport, in which I having concluded as much as in Me lay, and hopefully expecting the two Houſes agreement thereunto, I was ſuddenly ſurpriſed, and hurried from thence as a Priſoner, upon which account I am againſt my will brought hither, where ſince I am come, I cannot but to my power defend the antient Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom, together with my own juſt right; But for any thing I can ſee, the higher Houſe is totally excluded.

And for the Houſe of Commons, it is too well known, that the major part of them are detained or deterred from ſitting, ſo as if I had no other, this were ſufficient for me to proteſt againſt the lawfulneſs of your pretended Court.

Beſides all this, the peace of the Kingdome is not the leaſt in my thoughts, and what hopes of ſettlement is there ſo long as Power reigns without rule of Law, changing the whole frame of that Government under which this Kingdome hath flouriſhed for many hundred years (nor will I ſay what will fall out in caſe this lawleſs, unjuſt proceeding againſt Me do go on) and believe it, the Commons of England will not thank you for this Change; for they will remember how happy they have been of late years under the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, the King my Father and my Self, untill the beginning of theſe unhappy troubles, and will have cauſe to doubt, that they ſhall never be ſo happy under any new. And by this time it will be too ſenſibly evident, that the Arms I took up, were only to defend the fundamental Laws of this Kingdome, againſt thoſe who have ſuppoſed my power hath totally changed the antient Government.

Thus, having ſhewed you briefly the Reaſons why I cannot ſubmit to your pretended Authority without violating the truſt which I have from God, for the welfare and liberty of my people. I expect from you either clear reaſons to convince my Judgement, ſhewing me that I am in an error, (and then truly I will readily anſwer) or that you will withdraw your proceedings.

The report from the perſons before named to conſider of the time and place of the executing the ſentence againſt the King, was on Monday the 29*th.* of January delivered in the Painted Chamber to the Commiſſioners then preſent, in theſe words, That it is the opinion of the Committee, That the open Street before White-Hall is a fit place, and that the King be there executed to morrow.

The Court approved of this Report, and ordered a Warrant to be drawn for that purpoſe, which was preſently ingroſſed, and Sign'd and Seal'd by all the Commiſſioners preſent, in theſe words, (viz.)

The title of the Warrant for executing the King.

At the High Court of Juſtice for Trying and Judging Charles Stuart King of England, January the 29*th.* 1648.

Whereas Charles Stuart King of England is and ſtandeth Convicted, Attainted, and Condemned of High Treaſon, and other high Crimes, and Sentence upon Saturday laſt was pronounced againſt him by this Court to be put to death by ſevering his head from his body; of which Sentence, Execution yet remains to be done. Theſe are therefore to will and require you, to ſee the ſaid Sentence executed in the open Street before White-Hall, upon the morrow being the 30*th.* day of this inſtant moneth of January, between the hours of ten in the morning, and five of the afternoon of the ſame day, with full effect, and for your ſo doing, this ſhall be your ſufficient Warrant. And theſe are to require all Officers and Souldiers, and other the good people of this Nation of England to be aſſiſting unto you in this ſervice: Given under our Hands and Seals, &c. 1648.

To Colonel Francis Hacker,
Col. Huncks, and Lieutenant Col. Phayer. John Bradſhaw, &c.

This was ſigned and ſeald by all the Commiſſioners whoſe names are before expreſſed, except ſuch of them who are mark'd with this note, (†)

But of thoſe that ſigned and ſeal'd the Warrant, it muſt be remembred, That Colonel Richard Ingoldſby's hand and ſeal was againſt his conſent put to it by Oliver Cromwell, but his early diſclaiming of the fact, and his active and ſucceſful endeavours for the reſtauration of King Charles the Second to his Crown and Kingdoms, not only obtained his pardon, but the Kings favour with it, and the Dignity of Knight of the Bath, which was conferr'd on him at the enſuing Coronation.

Colonel John Hutchinſon alſo for his conjunction with General Monck to reduce this Kingdome to its antient Government, and his hearty repentance for what he had done in conſenting to and acting in this impious ſentence, obtained his pardon for it.

The ſame day that the Warrant was ſigned and ſealed, the Duke of Glouceſter and the Lady Elizabeth were brought to the King, whom he moſt joyfully received, and giving his bleſſing to the Princeſſe, He bid her remember to tell her Brother James when ever ſhe ſhould ſee him, That he ſhould look no more upon Charles as his elder Brother only, but be obedient to him as his Soveraign: And that they ſhould love one another, and forgive their Fathers Enemies; And then ſaid unto her, Sweetheart, you will forget this, No, ſaid ſhe, I ſhall never forget it while I live, and pouring forth abundance of tears, promiſed him to write down the particulars.

Then the King taking the Duke of Glouceſter upon his Knee, ſaid, Sweet-heart, Now they will cut off thy Fathers head; (upon which words the Child looked very wiſhfully on him;) mark Child what I ſay, They will cut off my Head, and perhaps make thee a King: But mark what I ſay, you muſt not be a King, ſo long as your Brothers Charles and James do live; for they will cut off your Brothers Heads (when they can catch them) and cut thy Head off too at laſt; and therefore, I charge you, do not be made a King by them. At which the Child, ſighing, ſaid, I will be torn in pieces firſt,---- which falling ſo unexpectedly from one ſo young, it made the King rejoyce exceedingly.

What the King ſaid to me the 29*th.* of January laſt, 1648. last, being the last time I had the happiness to see him. "He told me he was glad I was come, and "although he had not time to say much, yet "somewhat he had to say to me, which he had "not to another, or leave in writing; because "he feared their Cruelty was such, as that they "would not have permitted him to write to me; "He wished me not to grieve and torment my "self for him, for that would be a glorious death "that he should dye, it being for the Laws and "Liberties of the Land: He bid me read Bishop "Andrews Sermons, Hookers Ecclesiastical Po-"licy, and Bishop Land's Book against Fisher, "which would ground me against Popery. He "told me, he had forgiven all his Enemies, and "hoped God would forgive them also, and com-"manded us, &c. to forgive them: He bid me "tell my Mother, that his thoughts had never "strayed from her, and that his love would be the "same to his last; withal, He commanded me and "my Brother to be obedient to her; and bid me "send his blessing to the rest of my Brothers and "Sisters, with commendation to all his Friends: So after he had given me his blessing, I took my leave.

"Further, He commanded us all to forgive "those people, but never to trust them; for they "had been most false to him, and to those that "gave them power, and he feared also, to their "own souls. And desired me not to grieve for "him, for he should dye a Martyr, and that he "doubted not but that the Lord would settle his "Throne upon his Son, and that we should all be "happier than we could have expected to have "been, if he had lived. With many other things which at present I cannot remember.

On Tuesday the 30 th. of January, which was the fatal day on which the King was put to death, The Bishop of London did in the morning read Divine Service in his presence; to which duty the 27 th. Chapter of St. Matthew being the History of our Saviours passion, was appointed by the Church Calendar for the second Lesson: but he supposing it to have been selected on purpose, thanked him afterwards for his seasonable choice. But the Bishop modestly declining those undue thanks, told him that it came by course to be read on that day, which very much comforted his Majesty, who proceeded to the remaining duties of receiving from the Bishop the Holy Sacrament, and the other preparations for his approaching passion.

His Devotions being ended, about ten a clock he was brought from St. James's to Whitehal by a Regiment of Foot, with Colours flying, and Drums beating (through the Park) part marching before, and part behind, with a private Guard of Partisans about him, the Bishop on the one hand, and Colonel Tomlinson (who had the charge of him) on the other bare-headed. The Guards marching a slow pace, as on a solemn and sad occasion to their ill-tuned Drums, He bid them go faster, (as his usual manner of walking was,) saying, That he now went before them to strive for an Heavenly Crown, with less solicitude than he had often encouraged his Souldiers to fight for an Earthly Diadem.

Being come to the end of the Park, he went up the Stairs leading to the long Gallery in White-Hall, where he used formerly to lodge. There finding an un-expected delay in being brought upon the Scaffold, which they had begun but that morning, He past the most of that time (having received a Letter from the Prince in the interim by Mr. Seymor) in Prayer. 1648.

About 12 a Clock, his Majesty (refusing to Dine) eat only a bit of Bread, and drank a glass of Claret, and about an hour after, Colonel Hacker with other Officers and Souldiers, brought him with the Bishop and Colonel Tomlinson through the Banquetting-House to the Scaffold, whereto the passage was made through a Window. A strong Guard of several Regiments of Horse and Foot were placed on all sides, which hindred the near approach of his miserable and distracted Subjects, (who for manifesting their sorrow, were most barbarously used) and the King from speaking what he had designed for their ears: Whereupon finding himself disappointed, he omitted much of his intended matter, but having viewed the Scaffold (which had Irons driven in it to force him down to that Block by Ropes, if that he should have resisted) and the Axe (of whose edge he was very careful, having minded (one present) of touching it with his Cloak.)

Being upon the Scaffold, he looked very earnestly upon the Block, and asked Colonel Hacker if it could be no higher: and then spoke thus, (directing his Speech chiefly to the Bishop and Colonel Thomlinson.)

The Kings Speech upon the Scaffold.

I shall be very little heard of any body else, I shall therefore speak a word to you here. Indeed I could have held my peace very well, if I did not think that holding my peace, would make some men think, that I did submit to the Guilt, as well as to the punishment. But I think it is my duty to God first, and then to my Country, to clear my self both as an honest man, a good King, and a good Christian. I shall begin first with my Innocencie, and in troth, I think it not very needful for me to insist long upon this; For all the world knows that I did never begin a War with the two Houses of Parliament, and I call God to witness, unto whom I must shortly make an account, that I did never intend to incroach upon their Priviledges: They began upon me, it is the Militia they began upon: they confessed the Militia was mine, but they thought it fit to have it from me. And to be short, if any body will look to the Dates of Commissions, of their Commissions and mine, and likewise to the Declaration, he will see clearly that they began these unhappy Troubles, not I. So as for the guilt of these enormous Crimes that are laid against me, I hope that God will clear me. I will not (for I am in charity) and God forbid that I should lay it upon the two Houses of Parliament, there is no necessity of either, I hope they are free of this Guilt, but I believe that ill Instruments between them and me, have been the cause of all this Blood-shed. So that as I find my self clear of this, I hope (and pray God) that they may too, yet for all this, God forbid I should be so ill a Christian, as not to say Gods judgments are just upon me: Many times he doth pay Justice by an unjust Sentence, that is ordinary: I will say this, That unjust Sentence that

I ſuffered to take effect, is puniſhed by an unjuſt Sentence upon me : ſo far I have ſaid, to ſhew you that I am an innocent man. Now to ſhew you that I am a good Chriſtian, I hope there is † a good man that will bear me witneſs that I have forgiven all the world, and even thoſe in particular that have been the chief cauſers of my death, who they are God knows, I do not deſire to know, I pray God forgive them. But this is not all, my charity muſt go further, I wiſh that they may repent, for indeed they have committed a great ſin in that particular, I pray God with St. Stephen, that this be not laid to their charge; and withal, that they may take the way to the peace of the Kingdom, for my charity commands me, not only to forgive particular men, but to endeavour to the laſt gaſp, the peace of the Kingdom. So, Sirs, I do wiſh wiſh with all my Soul : ( I ſee there are ſome here that will carry it further) that they endeavour the peace of the Kingdom, Sirs, I muſt ſhew you, both how you are out of the way, and put you in the way. Firſt, you are out of the way, for certainly all the ways you ever had yet, as far as I could find by any thing, is in the way of Conqueſt, certainly this is an ill way, for Conqueſt, in my opinion is never juſt, except there be a good and juſt cauſe, either for matter of wrong, or a juſt Title, and then if ye go beyond the firſt Quarrel that makes that unjuſt at the end, that was juſt at firſt : for if there be only matter of Conqueſt, then it is a great Robbery, as a Pirate ſaid to* Alexander, That he was a great Robber, himſelf was but a petty Robber : And ſo, Sirs, I think, for the way that you are in, you are much out of the way. Now Sirs, to put you in the way, believe it, you ſhall never go right, nor God will never proſper you, untill you give God his due, the King his due (that is, my Succeſſor) and the people their due; I am as much for them as any of you. You muſt give God his due, by regulating rightly his Church, according to Scripture, (which is now out of order.) And to ſet you in a way particularly, now I cannot but only this, a National Synod freely called, freely debating among themſelves, muſt ſettle this, when every opinion is freely heard. For the King, indeed I will not, the Laws of the Land will clearly inſtruct you for that, therefore becauſe it concerns my own particular, I only give you a touch of it. For the people, truly I deſire their Liberty and Freedom as much as any body whomſoever; But I muſt tell you that their Liberty and Freedom conſiſt in having Government under thoſe Laws, by which their lives and theirs may be moſt their own; it is not in having a ſhare in the Government, that is nothing pertaining to them : A Subject and a Sovereign are clear different things; and therefore until you do that, I mean, that you put the people into that Liberty, as I ſay, they will never enjoy themſelves.

† Pointing to the Biſhop.

† Obſerving one to write.

Sirs, It was for this that now I am come hither, for if I would have given way to an Arbitrary way, for to have all Laws changed according to the power of the Sword, I need not have come here, and therefore I tell you (and I pray to God it be not laid to your charge) that I am the Martyr of the People. In troth Sirs, I ſhall not hold you any longer, I will only ſay this to you, that I could have deſired ſome little time longer, becauſe I would have a little better diſgeſted this that I have ſaid, and therefore I hope you will excuſe me, I have delivered my Conſcience, I pray God you take thoſe conſes, that are the beſt for the good of the Kingdom, and your ſalvation. 1648.

Biſhop. (Though your Majeſties affections may be very well known to Religion) yet it may be expected that you ſhould ſay ſomewhat thereof for the worlds ſatisfaction.

King. I thank you very heartily, my Lord, for that I had almoſt forgotten it, In troth Sirs, My Conſcience in Religion I think is very well known to all the world, and therefore I declare before you all, that I die a Chriſtian, according to the Profeſſion of the Church of England, as I found it left me by my Father, and this honeſt man I think will witneſs it.

Then ſpeaking to the Executioner, he ſaid, I ſhall ſay but very ſhort prayers, and when I thruſt out my hands —— let that be your ſign.

Then he called to the Biſhop for his Night-Cap, and having put it on, he ſaid to the Executioner, does my Hair trouble you; who deſired him to put it all under his Cap, which the King did accordingly by the help of the Executioner and the Biſhop: Then the King turning to the Biſhop ſaid, I have a good Cauſe and a gratious God on my ſide.

Biſhop. There is but one Stage more, this Stage is turbulent and troubleſome, it is a ſhort one: But you may conſider it will ſoon carry you a very great way : it will carry you from Earth to Heaven : and there you will find a great deal of cordial joy and comfort.

King. I go from a corruptible to an incorruptible Crown, where no diſturbance can be, no diſturbance in the world.

Biſhop. You are exchanged from a Temporary to an Eternal Crown, a good exchange.

The King then ſaid to the Executioner, Is my Hair well, and took of his Cloak and his George, giving his George to the Biſhop, ſaying, Remember.

Then he put off his Doublet, and being in his Waſt-Coat, he put his Cloak on again; then looking upon the Block, he ſaid to the Executioner, You muſt ſet it faſt.

Executioner. It is faſt, Sir.

King. When I put my hands out this way, ſtretching them out then. —— Do your work.

After that, having ſaid two or three words (as he ſtood) to himſelf; with hands and eyes lift up, immediately ſtooping down, he laid his neck upon the Block : and then the Executioner again putting his Hair under his Cap, the King (thinking he had been going to ſtrike) ſaid, Stay for the ſign.

Executioner, Yes, I will, and it pleaſe your Majeſty: And after a very little pauſe, the King ſtretching forth his hands, the Executioner at one blow ſevered his Head from his Body; The Head being off, the Executioner held it up, and ſhewed it to the people, which done, it was with the Body put in a Coffin covered with black Velvet for that purpoſe, and conveyed into his Lodgings at White-Hall; and from thence it was carried to his Houſe at Saint Jameſes, where his Body was embalmed and put in a Coffin of Lead, and laid there a fortnight to be ſeen by the people: And on Wedneſday ſeven-night after, his Corps embalmed and coffin'd in Lead, was delivered chiefly to the Care of four of his Servants, viz. Maſter Herbert, Captain Anthony Mildmay, his Sewers, Captain Preſton, and

John

1648. John Joyner, formerly Cook to his Majesty, who (with others) clothed in mourning Suits and Cloaks, accompanied the Herse that night to Windsor, and placed it in that which was formerly the Kings Bed-Chamber, next day it was removed into the Deans Hall, which Room was hanged with black, and made dark, with Lights burning round the Herse, in which it remained till three in the afternoon, about which time came the Duke of Richmond, the Marques of Hertford, the Marques of Dorchester, and the Earl of Lyndsey, having obtained an Order from the Parliament, for the decent interment of the King their Royal Master, provided the expence thereof exceeded not five hundred pounds: At their coming into the Castle, they shewed their Order of Parliament to Colonel Whitchcot Governour of the Castle, desiring the Interment might be in St. Georges Chappel, and by the form in the Common-Prayer-Book; but this last was denied by the Governor: They then went to seek a convenient place for the Burial of the Corps; and after some search they discovered a Vault in the middle of the Quire, wherein as it is probably conjectured, lyeth the body of King Henry the Eighth, and his beloved Wife, the Lady Jane Seymour, both in Coffins of Lead; In this Vault (there being room for one more) they interred the body of the King with only this Inscription on the Coffin;

CHARLES KING OF ENGLAND,
MDCXLVIII.

Princeps, ne priseo natus ab Inacho; nil interest, an pauper, & infima de gente: sub dio jacebit, victima nil miserentis Orci.

Of His Personage and Conditions.

His Character.

HE was of a comely Stature, streight, and well timbred, and very active and indefatigable in all Exercises; His hair was of a darkish brown; one imperfection he had, (viz.) a little hæsitation in his utterance, which he so ordered by custome, that whereas the like in others substracted from their eloquence, it was a kind of Grace and Ornament to his speech. He was a Prince of great Wisdome, and all Princely Vertues, but so modest in the exercise of them, that they appeared not in their full splendour, till his afflictions made them almost useless to any but himself; his religion was in a degree even to perfection, both in the theory and practise of it: In the first, (especially in those points in controversie concerning the doctrine and discipline of our Church,) few of his Clergie (though the most Learned in Europe) were more knowing, and in the practise and exercise of holy life, he was both an example and precept to them and all others in his Court and Kingdoms; Temperance, Sobriety, and all other moral Vertues were almost inimitable in him, nor was his Courage less conspicuous, which sufficiently appeared in all actions where he was present, and had more, if the great care of his safety in those about him, had not thereby given him less occasion to shew it.

His sufferings were such, as nothing but their story at large can in any measure expresse; such was his fortitude, that in the greatest of his prosperity and misery, he retained an equal temper of mind; And although his indulgence to his people induc'd him to condescend to devest himself of some part of his Prerogative for his own time, to satisfie the causeless jealousies of his Enemies, yet he would not consent to diminish the Regal power of his Successor, and in what concern'd Religion, where he believ'd his conscience unsatisfied, no humane consideration could alter him; His clemency was very transcendent, for although no King ever received more reproaches and indignities from seditious Subjects, he never was heard to revile any of them, but rather to pray for the conversion of the most, and commiserate such others whom the malitious arts of his Enemies had perverted. 1648.

In several Battails in our unnatural War, where the success was to his party, he alwaies lamented his Victory, and never had any signal Conquest, but he used it rather to invite his Enemies to receive his mercy and pardon by offering treaties of accommodation, than by improving those advantages to their ruine, which lenity was imputed by many to him, as one of the main causes of his misfortunes.

In Councel he was quick and discerning, but somewhat too deliberate in Execution, and though none of his Counsellors equall'd him in parts, yet was he so diffident of his own judgement, that he frequently declined that to follow the advice of others (most commonly to the worse) as was in two things remarkably observ'd; In being perswaded to assent to the Act for perpetuating his last Parliament, and to the Earl of Strafford's death; of the first indeed he never openly complain'd, because he did it to shew his confidence in his people, (though ungratefully deceived in it) but of the later he often repented.

To his Domesticks he was more like a familiar Friend than a Master, but did so temper his affability with a Majesty of Port, that it begot in most of them a Reverence and Love; yet such was the ingratitude even of some of these, that they mingled and joyned in the Crucifige with the most virulent of his Enemies. To conclude, Though his death was horrid and ignominious, and acted in the most immense degree of annoyance, by a wicked, mean, and inconsiderable part of his people; never died Prince more lamented by the generality of them.

Of Men of Note in His Time.

THE first fifteen years of his Reign (following the many years of Peace that went before in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth and King James,) gave small encouragement to Martial Men, yet many of the Kings Subjects of Spirits addicted thereunto, listed themselves in the Service of forein Princes and States, and gave signal proofs of their Courage; amongst which, Those of most remark that have come to our knowledge, we shall mention in this place: In this number, Sir Charles Morgan bred in the Wars of the States of the United Netherlands against the Spaniards, deserves a famous Memory, who 1648. who being imployed in Germany with six thousand English, more disquieted Count Tilly the Emperors General, than the King of Denmark could do with a far greater Army: Sir John Burroughs also at Cadiz and the Isle of Rhe, perform'd Services never to be forgotten, and was a great Captain, and Sir Simon Harcourt also in Ireland, as before in many other parts, gave such proof of his excellency in Arms, as made his * loss much lamented by all good men. In the Wars of Germany, The names of Ruthin, Lesly, Fleetwood, Douglas and Hamilton, are recorded to Posterity. Lesly arrived to great Honours in the Emperors Court, and was made a Count of the Empire; But of all the others, Ruthin only served in our unhappy Wars, and deservedly had the Title of Earl of Brainford and Forth conferred on him: Many others, Brave and Expert Commanders there were, whose Eminences appeared not, till the Kings Service called them to the defence of his Crown and Dignity; of all which, If we should here make mention, they would fill a Volume. Those of most Note were, The Marques of Montross, the Earls of Lindsey, Rochester and Carnarvan; the Lords, Jacob Ashley, Arthur Capel, George Goring, and Ralph Hopton; Sir Henry Gage, Sir Richard Greenvile, Sir Charles Lucas, and Sir George Lisle, and Major General Harrey, each of which were able for Skill, Courage, and Conduct, to Command Armies. We may name amongst these, The Earl of Strafford, from the little time of whose imployment in War, great signs appeared of rising glory, and more had been, if an untimely and immerited death had not crop'd his springing Lawrels. 1648.

* He was killed at the taking a Castle from the Irish.

The most famous men of Learning in his Time were of the Clergie, whereof Davenport Bishop of Salisbury, Andrews Bishop of Winchester, Morton Bishop of Durham, Laud Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Hall Bishop of Norwich, Prideaux, Bishop of Worcester, Usher Arch-Bishop of Armagh, and his Successor Bramhall; Sanders Bishop of Lincoln, Mr. Chilingworth of Trinity Colledge in Oxford, and Dr. Hammond, one of the Canons of Christs-Church in the same University; and Mr. Mead of Christs Colledge in Cambridge, and Mr. Hales of Eaton, are most celebrated: But others there were of great Learning, as Lucius Lord Faulkland Secretary of State, a great Master of all sorts of Learning; Sir Edward Cook likewise that famous Common Lawyer, and Mr. John Selden of the same Profession, a most Renowned Antiquary, and Thomas Hobs of Malmsbury, that Excellent Mathematician and Philosopher, all flourished in his Reign. Nor may we omit the Poets then famous, which excell'd or equall'd all that went before and shall come after; such as were Mr. Benjamin Johnson, Mr. Edmond Waller, Mr. Tho. Carew, Sr. John Suckling, Mr. Tho. Randolph, Mr. Thomas Cartwright, Mr. Abraham Conley, and Sir William Davenant; The first whereof by his profound Learning and Judgement, shewed a Poet was to be as well made as born: And the later, though he wanted Learning, made as high and noble flights as fancy could advance without it.

THE

THE FIRST THIRTEEN YEARS OF THE REIGN OF King Charles the II.

1648. KIng Charles the First being deprived of Life on the thirtieth of January One thousand six hundred forty and eight, in the manner before mentioned, his Eldest Son Prince Charles, by unquestionable Right succeeded to the Crowns of England, Scotland and Ireland, in the Eighteenth year of his Age. Proclamation and Coronation the usual Ceremonies attending Royal Succession could not now have their due course, nor are they in this Kingdom necessary circumstances of our Monarchy, for by our Law (which admits of no Interregnum,) the Successor to the Crown has all the Rights thereof from the first moment after the death of his Predecessor. The Ruling part of the House of Commons who usurped the Government with violence on the Person of the late King (as hath been related) knew they could not be secure if they rested there; so that immediately thereupon they published an Act even against Kingly Government it self, expressing therein:

An Act against proclaiming the King.

That whereas several pretences might be made to this Crown, and Title to the Kingly Office set on foot, to the apparent hazard of the publike Peace. Be it enacted and ordained by this present Parliament, and by the Authority of the same, that no person whatsoever do presume to Proclaim, declare, publish, or any ways to promote Charles Stuart (Son of the late King Charles*) commonly called the Prince of* Wales, or any other Person to be King, or Chief Magistrate of England or Ireland, or of any Dominions belonging to them, by colour of Inheritance, Succession, Election, or any other claim whatsoever, without the free consent of the People in Parliament, first had and signified by a particular Act or Ordinance for that purpose, any Law, Statute, Usage, or Custome to the contrary notwithstanding, and whosoever shall contrary to this Act Proclaim, &c. the said Charles Stuart, shall be deemed and adjudged a Traytor and suffer accordingly. 1648.

Yet this Inhibition did not deter many Loyal Subjects from doing their Duty; and on the second of February this year, the following Proclamation was printed and scattered about the streets of London.

A Proclamation proclaiming Pr. Charles to be King of England.

We the Noblemen, Judges, Knights, Lawyers, Gentlemen, Free-holders, Merchants, Citizens, Yeomen, Seamen, and other Freemen of England, do according to our Allegeance and Covenant by these presents, heartily, joyfully, and unanimously acknowledg and Proclaim the Illustrious Charles Prince of Wales, next Heir of the Blood Royal to his Father King Charles (whose late wicked and Trayterous Murther we do from our Souls abominate, and all parties and consenters thereunto) to be by Hereditary Birthright, and lawful Succession, rightful, and undoubted King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, and the Dominions thereunto belonging, and that we will faithfully, constantly, and sincerely in our several places and callings defend and maintain his Royal Person, Crown and Dignity with our Estates, Lives, and last drop of our Bloods, against all opposers thereof, whom we do hereby declare to be Traytors and Enemies to his Majesty and his Kingdoms. In testimony whereof we have caused these to be published and proclaimed throughout all Counties and Corporations of this Realm, the first day of February, in the first year of his Majesties Reign.

God save King Charles the Second.

Coronation which is the next Solemnity, the exclusion of the King by the malice of his Enemies made impossible at this time to be celebrated. The Army had been before modelled suta-

1648. ble to these designs of changing the Monarchy of England and Ireland to a Commonwealth (for neither this alteration, nor the death of the late King could have been effected without a Military assistance) which was first discovered when Colonel Pride secluded or terrified from sitting near two hundred of the Members of the Commons-House of Parliament, being those who had on the fifth of December before by Vote approved of the late Kings concessions for a Peace at the Isle of Wight, and those that remained after this violation complied so far with the Army herein, that after a first seeming dislike of their proceedings, they resolved and decreed, never to readmit them; and such others who had given their Negatives to the said concessions, were likewise Ordered not to sit in Parliament, till they had entred their dissent to them.

The House of Peers continued yet sitting, and in regard the Commissions of the Judges were determined by the Kings death, they sent to the Commons for a Conference about that, and other matters relating to the setling of the Government, but they without returning an answer declared the Kingly Office to be unnecessary and burthensom, and that the Lords House was dangerous and useless, and therefore to be laid aside; but that they might not be totally excluded from Government, they declared that they might be capable of Elections into the House of Commons, of which afterward three of them only accepted, namely the Earls of Pembroke, and Salisbury, and the Lord Howard of Escrick, but the Peers in general very much resented these indignities put upon them by a small part of the House of Commons, and in a Protestation by them published in the name of all the Peers and Barons of the Realm.

Monarchy and the House of Lords declared useless by the Commons.

The Protestation of the House of Lords against the proceedings of the Commons.

"They asserted their own Priviledges, and "the Fundamental Laws of the Nation, and dis- "claimed and protested against all Acts, Votes, "Orders, or Ordinances of the said Members of "the Commons-House, for erecting of new "Courts of Justice, to Try or Execute the King, "or any Peer or Subject of this Realm, for al- "tering the Government, Laws, great Seal, An- "cient forms of Writs, or legal Process, raising "new Forces, and imposing new Taxes, or Oaths, "granting Commissions, or making Officers, as "likewise against the Traiterous Murthering of "the late King, and the dis-inheriting of his Son "the Prince of Wales, and particularly against "that insolent and Frantick Vote (as they called "it) of February the sixth, concerning their a- "bolishing the House of Peers as useless and "dangerous, all which Acts, Votes, and Orders, "they declared to be not only illegal and there- "fore void, but likewise detestable and destruc- "tive to the Rights and Beings of Parliaments, "the Fundamental Laws of the Realm, and the "Lives, Liberties, and Properties of the Peo- "ple.

This made little impression upon the Commons, and to prevent the assembling of the Lords, the Army by their appointment or connivance set a Guard upon the Doors of their House; and in further prosecution of their former Votes against Monarchy, they formed and passed An Act for the Exheredation of the Royal Line, the Abolishment of Monarchy in this Kingdom, and the setting up of a Common-wealth; which they ordered to be published and Proclaimed in all parts of the Kingdom. 1648.

An Act for the abolishing of Kingly Government.

Alderman Reinoldson the then Lord Mayor of London, a person of great integrity and Loyalty, refused to publish this Act in London, and was therefore discharged from his Office, and with three of the Aldermen that were of his judgment committed prisoners to the Tower of London, and one Andrews was by a Common-Hall chosen in his place, who with Pennington, Atkins, Wollaston, Fowk, Edmonds, & Pack then Aldermen of Lond. and some others Proclaimed this exorbitant Act in several places of the City. But this great Alteration so much amused the generality of the people, that the Parliament thought fit to give them some satisfaction, which was endeavored by a Declaration, to shew the Reasons of their proceedings; wherein many plausible pretences were exhibited, the chiefest whereof imported, A Promise of deliverance from the Bondage introduced by the Norman Conquests, and of maintaining the Ancient Laws (which they extolled for their excellencie and equality) adding, That they might well consist with the present Government of a Republique upon some easie alterations of Form only, leaving the substance intire, and reforming the abuses thereof: They promised likewise, The establishment of a firm and safe Peace, the advancement of the true Protestant Religion, and the liberal maintenance of a Godly Ministery: the setling of Treaties and Alliances with Forein Princes and States, the encouragement of Manufactures, for the increase and flourishing of Trade, and the maintenance of the Poor in all places of the Land.

Alderman Reynoldson the then Lord Mayor committed to the Tower.

Andrews chosen in his place.

A Declaration for justifying their proceedings.

About the time of publishing this Declaration to complear the model of their Government, they abolished all the antient Forms of Sovereignty, in the Style and Teste of Writs, Commissions, and other publique Instruments, and ordered for the future, all of them to be issued, In the names of the Keepers of the Liberties of England by Authority of Parliament; and likewise they caused the old Great Seal to be broken, and a New one to be made, having on one side a Red Cross and Harp, as the Arms of England and Ireland, with this Inscription [The Great Seal of England,] and on the other the Picture of the House of Commons, with these words, viz. [In the first year of Freedom by Gods blessing restored, 1648.] and as another Ensign of their Dominion, they appointed that all the Money which from that time was to be coined, should instead of the Kings Impression, bear the Cross and Harp, with this Motto [God with us.] Those Clauses in the first of Queen Elizabeth, and the third of King James, which enjoyned the taking the Oaths of Supremacie and Allegeance to the Kings and their Successors, were repealed by them, and a new Oath was framed to be tendred to all that were to be put into place of publike Trust, or made Free-men of Corporations; the antient Judicial, & Legislative Power of the King, and both Houses of Parliament, they assumed to themselves; but the Executive part of Government ment, they committed to a Councel of State erected by Act of Parliament, which consisted of 40 persons of the chiefs of the Army, and others of desperate Fortunes of the most active in these alterations.

A Councel of State erected.

The Parliament of Scotland did by their Commissioners protest against these actings in England, and particularly they disclaimed the proceedings against the late King, but the new English States resolutely answer'd,

That they of Scotland were at liberty to act in their own affairs, but were not to limit or impose upon others, with many extravagant expressions to to justifie their actings, but in the close they invited them to a resemblance with themselves, saying, That if Scotland thought fit to vindicate their own freedome and liberty, they should be ready to afford them all neighbourly assistance.

Before this answer could arrive in Scotland, the Scots had taken other resolutions; for on the third of February in this year, the King was proclaimed at the Cross at Edenburgh; The Chancellor of Scotland dictating to Lyon King at Arms, the words of the Proclamation, as followeth.

The Proclamation for proclaiming the King in Scotland.

The Estates of Parliament presently convented in this second Session of this second Triennial Parliament, by Vertue of an Act of the Committee of Estates, who had power and authority from the last Parliament, for convening the Parliament; considering, that forasmuch as the Kings Majesty, who lately Reigned, is contrary to the dissent and Protestation of this Kingdome, removed by a violent death; and that by the Lords Blessing, there is left unto us a righteous Heir and lawful Successor, Charles Prince of Scotland and Wales, now King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland; We the Estates of the Parliament of the Kingdom of Scotland, do therefore most unanimously and cheerfully in recognition and acknowledgement of his just Right, Title, and Succession to the Crown of these Kingdoms, hereby proclaim and declare to all the World, That the said Lord and Prince Charles, is by the providence of God, and by the lawful Right of undoubted Succession, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, whom all the subjects of this Kingdome are bound humbly & faithfully to obey, maintain, and defend, according to the National Covenant, and the solemn League and Covenant betwixt the Kingdoms, with their Lives and Goods, against all deadly Enemies, as their only righteous Soveraign Lord and King. And because his Majesty is bound by the Law of God and fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, to Rule in Righteousness and Equity, to the honour of God, the good of Religion, and the Wealth of his People: It is hereby declared, That before he be admitted to the Exercise of his Royal Power, he shall give satisfaction to this Kingdom in those things that concern the security of Religion, the Unity betwixt the Kingdoms, and the Good and Peace of this Kingdom, according to the National Covenant, and the solemn League and Covenant; for which end we are resolved with all possible expedition, to make our humble & earnest addresses to his Majesty; for the Testification of all which, We the Parliament of the Kingdom of Scotland, publish this our Acknowledgment of his just Right, Title, and succession to the Crown of these Kingdoms at the Market-Cross at Edenburgh, with all usual solemnities in like cases, and ordain his Royal Name, Portraict and Seal to be used in the publick Writings and Judicatories of this Kingdome, and in the Mint-house, as was usually done to his Royal Predecessors; and command this Act to be proclaimed at all the Market-Crosses of the Royal Burghs, and to be Printed, that none may pretend Ignorance.

1648.

The Scotch Commissioners here, were about this time call'd home, but just at their departure, they sent an Expostulatory Declaration to the sitting Members of our Parliament, wherein they put them in mind of all their Vows, Oaths, and Protestations for the maintenance of the Kings Person and just Rights; and upbraided to them their shameful abjuration and infringement of them by what they had lately acted.

The Scots Commissioners send the Parliament an Expostulatory declaration.

This was so ill received by the Parliament, that they imprisoned the Messenger that brought it, and voted the Paper scandalous and seditious, and all such persons Traitors as should joyn with or adhere to the subscribers; They also sent after the Commissioners, and secured them till a Copy of the Paper was sent into Scotland, to know if the Parliament & Estates there would own the same, upon which a Messenger was sent from Scotland to our States, to justifie what their Commissioners had done, and to complain of the imprisonment of them, as a thing contrary to the law of Nations, and thereupon the Commissioners were released and returned home; but these proceedings on either side increased the distrust and jealousies of each other.

They are stop'd in their journey home, and secur'd. They are justified by a Message sent from from the Estates of Scotland. They are released.

In the summer of this year, several Loyal Persons insuccessfully in many places attempted by arms to free the last King from great oppression and eminent danger, under which he then lay, as was shewed in the History of that time; of which number the Duke of Hamilton, the Earls of Holland and Norwich, the Lord Capel, and Sir John Owen were about the later end of February, or the beginning of March following, tryed and condemned by a High Court of Justice erected for that purpose, (a Copy of that fatal Original made for the destruction of the late King) of which the Duke of Hamilton, and the Earl of Holland, and the Lord Capel were executed the 9th. of March; but the Earl of Norwich and Sir John Owen were pardoned: The Earl of Norwich upon an equal division of the House of Parliament in a Vote for his life, was saved by the casting Voice of Lenthall the Speaker; but Sir John Owen had on his behalf the suffrage of many more voices than those against him, which was reported to be done at that time in a kind of popular generosity; for that the Noble-men had all great intercession made for them by those of their Allies (in favour with some Grandees in power;) but Sir John Owen a Commoner coming from a remote part, had none that interceded on his behalf.

Duke Hamilton, Earl of Holland, Lord Capel, &c. tryed by a High Court of Justice.

The Earl of Norwich and Sir John Owen Pardoned.

1648.

The substance of Duke Hamiltons Speech before his Execution.

Duke Hamilton who first came upon the Scaffold, in his Speech declared His affection to this Kingdom, and the Reason of his coming into England with an Army, that is to say, his being commanded thereunto by the peremptory Command of the Parliament of his own Country, which if he had disobeyed he had suffered the same penalty he was to suffer here for obeying. He said many things in vindication of himself from the imputation of having been inconstant in his Religion, or false and unfaithful in his actions toward the King his Master, he seemed also to intimate a readiness to serve them in what they so much desired of him, namely, the discovery of those who were the Inviters of him in, so that his life might have been spared; with other things which concerned his condition as a dying man.

Of the Earl of Holland.

The next that came after him was the Earl of Holland, Who toucht upon the Honour of his Family, and the Nobleness of his Education, profest his sincere and constant adherence to the true Protestant Religion, justified himself as to the matter for which he was condemned, alleadging his defection from the Parliament, not to have been out of any ill design against the State or Kingdom, or any abjuration of his first Principles, which led him faithfully to serve the Parliament, whose service he should not have deserted, had not the changes and alterations among them carried them beyond what was reasonable, or what perhaps they themselves at first intended. He prayed God to bless this Kingdom, and to settle it in the Antient way of Government by the King, Lords, and Commons, and wisht the present change might not bring confusion upon it, he wisht that the Kings Posterity might be lookt upon, and owned by the People, and re-established in their Native Rights without Bloodshed, that his Blood might be the last that might be spilt, and concluded, as he was Chancellour of Cambridge, with his Prayers to God for a blessing upon that University.

The substance of the Lord Capels Speech.

The last of the three that suffered, was the Lord Capel, who having made a very able and substantial defence for himself, both from the antient Laws and Priviledges of the Nation, and from their own Acts and Consults, (though all in vain) behaved himself at his death, like what he had shewed himself all along to be, in his resolute acting for the Kings service, a person of a high Spirit, and Heroick fortitude, and delivered what he had to say with a fearless and undaunted Deportment, wherein after an ample Account of his Religion, professing his hearty zeal and devotion to the true Protestant Religion, as it was established in the Church of England, he took the liberty to urge the unjustness of his Execution, as contrary to the Law of Arms, to Honour, and the word given him at his rendring of himself, against the Justice of the known Laws of the Land, and for no other cause, than his maintaining the fifth Commandment: He expresst much trouble and repentance, for having been one of those that gave their Vote to the Bill of Attainder against the Earl of Strafford, and manifested to the world the high opinion, and venerable Remembrance he had of the late Kings transcendent Vertue, Nobleness of Mind, and ability of Parts: Next he prayed heartily for the King that now is, for his happy Restauration, long life, and continued prosperity, recommending to the People the hopes they were to entertain in him of a most accomplisht person, and most excellent Prince, from the several years experience he had of the greatness of his Apprehension and Understanding, the Honor of his Nature, and the Generosity of his Inclinations. And so shut up all with what they all three generally consented in, viz. a chearful readiness to forgive his Enemies, and those that had been the occasion of bringing him to that place.

1648.

The Blood of these Noblemen did not satiate those that caused the effusion of it, for some others were cut off about the same time for the like offences, though not by the same manner of Trial, as Lieutenant Colonel Morrice and Colonel Blackbourn, who was hanged and quartered at York by a Commission of Oyer and Terminer for the surprizing of Pontfract; one Beaumont a Minister was hanged at Pontfract, by Sentence of a Court-Marshal; and Major Monday was shot to death at Lancaster by the like Sentence; Colonel Laughorn, Poyer, and Powel, three worthy endeavourers in the Kings Service in Wales, were also by a Court-Marshal Sentenced to cast Lots for their Lives, and the fatal chance falling on Poyer he was shot to death in Covent-Garden.

Several others tried and executed.

Judge Jenkins and Sir John Stowel tried at the Kings Bench Bar.

Sir John Stowel, and Mr. David Jenkins (a Judge formerly in Wales) had better fortune, for being both arraigned at the Kings-Bench-Barr as Traytors against the Government, for their Loyalty to the King, though they never owned the Jurisdiction of the Court, the Judges would not give Sentence against them, nevertheless their estates were seized, and the later of the two was long imprisoned.

The Messengers sent from the Scots to the King at the Hague, are driven back by storm.

The Parliament of Scotland had sent two Gentlemen, to acquaint the King being then at the Hague in Holland, with their proceedings on his behalf, who after being long at Sea were beaten back by contrary winds, so that he had no publique notification of what was done there, though he wanted not private advertisement of it: they resolved to invite him to that Kingdom, and were in preparation of Propositions to be sent to him in order thereunto, but they were so much diverted by several disorders in the Country, that the progress in them was very slow.

A rising for the King in the North of Scotland.

Middleton and Monroe, two Major Generals, together with the Lord Rea, the Gordons and those of the Clan of Makenzey being jealous that the Covenanters (for so they called the Scotch Parliament) would impose so much upon the King, that he could not with Honour and safety yeeld to them, drew many Forces together in the North of Scotland, and seized on the Town of Innernes in the Kings name, expecting many others to come in to them, intending so to moderate the Counsels of the Estates at Edenburgh, that the King might be admitted to his Government without any previous conditions. This rising in the North was not so privately managed, but the Scots Parliament had advice of it some time before it was put in Execution, and they thereupon made Levies of about six thousand Horse and Foot, upon other pretences, so that upon the first Alarm, they dispatched a good Party towards them under

1648. der the Colonels Ker and Straughan, who marched with so much expedition, that they prevented any considerable conjunction of Forces, and dispersed those that they had got together.

They are suppresst by Ker and Straughan.

This breach in Scotland, and the suppression of it, made the Governours at Westminster believe it not unseasonable to make some overtures to the Estates at Edenburgh, to tempt them to a breach with the King, with an offer of their utmost assistance against him and all his adherents, but they could not prevail.

The Reigning faction in England tempt the Scots to a breach with the King.

1649. The King being now at the Hague, had intelligence from time to time of the Counsels of Scotland, and resolved to go into France, that from thence he might more easily pass to some part of his own Dominions to receive their Commissioners: in prosecution of which intentions he left Holland, and came to St. Germans near Paris, where the Queen his Mother then was, and all the way as he passed both through the Cities of the United-Provinces, and the Spanish Netherlands, he was very splendidly entertained. The Duke of Lorrain met him on the Frontiers of France, and at Compeigne the King of France received him and accompanied him to Paris, and from thence to St. Germanes, where he staid a few moneths together with the Duke of York, who repaired to him out of Holland.

The King removes from Holland into France.

In the midst of this prosperous fortune of the established new Common-wealth, there was so great a disturbance made by a Party in the Army, called Levellers, that if it had not been suppressed, all their Building had been tumbled down. For the better understanding whereof we shall shew how this name came to be applied to them, & then briefly set down the disorders that hapned.

They were formed out of those Agitators mentioned in the Reign of the late King, and were termed Levellers upon a pretended Principle which they espoused, to endeavour to obtain such an equal righteous distribution of Justice in Government to all degrees of people, that it should not be in the power of the highest to oppress their inferiors; nor should the meanest of the people be out of capacity to arrive at the greatest Office and Dignity in the State. This was very pleasing to the Inferiour Officers of the Army and Soldiers, but those that influenced them were a more considerd sort of persons, who to gain power and Authority to themselves, found out means by heightning this distemper, to arraign and disgrace the Administration of others, and to be pleased with nothing that was done by the Parliament or the Chiefs of the Army, and now the infection was spred among some of the Superior Rank of Officers, who in a jealousie of the aspiring greatness of Cromwel and Ireton (though they appeared not openly themselves) spirited the private Souldiers to begin a defection in the Army upon these Levelling principles.

The Original of the Levellers dispersion and dewith their feature.

These to countenance their proceedings insinuated, that there appeared a general self-seeking in the Magistrates and Chief Officers of the Army, whereby that Reformation for which they contended, was not throughly pursued as it ought, either in Spirituals or Civils. Cromwel endeavoured to suppress this in the beginning, and caused Orders to be issued to forbid their private Meetings; but not succeeding herein, several of the Souldiers were seized on, and tried and condemned at a Court Martial, and one Lockier a busie Actor in the business was shot to death, and eleven Regiments were immediately by Lot drawn out to be sent into Ireland. But this did rather incense than allay the heat; for many of the Souldiers were so practised with, as to be much discontented with their being allotted to the Irish Service; alleadging, It was a contrivance to divide them, That they were not Mercenaries, but persons that took Arms upon righteous Principles of Reformation of Government, and that till they saw such a settlement established as might answer the ends of their first Engagements, they would not divide. And hereupon many Regiments Revolted from their Officers, and if some Great Ones that seemed to approve their actions, had not betrayed them, the Parliaments Authority then, and the following Greatness of Cromwel had been subverted and prevented. 1649.

At Burford five thousand Horse and Foot of these Dissenters were drawn together, and staid there as they pretended, in order to a Treaty under the Faith of Cromwels word, that no part of the Army should draw nearer to them than the distance of ten miles, whereby they were less vigilant; and in this their security, Colonel Reynolds (one accused by them to have discovered their Counsels) fell in upon them with a greater Body than they had, and quickly routed them, taking nine hundred Horse and four hundred Foot prisoners, whereof one Thompson and two or three principal Leaders were immediately shot to death, and the rest by Cromwels freeness or mediation pardoned; And after this great preparations were made to be sent into Ireland.

The Marques of Ormonds diligent acting for the Kings service in Ireland.

But these Commotions gave the Marques of Ormond, and those that acted for the King under his Lieutenancy in that Kingdom, a fair opportunity of reducing it to the obedience of the Crown, wherein he was so prosperous, that the King had some thoughts of going thither, and a peace was made with the most considerable of the Confederate Irish; but contrary to their faith and promise, the Popes Nuntio by the interpositions of some of the Popish Clergy prevailed with the Ulster-Irish under Owen Roe Oneal to refuse to come under the Kings Authority.

Nevertheless, the Lord Lieutenant with the conjunction of the several Forces under the Marques of Clanrickard President of Connaught, the Earl of Castlehaven, the Lord Inchiquin President of Munster, the Lord Moor, Colonel Mark Trevor, Sir Thomas Armstrong, the Lord Taaf and General Preston had made up a very powerful Army, and had reduc'd to the Kings Authority all the Cities and Towns in the Kingdom, except Dublin and Londonderry; and Londonderry was besieged by Sir Robert Steward, and Colonel Audly Mervin with a good Brigade, and Owen Roe likewise was by Colonel Trevor with his Army a little before defeated. The Lord Lieutenant being thus strengthened, determined with the whole or a greatest part of his Army to march before Dublin, and came about the middle of June to a Village called Finglas, about two

Dublin besieged by the Marquess of Ormond.

Colonel Michael Jones was Governor of the City of Dublin, a man of Courage, but bred to the Laws; and as he was a person of great Capacity, (by the experience he had gain'd in the active Wars of Ireland) he acquired a very good knowledge and conduct in matters of War. The Lord Lieutenant in vain attempted by all fair means he could to gain him to a compliance with the Kings affairs, yet those within were in so great fear at the approach of the Army, that if a fierce assault had been made the first day, in all probability the City had been taken; but it is said the Lieutenant was unwilling to it, out of a tenderness to the English Protestants therein. After a day or two, skirmishes were very frequent betwixt the Dublin Horse and those of the Army; in which those of the City alwaies prevailed, whereby they were much encouraged, and in one of those skirmishes Sir Walter Dungar a valiant Commander of the Army was taken, whilst they lay at Finglass: But the Lord Lieutenant perceiving the station of the Army, as it then lay, inconvenient for a close siege, drew it over the River (which was every where fordable above the Bridge) to a place called Ramines, and whilst he lay there, it was resolved at a Council of War to raise some fortifications at a place called Baggetrath, neer the Colledge of Dublin (where there was an old Castle moted) thereby to prevent any relief to the besieged by Sea. This design much alarm'd those in the City, and the Governor was resolved to do what he could to hinder the fortification, and for that purpose he resolved to give orders for some Companies to sally out to beat them from the place. The Garrison had been reinforced a little before with a Regiment of Horse under Colonel Reignolds, and two Regiments of Foot under the Colonels Venables & Hunks, and many other parties of Horse and Foot from the Garisons that surrendred in several parts of the Realm, which additional Force were to the number in all of three thousand or thereabouts, besides that, with these from England, good store of provisions of all sorts were put into the City, so that the Souldiers were in good heart; the Governor was very private in his design of the sally, which was in this manner perform'd.

The night before he appointed all the Horse and Foot, except such as were imployed on the necessary Guards, (which were to the number of 5000.) to be drawn together very early in the morning in the Colledge Green and Grounds adjacent, within the Works, without sound of Trumpet, or beat of Drum, and with their Colours and Arms trailed; and the Ports were not to be opened till the Forces were all at the Rendezvouz, and Centinels were set all along the line to prevent the going over of any to give intelligence. After all things were thus set in order, about eight in the morning, the Forlorne-hope march'd out to Baggetrath, consisting of an hundred Fire-locks, and after these a party of Horse followed, commanded by Colonel Theophilus Jones (the Governors Brother;) and Major Meredeth and all the rest of the Troops and Companies went after as fast as they could march with order and convenience. There was a ditch made cross the highway betwixt the Town and the Castle to interrupt the passage to it, which was guarded by a party of Souldiers, but these were presently dispersed by the forlorne-hope of fire-locks, who march'd immediately up to the Castle, and took it by storm, putting all that were in it to the sword: Encouraged by this success and some more force being come up, they advanced towards the main Camp, betwixt which and the Castle at Bagatrath, they were met by Sir William Vaughan with a party of Horse, who made some considerable resistance (and indeed all that was made;) but he was slain, and all his party routed; and from thence they followed on to the main Camp, which was by this time in so much confusion, that they made no resistance, but were discomfited, notwithstanding that the Forces from Dublin march'd only in single Troops and Companies, having not time to draw together in Battalia. My Lord Lieutenant endeavoured to make a stand, but being not able to prevail, he with most of the Horse retreated, and march'd off; some of the Foot that were got within the Walls of Ramines, made conditions for their lives, and had quarter.

The siege raised by Jones, with the utter defeat of the Marquesses Army.

This easie Victory was much admired, but the occasion thereof was said to proceed from the great animosities amongst the English and Irish in the Lieutenants Army, whereby ensued a manifest carelesness and indifferency amongst many of them. Moreover, Inchiquin march'd from them a fortnight after they came before the place with a great body of the English to secure the Province of Munster, where Cromwell, lately made Lieutenant of Ireland by the Parliament, was designed to land with his Army consisting of seven Regiments of Foot, four of Horse, and one of Dragoons.

Cromwel Lieutenant of Ireland for the Parliament, sent thither with an Army.

About the the time that this hapned, or shortly after, and in the like manner, Sir Robert Steward and Colonel Mervin were beaten from the siege of Londonderry by a resolute sally out of the Town made by Sir Charles Coot the Governor thereof for the Parliament. Upon the news of this good fortune in Ireland, Cromwell with his Son in Law Ireton, (next to him in chief Command of the Irish Army,) altered their purpose of landing in Munster, and with all imaginable haste transported their Forces to Dublin, neer to which City in a short time after the Victory they landed, and after a little stay to refresh the Souldiers, Cromwell marched the Army to the Town of Drogedah, which a little after the defeat neer Dublin, had been strengthened with an addition of five and twenty hundred Foot, and three hundred Horse, with many stout and resolute Officers. Sir Arthur Aston heretofore Governor of Reading and Oxford for the late King, was Governor of the place, a person in whose Courage and Conduct great confidence was plac'd. As soon as Cromwell came in sight of the Town, he sent a summons, which being refused, he immediately began his approaches, and was very active at the siege, making many furious onsets on the Town, with great loss to his Army; but at last he carried it by storm, and to strike a terror in the other Towns and the rest of the Forces that held for the King, all that were found in arms were put to the sword; amongst which the Governor himself, and 1649. and Sir Edmond Varney, and the Colonels Warren, Tempeſt, and Fingleſs, with many other Commanders of note were ſlain, and though the orders of Cromwell were limited to ſuch as were in Arms, yet the rage of the Souldiers was ſo great, that many of the Inhabitants were ſlain in the heat of the fight, without reſpect to either age, ſex or condition.

Ireland ſubdued to the Parliament.

After the taking of Drogedah, in leſs than a year, moſt of the Cities and Towns in Ireland were taken, and that whole Kingdome in a manner ſubdued to the power of the Common-wealth of England, and the Marqueſs of Ormond and all thoſe that oppoſed their authority, were withdrawn.

The King removes from France to the Iſle of Jerſey.

The King with the Duke of York about the beginning of September repaired to the Iſle of Jerſey, where in a few daies they ſafely landed with about 300 perſons in their retinue. Upon his firſt arrival he was very ſolemnly proclaimed King, and after he had ſetled the affairs of that Iſland, he had an eye upon reducing the Iſland of Guernſey, which was then under the Parliaments power; but Caſtle Cornet the chiefeſt Fort thereof, was under his authority.

A very gratious Declaration after ſeveral inſinuations was ſent into the Iſland, but it proved ineffectual; for Ruſſel the Governour for the Engliſh Commonwealth, had got five hundred freſh men into it; and with as bad ſucceſs Sir John Berkly, Colonel Slingsby, and ſome others attempted to raiſe Forces for the King in the Weſtern parts, from whence intelligence came to Jerſey that Dartmouth and ſeveral other places would be put into their hands, and a part of the Army joyn with them; but the watchfulneſs of their Adverſaries prevented all theſe deſigns, and Sir John and the Col. as they lay privately in Sir Charles Trevannions houſe in Cornwal were by a Countrey-fellow diſcovered to the Committees of that County, and by their Command apprehended, and ſent priſoners to Truro.

Sir John Berkly and Colonel Slingsby apprehended in Cornwal.

During theſe tranſactions, the Committee of Eſtates of Scotland had been convened at St. Johnſtons, and ſate ſome time, where they reſolved upon a Meſſage to be ſent to Jerſey to the King in preparation to a Treaty to be had at Breda, for they were unwilling (in regard of the diſtance and hazard of the way) to treat in that Iſland; Mr. George Windram of Libberton was on the 25 th. of September diſpatched with an expreſs to him on this errand; but ſo long was he on his journey, and the King not adviſed of his coming, that he became very doubtful of their Counſels in Scotland, and had given the Marqueſs of Montroſs Commiſſion to make ſome Levies of men to land in that Kingdom, with Orders to draw together his friends, hoping thereby the Committee of Eſtates would be induced the ſooner, and with more moderation to a Treaty with him.

Ma. Windram ſent with a meſſage to the King at Jerſy from the Eſtates of Scotland.

Windram landed not at Jerſey in many weeks after his departure from Scotland, but when he came thither, the King received him very well. The ſubſtance of his Meſſage was;

The ſubſtance of Windrams Meſſage to the King.

That the King would be pleaſed to acknowledge for lawful their Parliament, and particularly the two laſt Seſſions of that Aſſembly, which being obtained, they offered to Treat of the means to re-eſtabliſh peace and obedience to his Authority in that Kingdom. 1649.

This overture admitted of great Debate in the Kings Councel, for as yet the deſperate condition of his affairs in Ireland, and other parts was not known to him; ſome that had no good opinion of the Scots, from their experience of their dealing with the late King, expected very ſmall fruits of a Treaty with them, and rather adviſed to rely upon the endeavours of Montroſs, and the other Confederates; but others reaſoned, That theſe in Scotland now in power being the moſt prevalent Party of that Kingdom, and having with them the conjunction of the Kirk (by which the people of Scotland are always much influenced) were more likely to aſſiſt him in the obtaining the Crown of England (if he agreed with them) than any others, whoſe deſigns were full of hazard and uncertainty.

The reſult was, that Mr. Windram was returned into Scotland with a Letter to the Committees of Eſtates, in the words following:

CHARLES R.

The Kings Letter to Committee of Eſtates in Scotland.

We have received your Letters lately preſented unto us by Mr. Windram of Libertoun, and We accept gratiouſly all the expreſſions of affection and fidelity therein contained towards us, with your tender reſentment of our preſent condition, and the juſt indignation which you profeſs to have againſt the execrable Murther of our Father; and we believe that your intentions are as full of candor towards us, as we are and always really have been deſirous to ſettle a clear and right intelligence between us and our Subjects of our ancient Kingdom of Scotland, which may be an aſſured foundation of their happineſs and peace for the time to come, and an effectual means to root out all the ſeeds of animoſities and diviſions, cauſed by theſe late Troubles, and alſo to re-unite the hearts and affections of our Subjects one to another, and of them all to us their King, and lawful Sovereign; to the end that by their obedience to our Royal and juſt Authority, we may be put into a condition to maintain them in peace, and proſperity, and to protect them in their Religion and Liberty, as it appertains to us, according to our Charge and Office of a King. And as we have always reſolved to contribute whatever is to be done by us to obtain theſe good effects, and for the juſt ſatisfaction of all our Subjects in this Kingdom, We have now thought fit upon the return of Mr. Windram, to Command and deſire you, to ſend unto us Commiſſioners ſufficiently Authorized, to Treat and agree with us, both in relation to the intereſt and juſt ſatisfaction of our Subjects there; as alſo concerning the aid and aſſiſtance, which in reaſon we may expect from them, to bring and reduce the Murtherers of our late moſt dear Father of happy Memory to condign puniſhment, and to recover our juſt Rights in all our Kingdoms. And we will that they attend us on the fifteenth day of the moneth of March, at the Town of Breda, where we intend to be in order thereunto. And in confidence of a Treaty, as alſo to make known to you, and to all the world, that we deſire to be agreed; we have reſolved to addreſs theſe unto you, under

the

1649. the Name and Title of a Committee of Estates of our Kingdom of Scotland ; and will and expect that you use this Grace no otherwise for any advantage to the prejudice of us, or our affairs, beyond what we have given this Qualification and Title for, namely, only for the Treaty, and in Order to it; although we have considerations sufficient, and very important to dissuade, and oblige us, to do nothing in this kind antecedently at this time. Also we hope the confidence which we declare to have in your clear and candid intentions towards us, will furnish you with strong Arguments to form in your selves a mutual confidence in us, which by the blessing of God Almighty, by your just and prudent moderation, and by that greatest desire that we have to oblige all our Subjects of that Kingdom, and by the means of the Treaty which we attend and hope for, may be a good foundation of a full and happy peace, and an assured security to this Nation for the time to come, which we assure you is wished of us with passion, and we shall endeavour by all means in our power to effect.

To the same effect also was a Letter to the Committee of the Kirk.

Montross sollicites forein Princes to send the King aid.

Montross in the mean time was very busie soliciting the King of Denmark, the Queen of Sweden, and other Princes for money, arms, and men to be imployed in the Kings service, but yet he was so generous, as to write to the King To make an agreement with the Estates of Scotland, so that he might be honorably and with safety restored to his Rights and Dignities, and rather than break off with them, to give consent to have him banished the Kingdom, that so he might receive no prejudice for his consideration.

But the King would by no means yeeld to his requests herein, declaring that he had found him so faithful all along, and to have performed such eminent services, both to his Father and to himself, that he could not in Justice or in honour leave him; and by a letter which he sent to him on the 30*th.* of January, he gave him a full account of the address to him from Scotland, and the progress made towards the Treaty according to the tenour of his Letters by Windram, wherein he informed him, That he licensed the Authority of the Committee of Estates for this Treaty only, and that both for their own proper satisfaction, and to make known to all the world, that he desired to bring back his Subjects to their duty rather by ways of sweetness and amity, than by the rigour of Arms (if their obstinacie and the injustice of their demands should constrain him to recover it by force) adding nevertheless, that he gave him full power to proceed very vigorously in his enterprizes, not doubting but all his Loyal Subjects of Scotland would joyn themselves with him, and by that means those that were otherwise disposed would submit themselv's to reason in the Treaty which he now accepted, or should be forced to it by Arms.

The King informs Montross of what had passed between him and the Estates in order to a Treaty.

The Parliament forces the King to leave Jersey and go into France.

The Parliament of England, not willing to let the King be in quiet in Jersey, sent a considerable part of the English Fleet to Portsmouth, with store of provision in order to the attacquing of that Island, which put the King upon a speedy remove from thence to France; where he resided till the time appointed for the Treaty at Breda drew near, and then he repaired thither. 1649.

Sir John Windram made all the haste he could to Scotland, and assoon as the Committee of Estates and Assembly of the Kirk, who sate apart, were met, he delivered his Message and Letters to them from the King.

The Committee of Estates upon perusing the Letter, chose out of themselves a sub-Committee of nine Lords and Burgesses to consider what was most expedient to be done therein, and to present their opinions thereupon to the Committee of Estates, which was done; and thereupon they prepared a state of the matter, and reported it to the Parliament at their first meeting, which was in a while after; and the Parliament upon that Report chose a Committee of the Estates to meet with a Committee of the Kirk to consider of all matters in order to the Treaty, and to nominate Commissioners for it, where after some consultations a report was agreed on to be made by one part to the Committee of Estates, and by the other to the Assembly of the Kirk; and immediately the Commissioners were chosen. Those for the Estates were the Earls of Cassels and Lothian, and the Laird Burly, and Sir John Windram of Liberton; and those from the Kirk, Mr. John Levistion, Mr. James Wood, and Mr. Broady, who were with all convenient haste dispatched to Breda, where they arrived a day before the King, and the next day thereafter they went to meet him at Berghen op Zoom, and they came thence together to Breda on the 16*th.* of March, where the Commissioners after two or three days of rest to compose themselves, and receive their visits from their friends, were conducted to their first audience in the Presence-Chamber by my Lord Wentworth, Captain of the Kings Guards, who was sent with the Kings Coach to receive them. The Earl of Cassels addressed himself to the King in the name of the Commissioners of Parliament in a short Speech to this effect.

The Commissioners to treat with the King at Breda.

The Earl of Cassels speech to the King in behalf of the Commissioners of Parliament.

"That the Kingdom of Scotland upon his late "Message, together with the consideration of all "former overtures with him, have now again sent "to him these Propositions, which they humbly "tender to his Majesty; not that they have "thought to force him to a compliance, through "his necessity, to his prejudice, or weary him by "importunities; but by making their Loyal ad-"dresses to him, by this their humble submission, "in which their desires, they hope, will appear "so reasonable and just, that he will soon conde-"scend unto them, which they humbly beg at his "hands. Assuring him, that by that means he "will be most powerful in the advancing and e-"stablishing his Throne; it being the nature of "his Loyal Subjects, and all truly noble minds to be soonest overcome with such allurements. "That in these their humble addresses, they did "manifest to the world their Loyalty and Con-"stancie to him, neither was it their purpose to "flatter, but to be faithful and free; that if he "would please to condescend to what was pro-"pounded by the Kingdom of Scotland, it would "make him happy, and give them some hopes to "live at peace, under the shadow of the wings "of his Government.

And

1649. And as soon as he had ended, the Commissioners of the Kirk having presented themselves to him, Mr. John Leviston made a Speech, wherein, He prest his Majesty to hearken to the joynt desires of the Estates and Kirk of Scotland, that so he might enjoy the blessing of God, and be received by his people in comfort and peace to promote the work of the Lord, and make them happy.

Mr. Levistons Speech for those of the Kirk.

After these speeches, they produced their Commissions, and delivered their letters, together with the propositions from the Estates and Kirk of Scotland.

The Propositions were immediately read, which were as followeth;

Propositions from the Estates and Kirk of Scotland to the King.

1. "That all those who have been and continue excommunicate by the Kirk of Scotland, "may be removed from having access to the "Court.

2. "That he would be pleased to declare, that he "would by solemn Oath under his hand and seal, "allow the National Covenant of Scotland, and "the solemn League and Covenant of Scotland, "England and Ireland, and that he would pro"secute the ends thereof in his Royal Station.

3. "That he would ratifie and approve all Acts "of Parliaments, enjoyning the solemn League "and Covenant, and establishing Presbyterian "Government, the Directory of Worship, the "Confession of Faith and Catechisme in the "Kingdome of Scotland, as they are already ap"proved by the general Assembly of the Kirk, "and by the Parliament of that Kingdome. And "that he would give his Royal Assent to the Acts "of Parliament, enjoyning the same in the rest "of his Dominions; and that he would observe "the same in his own practise and Family, and "never make opposition therein, or endeavour "any change thereof.

4. "That he would consent and agree, That "all matters civil might be determined by the "present and subsequent Parliaments of the "Kingdome of Scotland, and all matters Eccle"siastical, by the ensuing general Assemblies of "the Kirk, as was formerly condescended and a"greed to by his late Father. After the King had "heard them, he demanded whether these papers "they had delivered to him contained all parti"culars which they had to propound or desire; "whether they had power to recede from any par"ticular proposed or to be proposed, also if they "had any thing to offer for the carrying on of his "service against England.

To which they answered, That they had acquainted him with the utmost of their power and instructions.

A few daies after; The Treaty began, wherein the King found many difficulties in every Article; for though that which related to the prohibiting all whom the Kirk had excommunicated from access to the Court, would deprive him of the service and attendance of the Earl of Montross, and many other of the Loyal Nobility and Gentry of that Kingdom, he thought not fit to break with them for that; not doubting when he should have obtained the Kingdome he might by degrees make them sensible of their mistaken zeal in their actings towards such persons, and win them to a relaxation of their rigour of that injunction; But that which most prest him, was the cause of Religion expressed in the severity of those propositions which required him by solemn Oath under his hand and seal to allow the Covenant, and to establish the Presbyterian Government, wherein they insisted so much as to deny him the use of the Liturgie to his own person; The King urged, that there was no reason why he should relinquish the Religion for which his Father had died a Martyr, and that whilst he was willing to permit to his subjects liberty of Conscience, it would be very inconsistent with their so earnestly pretended desires of Peace and Agreement, to deny him the same priviledge which he was so ready to give them. That the Covenant by them tendred, is the subjects Covenant to bind them to him, and not for him to take, to swear to himself, so that he thought it sufficient to pass an Act for his People to take it. He likewise offered to confirm the Presbyterian Government in Scotland; provided, that he himself might have alwaies three Chaplains with him of his own Election. 1649.

During this Treaty, the Earl of Canworth and Mr. Murray arrived at Breda with new instructions to the Commissioners concerning the Militia, which put a further demur to the conclusion of it; and indeed it was said, The King was willing to admit of a little delay in expectation of what he might obtain from the endeavours of the Marquess of Montross, who was after many discouragements (of which some mention shall be hereafter made) about this time embarqued for Scotland, and about the midst of April landed in the Isles of Orkney, accompanied with the Lord Trendraught, the Master of Pitsfodder, Sir John Urry, Henry Graham (his natural Brother,) Colonel Johnson, George Drummond of Ballach, and other persons his friends and confederates, with two Ships and a small Frigot of 14 Guns, 1500 Arms, and 500 German Souldiers; Colonel King had promised to come up to him with some Horse from Sweden, but did not do it; Colonel Ogleby, and Colonel Cockrain, who were trusted with certain sums of money for the raising of men and arms, (the one in Amsterdam, and the other in Poland) fail'd in their duty, and converted the money to their own use; and two of four Ships which he had, (wherein were about 200 German Souldiers, and many implements of War) were cast away upon the rocks a little before his landing; but these disasters which might have shaken a great resolution, abated nothing of his Courage and Magnanimity.

The Earl of Canworth and Mr. Murray arrive at Breda, with further instructions to the Scots Commissioners.

Montross lands with Forces in Scotland.

The Estates of Scotland had no Forces in any of these Islands, whereby he had a good opportunity to raise men to form a little Army for his landing on the Main: the people were raw and undisciplin'd, much fallen from that Courage for which the antient Inhabitants of these Isles have been fam'd; but nevertheless, he was forc'd to make as good a shift as he could with them; and whilst he was busied here in his levies, the Laird of Pluscardy endeavoured to raise two thousand men for his assistance in the Earl of Seaforths Territories.

1649. And now, having got together as many Souldiers as he desired of this sort, he left Colonel Johnson and Henry Graham to keep Kirkwall in Pomona, the chief Isle of the Orcades, and transplanted all the rest of his men to Cathnes, which is the utmost point of Land in the Northwest part of Scotland; here he hoped to meet Pluscardy with the 2000 men he promised to raise, but they came not; for the Parliament of Scotland was so vigilant, that they sent into most places where they thought he had any correspondence to prevent the getting men together for him; and very suddenly after, the news of his arrival was known, an Army of 7000 Foot, and 30 Troops of Horse was sent to oppose him. The Horse were commanded by David Lesly, and the Foot by Major General Holborn, of these they sent 300 in the Van under the command of Colonel Straughan consisting of his own Troop, and three Troops more commanded by Colonel Montgomery, Colonel Ker, & Lieutenant Colonel Hacket, and indeed there needed no other Army, for all that Montross was able to do at that time towards the strengthening of himself, was little or nothing more than the taking of Dunbeth-House, which was soon surrendred to Colonel Urry upon demand, the Lord thereof being fled to Edenburgh: The Earl of Sunderland was a sore Remora in his way; for though he had not force enough to encounter the Marquess, yet the power and sway he bore all those adjacent parts about where Montross had to do, both kept back the Countrey from coming in to him, and hindred several of the Gentry from appearing, who otherwise were inclinable enough to have given their assistance; so that Straughan surprising the Montrossians with the speed and unexpectedness of his appearance, and finding them much disordered and tir'd with seeking to recover a certain pass, (which they fail'd of obtaining,) improved his advantage, and after some repulse at first, redoubled with such fury upon them, that the unseason'd Orkney men immediately yielded themselves, and in a short time (though not without much resolution shewn in their resistance) the Germans also. Thus was Montross his vigorous and loyal undertaking for his Soveraigns service, the labour of much time, and carried on with incredible pains, difficulty and danger, dissipated in a moment by a Party far inferior in number, and doubtless no whit superior in skilful and valiant Leaders (not to mention Montross, who was accounted, and worthily, the greatest Captain of his age:) such was the misfortune of this at least bravely attempted enterprise; occasioned chiefly from the great disadvantage wherein Montross his men were set upon; and their necessities and despair of succors and supplies in a Countrey surrounded with Enemies, or perhaps from a kind of surprisal or pannick fear among the generality of the Common Souldiers, upon an apprehension that Lesly's great Army had been come up against them: However it were, so great was the defeat, that of the whole body of the Montrossians who engaged in this Battle, there escaped not above an hundred from being either taken or slain: Among the Prisoners were Sir John Urry, Major General of Montross his Army, the Lord Fendraught, Sir Francis Hay of Dalgetie, Colonel Hay of Noughton, Colonel Grey, Lieutenant Colonel Stuart, with other considerable Officers: Montross himself made a shift to escape for the present, by quitting his Horse, together with his Belt and his Coat with the Star, and shifting himself into an ordinary Highlanders Apparel. In this Fight the Royal Standard was taken, upon which was portraicted the head of the late King lying a bleeding, and severed from the body, and this following Motto, Judge and revenge my Cause, O Lord. And the Lord Pitsfodder's Son who was Standard-bearer, was slain, Colonel Straughan received a shot upon his belly, but in regard it lighted upon the double of his Belt and Buff-coat, he had no harm thereby. 1649.

Montross defeated by Straughan.

So welcome was the news of this Victory to the State and Kirk of Scotland, that they bestowed as a reward upon Straughan a thousand pounds sterling, and a Chain of Gold: upon Lieutenant Colonel Hacket a thousand Mark sterling. But that which Crowned this Victory to them with the highest joy and satisfaction, was the getting of Montross his person into their power: as indeed it was impossible for him to make his escape, so narrowly was he way-laid all the Country round, and so strict a search and enquiry was ordered to be sent after him, besides a large reward promised to whomsoever should be his apprehender; yet for the space of three or four days he kept himself undiscovered, by wandring up and down in the open fields with one Associate only in his misery, till being very near famished with hunger, it was his fortune in the end to fall into the hands of the Laird of Aston, a Person who had formerly adhered to the Marquess, and had been befriended by him, and of whom upon that consideration, he doubtless hoped for the favour of not being discovered by him, if not of assistance towards his concealment: But Aston, for fear of what he must have suffered if he had been known to have concealed him, or for want of opportunity in regard of his followers that attended him, or setting his thoughts upon the proposed reward (as the regard of gain, for the most part outballances that of friendship) was not to be perswaded or induced by any respect of old friendship or relation to suffer him to escape; so that being seized and secured by a strong Guard, (and having in vain supplicated for death by the hands of those that took him) he was presently sent and delivered up to the custody of David Lesley, and by him hurried away with all speed to Edenburgh, much insulted over in the several places he came through, only the people of Dundee (though none more endamaged by his Souldiers in the former War) were very civil to him, furnisht him with all things necessary, and were so far from insulting, that they very much commiserate his condition: the chief favour he obtained in his journey, was the permission to call in, as he came along, at the house of his father-in-law, the Earl of Southesk, to see two Children of his that were there. At Leith he was met by the Magistrates of Edenburgh in a kind of fatal pomp; & as it were to welcome him to the satisfaction of their revenge; he had the reproachful honour, while the rest of the Prisoners went by him on foot, to be mounted on a Cart-horse (for the better advantage of exposing him to the gazing and scorn of the people: till

He is taken Prisoner.

Brought to Edenburgh.

1650. till he came to the end of the Canon-Gate-ſtreet, where the Executioner in his Livery-Coat, and ſeveral other Officers, attended with a Cart, having a high Chair placed in it like a ſella Curulis, wherein (though he himſelf the Captive faſt bound and bare-headed, while the Executioner had his Bonnet on) he rode as in a Triumphal Chariot, the diſgrace which his enemies intended him, turning to his honour, by repreſenting the Heroick Magnanimity of his Nature, which could not choſe but triumph in the midſt of Captivity. In this manner reproached of many, (as it is uſual when men are in adverſity) pitied of others, even ſome who were of the engaged in the general enmity againſt his deſigns, whom yet the Majeſty of his preſence, and the undiſturbed patience and conſtancie wherewith he demeaned himſelf, melted into a ſenſibility of the miſery of his condition; he was conveyed to the Talbooth the place of his Impriſonment, where the next day being Sunday the 19 th. of May, he received new matter tor the trial of his patience, by the troubleſome viſits of divers of the Miniſtry and Parliament, who while they began to perſecute him with their pretended exhortations, which ſerved but to aggravate the ſenſe of his affliction, he told them, that whereas they thought they had affronted him the day before by carrying him in a Cart, he eſteemed it the moſt honorable and joyful Cavalcade that ever he made; God having all the while moſt comfortably manifeſted his preſence to him, and furniſhed him with reſolution to overlook the reproaches of men, and to behold him for whoſe cauſe he ſuffered. The next day being ſummoned to appear before the Lords, Barons, and Burgeſſes aſſembled in Parliament, he came into the Houſe apparrelled in a very rich ſuit, thick overlaid with coſtly Lace, and over it a Scarlet Rocket, and on his Head a Bever Hat with a very rich Hat-band upon it, with Carnation Silk-ſtockings, Garters and Roſes, with other Habiliments ſutable, all which he had cauſed to be made for him immediately upon his coming to Edenburgh, as if he had been going rather about ſome feſtival than tragical Affair: Aſſoon as he was brought to the Bar of the Houſe, the Lord Chancellor (who according to the cuſtome of that Kingdom is always Speaker) told him firſt, That he muſt kneel at the Barr. Whereunto he anſwered, My Lord, I ſhall with all my heart obſerve any poſture you ſhall appoint me to appear before you in, whereby I may manifeſt to you, that I freely ſubmit to the Authority of Parliament, and to this preſent Parliament in a more eſpecial manner, becauſe you have concluded ſo near a conjunction with his preſent Majeſty my Maſter in the late Treaty. Then the Chancellor made a Speech to him, the ſubſtance whereof was this:

Montroſs is brought to his Tryal in Parliament.

The Lord Chancellors Speech to him.

SIR,

I am commanded to mind you of the laſt judgment of God befallen you for your perfidious breaking of the Covenant, which might juſtly provoke God thus to divert your Councels and affairs, for having been ſo eminent an Author and Actor of miſchief againſt this Nation; you abandoned the Covenant, and deſpiſed the Oath of God, and did invade your Native Countrey, and with moſt inhumane and barbarous cruelty did burn and waſte diverſ parts thereof, and have ſpilt much blood of his Majeſties good Subjects, taking advantage of that time, when the prime Commanders and Forces thereof were employed elſewhere. For theſe Crimes you were excommunicated by the Church, and forefaulted by the Parliament of this Kingdom, and yet ſtill continued in the higheſt contempt againſt God, under that fearful Sentence of Excommunication: and to this day have you remained without the ſmalleſt ſhew of Repentance. And God by his Providence hath now juſtly brought you hither to receive the Sentence of your condemnation. 1650.

Hereupon Montroſs humbly deſiring to know of his Lordſhip whether it were the Parliaments pleaſure that he might be permitted to ſpeak what he had to ſay for himſelf, and humbly craving that Liberty from them, he was told by the Chancellour, that the Eſtates in Parliament did give him free liberty to ſpeak what he could ſay for himſelf. Then Montroſs,

My Lord, ſaid he,

His anſwer.

"I am glad that I may have liberty to anſwer "for my ſelf, though I am here your Priſoner, yet "my cauſe is good; nor is there any breach of "the Covenant on my part, in which I ſwore to "be true to his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors. "Concerning what I have acted in relation to the "Wars and Affairs of this Kingdom, I had not "only a general Commiſſion, but particular Or"ders for what I have done from his Majeſty, "which I was engaged to obey by the ſaid Co"venant. And concerning my coming over now, "I was aſcertained that you had profeſſed to com"ply with his Majeſty in the preſent Affairs, in "which he hath imployed me; and upon that ac"count it was that I have acted. I deſire to refer "my ſelf, and do ſubmit unto this preſent "Parliament, and the Authority thereof, to be my "Judges in this caſe, whom I own as a true Par"liament by Authority from his Majeſty, and I "ſhall be content, however it ſhall pleaſe God "to deal with me. As for my life, if you take it "away by this Authority, it is well known unto all "the world, that I regard it not: death is a debt "which all owe, and muſt once be paid by every "one: And I ſhall be willing and much rejoyce "to go the ſame way which my Maſter paſſed be"fore me, and it is the joy of my heart not only "to do, but alſo to ſuffer for him.

Moreover, he added to this effect, "That he "appeared before them with ſo much the greater "reſpect and reverence, by reaſon of the agree"ment he heard they had made with his Majeſty, "that he never was engaged in the League and "Covenant, and therefore was not juſtly to be "condemned for oppoſing it, ſince he was ſenſi"ble of how ſad conſequence it had proved to "theſe diſtreſſed Kingdoms, and the welfare of "his late Majeſty, againſt whom thoſe that roſe "up in Arms in England were plainly aſſiſted "and upheld by a faction of this Kingdom: that "as he had never been the occaſion of ſhedding "blood but in Battel, and by the neceſſity of "War, ſo he had been ever careful to prevent all "diſorders as much as could be, and to ſave as "many lives as poſſibly lay in his power. That 1650. "what ever he had acted formerly againſt them "to make a diverſion of thoſe Forces that were "going from thence againſt his late Majeſty, was "meerly in obedience and zeal to his Majeſties "ſervice, at whoſe Command he as readily ſub- "mitted to lay down his Arms and retreat, as he "had before chearfully taken them up in his Ma- "jeſties defence. That as for his coming in at "that time, it was in order to the accelerating of "the Treaty betwixt his preſent Majeſty and "them, to the end that his Majeſty being not dri- "ven to rely wholly upon their aſſiſtance might "be inabled to make the better conditions with "them. That ſince he had done nothing but what "became a good Chriſtian, a good Subject, and a "good Neighbour, he deſired them not to be "raſh or partial in their Judgment, but to judge "him according to the Laws of God, of Nature, "of Nations, and of the Land, as they would "anſwer the contrary to the righteous Judge of "the World.

After he had been thus examined and tried, he was commanded to withdraw; the Parliament were not very long debating the matter, ere they unanimouſly reſolved to proceed to Sentence of Condemnation; which, (he being called in again,) was denounced againſt him in this Form.

The Sentence pronounced againſt him by the Parliament.

You are to be carried back to the place from whence you came, & from thence you are to morrow, being the one and twentieth of May 1650. to be carried to Edenburgh-Croſs, and there to be hanged upon a Gallows thirty foot high, for the ſpace of three hours, and then to be taken down, and your head to be cut off upon the Scaffold, and hanged on Edenburgh-Talbooth, and your Legs and Arms to be hanged up in other publik Towns in this Kingdom, and your Body to be buried at the place where you ſhall be Executed, except the Kirk ſhall take off your Excommunication, then your Body ſhall be buried at the common place of Burial.

After the denouncing of the Sentence, at which he altered not his countenance, or ſeemed in the leaſt manner to be moved, he was again guarded back to priſon, where being again haunted and importuned by the Miniſters, he expreſſed how much he was beholding to the Parliament for the honor they had put upon him; for that he accounted it a greater honor to have his head ſtand upon the Priſon-Gate for this Quarrel, than to have his Picture in the Kings Bed-Chamber; and leſt his Loyalty ſhould be forgotten, they had highly honoured him in deſigning laſting Monuments to four of the chiefeſt Cities to bear up his Memorial to all Poſterity, wiſhing he had had fleſh enough to have ſent a piece to every City in Chriſtendome to witneſs his Loyalty to his King and Country.

He is brought to Execution and hanged upon a Gallows 30 foot high.

The next day being the one and twentieth day of May, the day appointed for his Tragedy, he was led forth to his Execution, at which time, ſo winning was his deportment, and his Speeches ſo powerful, that they made a very great impreſſion upon the Spirits of the people, in ſo much as ſome who obſerved the paſſages of his death, were of opinion, That he had drawn away more from the Kirk-party by his manner of dying, than he could have vanquiſht in the field by force of Arms. 1650.

Upon the Scaffold he delivered his mind to the people in this following Speech:

His Speech.

"I am ſorry if this manner of my death be "ſcandalous to any good Chriſtian. Doth it not "often happen to the righteous according to the "waies of the wicked, and to the wicked ac- "cording to the waies of the righteous; doth not "ſometimes a juſt man periſh in his righteouſ- "neſs, and a wicked man proſper in his malice; "they who know me, ſhould not diſeſteem me "for this, many greater than I have been dealt "with in this kind, yet I muſt not ſay, but that all "Gods Judgements are juſt; for my private ſins, "I acknowledge this to be juſt with God, I ſub- "mit my ſelf to him; but in regard of man, I "may ſay they are but Inſtruments: God forgive "them, I forgive them; they have oppreſſed the "Poor, and violently perverted Judgement and "Juſtice; but he that is higher than they, will "reward them: What I did in this Kingdome, "was in obedience to the moſt juſt commands of "my Soveraign, for his defence in the day of his "diſtreſs againſt thoſe that roſe up againſt him. "I acknowledge nothing, but fear God, and ho- "nour the King, according to the Commandments "of God, and the Law of Nature and Nations; "and I have not ſinned againſt Man, but againſt "God, and with him there is mercy, which is "the ground of my drawing neer to him. It is "objected againſt me by many, even good peo- "ple, that I am under the cenſure of the Church, "this is not my fault, ſince it is only for doing "my duty, by obeying my Princes moſt juſt com- "mands, for Religion, his Perſon and Authority: "yet am I ſorry they did excommunicate me, "and in that which is according to Gods Laws, "without wronging my conſcience or allegiance, "I deſire to be relaxed; if they will not, I ap- "peal to God, who is the righteous Judge of the "World, and who muſt and will, I hope, be my "Judge and Saviour. It is ſpoken of me, that I "ſhould blame the King, God forbid; for the "late King, he lived a Saint, and died a Martyr; "I pray God I may ſo end as he did: if ever I "ſhould wiſh my ſoul in another mans ſtead, it "ſhould be in his. For his Majeſty now living, "never people, I believe, might be more happy "in a King; his commands to me were moſt juſt, "in nothing that he promiſeth will he fail, he "dealeth juſtly with all men, I pray God he be ſo "dealt withal, that he be not betrayed under truſt "as his Father was. I deſire not to be miſtaken, "as if my carriage to you at this time, in relation "to your waies, were ſtubborn; I do but follow "the light of my own Conſcience, which is ſe- "conded by the working of the good ſpirit of "God that is within me. I thank him, I go to "Heavens Throne with joy, if he enable me a- "gainſt the fear of death, and furniſh me with "courage and confidence to embrace it, even in "its moſt ugly ſhape, let God be glorified in my "end, though it were in my condemnation; yet "I ſay not this out of any fear or diſtruſt, but out "of my duty to God, and love to his people. I "have no more to ſay, but that I deſire your charity

1650. "rity and prayers. I ſhall pray for you all, I leave "my ſoul to God, my ſervice to my Prince, my "good will to my Friends, and my name and cha- "rity to you all. And thus briefly I have exone- "rated my Conſcience.

Having concluded his ſpeech, and afterwards with cloſed eyes and lifted up hands ſpent a good while in private, in pouring forth his ſoul to God, and recommending his ſpirit into his hands, who was pleaſed (as he ſaid) to give him a full aſſuranee of his mercy in Jeſus Chriſt. He received from the Executioner a certain Cord, by which hung his Declaration and Hiſtory, to hang about his neck; affirming, that he thought not himſelf more honoured by the Garter, which honourable Order his preſent Majeſty had been pleaſed to confer upon him, then by that Cord and Book, which he would embrace about his Neck with as much joy and content as ever he did the Garter, or a Chain of Gold, adding, that if they had any more diſhonour (as they conceived it) to put upon him, he was ready to accept it. And then preſently with a cheerful reſignation, ſubmitted himſelf to the execution of the ſentence.

Thus was this famous, but unfortunate man, ſacrificed to the revenge of his Enemies, after a moſt ſhameful and deſpightful manner, even at that very time when they were treating with the King, whom they knew full well to have a very great regard and affection for him. Together with Montroſs, though not in ſo diſgraceful a way, were executed Sir John Urry, and Colonel Spotſwood Laird of Darcy, (who had both the Favour to be beheaded) with ſome others of Note that came with the Marqueſſe into Scotland.

The Treaty was now neer a concluſion; for whatever the Kings juſt reſentments were, his Counſel perſwaded him to comply and accord with the Kirk in the exigence of his preſent condition: and as for the Militia, he offered to confirm it in the hands of the Eſtates for five years: but whilſt matters were in this neerneſs of compoſure, news was brought of the defeat and execution of Montroſs, which much ſurpriſed the King, conſidering the time of doing it; and though he omitted not in an expreſs by Mr. Murray to manifeſt his great diſlike of the action, (for he was much afflicted at it) yet he was prevail'd on with much regret not to urge it ſo far as to a rupture; He told them in his Letter,

The Kings Letter to the Scots about their ſevere proceedings againſt Montroſs and others.

"That he was very ſorrowful and grieved to "hear a report which came to him by credible "perſons, that notwithſtanding thoſe hopeful "overtures lately made between him and them, "tending to their Peace: Yet that there hath "been ſome blood ſhed of his good Subjects of "the Kingdome of Scotland, and that the manner "and reſult thereof according to the report he had "heard of it, did very much trouble him; but "that he might know the particulars more cer- "tainly, he deſired to underſtand the buſineſs "fully from themſelves, of whom he required an "account.

A while after, the Treaty being ended to the ſatisfaction of the Eſtates, They ſent a ſolemn Meſſage to invite him to Scotland, and in anſwer to what he writ about Montroſs, they beſought him not to ſtumble at it, aſſuring him that there was nothing in what they did, but to accompliſh his ends, and to ſerve his intereſts to the beſt Advantage. They likewiſe requeſted him, to make all poſſible ſpeed in coming to them, proteſting they would with their lives and fortunes aſſiſt to eſtabliſh him in the Throne of his Kingdoms. 1650.

The Treaty at Breda concluded.

A Meſſage of the Scots to invite the King with their anſwer to the Kings Letter.

The rigorous proſecution of Montroſs in that violent manner, was chiefly from the inſtigation of the Kirk, who at that time had great Authority, and did ſo much influence the people, that it was almoſt impoſſible to appeaſe the ſtorm they raiſed againſt him. He had been excommunicated long before, and in that Church excommunication is ſo terrible, that few will have any manner of converſation with a perſon excommunicated; and the generality of the people, when they ſee a man whom their Miniſters declare to be excluded from Heaven, are eaſily induced to think him unworthy to live on earth. Many, if not the greater part of thoſe that purſued his life, were earneſt for the admiſſion of the King, but ſo much did their zeal exceed their diſcretion, and ſo ſtrongly were they intoxicated with the Covenant, and ſeduced by the inventors and aſſertors of it, that they believed neither their Laws nor Religion in ſafety whilſt he liv'd.

The King upon the Meſſage ſent to him, prepared for his journey to Scotland, and about the beginning of June took Shipping at Scheveling in Holland, and after a happy evaſion of double danger that threatned him in his Voyage, (one from a ſudden ſtorm which aroſe and caſt him upon certain Daniſh Iſlands, (yet without any loſs or ſhipwrack, but on the other ſide much reſpect and civil uſage from the Inhabitants;) the other from a fleet of Parliament Veſſels, which were ſent out under Popham to intercept his paſſage) he landed ſafe at a place called the Spey in the North of Scotland. The Eſtates and Parliament of Scotland in the mean time imployed their conſultations about the forming of an Army for the ſervice of the King, as they pretended, and an Act was publiſhed for the rating of every fourth man through the Kingdome, who was capable to bear Arms: The Earl of Leven was made General of the Foot, and Holborn Major General, David Leſley Lieutenant General of the Horſe, and Mountgomery Major General, the ſupreme command of the whole Army being reſerved for the King himſelf, whom at his firſt Arrival they entertained with high Complements, and much Acclamation, and ſeemed to congratulate his coming with great demonſtrations of joy and affection: and on the fifteenth of July they again ſolemnly proclaim'd him King at Edenburgh Croſs, and had deſign'd (had not certain obſtacles come in the way) to have crowned him the following Moneth: but he had not been long among them, e're they began to diſcover their native Rigour, imperiouſly to take upon them according to their uſual manner of Kirk Authority and Diſcipline, and to obtrude upon the King ſuch curbing conditions, as but very ill ſuited with Regal Dignity.

The King lands at the Spey in the North of Scotland.

He is proclaimed King at Edenburgh Croſs.

And

1650. And not long after when the City of Aberdeen preſented him with five hundred pounds ſterling, the Committee of Eſtates ſeemed diſpleaſed thereat; and leaſt other Cities and Towns ſhould in the like manner teſtifie their duties to him, they declared, That what Money or Plate any had a purpoſe to beſtow on the King, ſhould be brought into the publike Treaſury; and in conformity to this dealing towards him, they proceeded to reform (as they called it) his retinue, interdicting all whom they ſtiled Malignants (which were moſt of his faithfulleſt Servants) from all imployment both about his perſon and in the Army.

The Commonwealth of England had ſufficient intelligence from the beginning of all theſe occurrences, and of the Engagement of the Scots to eſtabliſh the King in the Thrones of all his Dominions, and that they might not be ſurprized by them, they drew many Troops and Regiments together, and formed an Army which they ſent to the Borders of Scotland.

The Commonwealth of England ſend an Army againſt Scotland.

Fairfax, who was to Command this Army, refuſed to accept the Charge, notwithſtanding that they offered him a Commiſſion with larger power than that by which he had formerly commanded their Armies, excuſing his refuſal by reaſon of great indiſpoſition of health occaſioned by his wounds and other incommodities of the late War. Upon this, Cromwel, who was newly returned from Ireland (where he had been very Victorious) had the Chief Command of the Army conferred upon him, which he (after ſome little formal ſhew of denial) accepted of, and about the later end of June he marched towards Berwick in order to his advance into Scotland. The Scots whilſt this preparation was making, ſent many expoſtulatory Letters to Sir Arthur Hazlerig then at Newcaſtle, urging the breach of Covenant and the Union between the two Nations, which availed nothing; yet they did not neglect the raiſing an Army for their defence, for matters were at this time grown to a greater height than to be decided by the Pen.

Cromwel is made General of the Parliaments forces in ſtead of Fairfax.

The Scots raiſe an Army.

Cromwel upon repair to the Borders, publiſhed a Declaration in the name of the Parliament of England to juſtifie their proceedings in this manner towards the Scots, and to reproach a perverted part of them for that breach of the union betwixt the two Nations, which they imputed to the Engliſh, (for they would not lay the blame of their imputations on the whole Nation) but ſo great was the affection of the generality of the people of Scotland towards the King, that this Declaration made little impreſſion on them, though ſome privately kept intelligence with Cromwel, to the ruine of themſelves and their Countrey.

About the end of July the Engliſh Army to the number of ſixteen thouſande effective, Officers and Souldiers, marched into Scotland, and came after little reſiſtance (in the defence of ſome Paſſes) to Mordington; moſt of the Scots who inhabited the Borders had left their habitations, which put the Army into more ſtreights for ſubſiſtance than they expected, but a fleet of Engliſh Ships waited on their motions on the coaſts of Scotland, yet Cromwel pretending to commiſerate the condition of the Scotch people, ſet 1650. forth a Declaration, promiſing Protection of their perſons and goods to all that would return to their dwellings, with a ſtrict prohibition on pain of death to any of the Souldiers to moleſt or do them any harm, or take from them any Victuals or other neceſſaries without full recompenſe in money for the ſame.

From Mordington the Engliſh Army marched to Haddington, and the Scotch Army lay encamped betwixt Edenburgh and Leith, conſiſting of ſix thouſand Horſe and Dragoons, and fifteen thouſand Foot. Cromwel marched from Haddington, and came in view of the Scotch Army, where he obſerved them to be too ſtrongly entrenched to be forced, and after he had fac'd them a day and a night without being able to draw them from their Intrenchments, he marched away towards Muſſleburgh; The Scots upon this retreat drew out all their Horſe, and fell into the Rear of the Engliſh Army, which was commanded by Lambert, and made ſo brisk a Charge, that Lambert himſelf was wounded, and like to have been taken priſoner, but Cromwel came to his relief, and drove them back to their Camp, not without ſome loſs. The next day betwixt three and four in the morning fifteen Coronets of the Scotch Horſe commanded by Major General Montgomery and Colonel Straughan came out of their Line with deſign to beat up a Quarter of the Engliſh about Muſſleburgh, they ſurprized the out-Guards and routed the firſt Regiment that appeared to oppoſe them, and advanced to another Body, which was drawn together to ſuccour the others; but there they met with ſo great reſiſtance, that Montgomery was wounded, and the whole party put to great diſorder and confuſion, and purſued to their Army, and the Camp had been in danger of ſurprizal, had not the King himſelf (appearing unexpectedly amongſt them) oppoſed the hazard of his perſon, and the Authority of his name againſt their precipitated flight. Of the Scots in this Engagement ſeventy four were taken priſoners and many ſlain, and Straughan himſelf was once taken but got off again.

The Scots routed at Muſſleburgh.

The pretended Parliament at Weſtminſter were no leſs active there than Cromwel was in Scotland to carry on the deſigns and intereſt of the Republique, proceeding with all imaginable rigour againſt all perſons that they could diſcover in any manner acting againſt their tyrannous Uſurpation: and about this time one Doctor Levens, a Doctor of the Civil Law being apprehended with ſome Commiſſions of the Kings, which he had intention to diſperſe for his ſervice, was therefore arraigned before a Court Marſhal and condemned and executed by hanging by the neck till he died, on the 13 th. of July, over againſt the Royal Exchange in London.

Dr. Levens hanged over againſt the Royal Exchange for his Loyalty.

But in further manifeſtation of their impiety, they were not contented to have inhumanely murdered the King, and ſeized on, and diſpoſed of all his goods and Revenues, but they inſulted over thoſe Statues which his Vertues had cauſed to be ſet up in the Royal Exchange, and the Weſt end of St. Pauls Church; the firſt of theſe they ridiculouſly (in imitation of their barbarous cruelty) decollated, and Ordered it to be taken out of the Nich, and under the Baſis thereof theſe

The other Statue of the King being thrown from the place where it stood, fell upon its feet, which was then taken by many as a presage that his glorious Memory, Fame, and Posterity should recover and continue maugre all the designs and contrivements of his and their implacable Enemies.

In Ireland the Kings affairs prospered very ill, insomuch that in five or six weeks time the Parliamentarians had taken Waterford, Duncannon, Caterloe and Charlemont, and had great hopes of a plenary Conquest of that Countrey.

The Battel at Dunbar. The Scotch and English Armies lying near one another without Engagement (because of the advantageous posture in which the Scots Troops were placed, having a great Hill for their security on one side, and a River and the City of Edenburgh on the other (Cromwels Army began to be distressed by scarcity of provisions, which made him retreat to Pencland Hills, and thence with some difficulty (by reason of bad weather) to Musleburgh to be near the Sea to have supply of Victuals from the English Fleet that attended him; and after a few days stay there, he marched to Dunbar on Sunday the first of September with intending to ship his Foot much wearied by sickness and long marches, and march away with his Horse into England; but the Scotch having intelligence thereof, pressed so hard upon him with their Army, that he could not effect his purpose; and the same day at night that he arrived at Dunbar, the Scots being close at his Heels drew up their whole Army (consisting of between twenty and four and twenty thousand men) upon a high Hill, within a mile of the Town; the English exceeding not the number of twelve thousand, drew out in Battalia in a Corn-field near adjoynjoyning, having a neck of Land to encamp on, whose breadth was not a mile and a half from Sea to Sea. The next morning being the second of September early in the morning David Lesly Lieutenant General of the Scotch Army drew down his men to the foot of the Hill, and about four in the afternoon his Train of Artillery followed to the side of a great Ditch, which divided the two Armies. The English that evening ranged themselves close to the Ditch, and placed their Field-pieces in the most useful manner they could, to be ready to secure their Regiments, and annoy the Enemy if they should assail them in the night, and finding the Pass at Copperspeth between Dunbar and Berwick very necessary to them both for the security of their march homeward, and their more easie advance to the Scotch. On Tuesday at four in the morning they attempted with three Regiments of Horse and two of Foot to possess themselves thereof; this gave the Scots an hot Alarm, and a fierce dispute hapned, so that both Armies became engaged. The English word was The Lord of Hosts; Theirs, The Covenant.

The Scotch Right Wing of Horse which were most of them Launcers, made a very bold charge and put the English Horse to a little confusion, but they immediately rallied, and were so seconded by their foot, that by six in the morning. the Right Wing of the Scotch Horse was routed, and the Left without striking a stroke ran away, and the Foot seeing this rout and flight of their horse, and not able in any order by reason thereof to engage (without any resistance) threw down their Arms and fled, giving the English the full pursuit of them eight miles beyond Haddington. The Scots were so presumptuous the day before as to send to Edenburgh to assure their friends of a certain Victory over the English, and it was reported that some of the Ministers declared it in their Sermons as the mind of God to have them delivered up into their hands; but in the midst of this confidence they found themselves miserably frustrated, and their despairing and despised Enemy a Conqueror. The number of the Scotch slain in this Battel were reckoned to be four thousand, and nine thousand were taken prisoners with all their Ammunition, Bag and Baggage, and ten thousand Arms. The Officers and Prisoners of most note were Sir James Lumsdale, next Commander in Quality to David Lesly, the Laird of Liberton, Adjutant General Bickerton, Scout-Master General Campbel, Sir William Douglass, and Colonel Gourdon, twelve Lieutenant Colonels, six Majors, forty two Captains, seventy five Lieutenants, seventeen Cornets, two Quartermasters, an hundred and ten Ensign-bearers, and two hundred Horse and Foot Colours, with seven and twenty great Guns; and all this obtained with the loss of not above three hundred English Souldiers, and one Officer (Major Rookesby) who survived the Battel, but died afterwards of his wounds. 1650.

The Scots Army defeated by Cromwel.

The Scots after this days loss quitted Leith and Edenburgh, whereof the next day Cromwel took possession, and the King retired to St. Johnstons, where the Committee of Estates were assembled. The defeat of the Scotch Army produced not those effects as the King expected upon the Ruling part of the Nobility and Clergy of the Kingdom; for instead of enlarging their interest, by taking into their conjunction those whose help they had before rejected for their affection to their King. They ascribed the overthrow of the Army to the admitting of him into Scotland before he had given full satisfaction to the Kirk in what they required of him; and in prosecution of these Counsels, they began very much to impose upon him, and remove from his person the most faithful and Loyal of his Servants.

The King could not brook this insolent carriage toward him, and therefore resolved at any hazard to free himself from the trouble of it, and by advice of some few of his best and most trusty friends, he took horse one morning, with three of them in his company, pretending to ride out a little way a Hawking, and rode directly to the Lord Dedups house near Dundee, where he was received by some of his Loyal Subjects and Servants, with whom he kept intelligence, and from hence he intended to have gone further North, where he heard the Marquess of Huntly, the Earls of Athol and Seaforth, and the Lord Ogleby and Newburgh

The King departs secretly from St Johnstons in discontent.

1650. Newburgh, and Major General Middleton, with the Gordons and the men of Atholl, were ready to appear for him with no contemptible force, but he ſtaid till by an expreſs ſent to them he ſhould be inform'd of the certainty of their condition. 1650.

This ſecret and ſudden departure of the King did much perplex the Committee of Eſtates, who were very apprehenſive of the conſequence of his joyning with the Gordons and the Atholl men, and hearing he was gone to the Lord Dedups Houſe, they reſolved to ſend Major General Mountgomery with a party of Horſe to perſwade his return to them (many of the chiefs of the Noblemen and Miniſters being by this time ſenſible that theſe breaches and diviſions would but give the Engliſh (then in the bowels of their Countrey) greater advantage againſt them, and that nothing could ſave the whole from ruine, but a general uniting of all parties under the King againſt the common Enemie.) Mountgomery arriving at the houſe, ſent in to the King to acquaint him that he came thither by order of the Committee of Eſtates, humbly to entreat him to come back to St. Johnſtons, and being admitted to his preſence, he fell at his feet, beſeeching him to forget what ever had been hitherto committed derogatory to his Royal Authority, aſſuring him that he ſhould hereafter be obſerved with all imaginable duty and reſpect. The King having heard this Meſſage, conſidered with his friends what to do thereupon, and though he could not eaſily forget the impoſitions and reſtraints he had ſo lately endured, being perſwaded by their advice, that his return might be a means to unite all intereſts to him; and being aſſured by Mountgomery of the reality of thoſe at St. Johnſtons to his ſervice, he condeſcended to return with him thither, to the general joy of the moderate of all parties as well Covenanters as Royalliſts; yet he wanted not at the ſame time an aſſurance from the Gordons and the reſt in the North to ſecure him againſt the Kirk and all their adherents that ſhould oppoſe his Authority.

The Eſtates at St. Johnſtons ſend Major General Montgomery to fetch the King back.

The King returns back with Mountgomery to St. Johnſtons.
